After which Examination, the said John was sent unto Prison again. And the next day, being the sixth day of the said Month; he was called before the Bishop again, who perswading him with some wrested sentences of the Scriptures, the said John Hallingdale answered, Because I will not (saith he) come to your Babylonical Church, therefore (speaking unto Boner) you go about to condemn me. And being of Boner further demanded, whether he would persevere and stand in his Opinions or no: he made answer, that he would continue and persist in them unto the Death. Then Boner read the bloody Sentence of Condemnation: At which time the said John affirmed openly, that (thanking God) he never came into the Church since the Abomination came into it: and so he was sent to Prison again.

Upon the same 6. day also, in the forenoon, was produced before the Bishop the forenamed William Sparrow and had laid unto him certain Articles, which hereafter follow.

Articles ministred by Boner unto John Hallingdale.

John Hallingdale again brought before the Bishop.

Sentence read against John Hallingdale by B. Boner.

Articles ministred by Boner unto William Sparrow.

Articles against William Sparrow.

First, that thou William Sparrow wast in times past detected and presented lawfully unto thy Ordinary the Bishop of London, called Edmund, who also is now thine Ordinary of the said Diocess, and thou wast presented and detected unto him for Heresie, Errors, and unlawful Opinions, which thou didst believe, set forth, and hold.

2 Secondly, that thou before the said Ordinary didst openly and judicially confesse the said Heresies, Errors, and unlawful Opinions, as appeareth plainly in the Acts of the Court, had and made before the said Ordinary.

3 Thirdly, that thou after the premisses, didst make thy Submission in writing, and didst exhibit and deliver the same as thy deed, to thy said Ordinary; openly confessing and recognising thy Heresies, Errors, unlawful Opinions, and thine offences and transgressions in that behalf.

4 Fourthly, that thou after the premisses, didst promise unto thy said Ordinary voluntarily and of thine own mind, that always after the said Submission, thou wouldest in all points conform thy self unto the common order of the Catholick Church observed and kept here in this Realm of England, and in no wise fall again to Heresies, Errors, or unlawful Opinions.

5 Fifthly, that thou since thy said Submission, hast willingly fallen into certain Heresies and Errours, and hast holden and set forth diverse unlawful Opinions, to the right great hurt of thine own Soul, and also to the great hindrance and loss of diverse others, especially against the Sacrament of the Altar, against Confession auricular, with other the Sacraments of the Catholick Church.

6 Sixthly, that thou since the said Commission, hast willingly gone about divers places within the Diocess of London, and sold diverse Heretical, Erroneous and Blasphemous Ballets about, and wast apprehended and taken with the said Ballets about thee, and committed to prison.

Unto all which Articles the said William Sparrow answered in effect, as hereafter followeth.

His answers to the Articles.

To the first, second, third, and fourth Articles he answered affirmatively, as thus: That he was presented and detected to Boner, unto whom he made his Submission, &c. as in the Articles.

To the fifth Article he answered, That if he had spoken against them, he had spoken but the truth: for they be naught, meaning the Contents of the said Article.

To the sixth, he granted to the Article, adding, that he had sold the said Ballets then shewed and read before him, and that the same did contain Gods Word.

After which Answers, the said William Sparrow was sent unto prison. And the same day in the afternoon, being produced before the Bishop again, and there charged with his said Submission, made the year before unto the Bishop, he answered thus; I am forry (said he) that ever I made it, and it was the worst deed that ever I did: adding further unto them, Hold up your Abomination so long as you can. Also being laid unto him, and charged by the Bishop that he went to Church, and there was contended and heard Mass: the said William Sparrow made answer and confessed, that he did so, but with a troubled Conscience he said, God knoweth. And speaking further to the Bishop, he said, That which you call truth, I do believe (said he) to be Heresie. And also the Bishop charging him again with the Contents of the fifth Article above named, he answered, that he had so done, as is contained in the same Article, and so will do again if he were at liberty. And being further demanded of Boner, whether he would persist and continue in the same, or no: he made answer, that he would not go from his Opinions: And adding therunto, he said, That which you call Heresie (speaking to the Bishop) is good and godly, and if every hair of my head were a Man (said he) I would burn them all, rather than go from the truth.

Then being demanded what ground of learning he had to cleave to his Opinions: he made answer and said, That all the Laws now used (meaning the Ecclesiastical Laws) are naught and abominable. And further, thereunto he said, That the Mass is naught and abominable, &c. Which words being spoken, the Bishop immediately read the Sentence of Condemnation upon him, and so delivered him to the Secular Power, by whom he was sent to Prison again.

Sentence read against Will. Sparrow.

Richard Gibbon, Martyr.

With the other two above named, suffered also in the same fire Richard Gibbon, who first was cast into the Counter in the Poultry (where he had been prisoner by the space of two years for Suretiship in a matter of debt, and then stood upon his deliverance) then upon suspicion and evil will was accused to Boner, for that in the Prison he was never confessed, nor received at the Popish Altar: by reason whereof he was called for, and sustained divers and sundry conflicts and examinations in the cause of his Faith and Religion. But first he seemed to make a certain Submission which also he exhibited with the other 28. above mentioned: but because it seemed something to differ in words from the other, it appeareth not to be received: or whether it was received or no, it is not fully certain. This is certain, that although his Submission was in the Bishops Register recorded, yet he was not delivered out from imprisonment till the day of his burning. The Articles first objected and ministred unto him by the Bishop, were these:

Richard Gibbon, Martyr.

Articles objected and ministred to Richard Gibbon by Boner Bishop of London.

First, that the said Richard Gibbon, prisoner in the Counter in the Poultry in the Diocess of London, hath otherwife than became a faithful Christian Man and a good Subject of this Realm of England behaved himself in words and deeds in divers conditions and points, contrary to the Order, Religion, and Faith of Christs Catholick Church, and contrary to the Order of this Realm, to the pernicious and evil example of the Inhabitants of the City of London, and the Prisoners of the Prison of the said Counter in the Poultry, and greatly to the hurt and damage of his own Soul, offending especially in the Articles following: By reason whereof the said Rich. Gibbon was and is of the jurisdiction of the said Bishop of London, and subject to the said jurisdiction, to make answer to his offences and transgressions under written, according to the order of the Law.

2 Secondly, that the said Richard Gibbon hath unreverently spoken against the Pope, and See and Church of Rome, and likewise against the whole Church of this Realm of England, and against the seven Sacraments of the Catholick and whole Church of Christendom, and against the Articles of the Christian Faith here observed in this Realm of England, and against the commendable and laudable Ceremonies of the Catholick Church.

3 Thirdly, that the said Richard Gibbon hath commended, allowed, defended, and liked, both Cranmer, Latimer, Ridley, and also all other Hereticks here in this Realm of England, according to the Ecclesiastical Laws condemned for Hereticks, and also liked all their Heretical and Erroneous, Damnable and Wicked Opinions especially against the Sacrament of the Altar, and the Authority of the Pope and See of Rome, with the whole Religion thereof.

4 Fourthly, that the said Richard Gibbon hath comforted, ayded, assisted and maintained both by words, and otherwife, Hereticks and Erroneous persons, or at the least suspected and inflamed of Heresie and Errors condemned by the Catholick Church, to continue in their Heretical and Erroneous Opinions aforesaid, favouring and counselling the same unto his power.

5 Fifthly, that the said Gibbon hath affirmed and said, that the Religion and Faith commonly observed, kept, and used now here in this Realm of England, is not disagreeable, nor in any wise agreeable unto Gods Word and Commandment.

O. Mary in Religion is not disagreeable.

Anno 1557. The Book of the English Service.

6. Sixthly, That the said Gibson hath affirmed, that the English Service, and the Books, commonly called the Books of Communion, or Common Prayer, here set forth in this Realm of England in the time of K. Edward the sixth, were in all parts and points good and godly, and that the same only, and no other, ought to be observed and kept in this Realm of England.

7. Seventhly, That the said Gibson hath affirmed, that if he may once be out of Prison and at Liberty, he will not come to any Parish Church, or Ecclesiastical Place, to hear Matins, Mass, Evening, or any Divine Service now used in this Realm of England, nor come to Procession upon times and days accustomed, nor bear at any time any Taper or Candle, nor receive at any time Alms, nor bear at any time Palm, nor receive Pax at Mass time, nor receive holy Water, nor holy Bread, nor observe the Ceremonies or Usages of the Catholick Church, here observed or kept commonly in this Realm of England.

8. Eighthly, That the said Gibson hath affirmed, that he is not bound at any time, though he have liberty, and the presence of a Priest convenient meet, to confess his sins to the said Priest, nor to receive the Absolution of his sins at his hands, nor to receive of him the Sacrament, commonly called the Sacrament of the Altar, after such form as is now used within this Realm of England.

9. Ninthly, That the said Gibson hath affirmed, that prayer unto Saints, or prayers for the dead, are not laudable, available, or profitable; and that no man is bound at any time or in any place to fast or pray, but only at his own will and pleasure, and that it is not lawful to reserve or keep the said Sacrament of the Altar, nor in any wife to adore and worship it.

The greatest matter which he was charged withal, was for not coming to Confession, being thereunto required, for not receiving of the Sacraments of the Popish making, and for that he would not swear to answer unto their interrogatories laid against him.

Norwithstanding, after these his first Examinations he continued in the foresaid Prison of the Compter a good space, from the Month of May unto November, at what time he was again produced against the final Examination Judiciary. Where is to be noted, that Mr. Gibson being a very big and tall man, of a personable and Herical Stature, was sent for of Boner by a little and short person, a Promoter, like Robin Papist, called Robin Caley, if it were not he himself.

This Robin Caley, having the conducting of the said Gentleman from the Pauley, would needs hale him thorow Chappide, the Gentleman desiring him to turn some other way. But the more the Gentleman intreated, the more fierce was the filly Jack upon him; and drawing and holding him by the Arm, would needs hale him thorow the High-street, that all the World might see what he could do in his Office. Mr. Gibson, desirous to be led without holding, willed and intreated him to let his Arm loose, he would go quietly of his own accord with him whether he would, only craving that he might go by him freely without noting of the People.

The saucy and impotent Miser the Promoter hearing this, who was scarce able to reach to his shoulders: Nay (saith he) thou shalt not escape me so, come on thy ways. Thou shalt not choof but come; and so reaching at his Arm, would needs drag him unto the Bishop. The Gentleman content to go, yet loth to be notified in the Streets, gently requested again and again; that refraining his hold, he would suffer him to go of his own free and voluntary will; he should not need to fear him, for he would not start from him. To whom the Caitiff, looking up to his face, Come on thy way (saith he) I will hold thee fast, spite of thy Beard, and whether thou wilt or no.

Mr. Gibson seeing and beholding the intolerable bragging of the wretched Miser, and moved therewith not a little, could bear no longer; but said, Wilt thou, said he? and added moreover, bitterly looking down towards him, that if he did not inconveniently pluck away his hand (and so stayed withal) he would immediately wring his neck from his Body. Whereupon Robin Papist the Promoter was fain to pluck away his hold, and so proceeded they unto the Bishop there to be examined again before him.

After this, another day being assigned him to appear again, much talk passed between him and Darbyshire, then Chancellor. But in fine, being required to swear that he should answer unto all they would demand, he denied to answer unto all things the Bishop should command him as Ordinary: for he is not (saith he) mine Ordinary, and so bade him go tell the Bishop. Before the which Bishop he being then commanded to appear the Friday next following, was brought unto the Justice-Hall without Newgate, where he had the like Consults with the foresaid Bishop and divers other Justices. At length he was assigned the Saturday following, to be present in the Bishops Consistory Court, to hear his final Sentence. At which day and place, the said Examinee appearing as he was commanded, the Bishop after other matter of communication, asked him if he knew any cause why the Sentence should not be read against him. To whom the said Mr. Gibson answered, That the Bishop had not ing wherefore justly to condemn him. The Bishops reason was again objected to him, That men said he was an evil man. To whom Gibson replying again; Yea, saith he, and so may I say of you also. To be short, after this and such other talk, the Bishop hastened unto the Sentence. Which being read, Gibson yet again admonished him to remember himself, and to save his Soul, said, That he would not hear the Bishops babbling; and said moreover, boldly protesting and affirming that he was contrary, and an Enemy to them all in his mind and opinion, although he had afore time kept it secret in mind, for fear of the Law. And speaking to the Bishop, Blessed, said he, am I, that am curd at your hands. We have nothing now, but thus will I: For as the Bishop said, so must it be. And no Hereafter is to turn the truth of Gods Word into lies, and that do you, meaning the Bishop and his Fellows.

Thus this valiant Souldier, fighting for the Gospel and sincere Doctrine of Christs Truth and Religion, against Falshood and Error, was committed, with his Fellows, to the Secular Power.

And so these three godly men, John Hallingdale, William Sparrow, and Mr. Gibson, being thus appointed to the slaughter, were the twelfth day after their Condemnation (which was the 18th day of the said Month of November) burnt in Smithfield in London. And being brought thither to the stake, after their prayer made, they were bound thereunto with Chains, and Wood fast unto them, and after Wood, fire, in the which being compassed about, and the fiery flames consuming their Flesh, at the last they yielded gloriously and joyfully their Souls and Lives into the holy hands of the Lord, to whose tuition and government I commend thee, good Reader. Amen.

It is a little above declared in this story of Richard Gibson, how Boner ministred unto the said Gibson certain Articles, to the number of nine. Now let us see lik with the Articles which the said Gibson ministred again to Boner, according to the same number of nine, for him to answer unto, as by the same hereunder written may appear.

Articles proposed by Richard Gibson unto Edmund Boner Bishop of London, by him to be answered, by yea or nay, or else so say he cannot tell.

1. Whether the Scriptures of God, written by Moses and other holy Prophets of God, through Faith that is in Christ Jesus, be available Doctrine, to make all men in all things unto Salvation learned, without the help of any other Doctrine, or no?
2. What is Authority, and from whence it cometh, and to whom it appertaineth, and to what end it tendeth?
3. Whether the holy Word of God, as it is written, doth sufficiently teach all men, of what dignity, estate, or calling by office soever he or they be, their full, true, and lawful duty in their Office; and whether every man, of what dignity, estate, or calling by office soever he or they be, are bound upon the pain of eternal damnation, in all things to do as they are hereby taught and commanded, and in no wife to leave undone any thing that is to be done, being taught and commanded by the same?

The Death and Martyrdom of John Rough Minister, and Margaret Mearing, burned at London the xxii. of December.

IN this furious time of persecution, were also burned these two constant and faithful Martyrs of Christ, John Rough a Minister, and Margaret Mearing.

This Rough was born in Scotland, who (as himself confesseth in his answers to Boners Articles) because some of his kinsfolk would have kept him from his right of inheritance which he had to certain Lands, did at the age of xvii. years, in despite (and the rather to displease his friends) profess himself into the order of the black Friars at Sterling in Scotland, where he remained the space of 16. years, until such time as the Lord Hamilton, Earl of Arran and Governour of the Realm of Scotland aforesaid (casting a favour unto him) did use unto the Archbishop of S. Andrews, to have him out of his professed order, that as a secular Priest he might serve him for his Chaplain. At which request the Archbishop caused the Provincial of that House, having thereto Authority, to dispenze with him for his habit and order.

This suit being thus by the Earl obtained, the said Rough remained in his service, one whole year: during which time it pleased God to open his eyes, and to give him some knowledge of his truth, and thereupon was by the said Governor sent to Preach in the freedom of Ayre, where he continued four years, and then after the death of the Cardinal of Scotland, he was appointed to abide at Saint Andrews, and there had assigned unto him a yearly pension of twenty pound from King Henry the eighth, King of England. Howbeit, at last weighing with himself his own danger, and also abhorring the Idolatry and Superstition of the Country, and hearing of the freedom of the Gospel within this Realm of England, he determined with himself not to tarry any longer there: And therefore, soon after the Battell of Muscleborough, he came first unto Carlisle, and from thence unto the Duke of Somer, et, then Lord Protector of England, and by his assignment had appointed unto him out of the Kings Treasury twenty pounds of yearly stipend, and was sent (as a preacher) to live at Carlisle, Barwick, and Newcastle. From whence (after he had there according to the Laws of God and also of this Realm, taken a Country Woman of his to Wife) he was called by the Archbishop of York that then was, unto a Benefice nigh in the Town of Hudd, where he continued until the death of that Blessed and good King Edward the sixth.

But in the beginning of the Reign of Queen Mary (perceiving the alteration of Religion, and the persecution that would thereupon arise, and seeing his own weakness) he fled with his wife into Friesland, and dwelt there at a place called Norden, labouring truly for his living, in knitting of Caps, Hose, and such like things, till about the end of the Month of October last before his death. At which time, lacking yarn, and other such necessary provision for the maintenance of his occupation, he came over again into England, here to provide for the same, and the tenth day of November arrived at London. Where, hearing of the secret society, and holy Congregation of Gods Children there assembled, he joyned himself unto unto them, and afterwards being elected their Ministe-that Godly fellowship, teaching and confirming them in the truth of the Gospel of Christ. But in the end (such was the providence of God, who disposeth all things to the best) the twelfth day of December, he with Cuthbert Symfon and others, through the crafty and trayterous suggestion of a false Hypocrite and dissembling Brother, called Roger Sergeant a Taylor, were apprehended by the Vicechamberlain of the Queens House, at the Saracens Head in Islington; where the Congregation had then purposed to assemble themselves to their Godly and accustomable exercises of Prayer, and hearing the Word of God: which pretence, for the safeguard of all the rest, they yet at their examinations covered and excused, by hearing of a play that was then appointed to be at that place. The Vicechamberlain, after he had apprehended them, carried Rough and Symfon unto the Council, who charged them to have assembled together to celebrate the Communion or Supper of the Lord, and therefore after sundry examinations, they sent the said Rough unto Newgate; but his examinations they sent unto the Bi-

A Letter

 to B. Boner.

After our heavy commendations to your good Lordship, we send you here inclosed the examination of a Scottish Man named John Rough, who by the Queens Majesties commandment is presently sent to Newgate, being of the chief of them that upon Sunday last, under the colour of coming to see a play at the Saracens Head in Islington, had prepared a Communion to be celebrated and received there among certain other Se-ditions and Heretical Persons. And forasmuch as by the said Roughs examination, containing the Story and progresse of his former life, it will appeare of what sort he is, the Queens Highnes hath willed us to send him unto your Lordship, to the end that being called before you out of Prison, as oft as your Lordship shall think good, ye may proceed both to his further examination, and otherwise ordering of him according to the Lawes, as the case shall require.
 And thus we bid your Lordship heartily well to fare. From Saint James the 15. day of December, 1557.

Boner, now minding to make quick dispatch, did within three days after the receipt of the Letter (the 18. day of December) send for this Rough out of Newgate, and in his Palace at London ministred unto him 12. Articles: Many whereof because they contain only questions of the Profession and Religion of that age; wherein both he and his Parents were Christened (which in sundry places are already mentioned) I do here for brevity omit; minding to touch such only, as pertain to matters of Faith now in controversy, and then chiefly objected against the Martyrs and Saints of God, which in effect are these.

 Confession.

First, that thou John Rough didst directly speak against the 7. Sacraments, used commonly and reverently, as things of estimation and great worthines in the Catholick Church: and also didst reprove and condemn the substance of the said Sacraments, but especially the Sacrament of the Altar, affirming that in that same is not really and truly the very Body and Blood of Christ:
 that consecration to the Priest, and absolution given by him (as the Minister of Christ) for sins is not necessary or available in any wise.

Latin Service.

2. Item, thou hast misliked and reproved the Religion and Ecclesiastical Service, as it is now used in this Realm, and hath allowed the Religion and Service used in the later years of King Edward the sixth, and so much as in thee hath layn, last by word, writing, and deed, set forwards, taught, and preached the same openly, and in sundry places affirmed, that the said English Service and Doctrine therein contained, is agreeable in all points to Gods Word, and unto the truth, condemning utterly the Latin Service now used in the Queens Reign, and inducing others by thine example to do the like.

3. Item, thou hast in sundry places within this Realm commended and approved the Opinion and Doctrine of The Crammer, late Archbishop of Canterbury, Nicholas Ridley and Hugh Latimer; concerning the Sacrament of the Altar, affirming that in the Sacrament there remaineth, after the words of Consecration, material Bread, and material Wine, without any Transubstantiation.

4. Item, that thou hast in sundry places of this Realm, since the Queens Reigo, ministred and received the Communion as it was used in the late days of King Edward the 6. and thou knowest, or credibly hast heard of divers, that yet do keep Books of the said Communion, and used the same in private Houses out of the Church and are of Opinion against the Sacrament of the Altar.

Books of Communion

5. Item, that thou in sundry places of this Realm hast spoken against the Pope of Rome, and his Apосто-lick See, and hast plainly contemned and despised the Authority of the same, misliking and not allowing the Faith and Doctrine thereof, but directly speaking against it, and by thine example hast induced other the Subjects of this Realm, to speak and do the like.

Against the Supremacy
 of the Pope.

6. Item, thou dost know, and hast been conversant with all, or a great part of such English Men as have fled out of this Realm for Religion, and hast confended and agreed with them in their Opinions, and hast succoured, maintained, and holpen them, and hast been a conveyer of their Seditious Letters, and Books into this Realm.

7. Item, that thou hast said, that thou hast been at Rome, and tarried there about thirty days or more, and that thou hast seen little good or none there, but very much evil.
 Amount the which thou sawest one great Abomination, that is to say, a Man (or the Pope) that should go on the ground, to be carried upon the Shoulders of four Men, as though he had been God and no Man: Also a Cardinal to have his Harlot riding openly behind him:
 And thirdly, a Popes Bull, that gave expresse licence to have and use the Stews, and to keep open Bawdry by the Popes approbation and authority.

Abominable sights at Rome.

8. Item, that thou, since thou thy last coming into England out of the parts beyond the Sea, hast perniciously allured, and comforted divers of the Subjects of this Realm, both young men, old men and women, to have and use the Book of Communion, set forth in this Realm, in the later days of King Edward the sixth, and hast also thy self read and set forth the same, causing others to do the like, and to leave their coming to the Parish Churches to hear the Latin Service now used.

 the Saracens Head at Islington, in the County of Middlesex and Diocese of London, by the Queens Vicechamberlain, with one Cuthbert a Taylor, Hugh a Hosier, and dia play, to have read the Communion Book, and to have used the accustomed fashion, as was in the latter days of King Edward the sixth.

Cuthbert Symfon, Rough Rest.

The Answer of John Rough, to the foresaid Articles.

TO the first he said and confessed, that he had spoken against the number of the said Sacraments, being fully perfwaded that there be but only two Sacraments, to wit, Baptism, and the Supper of the Lord; and as for the other five, he denied them to be Sacraments, and therefore hath spoken against them. And as concerning the Sacrament of the Altar (which he then called the Supper of the Lord) he confessed that he had spoken and taught, that in the said Sacrament there is not really and substantially the very Body & Blood of Christ, but that the substance of Bread and Wine doth remain in the said Sacrament, without any Transubstantiation at all. Farther as touching Confession of sins to the Priest, he answered, That he thought it necessary, if the offence were done unto the Priest: but if the offence were done to another, then Confession made to the Priest is not necessary, but Reconciliation only to be made to the Party so offended.

2. To the second he answered, That he then did and had before disliked the Order of Latin Service then used; and also did allow the Service used in the later time of King Edwards Reign, for that the holy Scripture doth the same, and therefore he granted that he did teach and set forth the said English Service, as in the same Article is objected.

3. To the third, he granted That he had approved the Doctrine of the Parties articulate as agreeable to Gods Word, and that they were godly learned men, and such as had perfect understanding in the Contents of the same Article.

4. To the fourth he answered, That he did well like the Communion used in King Edwards days, but he said, that he had not misliked or received the same here in England since the Queens Reign, neither yet knew any that had those Books, but on the other side, he knew many that had those Books, and that there also he had received the Communion in sundry places.

5. The Contents of the fifth he granted to be true.

6. To the sixth he confessed, That he had been familiar with divers English men and women, being in Friesland, and agreed with them in Opinion, as Mr. Scory, Thomas Young, George Roe, and others, to the number of one hundred Persons, which fled thither for Religion, using there the Order set forth in the Reign of King Edward, and otherwise he denieth the Contents of this Article.

7. The Contents of the seventh he granted in every point to be true.

8. To the eighth he answered and confessed, That since his last coming into England (which was about the tenth day of November) he had in sundry places in the Suburbs of London prayed and read such Prayers and Service, as is appointed in the Book of the Communion, and willed others to do the like, both men and women, which he did know by sight, but not by name. Howbeit he did never cause any to withdraw themselves from the Latin Service, but he said it were better to pray in a Tongue that they did understand, than in an unknown Tongue.

9. To the ninth he confessed, at the time and place articulate he was present to hear and see a Play, and there was apprehended by the Queens Majesties Vice-Chamberlain, with one Cutbert a Taylor, and one Hugh a Hoffer, and divers other both men and women, whose names he knew not, and by him was brought before the Council, who sent him unto Newgate, and from thence he was brought to the Bishop. And otherwise he denieth the Contents of this Article.

Upon these Answers he was dismissed, and the next day being the nineteenth of December, he was again brought before the said Bishop and others. Who, when they perceived his constancy, determined the next day after to bring him openly into the Consistory, there to adjudge, and condemn him as an Heretick. Which purpose they accomplished: For the twentieth day at Afternoon, in the presence of the Bishop of London, and S. Davids, with Pecknam Abbat of Westminster, and others, he was there produced. Where after much and many fair persuasions, Bener read unto him the Articles and Answers, before mentioned, in the which they charged him to have received the Orders of the Church, and therefore might not marry; and that he had refused to consent unto the Latin Service then used in the Church. Whereunto he then answered and said, That their Orders were nothing at all, and that he being a Priest, might lawfully marry, and that his Children which he had by his Wife were lawful. And touching the Service then used, he utterly detested it, saying, That if he should live as long as did Methuselah, yet he would never come to the Church to hear the abominable Mass and other Service being as it was then. Upon which words the Bishop proceeded to the actual degradation of the said Rough, emptying him from all the benefits and privileges of their Church, and after condemning him as an Heretick, committed his Body to the Secular Power, who taking him into their charge and custody, carried him unto Newgate.

Moreover, as touching the said Mr. Rough, this is further to be noted, that he being in the North Country in the days of King Edwards the sixth, was the mean to save Dr. Watson's life (who in Q. Maryes time was Bishop of Lincoln) for a Sermon that he had made there. The said Watson after that, in the said days of Q. Mary, being with Bener at the Examination of the said Mr. Rough, to requite the good turn in saving his life, detected him there to be a pernicious Heretick, who did more hurt in the North parts than an hundred besides of his Opinion. Unto whom Mr. Rough said again, Why Sir, is this the reward I have for saving your life, when you preached erroneous Doctrine in the days of King Edwards the sixth? This Mr. Rough said, he had lived thirty years, and yet had never bowed his knee to Baal; and being before Bener, among other talk, he affirmed that he had been twice at Rome, and there had seen plainly with his eyes, which he had many times heard of before, namely, that the Pope was the very Antichrist: for there he saw him carried on mens shoulders, and the false-named Sacrament born before him. Yet was there more reverence given to him, than to that which they counted to be their god. When Bener heard this, rising up, and making as though he would have torn his Garments, Hail thou, said he, been at Rome, and seen our holy Father the Pope, and dost thou blaspheme him after this sort; and with that flying upon him, he plucked off a piece of his Beard, and after making speedily haste to his death, he burnt him half an hour before six of the clock in the morning, because the day (belike) should not be far spent, before he had done a malicious deed.

Furthermore, Note that this Mr. Rough being at the burning of Aulsoe in Smithfield, and returning homeward again, met with one Mr. Farrar, a Merchant of Halifax, who asked him, where he had been. Unto whom he answered, I have been (saith he) where I would not for one of mine eyes but I had been. Where have you been, said Mr. Farrar? Forsooth (saith he) to learn the way. And so he told him he had been at the burning of Aulsoe, where shortly after he was burned himself.

A Letter written by John Rough, unto certain of his godly Friends, confirming and strengthening them in the truth, which he had before taught.

The comfort of the Holy Ghost make you able to give consolation to others in these dangerous days, when Satan is let loose, but to the trial only of the chosen, when it pleaseth our God to sift his Wheat from the Chaff. I have not leisure and time to write the great temptations I have been under. I speak to Gods glory; my cave was to have the senses of my Soul open, to perceive the voice of God, saying, Whosoever denieth me before men, him will I deny before my Father and his Angels. And to save the life corporal, is to lose the life eternal. And he that will not suffer with Christ, shall not reign with him. Therefore most tender ones, I have by Gods Spirit given over the flesh, with the fight of my soul, and the Spirit bath the victory. The flesh shall now ere it be long, leave off to sin, the Spirit shall reign eternally. I have chosen the death, to confirm the truth by me taught. What can I do more? Consider with your selves, that I have done it for the confirmation of Gods Truth. Pray that I may continue unto the end. The greatest part of the assault is past, I praise my God. I have in all my assaults felt the present aid of my God, I give him most hearty thanks therefore. Look not back, nor be ye ashamed of Christs Gospel, nor of the Bonds I have suffered for the same, thereby ye may be assured it is the true Word of God. The holy ones have been sealed with the same mark. It is no time for the loss of one man in the Battel, for the Camp to turn back. Up with mens hearts; blow down the dawbed walls of Heresie. Let one take the Banner, and the other the Trumpet; I mean not to make corporal resistance, but pray, and ye shall have Elias his defence, and Elishas company to fight for you. The cause is the Lords. Now my Brethren, I can write no more, time

John Rough.

Another Letter of John Rough written unto the Congregation two days before he suffered.

THe Spirit of all Consolation be with you, aid you, and make you strong to run to the fight that is laid before you, wherewithal God in all Ages hath tried his Elect, and hath found them worthy of himself, by coupling to their Head Jesus Christ: in whom, whose desire to live godly, the same must needs suffer persecution. For it is given unto them, not only to believe, but also to suffer. And the Servant or Scholar cannot be greater than his Lord or Master: but by the same way the Head is entered, the Members must follow: no life is in the Members which are cut from the Body: likewise you have no life, but in Christ: for by him we live, move, and have our being. My dear Son, now departing this life to my great advantage, I make change of mortality with immortality, of corruption to put on incorruption, to make my Body like to the Corn cast into the ground, which except it dye first, it can bring forth no good fruit. Wherefore death is to me great advantage; for thereby the Body ceaseth from sin, and after turneth into the first Original, but after shall be changed, and made brighter than the Sun or Moon. What shall I write of this corporal death, seeing it is decreed of God, that all men shall once dye? Happy are they that dye in the Lord, which is to dye in the faith of Christ, professing and confessing the same before many witnesses. I praise my God I have passed the same journey by many temptations, the Devil is very buisie to persuade the world to entice with promises and fair words: which I omit to write lest some might think I did hunt after vain glory, which is farthest from my heart. Lastly, the danger of some false Brethren, who before the Bishop of London purposed to confess on untruth to my face; yet the God that ruled Babylon, moved their hearts: where they thought to speak to my accusation, he made them speak to my Purgation. What a journey (by Gods power) I have made these eight days before this day, it is above flesh and blood to bear: but as Paul saith, I may do all things in him which worketh in me, Jesus Christ. My comf, Brethren, have I run, I have fought a good fight, the Crown of Righteousness is laid up for me, my day to receive it is not long to. Pray Brethren, for the Enemy doth yet assault. Stand constant unto the end, then shall you possess your Souls. Walk worthily in that Vocation wherein you are called. Comfort the Brethren. Salute one another in my name. Be not ashamed of the Gospel of the Croft, by me preached, nor yet of my sufferings: for with my blood I affirm the same. I go before, I suffer first the baiting of the Butchers dogs; yet I have not done what I should have done: but my weakness, I doubt not, is supplied in the strength of Jesus Christ; and your wisdom and learning will accept the small Talent, which I have distributed unto you (as I trust) as a faithful Steward: and what was undone, impute that to frailty and ignorance, and with your love cover that which is and was naked in me. God knoweth ye are all tender unto me, my heart burneth for the love of you. Ye are not without your great Pastor of your soul, who so loveth you, that if men were not to be sought out (as God be praised, there is no want of men) he would cause stones to minister unto you. Cast your care on that Rock, the wind of temptation shall not prevail: fast and pray, for the days are evil. Look up with your eyes of hope, for the redemption is not far off (but my wickedness hath deserved that I shall not see it). And also that which is behind of the blood of our Brethren, which shall also be laid under the Altar, shall cry for your relief. Time will not now suffer me to write longer Letters. The Spirit of God guide you in and out, rising and sitting, cover you with the shadow of his wings, defend you against the tyranny of the wicked, and bring you happily unto the Port of Eternal Felicity, where all tears shall be wiped from your eyes, and you shall always abide with the Lamb.

John Rough.

Margaret Mearings, Martyr.

IT is declared, that in the company of John Rough, The Rary, and examination of Margaret Mearings, who, as the Register maketh mention, was at one time and day brought with the said Rough forth to Examination: where the Bishop having no private matters to charge her withal, did the eighteenth day of December object against her those common and accustomed Articles mentioned before. To which she answered as followeth.

First, That there is here in Earth a Catholick Church, and that there is the true Faith of Christ observed and kept in the same Church.

2. Item, That there were only two Sacraments in the Church, namely, the Sacrament of the Body and Blood of Christ, and the Sacrament of Baptism.

3. Item, That she was baptized in the Faith, and Belief of the said Church, renouncing there, by her Godfathers and Godmothers, the Devil and all his works, &c.

4. Item, That when she came to the age of fourteen years, she did not know what her true belief was, because she was not then of discretion to understand the same, neither yet was taught it.

5. Item, That she had not gone from the Catholick Faith at any time: but she said that the Mass was abominable before the sight of God, and before the sight of all true Christian People, and that it is the plain Cup of Fornication, and the Whore of Babylon. And concerning the Sacrament of the Altar, she said, she believed there was no such Sacrament in the Catholick Church. Also she said, That she utterly abhorred the Authority of the Bishop of Rome, with all the Religion observed in the same Antichrists Church.

6. Item, She answered to the sixth Article, as to the first, before specified.

7. Item, That she hath refused to come to her Parish Church, because the true Religion of Christ was not then used in the same: and further said, That she had not come unto the Church by the space of one year and three quarters then last past, neither yet did mean any more to come unto the same in these idolatrous days.

8. Item, As touching the manner of her Apprehension, she said, That Cluney the Bishops Sumner did fetch her to the Bishop.

Her Answers to the Articles.

Margaret Mearings apprehended by Cluney.

These Answers being then registered, they were again (with the said Articles) propounded against her the twentieth day of December, and there being demanded if she would stand unto those her Answers, she said, I will stand to them unto the death; for the very Angels of Heaven do laugh you to scorn, to see your Abomination that you use in the Church. After the which words, the Bishop pronounced the Sentence of Condemnation against her; and then delivering her unto the Sheriffs, she was with the fore-named John Rough carried unto Newgate. From whence they were both together led unto Smithfield, the 22th day of the same Month of December, and there most joyfully gave their lives for the Profession of Christs Gospel.

When the later end of this History of Mr. Rough and Margaret Mearings was in finishing, there came to our hands one necessary thing of the said Margaret Mearings, which we thought not good to omit. The matter is this: Mr. Rough being chief Pastor to the Congregation in the said time of Queen Mary, as before you have heard (of which Company this Margaret Mearings was one) did not well like the said Margaret, but greatly suspected her, as many other of them did besides, because she would oftentimes bring in strangers among them, and in her talk seemed (as they thought) somewhat too buisie, &c. Now, what they saw or understood further in her, we know not, but this followed the evil suspicion conceived of her. Mr. Rough, the Friday before he was taken, in the open face of the Congregation, did excommunicate her out of the same Company: and so seemed with the rest to exclude and cut her off from their Fellowship and Society. Whereat she being moved, did not well take it, nor in good part, but thought herself not indifferently ferently handled among them. Whereupon to one of her Friends in a heat, the threatened to remove them all. But the Providence of God was otherwise. For the Sunday after, Mr. Rough being taken by the Information of one Roger Sergeant to the Bishop of London (as hereafter thou shalt hear) was laid Prisoner in the Gatehouse at Westminster, where none of his Friends could come to visit him. Then this said Margaret, hearing thereof, got her a Basket, and a clean Shirt in it, and went to Westminster, where she, feigning her self to be his Sister, got into the Prison to him, and did there to her power not a little comfort him.

Then coming abroad again, the understanding that the Congregation suspected the said Sergeant to be his Promoter, went to his House, and asked whether Judas dwelt not there. Unto whom answer was made, there dwelt no such. No, said she? Dwelleth not Judas here that betrayed Christ? his name is Sergeant. When she saw she could not speak with him, she went her way. So the Friday after, she standing at Mark Lane end in London, with another Woman, a Friend of hers, saw Cluney, Boners Sunner, coming in the Street towards her House. Whom when she saw, she said to the other Woman standing with her, Whither goeth yonder fine Fellow, said she? I think surely he goeth to my House; and in viewing him still, at the last she saw him enter in at her door. So immediately she went home, and asked him whom he sought. Whereunto Cluney made answer and said, for you; you must go with me. Marry (quoth she) here I am; I will go with you: and coming to the Bishop, she was laid in Prison, and the Wednesday

The suffering and cruel Torments of Cutbert Symfon, Deacon of the Christian Congregation in London, in Queen Maries days, most patiently abiding the cruel rage of the Papists for Christs sake.

NEXT after the Martyrdom of Mr. Rough Minister of the Congregation above mentioned, succeeded in like Martyrdom the Deacon also of that said godly Company or Congregation in London, named Cutbert Symfon, being committed to the fire, the Year of our Lord 1558, the 28. day of March.

This Cutbert Symfon was a man of a faithful and zealous heart to Christ and his true Flock, inasmuch that he never ceased labouring, and studying most earnestly, not only how to preserve them without corruption of the Popish Religion, but also his care was very vigilant, how to keep them together without peril or danger of persecution. The pains, travel, zeal, patience, and fidelity of this man, in caring and providing for this Congregation, as it is not lightly to be expressed; so is it wonderful to behold the Providence of the Lord by vision, concerning the troubles of this faithful Minister and godly Deacon, as in this here following may appear.

The Friday at night before Mr. Rough Minister of the Congregation (of whom mention is made before) was taken, being in his Bed he dreamed, that he saw two of the Guard leading Cutbert Symfon Deacon of the said Congregation, and that he had the Book about him, wherein were written the names of all them which were of the Congregation. Whereupon being sore troubled, he awaked, and called his Wife, saying, Kate, strike a light, for I am much troubled with my Brother Cutbert this night. When she had so done, he gave himself to read in his Book a while, and there feeling sleep to come upon him, he put out the Candle, and so gave himself again to rest. Being asleep, he dreamed the like dream again; and, awaked therewith, he said, Oh Kate, my Brother Cutbert is gone. So they lighted a Candle again, and rose. And as the said Mr. Rough was making him ready to go to Cutbert to see how he did, in the mean time the said Cutbert came in with the Book containing the names and accounts of the Congregation. Whom when Mr. Rough had seen, he said, Brother Cutbert, ye are welcome: for I have been sore troubled with you this night, and so told him his dream. After he had so done, he willed him to lay the Book away from him, and to carry it no more about him. Unto which Cutbert answered, he would not so do: for dreams, he said, were but phantasies, and not to be credited. Then Mr. Rough straitly charged him in the name of the Lord to do it. Whereupon the said Cutbert took such Notes out of the Book, as he had willed him to do, and immediately left the Book with Mr. Rough's Wife.

The next day following, in the night, the said Mr. Rough had another dream in his sleep concerning his own

Anno 1558. ownd trouble. The matter whereof was this. He thought in his dream that he was carried himself forcibly to the Bishop, and that the Bishop pluckt off his Beard, and cast it into the fire, saying these words, Now I may say I have had a piece of an Heretick burned in my House, and so accordingly it came to pass.

Now to return to Cutbert again; as we have touched something concerning these visions, so now remaineth to story also of his pains and sufferings upon the Rack, and otherwise, like a good Laurence for the Congregations sake, as he wrote it with his own hand.

A true Report how he was used in the Tower of London, being sent thither by the Council, the thirteenth day of December.

A Letter of Cutbert Symfon to his friends.

ON the Thursday after, I was called into the Warehouse, before the Constable of the Tower, and the Recorder of London Mr. Cholmsley; they commanded me to tell, whom I did will to come to the English Service. I answered, I would declare nothing. Whereupon I was fet in a Rack of Iron, the space of three hours as I judged.

Then they asked me if I would tell them. I answered as before. Then was I loosed, and carried to my lodging again. On the Sunday after I was brought into the same place again before the Lieutenant and the Recorder of London, and they examined me. As before I had said, I answered. Then the Lieutenant did swear by God I should tell. Then did they bind my two fore-fingers together, and put a small Arrow betwixt them, and drew it through so fast that the blood followed, and the Arrow brake.

Then they racked me twice. Then was I carried to my Lodging again, and ten days after the Lieutenant asked me if I would not confess that which before they had asked me. I said, I had said as much as I would. Then five weeks after he sent me unto the High Priest, where I was greatly assaulted, and at whole hand I received the Popes Curse, for bearing witness of the Resurrection of Jesus Christ. And thus I commend you unto God, and to the Word of his Grace, with all them that unfeignedly call upon the Name of Jesus, desiring God of his endless mercy, through the Merits of his dear Son Jesus Christ, to bring us all to his everlasting Kingdom, Amen. I praise God for his great mercy shewed upon us. Sing O Anna unto the Highest with me Cutbert Symfon. God forgive me my sins. I ask all the World forgiveness, and I do forgive all the World, and thus I leave this World, in hope of a joyfull Resurrection.

A note of Cutbert Symfons patience.

A note of Cutbert Symfon.

Now as touching this Cutbert Symfon, this further is to be noted, that Boner in his Consistory speaking of Cutbert Symfon, gave this testimony of him there to the People, saying, Ye see this man, such he, what a personable man he is; and after he had thus commended his person, added moreover; And furthermore concerning his patience, I say unto you, that if he were not an Heretick, he is a man of the greatest patience that yet ever came before me: For I tell you, he hath been thrice racked upon one day in the Tower. Also in my House he hath felt some sorrow, and yet I never saw his patience broken, &c.

It is thought and said of some, that that Arrow which was grated betwixt his fingers, being tied together, was not in the Tower, but in the Bishops house.

A Vision of Cutbert Symfon.

The day before the blessed Deacon and Martyr of God, Cutbert Symfon, after his painful rackings, should go to his Condemnation before Boner, to be burned, being in the Bishops Colchouse there in the Stocks, he had a certain Vision or Apparition very strange, which he himself with his own mouth declared to the godly learned man Mr. Austen, to his own Wife, and Thomas Symfon, and to others besides, in the Prison of Newgate a little before his death. The relation whereof I stand in no little doubt whether to report abroad or not, considering with my self the great diversity of mens judgments by the reading of Histories, and variety of Affections. Some I see will not believe it, some will deride the same, some also will be offended with setting forth things of that sort uncertain, esteeming all things to be uncertain and incredible, whatsoever is strange from the common order of Nature.

Others will be perchance agrieved, thinking with themselves; or else thus reasoning with me, that although the matter were as is reported, yet so far from the common error of believing rash Miracles, Phantasies; Visions, Dreams and Apparitions thereby may be confirmed, more expedient it were the same to be un-set forth.

These, and such like, will be, I know, the sayings of many. Whereunto briefly I answer, granting first, and admitting with the words of Basil, ὅτι οὐδὲν ἐστὶν ἀνέφελον. That is, not every Dream is straightway a Prophecy. Again, neither am I ignorant that the Papists in their Books and Legends of Saints have their prodigious Visions and Apparitions of Angels, of our Lady, of Christ, and other Saints: which as I will not admit to be believed for true; so will they ask me again why should I then more require these to be credited of them, than theirs of us.

First, I write not this, binding any man precisely to believe the same, so as they do theirs, but only report it as it hath been heard of persons known, naming also the Parties who were the hearers thereof, leaving the judgment thereof notwithstanding free unto the arbitrement of the Reader. Albeit, it is no good Argument, proceeding from the singular or particular, to the universal, to say that Visions be not true in some: Ergo, they be true in none. And if any shall muse, or object again, Why should such Visions be given to him, or a few other singular persons, more than to all the rest, seeing the other were in the same cause and quarrel, and died also Martyrs as well as he? To this, I say, concerning the Lords times and doings I have not to meddle nor make, who may work where and when it pleaseth him. And what if the Lord thought chiefly above the other with singular consolation to respect him, who chiefly above the other, and singularly did suffer most exquisite Torments for his sake? What great marvel herein? But, as I said, of the Lords secret times I have not to reason. This only which bath out of the mans own mouth been received, so as I received it of the Parties, I thought here to communicate to the Reader, for him to judge thereof as God shall rule his mind. The matter is this.

What credit is to be given to visions, and how far.

The day before this Symfon was condemned, he being in the Stocks, Cluney his Keeper cometh in with the Keys about nine of the Clock at night (after his usual manner) to view his Prison, and see whether all were presents, who when he espied the said Cutbert to be there, departed again, locking the doors after him. Within two hours after, about eleven of the Clock toward midnight, the said Cutbert (whether being in a slumber, or being awake I cannot say) heard one coming in, first opening the outward door, then the second, after the third doors, and so looking in to the said Cutbert, having no Candle or Torch that he could see, but giving a brightness and light most comfortable and joyfull to his heart, saying, Hail, unto him, and departed again. Who it was he could not tell, neither I dare define. This that he saw, he himself declared four or five times to the said Mr. Austen, and to others. At the sight whereof he received such joyfull comfort, that he also expressed no little solace in telling and declaring the same.

Articles severally ministered to Cutbert Symfon the nineteenth day of March, with his Answers also to the same annexed.

First, That thou Cutbert Symfon art at this present abiding within the City and Diocess of London, and not out of the Jurisdiction of the Bishop of Rome.

Articles severally ministered to Cutbert Symfon.

Item, That thou within the City and Diocess of London hast uttered many times, and spoken deliberately these Words and Sentences following, videlicet, that though thy Parents, Ancestors, Kinsfolks, and Friends, yea, and also thy self, before the time of the late Schism

here in this Realm of England, have thought, and thoughtest, that the Faith and Religion observed in times past here in this Realm of England, was a true Faith and Religion of Christ, in all Points and Articles, though in the Church it was set forth in the Latin Tongue, and not in English, yet thou believest and sayest, that the Faith and Religion, now used commonly in the Realm, is not in the English, but in the Latin Tongue, is not the true Faith and Religion of Christ, but contrary and expressly against it.

Ceremonies. Item, That thou hast within the said City and Diocese of London hast willingly, wittingly, and contemptuously done, and spoken against the Rites and the Ceremonies, commonly used here through the whole Realm, and observed generally in the Church of England.

Seven Sacraments. Item, That thou hast thought and believed certainly, and so within the Diocese of London hast affirmed and spoken deliberately, that there be not in the Catholick Church seven Sacraments, nor of that virtue and efficacy as is commonly believed in the Church of England them to be.

Sacrament of the Altar. Item, That thou hast likewise thought and believed, yea, and so within the City and Diocese of London spoken, and deliberately affirmed, that in the Sacrament of the Altar there is not really, substantially, and truly the very Body and Blood of our Saviour Jesus Christ.

Item, That thou hast been, and to thy power art at this present a Favourer of all those, that either have been here in this Realm, heretofore called Hereticks, or else convicted, and condemned by the Ecclesiastical Judges for Hereticks.

Using of English Service. Item, That thou, contrary to the order of this Realm of England, and contrary to the usage of the Holy Church of this Realm of England, hast at sundry times and places within the City and Diocese of London, been at Assemblies and Conventicles, where there was a multitude of People gathered together to hear the English Service said, which was set forth in the later years of King Edward the sixth, and also to hear, and have the Communion Book read, and the Communion ministrifred, both to the said Multitude, and also to thy self; and thou hast thought, and so thinkest, and hast spoken that the said English Service and Communion Book, and all things contained in either of them was good and laudable, and for such thou didst and dost allow, and approve either of them at this present.

The Answer of the said Cutbert to the foresaid Articles.

His answer to the Articles. UNto all which Articles the said Cutbert Symfon answered thus, or the like in effect.
To the first, second, third, fourth, fifth, and sixth Article, he confessed them to be true in every part thereof.
To the seventh Article he said, That he was not bound to answer unto it, as he believeth.

A Letter of Cutbert Symfon, written to his Wife out of the Colebourne.

A Letter of Cutbert Symfon to his wife. DEarly beloved in the Lord Jesus Christ, I cannot write as I do wish unto you.
I beseech you with my Soul, commit your self under the mighty hand of our God, trusting in his mercy, and be will surely help us, as shall be mozt unto his glory and our everlasting comfort, being sure of this, that he will suffer nothing to come unto us, but that which shall be mozt profitable for us.

For it is either a Correction for our sins, or a trial of our Faith, or to set forth his glory, or for all together, and therefore must needs be well done. For there is nothing that cometh unto us by Fortune or Chance, but by our Heavenly Fathers Providence. And therefore pray unto our Heavenly Father, that he will ever give us his Grace to consider it. Let us give him mozt hearty thanks for these his fatherly Corrections; for as many as he loveth, he correcteth. And I beseech you now be of good cheer, and count the Crofs of Christ greater riches, than all the vain pleasures of England, I do not doubt (I praise God for it) but that you have supped with Christ at his Maundy, I mean, believe in him: for that is the effect, and then must you drink of his Cup: I mean his Crofs (for that doth the Cup signifie unto us.) Take the Cup with a good stomach, in the Name of God, and then shall you be sure to have the good Wine, Christs Blood, to thy poor thirsty Soul. And when you have the Wine, you must drink it out of this Cup. Learn this when you come to the Lords Supper. Pray continually. In all things give thanks.

In the Name of Jesus shall every knee bow, Cutbert Symfon.

{ Hugh Foxe. }
{ John Devenish. }

With Cutbert likewise was apprehended and also suffered (as is before mentioned) Hugh Foxe and John Devenish. Who being brought unto their Examinations with the said Cutbert, before Boner Bishop of London, the Nineteenth day of March, had Articles and Interrogatories to them ministrifred by the said Officer, albeit not all at one time. For first to the said Cutbert several Articles were propounded, then other Articles in general were ministrifred to them altogether. The order and manner of which Articles, now joyntly to them ministrifred here follow, with their Answers also to the same annexed to be seen.

Articles generally ministrifred to them all three together, the said 19th day of March, with their Answers to the same annexed.

AFTER these Articles thus ministrifred and laid to Cutbert Symfon, with his Answers likewise unto the same, the Bishop calling them all together, objected to them other Positions and Articles, the same which before are mentioned in the story of Bariles Green, only the eighth Article out of the same omitted and excepted: which Articles, because they are expressed in the place above mentioned, we need not here make any new report thereof, but only refer the Reader to the place assigned.

The Answers general of Cutbert Symfon, Hugh Foxe, and John Devenish, to the Articles by the Bishop to them generally propoged.

TO the first Article they all answered affirmatively; but John Devenish added, That that Church is grounded upon the Prophets and Apostles, Christ being the Head corner-stone, and how in that Church there is the true Faith and Religion of Christ.

To the second Article they all confessed and believed, That in Christs Catholick Church there are but two Sacraments, that is to wit, Baptism and the Supper of the Lord; otherwise they do not believe the Contents of this Article to be true in any part thereof.

To the third Article they all answered affirmatively.

To the fourth Article they all answered affirmatively.

To the fifth Article they all answered affirmatively, That they do believe, and have, and will speak against the Sacrifice of the Mass, the Sacrament of the Altar, and likewise against the Authority of the See of Rome, and are nothing sorry for the same, but will do it still while they live.

To the sixth Article they all answered, and denied to acknowledge the Authority of the See of Rome to be lawful and good, either yet his Religion.

To the seventh Article they all answered affirmatively, that they have and will do still while they live; and John Devenish adding thereto, said that the Sacrament of the Altar, as it is now used, is no Sacrament at all.

To the eighth Article they all confessed, and believed all things, above by them acknowledged and declared, to be true, and that they be of the Diocese of London, and Jurisdiction of the same.

These three above named Persons, and blessed Writnes of Jesus Christ, Cutbert, Foxe, and Devenish, as they three constant godly men at Norwich in Norfolk, who were cruelly and tyrannically put to death for the true testimony of Jesus Christ, the nineteenth of May, Anno 1558. whose names be these:

William Seaman.
Thomas Carman.
Thomas Hudjon.

April 2.
Wm. Nichol,
Martyr.

WE find in all Ages from the beginning, that Satan hath not ceased at all times to molest the Church of Christ with one Affliction or other, to the trial of their Faith, but yet never so apparently at any time to all the World, as when the Lord hath permitted him power over the Bodies of his Saints, to the shedding of their Blood, and perverting of their Religion; for then sleepeth he not, I warrant you, from the murdering of the same, unless they will fall down with Achab and Jehazabel to worship him, and so kill and poyson their own Souls eternally; as in these miserable latter days of Queen Mary we have felt, heard, and seen practised upon Gods People. Among whom we find recorded an honest good simple poor man, one William Nichol, who was apprehended by the Champions of the Pope, for speaking certain words against the cruel Kingdom of Antichrist, and the ninth day of April, Anno 1558. was butcherly burnt and tormented at Hereford-West in Wales, where he ended his life in a most happy and blessed state, and gloriously gave his Soul into the hands of the Lord, whose goodness be praised for ever, Amen.

This William Nichol (as we are informed) was so simple a good Soul, that many esteemed him half foolish. But what he was we know not, but this we are sure, he died a good man, and in a good cause, whatsoever they judge of him. And the more simplicity and feebleness of wit appeared in him, the more beastly and wretched doth it declare their cruel and tyrannical act therein. The Lord give them Repentance therefore, if it be his blessed will, Amen, Amen.

Immediately after William Nichol, succeeded in that honourable and glorious Vocation of Martyrdom:

The said William Seaman was an Husbandman, of Wil. Seaman. the Age of twenty six years, dwelling in Mendlesham, in the County of Suffolk, who was sundry times fought for by the commandment of Sir John Tyrrel Knight, and at last he himself in the night searched his House and other places for him; notwithstanding he somewhat mist of his purpose, God be thanked. Then he gave charge to his Servants, Robert Baulding and James Clarke, with others to seek for him. Who, having no Officer, went in the Evening to his House, where he being at home, they took him and carried him to their Master Sir John Tyrrel. This Baulding being Seaman's nigh Neighbour, and whom the said Seaman greatly trusted as a special Friend, notwithstanding to do his Master a pleasure, now became Enemy to his chief Friend, and was one of the busiest in the taking of him. Now as they were going to carry him to their Master Sir John Tyrrel in the night, it is credibly reported that there fell a Light between them out of the Element, and parted them, this Baulding being in company with the rest when the Light fell; and albeit he was then in his best Age, yet after that time never enjoyed good day, but pined away even unto death.

Well, for all that strange sight, (as I said) they carried him to their Master. Who, when he came, asked him why he would not go to Mass, and receive the Sacrament, and so to worship it? Unto which William Seaman answered, denying it to be a Sacrament, but said it was an Idol, and therefore would not receive it. After which words spoken, Sir John Tyrrel shortly sent him to Norwich to Hopton then Bishop, and there after Conference and Examination had with him, the Bishop read his bloody Sentence of Condemnation against him; and afterward delivered him to the Secular Power, who kept him unto the day of Martyrdom.

This said William Seaman left behind him when he died, a Wife and three Children very young: and with the said young Children his Wife was persecuted out of the said Town also of Mendleham, because that she would not go to hear Mass, and all her Corn and Goods seized and taken away by Master Christopher Coles Officers, he being Lord of the said Town.

Thomas Cranmer Martyr.

Thomas Cranmer (who, as is said, pledged Richard Crafshfield at his burning, and thereupon was apprehended) being Prisoner in Norwich, was about one time with the rest examined and brought before the said Bishop, who answered no less in his Masters cause than the other; and therefore had the like reward that the other had, which was the Bishops Bloody blessing of Condemnation, and delivered also to the Secular Power, who kept him with the other until the day of slaughter, which lasted on, and was not long after.

Thos. Hudson
Martyr.

Thomas Hudson was of Aisleham in Norfolk, by his occupation a Glover, a very honest poor Man, having a Wife, and three Children, labouring always truly and diligently in his vocation, being of thirty years of age, Anno 1558, and bearing to good a will to the Gospel, that he in the days of King Edward the sixth, two years before Queen Maries Reign, learned to read English of Anthonby and Thomas Norgate of the same Town, wherein he greatly profited about the time of alteration of Religion. For when Queen Mary came to Reign, and had changed the Service in the Church, putting in for Wheat, draff and darnel, and for good Preaching, Blasphemous crying out against Truth and Godliness; he then avoiding all their Ceremonies of Superstition, absented himself from his house, and went into Suffolk a long time, and there remained travelling from one place to another, as occasion was offered. At the last he returned back again to Norfolk to his House at Aisleham, to comfort his Wife and Children, being heavy, and troublesome with his absence.

Suffolk
to Norfolk.

Now when he came home, and perceived his continuance there would be dangerous, he and his Wife devised to make him a place among his fagots to hide himself in, where he remained all the day (instead of his chamber) reading and praying continually, for the space of half a year, and his Wife like an honest Woman being careful for him, used her self faithfully and diligently towards him.

Berry the Commissary, a persecutor.

In the mean time came the Vicar of the Town, named Berry (who was one of the Bishops Commissaries, a very evil Man) and inquired of this said Thomas Hudsons Wife for her Husband. Unto whom she answered, as not knowing where he was. Then the said Berry rated her, and threatened to burn her, for that she would not betray her Husband where he was. After that when Hudson understood it, he waxed every day that when Hudson understood it, he waxed every day more zealous than other, and continually read and sang Psalms to the wonder of many, the people openly resorting to him, to hear his exhortations and vehement Prayers.

At the last he walked abroad for certain days openly in the Town, crying out continually against the Mass and all their trumpery, and in the end coming home in his House he sate him down upon his Knees, having his Book by him, reading and singing Psalms continually without ceasing for three days and three nights together, refusing meat and other talk, to the great wonder of many.

J. Crouch beware of

to the Confession.

Then one John Crouch his next neighbour went to the Constables, Robert Marsham and Robert Lawes in the night, to certify them thereof: for Berry commanded openly to watch for him; and the Constables understanding the same, went cruelly to catch him in the break of the day, the two and twentieth of the Month of April, Anno 1558.

Now when Hudson saw them come in, he said; Now the taking mine hour is come. Welcom friends, welcom. You be they that shall lead me to life in Christ. I thank God therefore, and the Lord enable me thereto for his mercies sake. For his desire was, and ever he prayed (if it were the Lords will) that he might suffer for the Gospel of Christ. Then they took him, and lead him to Berry the Commissary, which was Vicar of the Town, and the said Berry asked him first, where he kept his Church for four years before. To the which the said Hudson answered thus, whereforever he was, there was the Church.

Talk be-

Berry
and Hudson.

Dost thou not believe, said Berry, in the Sacrament of the Altar? What is it?

Sacrament of the Altar.

Hudson. It is worms meat; my belief (faith he) is in Christ Crucified.

Berry. Dost thou not believe the Mass to put away The Mals Sins?

Hudson. No, God forbid; it is a patched Monster, and a disguised Puppet, more longer a piecing than ever was Salomons Temple. At which words Berry stamped, fumed, and shewed himself as a madman, and said, Well, thou villain, thou! I will write to the Bishop my good Lord, and trust unto it, thou shalt be handied according ding to thy deserts. Oh Sir, said Hudson, there is no Lord but God, though there be many Lords and many Gods. With that Berry thrust him back with his hand. And one Ri. bard Cliffar standing by, said I pray you Sir, be good to the poor Man. At which words Berry was more mad than before, and would have had Cliffar bound in a recognifance of forty pounds for his good abearing, both in word and deed; which his desire took no effect. Then he asked the said Hudson whether he would recant, or no. Unto the which words Hudson said, the Lord forbid; I had rather dye many deaths than to do so.

Then after long talk, the said Berry, seeing it booted not to perfwade with him, took his pen and ink, and wrote Letters to the Bishop thereof, and sent this Hudson to Norwich bound like a thief to him, which was eight miles from thence, who with joy and fingeing cheau went thither, as merry as ever he was at any time before. In Prison he was a Month, where he did continually read, and invoke the Name of God.

These three Christians and constant Martyrs, William Seaman, Thomas Carman, and Thomas Hudson, after they were (as ye have heard) condemned the 19. day of May. Anno 1558. were carried out of Prison to the place where they should suffer, which was without Bishopgate at Norwich, called Lollards Pit. And being a l there, they made their humble Petitions unto the Lord. That being done, they rose and went to the Stake, and flinging all there with their Chains about them, immediately this said Thomas Hudson cometh forth from them under the Chain to the great wonder of many; whereby divers feared and greatly doubted of him. For some thought he would have recanted, other judged rather that he went to ask further day, and to desire conference; and some thought he came forth to ask some of his Parents Blessing. So some thought one thing, and some another: but his two companions at the Stake cried out to comfort him what they could, exhorting him in the Bowels of Christ to be of good cheer, &c. But this sweet Hudson felt more in his Heart and Conscience than they could conceive in him. For alas good Soul, he was compassed (God knoweth) with great dolour and grief of mind, not for his death, but for lack of feeling of his Christ: and therefore being very careful he humbly fell down upon his Knees, and Prayed vehemently and earnestly unto the Lord, who at the last (according to his old mercies) sent him comfort, and then rose he with great joy, as a Man new changed even from death to life, and said:

Now I thank God I am strong, and pass not what Man can do unto me. So going to the Stake to his fellows again, in the end they all suffered most joyfully, constantly, and manfully, the death together, and were consumed in Fire, to the terror of the wicked, the comfort of Gods Children, and the magnifying of the Lords Name, who be praised therefore for ever, Amen.

After this, the foresaid Commissary Berry made great stir about other which were suspected within the said Town of Ailesham, and caused two hundred to creep to the Crofs at Pentecost, besides other punishments which they sustained.

On a time this Berry gave a poor Man of his Parish of Marlham a blow with the swingel of a flail, for a word speaking, that presently thereon he died, and the said Berry, as is said, held up his hand at the Bar therefore.

Then after that in his Parish of Ailesham also, Anno 1557. there was one Alice Oxes came to his House, and going into the Hall he meeting her, being before moved, smote her with his fist, whereby she was fain to be carried home, & the next day was found dead in her Chamber.

To write how many Concubines and Whores he had, none would believe it, but such as knew him in the Country where he dwelt. He was rich, and of great Authority, a great swearer, altogether given to Women, and persecuting the Gospel, and compelling Men to Idolatry.

One John Norgate, a Man learned, Godly, and zealous, who would not go to their trash, but rather dye, being sore hunted by the said Berry prayed heartily to God, and the Lord shortly after in a consumption delivered him. Notwithstanding the rage of this wicked Man waxed fiercer and fiercer. He troubled sundry Men, burnt many good Books that he could get, and divorced many Men and Women for Religion.

When he heard say that Queen Mary was dead, and the glory of their triumph quailed, the Sunday after, being the nineteenth of November Anno 1558. he made a great feast, and had one of his Concubines there, with whom he was in his Chamber after dinner, until Even song. Then went he to Church, where he had ministrifed Baptifm, and in going from Church homeward after Even song, between the Church-yard and his House; being but a little space (as it were a Church-yard breadth afunder) he fell down suddenly to the ground with a heavy groan, and never stirred after, neither shewed any one token of repentance.

This hapned his neighbours being by, to the example of all other. The Lord grant we may observe his judgments. And those that had his great riches, since his death have so consumed with them; that they be poorer now than they were before they had his goods: such judgment hath the Lord executed to the eyes of all Men.

At that time one Dunning Chancellor of Lincoln which in some part of Queen Maries days was Chancellor of Norwich, and a very merciles Tyrant as lived died in Lincolnshire of as sudden a warning as the said Berry died.

Thus have I shewed thee (good Reader) the constancy, boldness, and glorious victory of these happy Martyrs, as also the tyrannical cruelty of that unfortunate Commissary, and his terrible end. The Lord grant we may all effectually honour the judgments of Gods, and fear to displease his holy Majesty. Amen.

¶ The Persecution of Mother Seaman.

About this time, or fomewhat before, was one Joan Seaman, Mother to the foresaid William Seaman, being of the Age of threefore and six years, persecuted by the said Sir John Tyrel also, out of the Town of Mendlesham aforesaid, because the would not go to Mass and receive against her Conscience. Which good old Woman being from her House, was faglad sometime to lye in Bushes, Groves, and Fields, and sometime in her Neighbours House, when she could. And her Husband being at home, about the age of eighty years, fell sick, and the hearing thereof, with speed returned home to her House, and not regarding her life, but considering her duty, and shewed her diligence to her Husband most faithfully, until God took him away by death. Then by Gods providence the fell sick also, and departed this life within her own House shortly after.

And when one Master Symonds the Commissary heard of it, dwelling thereby in a Town called Thordam, he commanded straightly that she should be buried in no Christian burial (as they call it) where through her friends were compelled to lay her in a pit under a Motes die. Her Husband and she kept a good House, and had a good report amongst their neighbours, willing always to receive strangers, and to comfort the poor and sick, and lived together in the Holy estate of Matrimony very honestly above 40. years, and she departed this Life willingly and joyfully, with a steadfast Faith and a good remembrance of Gods promise in Christ Jesus.

In the said time of Queen Mary, there dwelt in the Town of Wethersey by Mendlesham aforesaid, a very honest Woman called Mother Benet, a Widow, which was persecuted out of the same Town, because she would not go to Mass, and other their beggarly Ceremonies; but at the last she returned home again secretly to her House, and there departed this Life joyfully. But Sir John Tyrel and Master Symonds the Commissary would not let her be buried in the Church-yard. So was she laid in a grave by the high-way side.

The same good old Woman Mother Benet, in the time of persecution, met one of the said Mother Seamans Neighbours, and asked her how the said Mother Seaman did, and she answered, that she did very well, God be thanked. Oh, said she, Mother Seaman hath itept a great step before me; for she was never covetous that I could perceive.

Her Husband in his mirth would say unto her, O Woman, if thou wert sparing, thou mightest have saved me.

They said Christian George Husband had another Wife burnt before this Christian, whose Name was Agnes George, which suffered, as you have heard, with the thirteen at Stratford Bow. And after the death of the said Christian, he married an honest godly Woman again, and so they both (I mean the said Richard George and his last Wife) in the end were taken also, and laid in Prison, where they remained till the death of Queen Mary, and at last were delivered by our most gracious Sovereign Lady Queen Elizabeth, whom the Lord grant long to Reign among us, for his mercies sake, Amen.

Anno 1558.

12 Men and 13 Martyrs burned.

Secretly in a back clofe in the Field by the Town of Illington, were collected and assembled together a certain company of Godly and Innocent persons, to the number of 40. Men and Women. Who there fitting together at prayer, and virtuously occupied in the meditation of Gods holy Word, first cometh a certain Man to them unknown; who looking over unto them, so stayed and saluted them, saying, that they looked like Men that meant no hurt. Then one of the said company asked the Man, if he could tell whose clofe that was, and whether they might be so bold there to sit. Yea, said he, for that ye seem unto me such persons as intend no harm, and so departed. Within a quarter of an hour after, cometh the Constable of Illington, named King, warded with six or seven other, accompanying him in the same business, one with a Bow, another with a Bill, and other with their Weapons likewise. The which six or seven persons the said Constable left a little behind him in a clofe place, there to be ready if need should be, while he with one with him should go view them before. Who so doing, came through them, looking and viewing what they were doing, and what Books they had, and so going a little forward, and returning back again, bade them deliver their Books. They understanding that he was Constable, refused not so to do. With that cometh forth the residue of his fellows above touched, who bade them stand, and not depart. They answered again, they would be obedient and ready to go whithersoever they would have them, and so were they first carried to a Brewhouse but a little way off, while that some of the said Souldiers ran to the Justice next at hand. But the Justice was not at home; whereupon they were had to Sir Roger Cholmley. In the mean time some of the Women, being of the same number of the fore said forty persons, escaped away from them, some in the clofe, some before they came to the Brewhouse. For so they were carried; ten with one Man, eight with another, and with some more, with some less, in such sort as it was not hard for them to escape that would. In fine, they that were carried to Sir Roger Cholmley, were twenty seven, which Sir Roger Cholmley and the Recorder taking their Names in a Bill, and calling them one by one, so many as answered to their Names, he sent to Newgate. In the which number of them that answered, and that were sent to Newgate, were twenty and two.

These two and twenty were in the said Prison of Newgate seven weeks before they were examined, to whom word was sent by Alexander the Keeper, that if they would hear a Mass, they should all be delivered. Of these fore said two and twenty were burned thirteen: In Smithfield seven, at Brainford six.

The first seven were brought forth to examination before Boner, and so having their condemnation, were burnt (as is said) in Smithfield. The other six followed not long after, and suffered at Brainford, whereof specially here followeth now in order of Story to be seen.

Martyrs.

First, That ye being within the City and Diocese of London have not, according to the common custom of the Catholick Church of this Realm of England, come to your own Parish Church, nor yet to the Cathedral Church of this City and Diocese of London, to hear devoutly and christianly the Mass, the Mass, the Even-song, sung or said there in the Latin Tongue, after the common usage and manner of the Church of this Realm.

2. Secondly, That ye have not come to any of the said Churches to pray, to go in Procession, or to exercise your selves there in godly and laudable exercises.

3. Thirdly, That you have not conformed your selves duly to all the laudable Customs, Rites, and Ceremonies of any the said Churches.

4. Fourthly, Ye have not been confessed at due times and places to your own Curate, of your sins.

5. Fifthly, Ye have not received at your said Curates hands (as of the Minister of Christ) absolution of your sins.

6. Sixthly, You have not at due times and places of your Curate received reverently and duly the Sacrament of the Altar.

7. Seventhly, Ye have not faithfully and truly believed, that in the said Sacrament of the Altar, there is really and truly the very Body and Blood of Christ.

8. Eighthly, Ye have not by your mouth, nor otherwise by your deed expressed or declared in any wise, that ye without wavering or doubting do think and believe, that the Faith and Religion now observed in the Church of England, is a true Faith and Religion in all points.

9. Ninthly, Ye have not made any signification that you do in deed approve or allow in any wise the common Service in Latin, here observed and kept in the Church of this Realm of England.

10. Tenthly, Ye have not believed, nor do believe at this present, that the Service in Latin, commonly used and observed in the Church of this Realm, is good and lawful, and not against the Word of God.

11. Eleventhly, Ye have in times past liked, allowed, and approved as good and godly, and so do like, allow, and approve at this present, the Service in English, the Books of Common Prayer, the Books of Communion, the Religion set forth and used in the time of King Edward the sixth, especially as it was set forth and used in the latter days of the said King Edward.

12. Twelfthly, Ye have in times past been very desirous, and so are at this present, that the said English Service, the said Book of Common Prayer, the said Book of Communion, and the said Religion and Faith so set forth and used in King Edward's time, might now again be restored, set forth and used, and your self freely at your liberty, without any restraint or lets to use it, and also in all points and things to do therein, as ye did, especially in the latter days of the said Edward the sixth.

13. Thirteenthly, Ye have of late been charitably sent to from me the Bishop of London, and also by mouth exhorted, that where of late you did leave your Churches, and went in the time of Divine Service into the fields and prophane places, to read English Psalms, and certain English Books, ye would leave off that, and being out of Prison, and at your liberty, come into your own Parish Churches, there to hear Mattins, Mass, and Even-song, after the common order of the Churches of this Realm, and to make due confession of your sins to your own Curate, and receive at his hands (as of the Minister of Christ, having therein sufficient Authority) absolution of your sins, hear Mass, receive the Sacrament of the Altar with a true Faith, according to the Belief of the Catholick Church, and observe all other the Rites and Customs of the said Catholick Church used in this Realm of England, as well in going in Procession after the Cross, as also otherwise generally.

14. Fourteenthly, Ye being to required, have refused, and do refuse so to do, saying, amongst other vain and light words, that forso much as ye were imprisoned by the space of six weeks, not knowing where with ye were charged, your Petition should be and was, that ye might first answer to your former cause, and then ye would be ready to answer me the said Bishop to all that by me should be laid to our charge.

Unto the which Articles all the forenamed seven (only Ranold Eastland excepted) made answer in effect as hereafter followeth.

The Answers of the forenamed persons to the Articles aforesaid.

To the first Article they answered affirmatively, Roger Holland adding, that he came not to their Latin Service these two years before.

Matthew Ricarby added, That he came not to Church since Latin Service was renewed, because it is against the Word of God, and Idolatry is committed in creeping to the Cross.

Henry Pond added, if he had licence then to go to Church, he would not.

To the second Article they all answered affirmatively; Henry Pond adding as in the first Article. John Floyd added, That the Latin Service then used, was set up by man, and not by God, and this he learned (he said) in King Edward's days, which he believed to be true. Robert Southam added, That he refused to come to Church, because it is furnished with Idols, and because the Sacrament of the Altar he believed to be an Idol.

To the third Article they all answered affirmatively: For they said, That the Customs, Rites, and Ceremonies of the Church then used, are not agreeable to Gods Word.

To the fourth and fifth Articles, they all answered affirmatively, adding, that they believed no Priest hath Power to remit sin.

To the sixth Article John Holiday, Henry Pond, and Robert Southam answered, That since the Queens Majesties reign; but Robert Southam added, not for ten years before, he had received the Sacrament of the Altar, either at their Curates hands, or any other Priest. John Floyd, Matthew Ricarby and Roger Holland answered affirmatively, adding in effect that the Sacrament of the Altar is no Sacrament approved by the Word of God, &c.

To the seventh Article they all confessed the Contents thereof to be true in every part: Henry Pond adding, That he knoweth not nor believeth any such Sacrament, called the Sacrament of the Altar, but confesseth the Sacrament of the Lords Supper, and believeth that to be approved. John Floyd added, That those that kneel to and worship the Sacrament of the Altar, commit Idolatry, &c.

8, 9, 10. To the eighth, ninth, and tenth Articles, they all confessed the contents of those Articles to be true. But John Holiday, Henry Pond, and John Floyd added, That they do allow the Latin Service for them that understand the same, so far as it agreeth with Gods Word. For some part thereof is not agreeable to Gods Word (they said;) but to such as do not understand the said Service in Latin, they do not allow it, for it doth not profit them. Robert Southam added and said, That it was a fond question to ask a simple man, whether the Latin Service be good and lawful. Matthew Ricarby and Roger Holland denied the Service in Latin to be good.

11. To the eleventh Article, they all confessed the same to be true in every part; saving Henry Pond, and Matthew Ricarby, who answered in effect that they could not judge thereof, but leave them to be tried by the Word of God.

12. To the twelfth Article, they granted and confessed the same to be true, and desired of God that the Service were in the English again.

13. To the thirteenth Article they all granted and confessed the same to be true.

14. To the fourteenth Article they all granted and confessed the same to be true in every part.

Thus have ye the Answers of these men to the foresaid Articles, save that Reinold Eastland required to answer thereunto, refused so to do, alledging that he knoweth that to end a strife an Oath is lawful; but to begin a strife an Oath is not lawful; and therefore he now refuseth to take his Oath in the beginning of this matter against him. Whereupon being charged by the Bishop, he said for his not answering to the Articles, he was content to stand unto the order of the Law for his punishment, whatsoever it should be.

The 17th day after of the said Month of June, the said Eastland appeared again before the Bishop, who standing firm in that he had said before, denied to make any Answer in that case, &c. whereupon the said Eastland, with the other six his fellow Prisoners, were assigned by the Bishop to repair again to the same place at Afternoon, who being there present in the foresaid Consistory as they were commanded, and standing all together before the said Bishop, he beginning thus with them, asked them, if he had committed them to Prison: They said, No; but Mr. Cholmley and the Recorder of London committed them to Newgate.

Then being demanded further by the Bishop, if he had done any thing or act to keep them in Prison, or to hinder their Liberty from Prison; to this they answered they could not tell. Then the foresaid Articles being again recited to them, all they answered and knowledged them to be the Articles, and that they would stand to their Answers made to the same. Whereupon the Bishop dis- severing them apart one from another, proceeded with them severally, first beginning with Reinold Eastland, who there declared that he had been uncharitably handled and talked withal since his first imprisonment in that behalf. Then being required to reconcile himself again to the Catholick Faith, and go from his Opinions; he said, that he knew nothing why he should recant; and therefore would not conform himself in that behalf, &c. and so the Sentence was read against him, and he given to the Secular Power, &c.

After him was called in John Holiday, who likewise being advertised to renounce his Heresies (as they called them) and to return to the Unity of their Church, said, That he was no Heretic, nor did hold any Heresie, neither any Opinion contrary to the Catholick Faith, and so would offer himself to be judged therein. Whereupon he likewise persisting in the same, the Sentence was pronounced against him, condemning him to be burnt.

Next to him was condemned, with the like Sentence,

The Martyrdom of Henry Pond, Reinold Eastland, R. Southam, Matthew Ricarby, John Floyd, L. Holiday, R. Holland in Smithfield Aug 1558 Ju. 27.

The Condemnation of Henry Pond.

Henry Pond, because he would not submit himself to the Romish Church, saying to Boner, That he had done or spoken nothing whereof he was or would be sorry, but that he did hold the Truth of God, and no Heresie, &c.

After whom next followed John Floyd, who likewise denied to be of the Popes Church, and said his mind of the Latin Service, that the Prayers made to Saints is Idolatry, and that the Service in Latin is profitable to none, but only to such as understand the Latin. Moreover, being charged by Boner of Heresie, and saying, that whatsoever he and such other now-a-days do, all is Heresie; for this he was condemned with the same butcherly Sentence, and so by the Secular Power was sent away.

The Condemnation of J. Floyd, R. Southam, Matthew Ricarby and Roger Holland.

Then Robert Southam, after him Matthew Ricarby, and last of all Roger Holland were severally produced.

The Martyrdom of Six men burned at Braunford An 1558 July 14

Thus Roger Holland with his Fellows (as ye heard) standing to their Answers, and refusing to acknowledge the Doctrine of the Romish Church, were altogether condemned, the Sentence being read against them, and so all seven by Secular Magistrates being sent away to Newgate the seventeenth of June, not long after about the seven and twentieth day of the said Month were had to Smithfield, and there ended their lives in the glorious cause of Christs Gospel. Whose particular Examinations came not to our hands; saving only the Examinations of R. Holland, which here follow in order and manner as we received them by the Information of certain, who were present at the same.

The Examination and Condemnation of Roger Holland.

The first examination of Roger Holland.

This Roger Holland, a Merchant-Taylor of London, was first an Apprentice with one Mr. Kempton at the Black Boy in Watling-street, where he served his Apprenticeship with much trouble unto his Master in breaking him from his licentious liberty which he had before been trained and brought up in, giving himself to riot, as dancing, fencing, gaming, banqueting and wanton company; and besides all this, being a stubborn and an obstinate Papist, far unlike to come to any such end as God called him unto; the which was as followeth:

His Master, notwithstanding this his lewdness, putting him in trust with his Accounts, he had received for him certain money, to the sum of thirty pounds, and falling into ill Company, lost the said money every Groat at Dice, being past all hope which way to answer it, and therefore he purposed to convey himself away beyond the Seas, either into France or into Flanders.

Now having determined with himself thus to do, he called betimes in the Morning to a Servant in the House, an ancient and discreet Maid, whose name was Elizabeth, which professed the Gospel, with a life agreeing unto the same, and at all times much rebuking the wilful and obstinate Papistry, as also the licentious living of this Roger Holland. To whom he said, Elizabeth, I would I had followed thy gentle persuasions and friendly rebukes; which if I had done, I had never come to this shame and misery which I am now fallen into; for this Night have I lost thirty pounds of my Masters money, which to pay him, and to make up mine Accounts, I am not able. But this much I pray you desire my Mistress, that she would intreat my Master to take this Bill of my hand, that I am thus much indebted unto him; and if I be ever able, I will see him paid, desiring him that the matter may pass with silence, and that none of my Kindred nor Friends may ever understand this my lewd part: For if it should come unto my Fathers ears, it would bring his grey hairs overshon unto his Grave; and so was he departing.

The Maid considering that it might be his utter undoing, Stays, said she; and having a piece of money lying by her, given unto her by the death of a Kinsman of hers, who (as it was thought, was Dr. Redman) she brought unto him thirty pounds, saying, Roger, here is thus much money; I will let thee have it, and I will keep this Bill. But since I do this much for thee, to help thee, and to save thy honesty, thou shalt promise me to refuse all lewd and wild Company, all swearing and ribaldry talk; and if ever I know thee to play one Twelve-pence at either Dice or Cards, then will I shew this thy Bill unto my Master. And furthermore, thou shalt promise me to resort every day to the Lecture at Abchurch-lane, and the Sermon at Pauls every Sunday, and to cast away all thy Books of Papistry and vain Ballads, and get thee the Testament and Book of Service, and read the Scriptures with reverence and fear, calling unto God till for his Grace to direct thee in his Truth. And pray unto God fervently, desiring him to pardon thy former offences, and not to remember the sins of thy youth; and ever be afraid to break his Laws, or offend his Majesty. Then shall God keep thee, and send thee thy hearts desire.

After this time, within one half year God had wrought such a change in this man, that he was become an earnest Professor of the Truth, and detested all Papistry and evil Company; so that he was in admiration to all them that had known him and seen his former life and wickedness.

Then he repaired into Lancashire unto his Father, and brought divers good Books with him, and bestowed them upon his Friends, so that his Father and others began to taste of the Gospel, and to detest the Mass, Idolatry, and Superstition; and in the end his Father gave him a stock of money to begin the world withal, to the sum of fifty pounds.

Then he repaired to London again, and came to the Maid that lent him the money to pay his Master withal, and said unto her, Elizabeth, here is thy money I borrowed of thee, and for the friendship, good will, and the good counsel I have received at thy hands, to recompence thee I am not able, otherwise than to make thee my wife; and soon after they were married, which was in the first year of Queen Mary. And having a Child by her, he caused Mr. Role to baptize his said Child in his own House. Notwithstanding he was betrayed unto the Enemies, and he being gone into the Country to convey the Child away, that the Papists should not have it in their assaulting hands, Borer caused his Goods to be seized upon, and most cruelly used his wife.

After this he remained closely in the City, and in the Country in the Congregations of the Faithful, until the last year of Queen Mary. Then he with the six other afore said, were taken in, or not far from St. Johns Wood, and so brought to Newgate upon May-day in the Morning, Anno 1558.

Then being called before the Bishop, Dr. Chadsey, both the Harsfields, and certain other, after many other fair and crafty persuasions of Dr. Chadsey, to allure him to their Babylonical Church; thus the Bishop began with him.

Holland. I for my part do with well unto thee, and the more for thy Friends sake. And as Dr. Standish telleth me, you and he were both born in one Parish, and he knoweth your Father to be a very honest Catholic Gentleman. And Mr. Doctor told me that he talked with you a year ago; and found you very willingly addicted to your own conceit. Divers of the City also have shewed me of you, that you have been a great Procurer of mens Servants to be of your Religion, and to come to your Congregations; but since you be now in the danger of the Law, I would wish you to play a wise mans part: So shall you not want any favour I can do or procure for you, both for our own sake, and also for your Friends, which be men of worship and credit, and wish you well, and by my troth, Roger, so do I.

Then said Mr. Egglestone, a Gentleman of Lancashire, and near Kinsman to Roger, being there present; I thank your good Lordship; your Honour meaneth good unto my Cousin, I beseech God he have the Grace to follow your counsel.

Holland. Sir, you crave of God you know not what. I beseech God to open your eyes to see the light of his Word.

Egglestone. Roger, hold your peace, lest you fate the worse at your Lords hands.

Holland. No, I shall fare as it pleaseth God; for man can do no more than God doth permit him.

Then the Bishop and the Doctors, with Johnson the Register, casting their Heads together, in the end said Johnson; Roger, how saist thou? wilt thou submit thy self unto my Lord, before thou be entered into the Book of Contempt?

Holland. I never meant but to submit my self unto the Magistrate, as I learn of St. Paul to the Romans, Chap. 13. and so he recited the Text.

Chadsey. Then I see you are no Anabaptist.

Holland. I mean not yet to be a Papist; for they and the Anabaptists agreed in this point, not to submit themselves to any other Prince or Magistrate, than those that must first be sworn to maintain them and their doings.

Chadsey. Roger, remember what I have said, and also what my Lord hath promised he will perform with further friendship. Take heed, Roger, for your ripeness of Wit hath brought you into these Errors.

Holland. Mr. Doctor, I have yet your words in memory, though they are of no such force to prevail with me. Then they whispered together again, and at the last said Borer, Roger, I perceive thou wilt be ruled by no good counsel, for any thing that either I, or your Friends or any other can say.

Holland. I may say to you, my Lord, as Paul said to Felix and unto the Jews, as doth appear in the two first and twentieth of the Acts, and in the fifteenth of the first Epistle to the Corinthians. It is not unknown unto my Master whom I was Apprentice withal, that I was of this your blind Religion that now is taught, and therein did obstinately and wilfully remain, until the later end of King Edward in manner, having that liberty under your Auricular Confession, that I made no conscience of sin, but trusted in the Priests Absolution, he for money doing some penance also for me: which after I had given, I cared no further what offences I did, no more than he passed after he had my money, whether he tasted Bread and Water for me, or no: so that lechery, swearing, drinking, or dicing all the night long, I made no conscience at all. And thus was I brought up, and herein have I continued till now of late, that God hath opened the light of his Word, and called me by his Grace to repentance of my former Idolatry and wicked Life: for in Lancashire their blindness and whoredom is overmuch more than may with chaste ears be heard. Yet these my Friends, which are not clear in these notable Crimes, think the Priest with his Mass can save them, though they blaspheme God, and keep Concubines besides their Wives, as long as they live. Yea, I know some Priests, very devout, my Lord, yet such as have six or seven children by four or five sundry women.

Mr. Doctor, now to your Antiquity, Unity, and Universality (for these Dr. Chadsey alledged as notes and tokens of their Religion) I am unlearned. I have no philosophy to shift my Reasons withal; but the truth I trust I have, which needeth no painted colours to set her forth. The Antiquity of our Church is not from Pope Nicholas, or Pope Joan, but our Church is from the beginning, even from the time that God said unto Adam, that the Seed of the Woman should break the Serpents head; and so to faithful Noah; to Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, to whom it was promised, that their Seed should multiply as the Stars in the Sky; and so to Moses, David, and all the holy Fathers that were from the beginning, unto the birth of our Saviour Christ. All they that believed these promises were of the Church, though the number were oftentimes but few and small, as in Helias's days, when he thought there was none but he that had not bowed their knees to Baal, when God had reserved seven thousand that never had bowed their knees to that Idol: as I trust there be seven hundred thousand more than I know of, that have not bowed their knees to the Idol your Mass, and your God Marion: the upholding whereof is your bloody cruelty, whiles you daily persecute Helias and the Servants of God, forcing them (as Daniel was in his Chamber) closely to serve the Lord their God; and even as we by this your cruelty are forced in the fields to pray unto God, that his holy Word may be once again truly preached amongst us, and that he would mitigate and shorten these idolatrous and bloody days, wherein all cruelty reigneth. Moreover, our Church have been the Apostles and Evangelists, the Martyrs and Confessors of Christ, that have at all times and in all ages been persecuted for the testimony of the Word of God. But for the upholding of your Church and Religion, what Antiquity can you shew? Yea, the Mass, that Idol and chief Pillar of your Religion, is not yet four hundred years old, and some of your Masses are younger, as that Mass of S. Thomas Becket the Traitor, wherein you pray, That you may be saved by the blood of S. Thomas. And as for your Latin Service, what are we of the Laity the better for it? I think he that should hear your Priests mumble up their Service, although he did well understand Latin, yet should he understand few words thereof; the Priests do so champ them and chew them, and spit so fast, that neither they understand what they say, nor they that hear them; and in the mean time the People, when they should pray with the Priest, are set to their Beads to pray our Ladies Prayer. So crafty is Satan to devise these his Dreams (which you defend with Fagot and Fire) to quench the light of the Word of God: which (as David saith) should be a Lantern to our feet. And again, wherein shall a young man direct his ways, but by the Word of God? And yet you will hide it from us in a Tongue unknown. S. Paul had rather in the Church to have five words spoken with understanding, than ten thousand in an unknown Tongue; and yet will you have your Latin Service and praying in a strange Tongue, whereof the People are utterly ignorant to be of such Antiquity?

The Greek Church, and a good part of Christendom besides, never received your Service in an unknown Tongue, but in their own natural Language, which all the People understand, neither yet your Transubstantiation, your receiving all alone, your Purgatory, your Images, &c.

As for the Unity which is in your Church, what is it else but Treason, Murder, Poysoning one another, Idolatry, Superstition, Wickedness? What Unity was in your Church, when there were three Popes at once? Where was your Head of Unity when you had a woman Pope? Here he was interrupted, and could not be suffered to proceed; but, faith the Bishop, Roger, these thy words are very blasphemy, and by the means of thy Friends thou shalt be suffered to speak, and art over malapert to teach any here. Therefore Keeper take him away.

The second Examination of Roger Holland.

The day that Henry Pond and the rest were brought forth to be again examined, Dr. Chadsey said, Roger, I trust you have now better considered of the Church Holland, than you did before.

Holland. I consider thus much: That out of the Church there is no Salvation, as divers ancient Doctors say.

Boner. That is well said. Mr. Egleston, I trust your Kinsman will be a good Catholic man. But Roger, you mean, I trust, the Church of Rome.

Holland. I mean that Church which hath Christ for her Head; which also hath his Word, and his Sacraments according to his Word and Institution.

Chadsey. Then Chadsey interrupted him, and said, is that a Testament you have in your hand?

Holland. Yea, Mr. Doctor, it is the New Testament. You will find no fault with the Translation (I think.) It is of your own Translation; it is according to the great Bible.

Boner. How say you? How do you know it is the Testament of Christ, but only by the Church? For the Church of Rome hath and doth preserve it, and out of the same hath made Decrees, Ordinances, and true Expolitions.

No (saith Roger) the Church of Rome hath and doth suppress the reading of the Testament. And what a true Expolition (I pray you) did the Pope make thereof, when he set his foot on the Emperor's neck; and said, Thou shalt walk upon the Lion and the Asse: the young Lion and the Dragon shalt thou tread under thy foot? Psal. 91.

Then said the Bishop; Such unlearned wild heads as thou and other, would be Expolitors of the Scripture. Would you then the ancient Learned (as there be some here as well as I) should be taught of you?

Holland. Youth delighteth in vanity. My wildness hath been somewhat the more by your Doctrine, than ever I learned out of this Book of God. But (my Lord) I suppose some of the old Doctors say; If a poor Lay-man bring his Reason and Argument out of the Word of God, he is to be credited afore the Learned, though they be never so great Doctors. For the gift of Knowledge was taken from the Learned Doctors, and given to poor Fishermen. Notwithstanding I am ready to be instructed by the Church.

Boner. That is very well said, Roger. But you must understand that the Church of Rome is the Catholic Church. Roger, for thy Friends sake (I promise thee) I will thee well, and I mean to do thee good. Keeper, see he want nothing. Roger, if thou lack any money to pleasure thee, I will see thou shalt not want. This he spake unto him alone, his Fellows being apart, with many other fair Promises, and so he was sent to Prison again.

The wickedness of Reg. Holland before he was called to the Gospel.

At the Examination, divers of Reg. Holland's friends and kinsfolks, being men of worship, were present, both Lancashire and Crofters.

The Mass, how old it is.

Latin Service.

The Greek Church differing from the Latin.

The second Examination of Roger Holland.

1558.The last Examination of Roger Holland.

The last Examination of Roger Holland was, when he with his fellow Prisoners were brought into the Consistory, and there excommunicated all, saving Roger, and ready to have their Sentence of Judgment given, with many threatening words to fear them withal: the L. Strange, Sir Tho. Jarret, M. Egleston Esquire, and divers other of worship, both of Cheeshire and Lancashire, that were Roger Holland's Kinsmen and Friends, being there present, which had been earnest Suters to the Bishop in his favour, hoping of his safety of life. Now the Bishop hoping yet to win him with his fair and flattering words, began after this manner.

Boner. Roger, I have divers times called thee before home to my House, and have conferred with thee, and being not learned in the Latin Tongue, it doth appear unto me thou art of a good memory, and of a very sensible talk, but something overhasty, which is a natural Discale to some men. And surely they are not the worst natured men. For I myself shall now and then be hasty, but mine anger is soon past. So, Roger, surely I have a good opinion of you, that you will not with these lewd Fellows call your self heading from the Church of your Parents and your Friends that are here, very good Catholics (as it is reported unto me.) And as I mean these good, so, Roger, play the wife mans part, and come home with the lost Son, and say, I have run into the Church of Schismatics and Heretics, from the Catholic Church of Rome; and you shall, I warrant you, not only find favour at Gods hands, but the Church that hath Authority, shall absolve you, and put new Garments upon you, and kill the Fainting, to make thee good cheer withal, that is, in so doing, as meat doth refresh and cheerish the mind, so shalt thou find as much quietness of Conscience in coming home to the Church, as did the hungry Son that had been fed afore with the Hogs, as you have done with these Heretics that fever themselves from the Church. I give them a homely name, but they be worse (putting his hand to his Cap for Re-erence sake) than Hogs: For they know the Church, and will not follow it. If I should say thus much to a Turk, he would (I think) believe me. But, Roger, if I did not hear thee, and thy Friends good will, I would not have said so much, as I have done; but I would have let mine Ordinary alone with you.

At these words his Friends that were there, gave the Bishop thanks for his good will and pains that he had taken in his and their behalf.

Boner. Well, Roger, how say you? Do you not believe, that after the Priest hath spoken the words of Consecration, there remaineth the Body of Christ really and corporally under the forms of Bread and Wine? I mean the self same Body that was born of the Virgin Mary, that was crucified upon the Crofs, that rose again the third day.

Holland. Your Lordship faith, the same Body which was born of the Virgin Mary, which was crucified upon the Crofs, which rose again the third day: but you leave out which ascended into Heaven; and the Scripture faith, he shall there remain until he come to judge the quick and the dead. Then he is not contained under the forms of Bread and Wine, by Hoc est Corpus meum, &c.

Boner. Roger, I perceive my pains and good will will not prevail, and if I should argue with thee, thou art so wilful (as all thy Fellows be, standing in thine own singularity and foolish conceit) that thou wouldst still talk to no purpose this seven years, if thou mightest be suffered. Answer whether thou wilt confess the Real and Corporal Presence of Christs Body in the Sacrament, or wilt not.

Holland. My Lord, although God by his sufferance hath here placed you, to set forth his truth and glory in us his faithful Servants; notwithstanding your meaning is far from the zeal of Christ: and for all your words, you have the same zeal that Annas and Caiaphas had, trusting to their Authority, Traditions and Ceremonies, more than to the Word of God.

Boner. If I should suffer him, he would fall from reasoning to raving, as a frantick Heretic.

L. Strange. Roger, faith the Lord Strange I perceive my Lord would have you tell him whether you will submit your self to him, or no?

Boner. Yea, faith Boner; and confests this Preface that Phave spoken of.

With this, Roger turning him to the Lord Strange and the rest of his Kinsmen and Friends, very cheerfully kneeled down upon his knees, and said; God by the mouth of his Servant S. Paul hath said, Let every Soul submit himself unto the higher Power; and he that resisteth receiveth his own Damnation: and as you are a Magistrate appointed by the will of God, so do I submit my self unto you; and to all such as are appointed for Magistrates.

Boner. That is well said, I see you are no Anabaptist. How say you then to the Presence of Christs Body and Blood in the Sacrament of the Altar?

Holland. I say, and beseech you all to mark and bear witness with me (for so you shall do before the Judgment Seat of God) what I speak, for here is the Conclusion: And ye my dear Friends (turning him to his Kinsmen) I pray you shew my Father what I do say, that he may understand I am a Christian man. I say and believe, and am therein fully persuaded by the Scriptures, that the Sacrament of the Supper of our Lord, ministered in the holy Communion according to Chills institution, I being penitent and sorry for my sins, and minding to amend and lead a new life, and so coming worthily unto Gods Boord in perfect Love and Charity, do there receive by faith the Body and Blood of Christ. And though Christ in his Human Nature sit at the right hand of his Father, yet (by faith I say) his Death, his Passion, his Merits are mine, and by faith I dwell in him, and he in me. And as for the Mass, Transubstantiation, and the worshipping of the Sacrament, they are meer Impiety and horrible Idolatry.

Boner. I thought so much, said Boner, (suffering him to speak no more) how he would prove a very blasphemous Heretic as ever I heard. How unreverently doth he speak of the blessed Mass? and so read his bloody Sentence of Condemnation, adjudging him to be burned.

All this while Roger was very patient and quiet, and when he should depart, he said, My Lord, I beseech you suffer me to speak two words. The Bishop would not hear him, but bade him away. Notwithstanding, being requested by one of his Friends, he said, Speak, what hast thou to say?

Holland. Even now I told you that your Authority was from God, and by his sufferance: and now I tell you, God hath heard the Prayer of his Servants, which hath been poured forth with tears for his afflicted Saints, which daily you persecute, as now you do us. But this I dare be bold in God to speak (which by his Spirit I am moved to say) that God will shorten your hand of Cruelty, that for a time you shall not molest his Church. And this shall you in short time well perceive, my dear Brethren, to be most true. For after this day, in this place shall there not be any by him put to the trial of Fire and Fagot: And after this day there was none that suffered in Smithfield for the testimony of the Gospel, God be thanked.

After these words spoken, said Boner, Roger, thou art, I perceive, as mad in these thy Heresies as C. r. was Joan Buecher. In anger and fume thou wouldst become a railing Prophet. Though thou and all the sort of you would see me hanged, yet I shall live to burn, yea, I will burn all the sort of you that come in my hands, that will not worship the blessed Sacrament of the Altar, for all thy prating, and so he went his way.

Then Roger Holland began to exhort his Friends to Repentance, and to think well of them that suffered for the testimony of the Gospel, and with that the Bishop came back, charging the Keeper that no man should speak to them without his licence, and if they did, they would be committed to Prison. In the mean season H. Pond and Roger spake still unto the People, exhorting them to stand in the Truth: adding moreover, that God would shorten these cruel and evil days for his elects sake.

The day they suffered, a Proclamation was made, That none should be so bold to speak or talk any word unto them, or receive any thing of them, or to touch them upon pain of Imprisonment, without either Bail or Mainprize; with divers other cruel threatening words, contained in the same Proclamation. Notwithstanding the People cried out, desiring God to strengthen them: and they likewise prayed for the People, and the restoring of his Word. At length Roger embracing the stake, and the Reeds, said these words:

Lord I most humbly thank thy Majesty, that thou hast called me from the state of death, unto the light of thy heavenly Word, and now unto the fellowship of thy Saints, that I may sing and say, Holy, holy, Lord God of Hosts. And Lord into thy hands I commit my Spirit. Lord bless these thy people, and save them from idolatry. And so he ended his life, looking up into Heaven, praying and praising God, with the rest of his Fellow Saints. For whose joyfull constancy the Lord be praised.

The Martyrdom of six, which suffered at Braintree for the true testimony of Jesus Christ.

July 14: Six Martyrs burnt at Braintree.

Not long after the death of the forenamed seven godly Martyrs that suffered in Smithfield, were fix other faithful Witnesses of the Lords true Testament, martyred at Braintree seven miles from London, the 14th day of July, 1558. which said fix were of that Company that were apprehended in a Close hard by Ilchester, as is above specified) and sent to Prison. Whose Names and Articles propounded to them, with their Answers unto the same, hereafter follow.

Robert Mills,
Stephen Cotton,
Robert Dynes,
Stephen Wight,
John Slade,
William Pikes, or Pikes a Tanner. } Martyrs.

These six forenamed Martyrs (gentle Reader) had their Articles ministred to them by Thomas Darbyshire, Bishops Chancellor, at sundry times; as Robert Wille the 20th day of June, Stephen Wight the 21th day of the said Month. Stephen Cotton and John Slade the 22th day, and Robert Dynes and William Pikes the 23th day. At which said times, though they were severally examined, yet had they all one manner of Articles ministred to them, yea and the self same Articles that were ministred to John Hilday, Henry Pond, and their Company aforesaid. Which said Articles I leave the Reader to look for above in their story, and think it not necessary any more to rehearse them, but only to proceed with their Answers to the same, which briefly and in sum hereafter followeth.

The answers of the six forenamed Martyrs to the Articles.

To the first Article they all granted the same; and added thereto for going to Church, that R. Mills and Stephen Wight came not thither for three quarters of a year before, and John Slade and William Pikes not since the Queens Reign, Stephen Cotton not for a Twelve-month before, and Robert Dynes not for two years before.

The second, third, fourth, fifth, and sixth Articles they all answered in effect, as the forenamed John Hilday, Henry Pond, and their Company did, saying they added, that as the Rites, Customs, and Ceremonies are against the Word of God, so will they observe and keep no part of the same. Stephen Wight added further, That he received not their Sacrament of the Altar for two years before, nor John Slade and William Pikes since Queens Maries Reign, nor Stephen Cotton for a Twelve-month before, nor Robert Dynes for three years before.

To the seventh Article, They all granted the same in every part like unto the forenamed Henry Pond and his Company; saying that Robert Dynes added, that it was no part of his Belief.

To the eighth Article they all granted the same in every part, as the forenamed William Hilday and his Company: but Robert Mills added thereto, that he will not come to Church, nor receive their Religion, so long as the Cross is crept up, and worshipped, and Images are in Churches. John Slade added in effect as Robert Mills did, adding further, that there be not seven Sacraments, but two Sacraments, which is Baptism and the Supper of the Lord. Stephen Cotton would not further allow the Popish Religion, than it agreeth with Gods Word: and Robert Dynes affirmed in effect the same to Stephen Cotton also.

To the ninth and tenth Articles, Robert Mills, John Slade, and Stephen Cotton answered, that they do not allow the Popish Service then set forth, because it is against the Truth, and in a strange Language which the Common People understand not. Robert Dynes and William Pikes will neither allow nor disallow the Latin Service, because they understand it not. And Stephen Wight would make no direct Answer to the Articles at all, and to the eleventh, twelfth, thirteenth, and fourteenth Articles we find no Answers recorded of the said Stephen Wight, but of the rest of his fellow Prisoners we find answers to those Articles which hereafter follow.

To the eleventh Article, Robert Mills, John Slade, and Stephen Cotton answered, That concerning the Books, Faith, and Religion specified in this Article, they do allow them to far forth, as they agree with Gods Word, &c. Robert Dynes would make no Answer thereto, because he thought himself unmeet to judge thereof: and William Pikes doth not remember that he hath misliked the service, and the Faith, and Religion set forth in King Edwards the sixths time.

To the twelfth they grant, That if they might receive the Sacrament as they did in King Edwards the sixths days, they would with all their heart so do.

To the thirteenth and fourteenth Articles, they confess and grant the Contents of them to be true in every part.

When at the days before specified, these good men were produced before Bishops Chancelor, Thomas Darbyshire, and had the fore said Articles ministred unto them, and they (as ye have heard) had made answer unto the same; in the end the Chancelor commanded them to appear before him again the eleventh day of July after in the said place at Pauls. Where when they came, he required of them, whether they would turn from their Opinions to the Mother holy Church; and if not, that then, whether there were any cause to the contrary, but that he might proceed with the Sentence of Condemnation. Whereunto they all answered, That they would not go from the Truth, nor relent from any part of the same while they lived. Then he charged them to appear before him again the next day in the afternoon, between one and two of the Clock, to hear the definitive Sentence read against them, according to the Ecclesiastical Laws then in force. At which time, he sitting in Judgment, talking with these godly and virtuous men, at last came into the said place Sir Edwards Hastings and Sir Thomas Cornwallis, Knights, two of Queen Maries Officers of her House, and being there, they saw them down over against the Chancelor, in whose presence the said Chancelor condemned these good poor Lambs, and delivered them over to the secular Power, who received and carried them to Prison immediately, and there kept them in safety, till the day of their death.

In the mean time this naughty Chancelor slept not, I warrant you, but that day in which they were condemned, he made certificate unto the Lord Chancelors Office, from whence the next day after was sent a Writ to burn them at Braintree also said, which accordingly was accomplished in the same place, the said fourteenth day of July: Whereunto they being brought, made their humble Prayers unto the Lord Jesus, undesired themselves, went joyfully to the stake, whereunto they were bound, and the fire flaming about them, they yielded their Souls, Bodies, and Lives into the hands of the Omnipotent Lord, for whose cause they did suffer, and to whose protection I commend the gentle Reader, Amen.

Among

Anno 1557. Among these fix was one William Pikes (as ye have heard) who sometime dwelt in Ipſwich in Suffolk, by his occupation a Tanner a very honest Godly Man, and of a virtuous disposition, a good Keeper of Hospitality, and beneficial to the persecuted in Queen Maries days. This said William Pikes, in the third year of Queen Maries Reign, a little after Midſummer, being then at liberty, went into his Garden, and took with him a Bible of Rogers translation, where he, sitting with his face towards the South, reading on the said Bible, suddenly fell down upon his book, between eleven and twelwe a clock of the day, four drops of fresh Blood, and he knew not from whence it came. Then he seeing the same, was sore astonished, and could by no means learn (as I said) from whence it should fall: and wiping out one of the drops with his finger, he called his Wife, and said, In the vertue of God Wife, what meaneth this? Will the Lord have four Sacrifices? I fee well enough the Lord will have Blood: his will be done, and give me Grace to abide the trial. Wife, let us pray (said he) for I fear the day draweth nigh. Afterward he daily looked to be apprehended of the Papists, and it came to pass accordingly, as ye have heard. Thus much thought I good to write thereof, to stir up our dull senses in considering the Lords works, and reverently to honour the same. His name therefore be praised for evermore, Amen.

Moreover, concerning the said William Pikes, as he was in Newgate fore sick, and at the point of death, so that no Man looked he should live six hours, he declared to them that stood by, that he had been twice in persecution before, and that now he desired the Lord, if it were his will, that he might glorifie his Name at the Stake, and so as he prayed it came to pass at Brainford.

Ye heard before, that of those two and twenty taken at Ipſington, thirteen were burned, and six escaped, albeit very hardly, and some of them not without scourging by the hands of the Bishop. In the which number was Thomas Hinshaw and John Willes, according to the express picture hereafter purported.

The ſcourging of Tho. Hinshaw.

IN the Godly number above mentioned, which were apprehended at Ipſington, there congregated together, for their exerciſe of prayer and reading, was this Thomas Hinshaw above named, a young Man of the age of 19. or 20. years, prentiſe in Pauls Churchyard with one M. Pagon, Who with the reſt was carried to the Conſtables of Ipſington, and there every one of them ſearched, and led forthwith to the chief Juſtice Maſter Cholmley, dwelling in the old Bailly in London, and by him then the ſaid Thomas Hinshaw was ſent to Newgate: and there remaining priſoner without conference with any, about eight weeks, at the laſt was ſent for to Boner Biſhop of London, and by him, Harpſfield, and Cole, examined. After which examination he was ſent to Newgate again, where he remained three weeks following. Which time being overpaſſed, he was ſent for again before the ſaid Biſhop, the day being Saturday, and with him had much talk to little purpoſe. The next day after alſo, which was Sunday, they perſwaded with him very much in like manner, and perceiving they could not bend him unto their bow, in the afternoon the Biſhop going unto Fulham, took him with him, where immediately after his coming, he was ſet in the Stocks remaining there all the firſt night with Bread and Water.

The next morning the Biſhop came and examined him himſelf, and perceiving no yielding to his mind, he ſent M. Harpſfield to talk with him; who, after long talk, in the end fell to raging words, calling the ſaid Thomas Hinshaw peeviſh boy, and asked him whether he thought he went about to damn his Soul, or no? &c. Unto which the ſaid Thomas answered, that he was perſwaded that they laboured to maintain their dark and devilish Kingdom, and not for any love to truth. Then Harpſfield, being in a mighty rage, told the Biſhop thereof. Whereat the Biſhop fumed and fretted, that ſcant for anger being able to ſpeak, he ſaid, Doſt thou anſwer my Archdeacon ſo, thou naughty boy? I ſhall handle thee well enough, be affured: ſo he ſent for a couple of Rods, and cauſed him to kneel againſt a long Bench in an Arbor in his Garden, where the ſaid Thomas, without any inforcement of his part, offered himſelf to the beating, and did abide the fury of the ſaid Boner, ſo long as the ſat panned Biſhop could endure with breath, and till for wearineſs he was fain to ceaſe, and give place to his shameful act. He had two willow Rods, but he waſted but one, and ſo left off.

Now after this ſcourging, the ſaid Thomas Hinshaw notwithstanding did ſuſtain divers conflicts, and examinations ſundry times. At laſt being brought before the ſaid Biſhop in his Chappel at Fulham, there he had procured witneſſes, and gathered Articles againſt him, which the young Man denied, and would not affirm, or conſent to any interrogatory there and then miniſtred, do what they could.

The Articles were theſe.

Concerning Palms, Almes, holy Bread, holy Water, Articles ob: Auricular confeſſion, receiving the Sacrament at Eaſter, hearing divine ſervice then ſet forth, &c.

Whether he had received all theſe, or whether he would receive them or no.

Item, what he thought of the Service ſet forth in King Edward's time, in his latter days, and in eſpecial, what he thought of the verity of Chriſts Body in the Sacrament.

Not long after this his examination, about a fortnight or such a thing, the foresaid Examinee fell sick of a burning Ague, whereby he was delivered upon censure unto his Master Martin Pynson in Pauls Church-yard afore said: for the Bishop thought verily he was more like to dye than to live. The which his sickness endured a twelve-month or more, so that in the mean time Queen Mary died. Then he shortly after recovered health, and escaped death, being at the writing of this yet alive, both witness and reporter of the same, the Lord therefore be praised, Amen.

The scourging of John Willes by Bishop Boner.

The Story of
a capper.

BEsides the above named, was scourged also by the hands of the said Bishop, one John Willes a Capper, a right faithful and true honest Man in all his dealings and conditions. Who was Brother to the foresaid R. Willes burned before at Brainford, as is above signified. Who also was apprehended in the same number with them at I-lington, as is mentioned also before: and being brought before Boner, and there examined, was commanded to the Colehouse, with the foresaid Tho. Hinshaw, where they remained one night in the Stocks. From thence he was sent to Fulham, where he, with the said Hinshaw, remained 8, or 10. days in the Stocks; during which time he sustained divers conflicts with the said Boner, who had him oft times in Examination, urging him, and with a Stick which he had in his hand, oft-times rapping him on the head, and flinging him under the chin, and on the ears, saying he looked down like a thief. Moreover, after he had assayed all manner of ways to cause him to recant, and could not, at length having him to his Orchard, there within a little arbor, with his own hands beat him first with a willow rod, and that being worn well nigh to the stumps, he called for a birchen rod, which a lad brought out of his Chamber. The cause why he so beat him, was this; Boner asked him when he had crept to the Cross he answered, Not since he came to the years of discretion, neither would, though he should be torn with wild hoes. Then Boner bade him make a Cross in his forehead, which he refused to do. Whereupon he had him incontinently to his Orchard, and there calling for rods, threwed his cruelty upon him, as he did upon Thomas Hinshaw, as is above declared.

This done, he had him immediately to the Parish Church of Fulham with the said Tho. Hinshaw, and Rob. Willes, to whom there being severally called before him, he ministered certain Articles, asking if he would subscribe to the same. To the which the said John Willes made his Answer according to his Confidence, denying them all, except one Article which was concerning K. Edwards Service in English. Shortly after this beating, Boner sent to him in Prison a certain old Priest lately come from Rome, to conjure out the evil Spirit from him, who laying his hand upon his head, began with certain words pronounced over him, to conjure as he had been wont before to do. Willes marvelling what the Priest was about to do, said, He trusted no evil Spirit to be within him, and laughed him to scorn, &c.

As this John Willes was divers times and oft called before Boner, so much communication and talk passed between them; which to recite all, it were too long. And if it were not unpleasant for the Reader that lusteth to laugh, to see the blind and unfavoury reasons of that Bishop, which he used to perfwade the ignorant withal. As in the process of his other talk with this Willes, Boner going about to perfwade him not to meddle with matters of the Scripture, but rather to believe other Mens teaching, which had more skill in the same; first asked if he did believe the Scripture? Yea, said he, that I do. Then the Bishop, why (quoth he) Saint Paul saith, If the man sleep, the Woman is at liberty to go to another Man. If thou wert asleep having a Wife, wouldest thou be content thy Wife to take another Man? And yet this is the Scripture.

As if thou shouldst go to a far Country, and meet with a fatherly Man as I am (for these were his terms) and ask the way to the Head City, and he should say this way, and thou wilt not believe him, but follow Luther, and other Hereticks of late days, and go a contrary way, how wilt thou come to the place thou askest for? so if thou wilt not believe me, but follow the leading of other Hereticks, so shalt thou be brought to destruction, and burn both Body and Soul.

ANNO 1558. Astruly as thou seest the Bodies of them in Smithfield burnt, so truly their Souls do burn in Hell, because they err from the true Church.

Of times speaking to the said John Willes, he would say, They call me Boner. A vengeance on you all, I would fain be rid of you, but you have a delight in burning. But if I might have my will, I would fow your Mouths, and put you in facks and drown you.

Now somewhat to say concerning the deliverance of the said John Willes. The same day that he was delivered, Boner came unto the Stocks where he lay, and asked him how he liked his lodging, and his fare.

Well, said Willes, if it would please God I might have a little straw to lye or sit upon.

Then said Boner, Thou wilt shew no token of a Christian Man. And upon this his Wife came in unknowing unto him, being very great with Child, and looking every hour for her lying down, entreating the Bishop for her husband, and saying, that the would not go out of the House, but there would lay her belly in the Bishops House, unless he had her Husband with her. How sayest thou (quoth Boner) thou Heretic? If thy wife miscarry, or thy Child, or Children, if he be with one or two, should perish, the Blood of them would he require at thy hands. Then to this agreement he came, that he should hire a Bed in the Town of Fulham, and her husband should go home with her the morrow after, upon this condition, that his kinsman there present (one Robert Rouse) should bring the said Willes unto his House at Pauls the next day.

Whereunto the said Willes said, he would not agree, except he might go home by and by. At length his Wife being importunate for her Husband; and seeing that she would go no further, but there remain, unless she had her Husband with her, the Bishop fearing belike the rumour which might come upon his House thereby, bade the said Willes make a Cross, and say, In nomine Patris, & Filii, & Spiritus Sancti, Amen.

Then the said Willes began to say, In the Name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the holy Ghost Amen. No, no, said Boner, say it me in Latin, In nomine Patris, & Filii, & Spiritus Sancti, Amen. Willes understanding the matter of that Latin to be but good, said the same, and so went home with his Wife, his foresaid kinsman being charged to bring him the next day unto Pauls; else, said Boner, if thou dost not bring him, thou art an Heretic as well as he. Notwithstanding, the charge being no greater, his kinsman did not bring him, but he of his own voluntary accord came to the said Bishop within a few days after, where the Bishop put unto him a certain writing in Latin to subscribe unto, containing as it seemed to him no great matter, that he needed greatly to stick at, albeit, what the bill was, he could not certainly tell: so subscribed he to the bill, and returned home. And thus much concerning the 22. taken at Islington.

The History and cruel handling of Richard Yeoman, Doctor Taylors Curate at Hadley, constantly suffering for the Gospels sake.

AFTER the Story of these 22. taken at Islington, proceeding now (the Lord willing) we will prosecute likewise the taking and cruel handling of Richard Yeoman Minif. Which Yeoman had been before Doctor Taylor's Curate, a godly devout old Man of 70. years which had many years dwelt in Hadley, well seen in the Scriptures, and giving Godly Exhortations to the people. With him D. Taylor left his cure at his departure. But as soon as M. Newall had gotten the Benefice, he drave away good Yeoman as is before said, and set in a Popish Curate to maintain and continue their Romish Religion which now they thought fully stablished. Then wanded he long time from place to place, moving and exhorting all Men to stand faithfully to Gods Word, earnestly to give themselves unto prayer, with patience to bear the Cross now laid upon them for their tryal, with boldness to confess the truth before the adversaries, and with an undoubted hope to wait for the Crown and reward of eternal felicity. But when he perceived his adversaries to lye in wait for him, he went into Kent, and with a little packer of laces, pins, and points, and such like things, he travelled from village to village, selling such things, and by that poor shift gave himself somewhat to the sustaining of himself, his poor Wife and Children.

At the last a Justice of Kent called Master Moyles, took the poor Yeoman and set him in the Stocks a day and a night, our having no evident matter to charge him with, he let him go again. So came he secretly again to Hadley, and tarried with his poor Wife, who kept him secretly in a Chamber of the Town House, commonly called the Guildhall, more than a year. All the which time, the good old Father abode in a Chamber locked up all the day, and spent his time in devout prayer, and reading the Scriptures, and in carding of wool which his Wife did spin. His Wife also did go and beg Bread and meat for her self and her Children, and by such poor means sustained they themselves. Thus the Saints of God sustained hunger and misery, while the Prophets of Baal lived in jollity, and were costly pampered at Jesabels Table.

At the last, Parson Newall (I know not by what means) perceived that Richard Yeoman was so kept by his poor Wife, and, taking with him the Bailiffs Deputies and Servants, came in the night time and brake up five doors upon Yeoman, whom he found in a bed with his poor Wife and Children. Whom when he had so found, he irefully cried, saying, I thought I should find an heretic and an whore together. And he would have plucked the clothes off from them. But Yeoman held fast the clothes, and said unto his Wife, Wife, arise, and put on thy clothes. And unto the Parson he said, Nay Parson, no harlot, nor whore, but a married Man and his Wife, according unto Gods Ordinance, and blessed be God for lawful Matrimony. I thank God for this great Grace, and I desire the Pope and all his Popery. Then led they Richard Yeoman unto the Cage, and set him in the Stocks until it was day.

There was then also in the Cage an old Man named John Dale, who had sitten there three or four days, because when the said Parson Newall with his Curate executed the Romish Service in the Church, he spake openly unto him, and said, O miserable and blind guides, will ye ever be blind leaders of the blind? will ye never amend? will ye never see the truth of Gods Word? Will neither Gods threats nor promises enter into your hearts? will the Blood of Martyrs nothing mollifie your Stone Stomack? O inordinate hard hearted, perverfe, and crooked Generation. O damnable fort, whom nothing can do good unto.

These and like words he spake in ferventness of Spirit against the Superstitious Religion of Rome. Wherefore Parson Newall caused him forthwith to be attached, and set in the Stocks in the Cage. So was he there kept till Sir Henry Doile, a Justice, came to Hadley.

Now when poor Yeoman was taken, the Parson called earnestly upon Sir Henry Doile to send them both to Prison. Sir Henry Doile earnestly laboured and entreated the Parson, to consider the Age of the Men, and their poor estate; they were persons of no reputation nor Preachers; wherefore he would desire him to let them be punished a day or two, and so to let them go, at the least John Dale who was no Priest: and therefore seeing he had so long sitten in the Cage, he thought it punishment enough for this time. When the Parson heard this, he was exceeding mad, and in a great rage called them pestilent Heretics, unfit to live in the Common Wealth of Christians. Wherefore I beseech you Sir, quoth he, according to your Office, defend holy Church, and help to suppress these Sects of Heresies, &c. which are false to God, and thus boldly set themselves, to the evil example of others, against the Queens gracious proceedings. Sir Henry Doile seeing he could do no good in the matter, and fearing also his peril if he should too much meddle in this matter, made out the Writ, and caused the Constables to carry them forth to Bury Gaol. For now were all the Justices, were they never so mighty, afraid of every shaven crown, and stood in as much awe of them, as Pilate did stand in fear of Annas and Caiphas, and of the Pharisaical Brood, which cried, Crucifie him, Crucifie him. If thou let him go, thou art not Cæsars friend.

Wherefore whatsoever their consciences were, yet (if they would escape danger) they must needs be the Popish Bishops slaves and vassals. So they took Richard Yeoman and John Dale, pintoned, and bound them like Thieves, set them on Horback, and bound their Legs under the Horks Belles, and so carried them to the Gaol at Bury, where they were tyed in Irons; and for that they continually rebuked Popery, they were thrown into the lowest Dungeon, where Jo. Dale through sickness of the Prison, and evil keeping, dyed in Prison, whose Body, when he was dead, was thrown out and buried in the Fields. He was a Man of 46. years of Age, a Weaver by his occupation, well learned in the holy Scriptures, faithful and honest in all his conversation, stedfast in confession of the true Doctrine of Christ set forth in King Edwards time; for the which he joyfully suffered Prison and Chains, and from this Worldly Dungeon he departed in Christ to eternal Glory, and the Blessed Paradise of everlasting felicity.

After that John Dale was dead, Richard Yeoman was removed to Norwich Prison, where after strait and evil keeping, he was examined of his Faith and Religion. Then he boldly and constantly confessed himself to be of the Faith and Confession that was set forth by the late King of Blessed Memory, holy King Edward the sixth, and from that he would in no wise vary. Being required to submit himself to the holy Father the Pope: I defie him (quoth he) and all his detestable Abominations: I will in no wife have to do with him, nor any thing that appertaineth to him. The chief Articles objected to him, were his marriage, and the Mass Sacrifice. Wherefore when he continued stedfast in confession of the truth, he was condemned, degraded, and not only burnt, but most cruelly tormented in the Fire. So ended he his poor and miserable life, and entered into the blessed Bosom of Abraham, enjoying with Lazarus the comfortable quietness that God hath prepared for his elect Saints.

The Martyrdom of Thomas Benbridge, Anno 1558 July 10

The Story of John Alcock.

John Alcock

There was also in Hadley a young Man, named John Alcock, which came to Hadley seeking work, for he was a Shereman by his occupation. This young Man after the Martyrdom of Doctor Taylor, and taking of Richard Yeoman, used first in the Church of Hadley to read the Service in English, as partly is above touched. At length, after the coming of Parson Newall, he being in Hadley Church upon a Sunday when the Parson came by with procession, would not once move his Cap, nor shew any sign of reverence but stood behind the Font. Newall perceiving this, when he was almost out of the Church door, ran back again, and caught him, and called for the Constable.

Parson New-all in a rage against John Alcock for not going on procession.

Then came Rob. Rolfe, with whom this young Man wrought, and asked M. Parson what hath he done, that ye are in such a rage with him?

He is an Heretick and a Traitor (quoth the Parson) and despite the Queens proceedings. Wherefore I command you in the Queens Name, have him to the Stocks, and see he be forth coming.

Rob. Rolfe honest Constable of Hadley.

Well, quoth Rolfe, he shall be forth coming, proceed you in your business, and be quiet. Have him to the Stocks, quoth the Parson.

I am Constable, quoth Rolfe, and may bail him, and will bail him; he shall not come in the Stocks, but he shall be forth coming: So went the good Parson forth with his holy procession, and so to Mass.

At afternoon Rolfe said to this young Man, I am sorry for thee, for truly the Parson will seek thy destruction, if thou take not good heed what thou answerest him.

The young Man answered, Sir, I am sorry that it is my hap to be a trouble to you. As for my self, I am not sorry, but I do commit my self into Gods hands, and I trust he will give me Mouth and Wisdom to answer according to right.

Well, quoth Rolfe, yet beware of him. For he is malicious and a blood-sucker, and beareth an old hatred against me, and he will handle you the more cruelly, because of displeasure against me.

I fear not, quoth the young Man. He shall do no more to me, than God will give him leave; and happy shall I be if God will call me to dye for his truths sake.

After this talk, they then went to the Parson, who at Alcock brought to Parson New-all.

The first asked him, Fellow, what saist thou to the Sacrament of the Altar?

I say, quoth he, ye use the matter, ye make a shameful Idol of it, and yeare false Idolatrous Priests all the sort of you.

I told you (quoth the Parson) he was a stout Heretick.

So after long talk, the Parson committed him to Ward, Parson New-all carried up J. Alcock
the young Man with him, and so came the young Man to London.

Thus dyed he a Martyr for Christs verity, which he heartily loved and constantly confessed, and received the garland of a well foughten battel at the hand of the Lord. His Body was cast out, and buried in a dunghill, For the Papist would in all things be like themselves: Therefore would they not so much as suffer the dead Bodies to have honest and convenient sepulture.

Church.

Thomas Benbridge a Gentleman, single and unmarried in the Diocese of Winchester, although he might have lived a pleasant and a Gentlemans life in the wealthy possessions of this World; yet to follow Christ had rather enter into the strait gate of persecution, to the Heavenly possession of life in the Lords Kingdom, than here to enjoy pleasures present with unquietness of Conscience. Wherefore, manfully standing against the Papists for the defence of the sincere Doctrine of Christs Gospel, he spared not himself to confirm the Doctrine of the Gospel. For the which cause he being apprehended for an adversary of the Romish Religion, was forthwith had to examination before Doctor White Bishop of Winchester, where he sustained sundry conflicts for the truth against the said Bishop and his Colleague. The Articles of the Bishop ministred to him, with his answers to the same annexed, be here following.

Articles ministred to M. Benbridge, with his answers following the same.

First, we articulate against you, that the Church of God ministred rightly, according to the Rite Apostolical.

To this he answered, That Baptism is not administred at this present, so as it was in the Apostles time, for that it is not ministred in the English Tongue.

2. Item, we articulate, that the Church of God doth believe, and hold, that in the Sacrament of thanksgiving, after the words of Consecration pronounced of the Priest, the true and natural Body of Christ is present really.

He answered, that he believeth not that in the Sacrament is contained the Body and Blood of our Saviour Jesus Christ, saying; this is the mark that ye shooat at.

3. Item, we articulate, that the Church holdeth and believeth, that confirmation is a Sacrament in the Church, and that by imposition of hands of a Bishop, cometh Grace.

He answered, that he knoweth not whether that confirmation be a Sacrament or not, and whether the Bishop giveth Grace or not; he knoweth not the order and fashion of ministrature.

4. Item we articulate, that Penance is a Sacrament in the Church, and that by Auricular Confession and Absolution, pronounced by the priest, sins be forgiven.

He answered negatively, denying sins to be forgiven by absolution pronounced of a Priest, and that it is not necessary for a Man to recite all his sins to a Priest.

5. Item, we articulate against thee, that the Church doth believe and hold the same Authority to be now in the Church which Christ gave to his Apostles.

He answered negatively, for that the Church hath not the same power and strength to work.

6. Item, we articulate, that the Church believeth and holdeth, that the Order of Ministers, now being in the Church of Christ, is instituted of Christ himself.

He answered, he believed not the Bishops to be the Successors of the Apostles, for that they be not called as they were, nor have that Grace.

7. Item, we articulate that the Church believeth and holdeth, the Pope to be Supreme Head in the Church, and she Vicar of Christ in Earth.

He answered, that it is not the Pope, but it is the Devil that is Supreme Head of the Church which you speak of.

8. Item, we articulate, that the Church doth hold and believe that it is necessary to be Baptized.

He denied not the same.

9. Item, we articulate, that the Church doth hold and believe, that there is Purgatory, and that the Souls of the dead be relieved with the alms and Prayers of the living.

He answered and saith, as touching Purgatory, he will not believe as their Church doth believe.

10. Item, we articulate, that the Church holdeth and believeth that Matrimony is a Sacrament of the Church.

He answered, that he will not say that Matrimony is a Sacrament, but to be a sacred Order and sign of an holy thing, &c.

Moreover hapning into the mention of Martin Luther, he said, that the said Martin Luther died a good Christian Man, whose Doctrine and Life he did approve and allow.

Thus have ye the Articles ministred by the Bishop and also the Answers of the said M. Benbridge unto the same, for the which he was then condemned, and after brought to the place of Martyrdom by the Sheriff, called Sir Richard Peckhal. Where he standing at the Stake, began to untie his points, and to prepare himself; then he gave his Gown to the Keeper, being belike his fee. His Jerkin was laid on with Gold Lace fair and brave which he gave to Sir Rich. Peckhal the High Sheriff. His cap of Velvet he took off from his Head and threw it away. Then lifting his mind to the Lord, he made his Prayers.

That done, being now fastened to the Stake, D. Seaton willed him to recant, and he should have his pardon: but when he saw it prevailed not to speak, the said dreaming and doltish Doctor willed the people not to pray for him unless he would recant, no more than they would pray for a dog.

M. Benbridge standing at the Stake with his hands together in such manner as the Priest holdeth his hands in his memento, the said D. Seaton came to him worse than D. Seaton did a great deal, who (as is thought) was set on by some other.

Then said one that stood by, Sir, cut out his Tongue, and another being a temporal Man, railed on him worse than D. Seaton did a great deal, who (as is thought) was set on by some other.

Then when they saw he would not yield, they bade the tormentors to set to Fire, and yet he was nothing like covered with fagots. First, the Fire took away a piece of his Beard, whereat he nothing shrank at all. Then it came on the other side and took his Legs, and the neither Stockings of his Hose being Leather, made the Fire to pierce the sharper, so that the intolerable heat thereof made him to cry, I recant: and suddenly therewith he thrust the Fire from him. And having two or three of his friends by, that wished his life, they kept to the Fire, and help to take it from him also; who for their labour were sent to Prison. The Sheriff also of his own Authority took him from the Stake, and sent him to Prison again, for the which he was sent unto the Fleet, and there lay a certain time. But before he was taken from the Stake, the said Seaton wrote Articles to have him to subscribe unto them as touching the Pope, the Sacrament, and such other trash. But the said M. Benbridge made much ado ere he would subscribe them, inasmuch that Doctor Seaton willed them to set to Fire again. Then with much pain and grief of Heart he subscribed to them upon a Mans Back. That being done, he had his Gown given him again, and so was led to Prison. Being in Prison he wrote a Letter to Doctor Seaton, and recanted those words he spake at the Stake, unto which he had subscribed: for he was grieved that ever he did subscribe unto them. Whereupon expressing his Conscience, he was the same day seven night after burnt indeed, where the vile tormentors did rather broil him than burn him. The Lord give his enemies repentance.

The unjust Execution and Martyrdom of four burned at S. Edmunds Bury.

The Story of our Martyrs in Suffolk IN this year aforesaid, which was the last of Queen Maries reign, Dr. Hopton being Bishop of Norwich, and Dr. Spencer bearing the room of his Chancellor, about S. James tide, at S. Edmunds Bury, were wrongfully put to death four Christian Martyrs, to wit :

Martyrs. John Cooke, a Sawyer.
Robert Miles, alias Plummer, a Sheerman.
Alexander Lane, a Wheelright.
James Ashley, Bachelor.

The Examination of these forenamed Persons, being Anno severally called before the Bishop of Norwich, and Sir Edward Walgrave, with others, was partly upon these Articles following.

First, Sir Edward Walgrave called John Cooke to Sir Edward Walgrave him, and said, How fortineth it, that you go not to Persecutor Church?

John Cooke said, I have been there.

Sir Edward said, What is the cause that you go not Examination of John Cooke thither now in these days?

John Cooke said, Because the Sacrament of the Altar is an abominable Idol, and (saith he) the vengeance of God will come upon all them that do maintain it.

Sir Edward said, O thou rank Traytor, if I had as good Commission to cut out thy Tongue, as I have to fit here this day, thou shouldst be sure to have it cut out.

Examination of Robert Miles. Then commanded he the Constable to have him away, saying, he was both a Traitor and a Rebel.

Then he called Robert Miles, and said, how fortineth it, that you go not to the Church?

Robert Miles answered, Because I will follow no false Gods.

Then said the Bishop, who told thee that it is a God?

Then said Miles, Even you, and such as you are.

Then the Bishop commanded him aside, and to appear before him the next day.

Examination of Alexander Lane. Then he called Alexander Lane before him, and asked him, how it chanced, that he would not go to the Church?

He said, That his Conscience would not serve him so to do.

Then Sir Edward said, How dost thou believe?

Then said Lane, even as it is written in Gods Book.

Then Sir Edward commanded him to say his Belief.

Then the said Lane being somewhat abashed, said his Belief to these words, which he missed unawares, Born of the Virgin Mary.

Then Sir Edward said, What? was he not born of the Virgin Mary?

Yes, said Lane, I would have said so.

Nay, said Sir Edward, you are one of Cookes Scholars, and so commanded him away, and to come before him the next day.

After the like manner they passed also with James

Ashley, whom they warned the next day likewise to appear before them again. So in fine they appearing again, had their Condemnation. And thus these four blessed Martyrs and Servants of Christ, innocently suffered together at S. Edmunds Bury, as is aforesaid, about the beginning of August, not long before the sickness of Queen Mary.

The Martyrdome of two godly persons suffering at Ipswich for the Gospel of Christ, and his everlasting Testament, named Alexander Gouch, and Alice Driver.

M After Noone, a Justice in Suffolk, dwelling in Marleham, hunting after good men to apprehend them, (as he was a bloody Tyrant in the days of Trial) at the length had understanding of one Gouch of Woodbridge, and Drivers Wife of Grosborough, to be at Grosborough together, a little from his House, and immediately took his men with him, and went thither, and made diligent search for them, where the poor man and woman were compelled to step into an Hay-golph to hide themselves from their cruelty. At the last they came to search the Hay for them, and by gaging thereof with Pitchforks, at the last found them: so they took them and led them to Melton Goal, where they remaining a time, at the length were carried to Bury against the Assize at S. James tide, and being there examined of matters of Faith, did boldly stand to confess Christ crucified, defying the Pope with all his Papistical Trash. And among other things Drivers Wife likened Queen Mary in her Persecution, to Jezabel; and so in that sense calling her Jezabel, for that that Sir Clement Higham, being chief Judge there, adjudged her Ears immediately to be cut off, which was accomplished accordingly, and she joyfully yielded her self to the punishment, and thought her self happy that she was counted worthy to suffer any thing for the Name of Christ.

Gouch and Ipswich.

After the Assize at Bury, they were carried to Melton Gaol again, where they remained a time. This Alexander Gouch was a Man of the age of 36 years, or thereabouts, and by his occupation was a Weaver of Shredding Coverlets, dwelling at Woodbridge in Suffolk, and born at Usford in the same County, Drivers Wife was a Woman about the age of 30 years, and dwelt at Grosborough where they were taken, in Suffolk. Her Husband died a good Husbandry. These two were carried from Melton Gaol to Ipswich, where they remained and were examined. The which their examination, as it came to our hands, hereafter followeth.

The Examination of Drivers Wife, before Dr. Spenser the Chancellor of Norwich.

Dr. Spenser after the death of Dr. Dunning who dyed suddenly in prison, was Chancellor under R. Hooper.

I first, the coming into the place where she should be examined, with a smiling Countenance, Dr. Spenser said, Why Woman, dost thou laugh us to scorn?

Drivers Wife Whether I do or no, I might well enough, to see what fools ye be.

Dost. Spenser. Then the Chancellor asked her wherefore she was brought before him, and why she was laid in Prison.

Dri. Wherefore? I think I need not tell you: for ye know it better than I.

Spens. No by my Troth, Woman, I know not why.

Dri. Then have ye done me much wrong, (quoth she) thus to Imprison me, and know no cause why: for I know no evil that I have done, I thank God, and I hope there is no man that can accuse me of any Notorious Fact that I have done, justly.

Spens. Woman, Woman, what sayst thou to the blessed Sacrament of the Altar? Dost thou not believe that it is very Flesh and Blood, after the words be spoken of Consecration?

Drivers Wife at those words held her peace, and made no answer. Then a great chuff-headed Priest that stood by, spake, and asked her why she made not the Chancellor answer. With that, the said Drivers Wife looked upon him austere, and said, Why Priest, I come not to talk with thee, but I come to talk with thy Master: but if thou wilt I shall talk with thee, command thy Master to hold his peace. And with that the Priest put his Nose in his cap, and spake never a word more. Then the Chancellor bid her make answer to that he demanded of her.

Dri. Sir (said she) pardon me though I make no answer, for I cannot tell what you mean thereby: for in all my life I never heard nor read of any such Sacrament in all the Scriptures.

Spens. Why, what Scriptures have you read, I pray you?

Dri. I have (I thank God) read Gods Book.

Spens. Why, what manner of Book is that you call Gods Book?

Dri. It is the Old and New Testament. What call you it?

Spens. That is Gods Book indeed, I cannot deny.

Dri. That same Book have I read thoroughout, but yet never could find any such Sacrament there: and for that cause I cannot make you answer to that thing I know not. Notwithstanding, for all that, I will grant you a Sacrament, called the Lords Supper: and therefore seeing I have granted you a Sacrament, I pray you shew me what a Sacrament is.

Spens. It is a sign. And one Dr. Gascoine being by, confirmed the same, that it was the sign of a holy thing.

Dri. You have said the truth, Sir, said she. It is a sign indeed, I must needs grant it: and therefore seeing, it is a sign, it cannot be the thing signified also. Thus far we do agree: for I have granted your own saying. Then stood up the said Gascoine, and made an Oration with many fair words, but little to purpose, both offensive and odious to the minds of the godly. In the end of which long tale, he asked her if she did not believe the Omnipotency of God, and that he was Almighty, and able to perform that he spake. She answered, Yes, and said, I do believe that God is Almighty, and able to perform that he spake and promised.

Gascoine Very well. Then he said to his Disciples, Take, and Eat, This is my Body: Ergo, it was his Body. For he was able to perform that he spake, and God useth not to lye.

Dri. I pray you did he ever make any such promise to his Disciples, that he would make the Bread his Body?

Gascoine Those be the words. Can you deny it.

Dri. No, they be the very words indeed, I cannot deny it, but I pray you, was it not Bread that he gave unto them?

Gascoine No, it was his Body.

Dri. Then was it is Body that they did Eat over night?

Gascoine Yea; it was his Body.

Dri. What Body was it then that was Crucified the next day?

Gascoine It was Christs Body.

Dri. How could that be, when the Disciples had eaten him over night? except he had two Bodies, as by your Argument he had; one they did eat over night, and he was Crucified the next day. Such a Doctour, such Doctrine. Be you not ashamed to teach the People, that Christ had two Bodies? In the 22. of Luke, He took Bread and brake it to his Disciples, saying; Take, &c. and do this in remembrance of me Saint Paul faith, 1 Cor. 11. Do this in remembrance of me: for as often as ye shall Eat this Bread, and Drink this Cup, ye shall show the Lords Death till he come: and therefore I marvel you blush not before all this people; to lye so manifestly as ye do. With that Gascoine held his peace, and made her no answer: for, as it seemed, he was ashamed of his doings. Then the Chancellor lift up his head off from his cushion, and commanded the Gaoler to take her away.

Dri. Now (said he) ye be not able to resist the Truth, ye command me to Prison again. Well, the Lord in the end shall judge our cause, and to him I leave it. I will, I will, this gear will go for no payment then: So went she with the Gaoler away.

The second Examination of Alice Driver.

The next day she came before them again, and the Chancellor then asked her, what she said to the blessed Sacrament of the Altar.

Dri. I will say nothing to it: for you will neither believe me nor your selves. For yesterday I asked you what a Sacrament was, and you said, it was a sign, and I agreed thereto, and said, it was the Truth, confirming it by the Scriptures, so that I went not from your own words; and now ye come and ask me again of such a Sacrament as I told you I never read of in the Scriptures.

Spens. Thou lyest, naughty Woman, the did not say that it was a sign.

Dri. Why Masters, be ye not the Men that you were yesterday? Will ye eat your own words? Are ye not ashamed to lye before all this multitude here present; who heard you speak the same?

Then stood up Dr. Gascoine, and said; the was de. Gascoine received: for there are three Churches, the Malignant Church, the Church Militant, and the Church triumphant. So he would fain have made matter; but he could not tell which way.

Dri. Sir, is there mention made of so many Churches in the Scripture.

Gascoine Yea.

Dri. I pray you where find you this word (Church) written in the Scripture?

Gascoine It is written in the New Testament.

Dri. I pray you, Sir, shew the place where it is written.

What a Sacrament is.

Gase. I cannot tell the place, but there it is. With that he desired him to look in his Testament. Then he fumbled and fought about him for one: but at that time he had none, and that he knew well enough, though he seemed to search for it. At the last he said, Have ye none here Sir?

Gase. No.

Gase. He-

Dri. I thought so much indeed, that ye were little acquainted withal. Surely, you be a good Doctor. You say you sit here to Judge according to the Law, and how can you give Judgment, and have not the Book of the Law with you? At which words Gase was out of countenance, and asked her if she had one.

Dri. No, said she.

Gase. Then said he, I am as good a Doctor as you.

Dri. Well Sir, I had one, but you took it from me (as you would take me from Christ, if you could) and since would ye not suffer me to have any Book at all; so burning is your charity. But you may well know (I thank God) that I have exercised the same; else could I not have answered you (to Gods glory be it spoken) as I have. Thus she put them all to silence, that one looked on another, and had not a word to speak.

Dri. Have you no more to say? God be honoured. You be not able to resist the Spirit of God in me poor Woman. I was an honest poor Mans Daughter, never brought up in the University as you have been, but I have driven the Plough before my Father many a time (I thank God); yet notwithstanding in the defence of Gods Truth, and in the cause of My Master Christ, by his grace I will set my foot against the foot of any of you all, in the maintenance and defence of the same, and if I had a thousand Lives, they should go for payment thereof. So the Chancellor rose up, and read the Sentence in Latin of Condemnation, and committed her to the secular power, and so went she to Prison again as joyful as the bird of day, praising and glorifying the name of God.

The Mar-
tyrdom of Gouch and Alice Driver
at Ipswich,
Novem. 4.

This Alexander Gouch was examined chiefly of the Sacrament and other Ceremonies of the Popish Church. And for that his belief was, that Christ was Ascended into Heaven, and there remaineth, and that the Sacrament was the remembrance of his death and passion, and for refusing the Mass, and the Pope to be Supreme Head of Christs Church, for these causes, was he condemned, and dyed with Alice Driver at Ipswich, the 4. of November. which was the Monday after All-Saints 1558. Dr. Miles Spencer being Chancellor, they both ending their Lives earnest zeal, nothing fearing to speak their Conscience when they were commanded to the contrary.

Gouch and Alice Driver
brought to
the stake.

These two godly persons being come to the place where the stake was set, by seven of the Clock in the morning, notwithstanding they came the self-same morning from Melton Gaol, which is six miles from Ipswich, being in their prayers, and singing of Psalms both of them together, Sir Henry Dowell, then being Sheriff, was very much offended with them, and willed the Bailiffs of Ipswich to bid them make an end of prayers, they kneeling upon a broom Fagot, one of the Bailiffs, whose name was Richard Smari, commanded them to make an end, saying, On, on, have done; make an end, nail them to the stake; yet they continued in prayer.

Then Sir Henry sent one of his Men, whose name was Richard Cove, that they should make an end.

Then Gouch stood up and said unto the Sheriff, I pray you Mr. Sheriff, let us pray a little while, for we have but a little time to live here.

Then said the Bailiff, Come off, have them to the fire.

Then the said Gouch and Alice Driver said, Why Master Sheriff, and Master Bailiff, will you not suffer us to pray?

The Martyrs not suffering to pray.

Away, said Sir Henry, to the stake with them.

Gouch answered, Take heed Mr. Sheriff. If you forbid prayer, the Vengeance of God hangeth over your Heads. Then they being tyed to the stake, and the Iron Chain being put about Alice Drivers neck, O (said she) here is a goodly Neckerchief, blessed be God for it.

Then divers came and took them by the hands as they were bound standing at the stake. The Sheriff cried, Lay hands on them, lay hands on them. With that a great number ran to the stake. The Sheriff seeing that, let them all alone, so that there was not one taken.

There was one Bate a Barber, a busie doer about them, who having then a freeze Gown upon him, sold it immediately, saying, It stunk of Hereticks, with other foul words more. After this, within three or four weeks, Gods hand was upon him, and so he dyed very miserably in Ipswich.

The Martyrdom of three which were burned at Bury, for the True Testimony of Jesus Christ.

ALTHOUGH our History hasteth apace (the Lord be praised) to the happy Death of Queen Mary, yet she dyed not so soon, but some there were burned before, and more should have been burned soon after them, if Gods Provision had not prevented her with Death. In the number of them which suffered in the same Month when Queen Mary dyed, were three that were burned at Bury, whose names were these:

Philip Humphrey.

John David.

Henry David, his Brother.

Concerning the burning of these three, here is to be noted, that Sir Clement Higbam, about a fortnight before the Queen dyed, did sue out a writ for the burning of these three afore said godly and blessed Martyrs, notwithstanding that the Queen was then known to be pained remedy of her sickness.

The Trouble and Martyrdom of a godly Poor Woman which suffered at Exeter.

ALTHOUGH in such an innumerable company of godly Martyrs, which in sundry quarters of this Realm were put to torments of fire in Queen Mariess time, it burned as hard so exactly to recite every particular person that suffered, but that some escape us either unknown, or time omitted; yet I cannot pass over a certain Poor Woman, and a silly Creature, burned under the said Queens Reign, in the City of Exeter (whose name I have not yet learned:) who dwelling sometime about Cornwall, having a Husband and Children there, much addicted to the superstitious sect of Popery, was many times rebuked of them, and driven to go to the Church, to their Idols and Ceremonies, to shrift, to follow the Cross in procession, to give thanks to God for restoring Antichrist again in this Realm, &c. Which when her Spirit could not abide to do, she made her prayer unto God, calling for help and mercy, and so at length lying in her bed, about midnight, she thought there came to her a certain motion and feeling of singular comfort. Whereupon in short space, she began to grow in contempt of her Husband and Children, and so taking nothing from them, but even as she went, departed from them, seeking her living by labour and spinning as well as she could, here and there for a time. In which time notwithstanding the never ceased to gain utter her mind as well as she durst; howbeit she at that time was brought home to her Husband again. Where at the poor last she was accused by her neighbors, and so brought up to Exeter, to be presented to the Bishop and his Clergy. The name of the Bishop which had her in examination, was Dr. Troubleville. His Chancellor (as I gather) was Blackstone. The chiefest matter whereupon she was charged and condemned, was for the Sacrament (which they call of the Altar) and for speaking against Idols, as by the declaration of those which were present, I understand, which report the talk between her and the Bishop on this wise.

Bishop.

Anno 1558. Bishop. Thou foolish Woman, quoth the Bishop, I hear say, that thou hast spoken certain words against the most blessed Sacrament of the Altar, the Body of Christ. Fie for shame. Thou art an unlearned person, and a Woman: Wilt thou meddle with such high matters, which all the Doctors of the world cannot define? Wilt thou talk of so high Mysteries? Keep thy work, and meddle with that thou hast to do. It is no Womans matter, at Cards and Tow to be spoken of. And if it be as I am informed, thou art worthy to be burned.

Talk between the Woman and the Bishop.

Woman. My Lord, said she, I trust your Lordship will hear me speak.

Bish. Yea marry, quoth he, therefore I sent for thee.

Woman. I am a poor Woman, and do live by my hands, getting a penny truly, and of that I get, I give part to the Poor.

Bish. That is well done. Art thou not a mans Wife?

And here the Bishop entered into talk of her Husband.

To whom the answered again, declaring that she had a Husband and Children; and had them not. So long as she was at liberty, she refused neither Husband nor Children: But now standing here as I do, said she, in the cause of Christ and his Truth, where I must either forsake Christ, or my Husband, I am contented to stick only to Christ my heavenly Spouse, and renounce the other.

The Wife renouncing her Husband for Christs sake.

And here the making mention of the words of Christ, He that leaveth not Father or Mother, Sister or Brother, Husband, &c. The Bishop inferred, that Christ spake that of the holy Martyrs, which dyed because they would not do sacrifice to the false gods.

Woman. Surely, Sir, and I will rather die than I will do any worship to that foul Idol, which with your Mass you make a god.

Bish. Yea, you Callet, will you say that the Sacrament of the Altar is a foul Idol?

The Sacrament of the Altar made an Idol.

Woman. Yea truly, quoth she, there was never such an Idol as your Sacrament is made of your Priests, and commanded to be worshipped of all men, with many fond Phantasies, where Christ did command it to be eaten and drunken in remembrance of his most blessed Passion for our redemption.

Bish. See this prating Woman. Dost thou not hear, that Christ did say over the Bread, This is my Body, and over the Cup, This is my Blood?

Woman. Yes, forsooth he said so, but he meant that it is his Body and blood, not carnally, but Sacramental.

Bish. Lo, she hath heard prating among these new Preachers, or heard some pievish Book. Alas poor Woman, thou art deceived.

Woman. No, my Lord, that I have learned was of godly Preachers, and of godly Books which I have heard read. And if you will give me leave, I will declare a reason why I will not worship the Sacrament.

Bish. Marry say on, I am sure it will be goodly gear.

Woman. Truly such gear as I will lose this poor life of mine for.

Bish. Then you will be a Martyr good Wife.

Woman. Indeed, if the denying to worship that Bread God be my Martyrdom, I will suffer it with all my heart.

Bish. Say thy mind.

Woman. You must bear with me a poor Woman, quoth she.

Bish. So I will, quoth he.

Woman. I will demand of you, whether you can deny your Creed, which doth say, that Christ perpetually doth sit at the right hand of his Father, both Body and Soul, until he come again; or whether he be there in Heaven our Advocate, and do make prayer for us unto God his Father? If it be so, he is not here in the earth in a piece of Bread. If he be not here, and if he do not dwell in Temples made with hands, but in Heaven, whither shall we seek him here? if he did offer his Body once for all, why make you a new offering? if with once offering he made all perfect, why do you with a false offering make all unperfect? If he be to be worshipped in Spirit and Truth, why do you worship a piece of Bread? if he be eaten and drunken in Faith and Truth, if his flesh be not profitable to be among us, why do you say, you make his Body and flesh, an offering it is profitable for Body and Soul? Alas, I am a poor Woman but rather then I would do as you do, I would live no longer. I have said Sir.

Bish. I promise you, you are a jolly Protestant. I pray you in what Schools have you been brought up?

Woman. I have upon the Sundays visited the Sermons, and there have I learned such things as are so fixed in my breast, that death shall not separate them.

Bish. O foolish Woman! who will wait his breath upon thee or such as thou art? But how chanceth it that thou wentest away from thy Husband? if thou wert an honest Woman, thou wouldst not have left thy Husband and Children, and run about the Country like a Fugitive.

Woman. Sir, I laboured for my living; and as my Master Christ counseleth me, when I was persecuted in one City, I fled into another?

Bish. Who persecuted thee?

Woman. My Husband and my Children. For when I would have them to leave Idolatry, and to worship God in Heaven, he would not hear me, but he with his Children rebuked me, and troubled me. I fled not for Whoredom, nor for Theft, but because I would be no partaker with him and his, of that foul Idol the Mass. And whereforever I was, as oft as I could upon Sundays and Holi-days, I made excuse not to go to the Popish Church.

The Wife persecuted by her Husband and Children.

Bish. Belike then you are a good Huswife, to flee from your Husband and also from the Church.

Woman. My Huswifery is but small; but God give me grace to go to the true Church.

Bish. The true Church; what dost thou mean?

Woman. Not your Popish Church full of Idols and Abominations, but where two or three are gathered together in the name of God, to that Church will I go as long as I live.

Bish. Belike then you have a Church of your own. Well, let this mad Woman be put down to Prison; until we send for her Husband.

Woman. No, I have but one Husband, which is here already in this City and in Prison with me (from whom I will never depart) and so their communication for that day brake off. Blackstone and others perswaded the Bishop that she was a mazed Creature, and not in her perfect wit, (which is no new thing, for the wisdom of God to appear foolishness to carnal men of this world) and therefore they consulted together, that she should have liberty, and go at large. So the Keeper of the Bishops Prison had her home to his house, where she fell to spinning and carding, and did all other work as a Servant in the said Keepers house, and went about the City, when and whither she would, and divers had delight to talk with her. And ever the continued talking of the Sacrament of the Altar, which of all things they could least abide. Then was her Husband sent for, but she refused to go home with him, with the blessing of the Cause and Religion, in defence whereof she there stood before the Bishop and the Priests.

Then divers of the Priests had her in handling, perswading her to leave her wicked Opinion about the Sacrament of the Altar, the natural Body and Blood of our Saviour Christ. But she made them answer, that it was nothing but very Bread and Wine, and that they might be ashamed to say, that a piece of Bread should be turned by a man into the natural Body of Christ, which Bread doth vinow, and Mice oftentimes do eat it, and it doth mould, and is burned: And, said she, Gods own Body will not be handled, nor kept in Prison, or Boxes, or Ambries. Let it be your god, it shall not be mine; for my Saviour sitteth on the right hand of God, and doth pray for me. And to make that Sacramental or significative Bread instituted for a remembrance, the very Body of Christ, and to worship it, it is very foolishness and Devilish deceit.

Talk between the Woman and the Priests about the Sacrament.

Now truly, said they, the Devil hath deceived thee.

No faith she, I trust the living God hath opened mine eyes, and caused me to understand the right use of the blessed Sacrament, which the true Church doth use, but the false Church doth abuse.

Then stepped forth an old Friar, and asked her what she said of the holy Pope.

I (said she) say, that he is Antichrist and the Devil.

Then they all laughed.

Talk between the Woman and a Friar.

Nay, said she, you have more need to weep than to laugh, and to be sorry that ever you were born, to be the Chaplains of that Whore of Babylon, I desire him and all his Fellowship; and get you away from me, you do but trouble my Conscience. You would have me follow your doings; I will first lose my life. I pray you depart.

Why, thou foolish Woman, said they, we come to thee for thy profit and Souls health.

O Lord God, said she, what profit riseth by you that teach nothing but Lies for Truth? how save you Souls, when you preach nothing but damnable Lies, and destroy Souls?

How provest thou that (said they)?

Do you not damn Souls, said she, when you teach the People to worship Idols, Stocks and Stones, the works of mens hands? and to worship a false God of your own making of a piece of Bread, and teach that the Pope is Gods Vicar, and hath power to forgive sins? and that there is a Purgatory, when Gods Son hath by his Passion purged all? and say, you make God, and sacrifice him, when Christs Body was a Sacrifice once for all? Do you not teach the People to number their sins in your ears, and say they be damned, if they confess not all: when Gods Word saith, Who can number his sins? Do you not promise them Trentals and Diriges, and Masses for Souls, and sell your Prayers for Money, and make them buy Pardons, and trust to such foolish inventions of your own Imaginations? Do you not altogether against God? Do ye not teach us to pray upon Beads, and to pray unto Saints, and say they can pray for us? Do you not make Holy-Water and Holy-Bread to fray Devils? Do you not a thousand more Abominations? And yet you say, you come for my profit and to save my Soul. No, no, one hath saved me. Farewell you with your salvation. Much other talk there was between her and them, which here were too tedious to be expressed.

False Doctrine of the Papists, improved.

In the mean time during this her Months liberty granted to her by the Bishop, which we spake of before it happened that the entering into Saint Peters Church, beheld there a cunning Dutchman, how he made new Noses to certain fine Images which were figured in King Edwards time; What a mad man art thou (said she) to make them new Noses, which within a few days shall all lose their Heads? The Dutchman accused her, and laid it hard to her charge. And she said unto him, Thou art accursed, and so are thy Images. He called her Whore. Nay, said she, thy Images are Whores, and thou art a Whore-hunter; for doth not God say, You go a whoring after strange gods, figures of your own making? and thou art one of them. Then was she sent for and clapped fast, and from that time she had no more liberty.

The reviling of one Ennui a Minister, from the Gospel to Poverty in 2. Marins time.

During the time of her Imprisonment, divers resorted to her to visit her, some sent of the Bishop, some of their own voluntary will; amongst whom was one Daniel a great doer and preacher sometimes of the Gospel, in the Days of King Edward, in those parts of Cornwall and Devonshire: whom after that she perceived by his own confession to have revolted from that which he preached before, through the grievous Imprisonments, as he said, and fear of persecution which he had partly sustained by the cruel Justices in those parts, earnestly exhorted him to repent with Peter, and to be more constant in his Profession.

Moreover, there resorted to her a certain worthy Gentlewoman, the Wife of one Walter Rawly, a woman of noble wit, and of a good and godly Opinion; who coming to the Prison, and talking with her, she said her Creed to the Gentlewoman, and when she came to the Article, He ascended, there she said, and bade the Gentlewoman to seek his blessed Body in heaven, not in Earth, and told her plainly that God dwelleth not in Temples made with hands, and that Sacrament to be nothing else but a remembrance of his blessed Passion and yet (said she) as they now use it, it is but an Idol, and far wide from any remembrance of Christs Body; which, said she, will not long continue, and so take it good Mrs. So that as soon as she came home to her Husband, she declared to him, that in her life she never heard a Woman (of such simplicity to see to) talk so godly, so perfectly, so sincerely, and so earnestly; inasmuch, that if God were not with her, she could not speak such things, to the which I am not able to answer her, said she, who can read, and she cannot.

Also there came to her one William Kede, and John his Brother, not only Brethren in the flesh, but also in the Truth, and men in that Country of great credit, whose Father R. Kele all his life suffered nothing but trouble for the Gospel. These two good and faithful Brethren were present with her, both in the Hall, and also at the Prison, and (as they reported) they never heard the like Woman, of so godly talk, so faithful or so constant; and as godly Exhortations she gave them.

Thus this good Matron, the very Servant and Hand-maid of Christ, was by many ways tried, both by hard Imprisonment, threatnings, taunts and scorn, called an Anabaptist, a mad Woman, a Dunkard, a Whore, a Runnagate. She was proved by liberty to go whither she would; she was tried by flattery, with many fair promises; she was tried with her Husband, her goods and Children; but nothing could prevail, her heart was fixed, she had cast her Anchor, utterly condemning this wicked world; a rare example of constancy to all Professors of Christs Gospel.

In the Bill of my Information, it is so reported to me, that albeit she was of such simplicity, and without learning, yet you could declare no place of Scripture, but she would tell you the Chapter; yea, she would recite you the names of all the Books of the Bible. For which cause one Gregory Bessler, a rank Papist, said she was out of her wit, and talked of the Scripture, as a Dog rangeth far off from his Master when he walketh in the fields, or as a stolen Sheep out of his Masters hands, the wilest not whereat, as all Heretics do; with many other such taunts, which she utterly defied. Whereby as Almighty God is highly to be praised, working so mightily in such a weak Vessel, so men of stronger and flouter nature, have also to take example how to stand in like case; when as we see this poor Woman, how manfully she went through with such constancy and patience.

At the last, when they perceived her to be past remedy, and had consumed all their threatnings, that neither by prisonment nor liberty, by menaces nor flattery, they could bring her to sing any other Song, nor win her to their vanities and superstitious doings, then they cried out, An Anabaptist, an Anabaptist. Then at that day they brought her from the Bishops Prison to the Guild-Hall, and after that delivered her to the Temporal Power, according to their custom, where she was by the Gentlemen of the Country exhorted yet to call for grace, and to leave her fond Opinions; and go home to thy Husband, said they, thou art an unlearned Woman, thou art not able to answer to such high matters. I am not, said she, yet with my death I am content to be a witness of Christs death: and I pray you will make no longer delay with me; my heart is fixed, I will never otherwise say, nor turn to their superstitious doings.

Then the Bishop said, the Devil did lead her. No, my Lord, said she, it is the Spirit of God which leadeth me, and which called me in my Bed, and at midnight opened his Truth to me. Then was there a great shout and laughing among the Priests and other.

During the time that this good poor Woman was thus under these Priests hands, amongst many other baitings and sore conflicts which she sustained by them, here is moreover not to be forgotten, how that Master Blaxton aforesaid, being the Treasurer of the Church, had a Concubine, which sundry times resorted to him, with other of his Gossips; so that always when they came, this said good Woman was called forth to his House, there to make his Minion with the rest of the Company some mirth, he examining her with such mocking and gins, devising the Truth, that it would have vexed any Christian.

Christian heart to have seen it. Then when he had long used his foolishness in this sort, and had sported himself enough in deriding this Christian Martyr; in the end he sent her to Prison again, and there kept her very miserably, saying that sometimes he would fend for her, when his aforesaid guest came to him, to use with her his accustomed folly aforesaid. But in fine, these vile wretches (after many combats and scoffing persuasions) when they had played the part of the Cat with the Mouse, at length condemned her, and delivered her over to the Secular Power.

Woman.

Then the Indictment being given and read, which was, that she should go to the place whence she came, and from thence to be led to the place of execution, then and thereto be burned with flames till she should be con-fumed; she lifted up her voice and thanked God, saying, I thank thee my Lord my God; this day have I found that which I have long sought. But such out-cries as there were again, and such mockings were never seen upon a poor silly Woman: All which she most patiently took. And yet this favour they pretended after her Judgment, that her life should be spared, if she would turn and recant. Nay, that will I not (said she:) God forbid that I should lose the life eternal for this carnal and short life. I will never turn from my Heavenly Husband, to my Earthly Husband; from the fellowship of Angels to mortal Children: And if my Husband and Children be faithful, then am I theirs; God is my Father, God is my Mother, God is my Sister, my Brother, my Kinsman, God is my Friend most faithful.

Then was she delivered to the Sheriff, and innumerable People beholding her, she was led by the Officers to the place of execution, without the Walls of Exeter, called Sotthenby, where again these superstitious Priests assaulted her; and she prayed them to have no more talk with her, but cryed still; God be mercifull to me a sinner, God be mercifull to me a sinner. And so whilst they were tying her to the stake, thus still she cryed, and would give no answer to them, but with much patience took her cruel death, and was with the flames and fire consumed; and so ended this mortal life, as constant a Woman in the Faith of Christ, as ever was upon the Earth. Shee was as simple a Woman to see to as any Man might behold; of a very little and short stature, somewhat thick, about 54. years of age. She had a cheerful countenance, so lively, as though she had been prepared for that day of her Marriage to meet the Lamb; most patient of her words and answers; sober in apparel, meat and drink, and would never be idle; a great comfort to as many as would talk with her; good to the poor; and in her trouble, moony, she said, she would take none; for she said, I am going to a City, where many beareth no malice; whilst I am here God hath promised to feed me. Thus was her mortal life ended. For whose constancy God be everlastingly praised, Amen.

Touching the name of this Woman (as I have now learned) she was the Wife of one called Preit, dwelling in the Diocess of Exeter, not far from Launceston.

Two godly Martyrs burned at Bristol Anno 1557.

The persecution and Martyrdom of three godly men burnt at Bristol, about the latter years of Q. Mary's Reign.

In writing of the blessed Sins which suffered in the Bloody days of Queen Mary, I had almost overlooked the names and story of three godly Martyrs, which with their Blood gave Testimony likewise to the Gospel of Christ, being condemned and burnt in the Town of Bristow. The names of whom were these:

Richard Sharpe,
Thomas Benion, Martyrs.
Thomas Hale.

First, Richard Sharp Weaver of Bristow, was brought the ninth day of March, Anno 1556. before Master Dalby, Chancellor of the Town or City of Bristow, and after examination concerning the Sacrament of the Altar, was persuaded by the said Dalby and others to recant, and the twenty ninth of the same Month was enjoined to make his recantation before the Parishioners in his Parish Church. Which when he had done, he felt in his Conscience such a tormenting Hell, that he was not able quietly to work in his occupation, but decayed and changed both in colour and liking of his Body. Who shortly after upon Sunday came into his Parish Church, called Temple, and after high Mass, came to the Quire Door, and said with a loud voice; Neighbours, bear me record that yonder Idol (and pointed to the Altar) is the greatest and most abominable that ever was; and I am sorry that ever I denied my Lord God. Then the Constables were commanded to apprehend him, but none stepped forth, but suffered him to go out of the Church. After, by night he was apprehended and carried to Newgate, and shortly after he was brought before the Lord Chancellor, denying the Sacrament of the Altar to be the Body and Blood of Christ, and said, it was an Idol, and therefore was condemned to be burnt by the said Dalby. He was burnt the seventh of May 1557. and died godly, patiently, and constantly, confuting the Articles of our Faith.

Thomas Hale, Martyr.

Th. Hale Martyr.

THe Thursday in the night before Easter; Anno 1557. came one Mr. David Harris Alderman, and John Stone, to the House of one Thomas Hale, a Shoemaker of Bristow, and caused him to rise out of his Bed, and brought him forth of his door. To whom the said Thomas Hale said, You have sought my Blood these two years, and now much good do you with it. Who being committed to the Watchmen, was carried to Newgate the twenty fourth of April, the year aforesaid, was brought before Mr. Dalby the Chancellor, committed by him to Prison, and after by him condemned to be burnt, for saying the Sacrament of the Altar to be an Idol. He was burned the seventh of May with the fore said Richard Sharp, and godly, patiently, and constantly embraced the Fire with his arms. Anno 1558.

Richard Sharp and Thomas Hale were burnt both together in one fire, and bound back to back.

Thomas Benion.

Thomas Benion a Weaver, at the Commandment of the Commissioners, was brought by a Constable, the thirteenth day of August Anno, 1557. before Master Dalby Chancellor of Bristow, who committed him to Prison for saying there was nothing but Bread in the Sacrament, as they used it. Wherefore, the twentieth day of the said August he was condemned to be burnt by the said Dalby, for denying s. of their Sacraments, and affirming two, that is the Sacrament of the Body and Blood of Christ, and the Sacrament of Baptism. He was burnt the 27. of the said month and year, and died godly, Constantly, and patiently, with confessing the Articles of our Christian Faith.

The Martyrdoms of five goodly Martyrs at Canterbury Anno 1558. November 10.

The Martyrdom of five constant Christians, which suffered the last of all other in the time of Queen Mary.

Novemb. 10. The last that suffered in Queen Mary's time, were five at Canterbury burned about six days before the death of Queen Mary, whose names Follow here under written.

John Cornesford, of Worthing.
Christopher Brown, of Maidstone.
John Herft, of Ashford.
Alice Smith.
Katherine Knight, otherwise called Katherine Tynley, an aged Woman.

These five, to close up the final Rage of Queen Mary's Persecution, for the testimony of that Word, for which so many had died before, gave up their lives meekly and patiently, suffering the violent malice of the Papists. Which Papists, although they then might have either well spared them, or else deferred their death, knowing of the sickness of Queen Mary; yet such was the implacable despatch of that Generation, that some there be that say, the Archdeacon of Canterbury the same time being at London, and understanding the danger of the Queen, incontinently made all post-haste home to dispatch these, whom before he had then in his cruel custody.

The matter why they were judged to the Fire, was for believing the Body not to be in the Sacrament of the Altar, unless it be received; saying moreover, that we receive another thing also besides Christ's Body, which we see, and is a temporal thing, according to St. Paul, The things that be seen, be temporal, &c.

Item, for confessing that an evil man doth not receive Christ's Body, Because no man hath the Son, except it be given him of the Father.

Item, that it is Idolatry to creep to the Cross, and St. John forbidding it, saith, Beware of Images.

Item, for confessing that we should not pray to our Lady, and other Saints, because they be not Omnipotent.

For these and other such Articles of Christian Doctrine, were these five committed to the Fire. Against whom when the Sentence should be read, and they excommunicate, after the manner of the Papists, one of them, John Cornesford by Name, stirred with a vehement spirit of the Zeal of God, proceeding in a more true Excommunication against the Papists, in the name of them all, pronounced Sentence against them, in these words as follow:

An example of Gods works to be used.

In

1558.

In the Name of our Lord Jesus Christ, the Son of the most mighty God, and by the power of his Holy Spirit, and the Authority of his Holy Catholick and Apostolick Church, we do here give into the Hands of Satan to be destroyed, the Bodies of all those Blasphemers and Hereticks, that do maintain any error against his most holy Word, or do condemn his most holy Truth for Herefie, to the maintenance of any false Church or feigned Religion, so that by this thy just judgement, O most mighty God, against thy Adversaries, thy True Religion may be known to thy great glory and our comfort, and to the edifying of all our Nation. Good Lord so be it, Amen.

dealing of Mr. Harpo-field, the Archdeacon
at Cant.

This Sentence of Excommunication being the same time openly pronounced and registred, proceeding so, as it seemeth, from an inward Faith and hearty zeal to Gods Truth and Religion, took such effect against the enemy, that within six days after Queen Mary dyed, and the Tyranny of all English Papists with her. Albeit, notwithstanding the Sicknes and Death of that Queen, wherof they were not ignorant; yet the Archdeacon, with other of Canterbury, thought to dispatch the Martyrdom of these Men before.

In the which fact, the tyranny of this Archdeacon seemeth to exceed the cruelty of Boner; who notwithstanding he had certain the same time under his custody, yet he was not so impurine in halting them to the fire, as appeareth by Father Lining and his Wife, and divers other, who being the same time under the custody and danger of Boner, were delivered by the death of Queen Mary, and remain yet some of them alive.

These godly Martyrs in their prayers which they made before their Martyrdom, desired God that their Blood might be the last that should be shed, and so it was.

This Katherine Tinley was the Mother of one Robert Tinley, now dwelling in Maidstone, which Robert was in trouble all Queen Marys time. To whom his Mother, coming to visit him, asked him how he took this place of Scripture which he had seen, not by reading of the Scripture (for he had yet in manner no taste of Religion) but had found it by chance in a Book of prayers, I will pour out my Spirit upon all Flesh, and your Sons and your Daughters shall prophesie: your Old Men shall dream dreams, and your Young Men shall see Visions. And also upon the Servants, and upon the Maids in those days will I pour my Spirit, &c. Which place after that he had expounded to her, she began to take hold on the Gospel, growing more and more in zeal and love thereof, and so continued unto her Martyrdom.

Alice Smith.

Among such young Women as were burned at Canterbury, it is recorded of a certain maid, and supposed to be this Alice Smith here in this story mentioned, or else to be Agnes Smith above storied, (for they were both burned) that when she was brought to be executed, she being at the Stake, calling for her Godfather and Godmothers. The Justice, hearing her, sent for them, but they durst not come. Notwithstanding the Justice willed the messenger to go again, and to shew them that they should incur no danger thereof.

Hereby Bp.
Boner may see that the Martyrs died in the same Faith, wherein they were Baptized by their Godfathers and Godmothers.

Then, they hearing that, came to know the matter of their kending for. When the maid saw them, she asked them what they had promised for her, and so she immediately rehearsed her Faith, and the commandments of God, and required of them, if there were any more that they had promised in her behalf, and they said, No.

Then, said she, I die a Christian Woman, bear witness of mee, and so cruelly in fire was she consumed, and gave joyfully her life up for the Testimony of Christs Gospel, to the terrour of the wicked, and comfort of the godly, and also to the stopping of the slanderous mouths of such, as falsely do quarrel against the faithful Martyrs, for going from that Religion wherein by their Godfathers and Godmothers they were first Baptized.

The Story and Condemnation of John Hunt, and Richard White, ready to be burnt, but by the Death of Q. Mary escaped the fire.

The story of J. Hunt, and Richard White.

Besides these Martyrs above named, divers there were in divers other places of the Realm imprisoned, whereof some were but newly taken and not yet examined, some begun to be examined, but were not yet condemned, certain were both examined and condemned, but for lack of the Writ escaped.

Other there were also, both condemned, and the Writ also was brought down for their burning, and yet by the death of the Chancellor, the Bishop, and of Queen Mary happening together about one time, they most happily and marvellously were preserved, and lived many years after. In the number of whom was one John Hunt and Richard Whites, imprisoned at Salisbury. Touching which history something here is to be shewed.

First, these two good Men and faithful Servants of the Lord above named, to wit, John Hunt, and Richard White; had remained long time in Prison at Salisbury and other places thereabout, the space of two years and more. During which time, oft times they were called to examination, and manifold ways were impugned by the Bishops and the Priests. All whole examinations, as I thought not much needful here to prosecute or to search out, for the length of the Volume; so neither again did I think it good to leave no Memory at all of the same, but some part to express, namely of the Examination of Richard White before the B. of Salisbury, the B. of Gloucester, with the Chancellor and other Priests, not unworthy perchance to be rehearsed.

The Examination of Richard White, before the Bishop of Salisbury in his Chamber in Salisbury the 26. day of April, Anno 1557.

The Bishop of Salisbury at that time was Doctor Capon. The Bishop of Gloucester was Doctor Brookes. These with Doctor Geffery the Chancellor of Salisbury, and a great number of Priests sitting in judgement, Richard White was brought before them. With whom first the Bishop of Gloucester, which had the examination of him, beginneth thus.

Bishop Brookes. Is this the prisoner?

The Chancellor. Yes, my Lord.

Brookes. Friend, wherfore camest thou hither?

White. My Lord, I trust to know the cause: for the Law saith; In the Mouth of two or three witnesses things must stand.

Doctor Capon. Did not I examine thee of thy Faith when thou camest hither?

White. No, my Lord, you did not examine me, but commanded me to the Lollards Tower, and that no man should speak with me. And now I do require mine accuser.

Then the Register said; The Maior of Marlborough did apprehend you for words that you spake there; and for that I commanded you to be conveyed hither to Prison.

White. You had the examination of me in Marlborough. Say what I have said. And I will answer you.

Geffery. Thou shalt confess thy Faith ere thou depart; and therefore say thy mind freely, and be not ashamed so to do.

White. I am not ashamed of the Gospel of Christ, because it is the power of God to Salvation unto all that believe: and S. Peter saith; If any man do ask thee a reason of the hope that is in thee, make him a direct answer and that with meeknes. Who shall have the examination of me?

Chanc. My Lord of Gloucester shall have the examination of thee.

White. My Lord, will you take the pains to wet your coat in my Blood? be not guilty thereof; I warn you before hand.

Brookes. I will do nothing contrary to our Law.

White. My Lord, what is it that you do request at my hands?

Brookes. I will appose thee upon certain Articles, and principally upon the Sacrament of the Altar: How dost thou believe of the blessed Sacrament of the Altar?

Believest thou not the real, carnal, and corporal presence of Christ in the same, even the very same Christ that was born of the Virgin Mary, that was hanged on the Cross and that suffered for our sins? (and at these words they all put off their caps, and bowed their Bodies.)

White. My Lord, what is a Sacrament?
Brooks. It is the thing it self the which it representeth.

White. My Lord, that cannot be; for he that representeth a Prince, cannot be the Prince himself.

Bro. How many Sacraments findeth thou in the Scriptures called by the name of Sacraments?

White. I find two Sacraments in the Scriptures, but not called by the names of Sacramenta. But I think St. Augustine gave them the first name of Sacraments.

Brooks. Then thou findest not that word Sacrament in the Scriptures.

White. No, my Lord.

Brooks. Did not Christ say, This is my Body? and are not his words true?

White. I am sure the words are true; but you play by me as the Devil did by Christ: for he said, If thou be, Mar. 4. For, it is, &c. P[er] al. 91. But the words that followed after be clean left out, which are these: Thou shalt walk upon the Lion and Asp, &c. These words the Devil left out, because they were spoken against himself; and even so do you recite the Scriptures.

Brooks. Declare thy Faith upon the Sacrament.

White. Christ and his Sacraments are like, because of the Natures; for in Christ are two Natures, a divine and an humane Nature; so likewise in the Sacraments of Christ's Body and Blood there be two Natures, the which I divide into two parts, that is, external and internal. The external part is the Element of Bread and Wine, according to the saying of Saint Augustine. The internal part is the invisible Grace, which, by the same is represented. So is there an external receiving of the same Sacrament, and an internal. The external is with the hand, the eye, the mouth, and the ear. The internal is by the Holy Ghost in the heart, which worketh in me Faith. Whereby I apprehend all the merits of Christ, applying the same wholly unto my Salvation. If this be truth, believe it; and if it be not, reprove it.

Dr. Hoskins. This is Oecolampadius Doctrine, and Hooper taught it the people.

Brooks. Dost thou not believe, that after the words of Consecration there is the natural Presence of Christ's Body?

White. My Lord, I will answer you, if you will answer me to one question. Is not this Article of our belief true; He sitteth at the Right hand of God the Father Almighty: If he be come from thence to judgment, say so.

Brook. No. But if thou wilt believe the Scriptures, I will prove to thee that Christ was both in Heaven and in earth at one time.

White. As he is God, he is in all places; but as for his manhood, he is but in one place.

Brooks. St. Paul saith, 1 Cor. 15. Last of all he was seen of me, &c. Here St. Paul saith he saw Christ, and St. Paul was not in Heaven.

White. St. Paul's chief purpose was by this place to prove the Resurrection. But how do you prove that Christ, when he appeared to St. Paul, was not still in Heaven; like as he was seen of Stephen, sitting at the Right Hand of God? St. Augustine saith, the Head that was in Heaven, did cry for the Body and members which were on the Earth, and said; Saul, Saul, why persecutest thou me? And was not Paul taken up into the third Heaven, where he might see Christ? as he witnesseth, 1 Cor. 15. For there he doth but only say he saw Christ, but concerning the place he speaketh nothing. Wherefore this place of Scripture proveth not that Christ was both in Heaven and Earth at one time.

Brook. I told you before he would not believe. Here be three opinions, the Lutherans, the Oecolampadians, and we the Catholics. If you the Oecolampadians have the truth; then the Lutherans and we the Catholics be out of the way. If the Lutherans have the truth, then you the Oecolampadians and we the Catholics be out of the way. But if we the Catholics have the truth, as we have indeed, then the Lutherans and you the Oecolampadians are out of the way, as you are indeed, for the Lutherans do call you Heretics.

White. My Lord, ye have troubled me greatly with the Scriptures.

Brooks. Did I not tell you it was not possible to remove him from his error? Away with him to the Lehards Tower, and dispatch him as soon as ye can.

This was the effect of my first Examination. More Examinations I had after this, which I have no time now to write out.

Amongst many other examinations of the forehead Richard White, at divers and sundry times sustained, it happened one time, that Doctor blackstone Chancellor of Exeter fate upon him, with divers other; who alledging certain Doctors, as Chrysostome, Cyprian, Tertullian, against the said Richard, and being false patching of the Doctors, reproved by him for his fell in such a quaking and shaking (his Confidence belike remorsing him) that hee was fain, stooping down, to lay both his hands upon his knees to flay his Body from trembling.

Then the said John Hunt and Richard White, after many examinations and long captivity, at length were called for, and brought before Doctor Geffrey the Bishops Chancellor, there to be condemned, and so they were. The high Sheriff at that present was one named Sir Anthony Hungerford, who being then at the Sessions, was there charged with these two condemned persons, with other malefactors there condemned likewise the same time, to see the execution of Death mislaid unto them.

In the mean time Master Clifford of Bejco in Wiltshire, Son-in-law to the said Sir Anthony Hungerford the Sheriff, cometh to his Father, exhorting him and counselling him earnestly in no case to meddle with the Death of these two innocent persons; and if the Chancellor and Priests would needs be inflamed upon him, yet he should first require the Writ to be sent down De cumbarendo for his discharge.

Sir Anthony Hungerford hearing this, and understanding Justice Brown to be in the Town the same time, went to him to ask his advice and Counsel in the matter: who told him that without the Writ sent down from the Superiour Powers, he could not be discharged, and if the Writ were sent, then he must by the law do his charge.

The Sheriff understanding by Justice Brown how far he might go by the Law, and having at that time no Writ for his warrant, let them alone, and the next day after taking his Horse, departed.

The Chancellor all this while marvelling what the Sheriff meant, and yet disdaining to go unto him, but looking rather the other should have come first to him, at last hearing that hee was ridden away, taketh his Horse and rideth after him; who, at length overtaking the said Sheriff, declared unto him how he had committed certain condemned prisoners to his hand, whose duty had been to have seen execution done, the matter he said was great, and therefore willed him to look well unto it how he would answer the matter. And thus began he fiercely to lay to his charge.

Wherein note (gentle Reader) by the way, the close and covert hypocrisie of the Papists in their dealings. Who in the form and stile of their own Sentence Condemnatory, pretend a Petition unto the Secular Power, In visceribus Jesu Christi, ut iuris rigor mitigetur, atque ut parcatur vis. That is, that the rigour of the Law may be mitigated, and that their life may be spared. And how standeth this now with their own doings and dealings, when this Chancellor (as ye see) is not only contented to give Sentence against them, but also hunteth after the Officer, not suffering him to spare them, although he would? What dissimulation is this of Men, going and doing contrary to their own words and profession? But let us return to our matter again.

The Sheriff hearing the Chancellors words, and seeing him so urging upon him, told him again that hee was no Babe, which now was to be taught of him. If he had any Writ to warrant and discharge him in burning those Men, then he knew what he had to do. Why, saith the Chancellor, did not I give you a Writ, with my hand and eight more of the Close set unto the same? Well, quoth the Sheriff, that is no sufficient discharge for me; and therefore as I told you, if ye have a sufficient Writ and Warrant from the Superiour Powers, I know then what I have to do in my office: otherwise, if ye have

Where note again (good Reader) how by this it may be thought and supposed, that the other poor Saints and Martyrs of God, such as had been burned at Salisbury before, were burned belike without any authorised or sufficient Writ from the Superiors, but only upon the information of the Chancellor and of the Close, through the uncircumspect negligence of the Sheriffs, which should have looked more substantially upon the matter. But this I leave and refer unto the Magistrates. Let us return to the story again.

Doſor Geftery the Chancellor thus sent away from the Sheriff, went home, and there fell sick upon the same (for anger belike) as they signified unto me, which were the parties themselves, both godly and grave persons, who were then condemned, the one of them, which is Richard White, being yet alive.

The under Sheriff to this Sir Anthony Hungerford above named, was one Maſter Micchell, likewise a right and a perfect godly Man. So that not long after this came down the Writ to burn the above named Richard White, and John Hunt, but the under Sheriff receiving the said Writ laid; I will not be guilty (quoth he) of their Mens Blood, and immediately burnt the writing, and departed his way. Within four days after the Chancellor died. Concerning whose Death this cometh by the way to be noted, that these two foresaid, John Hunt, and Rich. White, being the same time in a low and dark Dungeon, being Saturday, toward evening (according to their accustomed manner) fell to evening prayer. Who kneeling these together, as they should begin their prayer: suddenly fell both to such a strange weeping and tenderness of heart (but how they could not tell) that they could not pray one word, but so continued a great space, burſting out in tears. After that night was past, and the morning come, the first word they heard, was that the Chancellor their great enemy was dead. The time of whose death they found to be the same hour, when as they fell in such a sudden weeping. The Lord in all his works be prayed, Amen. Thus much concerning the death of that wicked Chancellor.

This Rich. White and the said John Hunt, after the death of the Chancellor, the Bishop also being dead a little before, continued still in Prison till the happy coming in of Queen Elizabeth: and so were at liberty.

The Martyrdom of a young lad of eight years old, scourged to death in Bishop Boners House in London.

IF bloody Torments and cruel Death of a poor Innocent, suffering for no cause of his own, but in the Truth of Christ and his Religion, do make a Martyr, no less deserving the Child of one John Fetty to be reputed in the Catalogue of Holy Martyrs, who in the house of Bp. Bomer unmercifully was scourged to death, as by the sequel of this story here following may appear.

Amongst those that were persecuted and miserably imprisoned for the profession of Christs Gospel, and yet mercifully delivered by the providence of God, there was one John Fetty, a simple and godly Poor Man, dwelling in the Parish of Clerkenwel, and was by vocation a Taylor, of the age of 24. years or thereabout, who was accused and complained of unto one Brokenbury a Priest and Parson of the same Parish, by his own Wife, for that he would not come unto the Church, and be partaker of their Idolatry and Superstition; and therefore, through the said Priests procurement, he was apprehended by Richard Tanner and his fellow Constables there, and one Martin the Headborow. Howbeit immediately upon his apprehension, his Wife (by the just judgment of God) was stricken mad, and distracted of her wits; which declared a marvellous example of the justice of God against such unfaithful and most unnatural treachery. And although this example perhaps for lack of knowledge and instruction in such cases little moved the Consciences of these simple Poor Men to furcise their persecution; yet natural pity towards that ungrateful Woman wrought so in their hearts, that for the preservation and sustentation of her and her two Children (like otherwise to perish) they for that present let her Husband alone, and would not carry him to Prison, but yet suffered him to remain quietly in his own house. During which time, he as it were forgetting the wicked and unkind fact of his Wife, did yet so cherish and provide for her, that within the space of three weeks (through Gods merciful providence) she was well amended, and had recovered again some Ray of her wits and senses.

But such was the power of Sathan in the malicious heart of that wicked Woman, that notwithstanding his gentle dealing with her, yet she so soon as he had recovered some health, did again accuse her Husband; whereupon he was the second time apprehended, and carried unto Sir John Mordant Knight, one of the Queens Commissioners, and he upon examination sent him by Clany the Bishops Sumner, unto the Lollards Tower: where he was (even at the first) put into the painful Stocks, and had a dish of water set by him, with a stone put into it. To what purpose God knoweth, except it were to show that he should look for little other succourance. Which is credible enough, if we consider their like practices upon divers before mentioned in this history, as amongst other, upon Richard Smith, who died through their cruel imprisonment; Touching whom, when a godly Woman came to Dr. Story, to have leave that he might bury him, he asked her if he had any straw or Blood in his Mouth; but what he meant thereby, I leave to the judgment of the godly Wit.

After the foresaid Fetty had thus lain in the Prison by the space of 15. days, hanging in the stocks, sometime by the one leg, and the one Arm, sometime by the other, and otherwhiles by both, it hapned that one of his Children (a boy of the age of 3. or 9. years) came unto the Bishops house to see if he could get leave to speak with his Father. At his coming thither, one of the Bishops Chaplains met with him, and asked him what he lacked and whom he would have. The Child answered, that he came to see his Father. The Chaplain asked again who was his Father. The boy then told him, and pointing towards Lollards Tower, shewed him that his Father was there in Prison. Why (quoth the Priest) thy Father is an Heretic. The Child being of a bold and quick Spirit, and also godly brought up, and instructed by his Father in the knowledge of God, answered and said; My Father is no Heretic: For you have Balaams Mark.

With that the Priest took the Child by the hand, and carried him into the Bishops house (whether to the Bishop or not, I know not, but like enough he did) and there amongst them they did most shamefully and without all pity so whip and scourge, being naked, this tender Child, that he was all in a gore Blood, and then in jolly brag of their Catholick Tyranny, they caused Clany, having his Coat upon his Arm to carry the Child in his shirt unto his Father being in Prison, the Blood running down by his heels.

At his coming unto his Father the Child fell down upon his knees, and asked him blessing. The Poor Man then beholding his Child, and seeing him so cruelly arrayed, cried out for sorrow, and said; Alas Will, who hath done this to thee? The Boy answered, that as he seeking how to come to see his Father, a Priest with Balaams Mark took him into the Bishops house, and there was he so handled. Clany therewith violently plucked the Child away out of his Fathers Hands, and carried him back again into the Bishops house, where they kept him three days after.

And at the three days end, Boner (minding to make the matter whole, and somewhat to appease the Poor Man, for this their horrible fact) determined to release him; and therefore caused him early in a morning to be brought out of Lollards Tower into his bed-chamber, where he found the Bishop bathing of himself against a great fire, and at his first entering into the chamber, Fetty said, God be here and peace. God be here and peace (quoth Boner) that is neither God speed, nor good morrow. If ye kick against this peace (said Fetty) then this is not the place that I seek for.

The words between Boner and John Fetty.

A Chaplain of the Bishops standing by turned the Poor Man about, and thinking to deface him, said in mocking wise; What have we here? A player? whilst this Feiry was standing in the Bishops Chamber, he espied hanging about the Bishops Bed a great pair of Black Beads: whereupon he said; My Lord, I think the Hangman is not far off; for the Halter (pointing to the Beads) is here already. At which words the Bishop was in a marvellous rage.

Then immediately after he espied also standing in the said Bishops Chamber in the Window a little Crucifix; (before which belike Boner used to kneel in the time of his hypocritical prayers.) Then he asked the Bishop what it was, and he answered that it was Christ. Was he handled so cruelly as he is here pictured, quoth Feiry? Yea, that he was, said the Bishop.

And even so cruelly will you handle such as come before you. For you are unto Gods People as Capbas was unto Christ.

The Bishop being in a great fury, said; Thou art a vile Heretick, and I will beat thee, or else I will spend all that I have unto my gown.

Nay, my Lord, said Feiry, ye were better to give it a Poor Body, that he may pray for you. But yet Boner betlinking in himself of the danger that the Child was in by their whipping, and what peril might ensue thereupon, thought better to discharge him; which thing was accomplished.

Whereupon, after this and such like talk, the Bishop at last discharged him, willing him to go home, and carry his Child with him; which he so did, and that with a heavy heart to see his Poor Boy in such extreme pain and grief. But within fourteen days after the Child died, whether through his cruel scourging, or any other infirmity, I know not; and therefore I refer the truth thereof unto the Lord, who knoweth all secrets, and also to the discreet judgment of the wise Reader. But howsoever it was, the Lord yet used their cruel and detestable fact, as a means of his providence for the delivery of this good Poor Man and faithful Christian, his name be ever prayed therefore, Amen.

The cruel handling and burning of Nicholas Burton, Englishman and Merchant in Spain.

Forasmuch as in our former Book of Acts and Monuments mention was made of the Martyrdom of Nicholas Burton, I thought here also not to omit the same story, being such as is not unworthy to be known, as well for the profitable example of his singular constancy, as also for the noting of the extreme dealing and cruel revenging of those Catholick Inquisitors of Spain, who under the pretended vifor of Religion, do nothing but seek their own private gain and commodity, with crafty riling and fjoying of other Mens goods, as by the noting of this story may appear.

The fifth day of the Month of November, about the year of our Lord God, 1560, this Nicholas Burton, Citizen sometime of London and Merchant, dwelling in the Parish of little Saint Bartholomew, peaceably and quietly following his traffique in the trade of Merchandife, and being in the City of Cadix, in the party of Andalusia in Spain, there came into his lodging a Judas (or as they term them) a Familiar of the Fathers of the Inquisition. Who asking for the said Nicholas Burton, fained that he had a letter to deliver to his own hands; by which means he shoke with him immediately. And having no letter to deliver to him, then the said Promoter or Familiar, at the motion of the Diwel his Master, whose messenger he was, invented another lie, and said, that he would take lading for London in such ships as the said Nicholas Burton had fained to lade; if he would let any; which was partly to know where he laded his goods, that they might attach them, and chiefly to detain the time until the Alguisil or Sergeant of the said Inquisition might come and apprehend the Body of the said Nicholas Burton; which they did continually.

Who then, well perceiving that they were not able to lade nor charge him that he had witten, spoken, or done any thing there in that Country against the Ecclesiastica, or Temporal Laws of the same Realm, boldly asked them what they had to lay to his charge that they did so arrest him and bade them to declare the cause, and he would answer them. Now justifying they answered nothing, but commanded him with cruel threatening words to hold his peace, and not to speak one word to them.

And so they carried him to the cruel and filthy common Prison of the Town of Cadix, where he remained in Irons fourteen days amongst thieves.

At which time he so instructed the poor Prisoners in the Word of God, according to the good talent which God had given him in that behalf, and also in the Spanish Tongue to utter the same, that in short space he had well reclaimed sundry of those Superstitious and Ignorant Spaniards to embrace the Word of God, and to reject their Popish Traditions.

Which being known unto the Officers of the Inquisition, they conveyed him laden with Irons from thence to a City called Sivill, into a more cruel and ftraiter Prison called Triana, where the said Fathers of the Inquisition proceeded against him secretly according to their accustomable cruel tyranny, that never after he could be suffered to write or to speak to any of his nation; so that to this day it is unknown who was his accuser.

Afterward, the 20. day of December, in the foresaid year, they brought the said Nicholas Burton, with a great number of other prisoners, for professing the true Christian Religion, into the City of Sivill, to a place where the said Inquisitors fate in judgment, which they called Autos, with a Canvas Coat, whereupon in divers parts was painted the figure of a huge Diwel, tormenting a Soul in a flame of fire, and on his head a copping tank of the same work.

His tongue was forced out of his mouth with a cloven stick fastened upon it, that he should not utter his Conscience and Faith to the People, and so he was fet with another English Man of Southhampton, and divers other condemned Men for Religion, as well French Men, as Spaniards, upon a Scaffold over against the said Inquisition, where their Sentences and judgments were read and pronounced against them.

And immediately after the said Sentences given, they were carried from thence to the place of execution without the City, where they most cruelly burned him, for whose constant Faith, God be praised.

This Nicholas Burton by the way, and in the flames of the fire made so cheerful a Countenance, embracing Death with all patience and gladness, that the tormentors and enemies which stood by, said that the Diwel had his Soul before he came to the fire; and therefore they said his senses of feeling were past him.

It hapned that after the arrest of this Nicholas Burton aforesaid, immediately all the goods and merchandife which he brought with him into Spain by the way of traffick, were (according to their common usage) seized, and taken into the Sequefter; among the which they also rolled up much that appertained to another English Merchant, wherewith he was credited as Factor. Whereof so soon as news was brought to the Merchant as well of the imprisonment of his Factor, as of the arrest made upon his goods, he sent his Attorney into Spain with Authority from him, to make claim to his goods, and to demand them; whose name was John Frowton, Citizen of Brisfow.

When his Attorney was landed at Sivill, and had shewed all his Letters and writings to the Holy House, requiring them that such goods might be delivered into his possession, answer was made him that he must sue by Bill, and retain an Advocate (but all was doubtless to delay him) and they forsooth of courtesie assigned him one to frame his Supplication for him, and other such Bills of petition, as he had to exhibit into their Holy Court, demanding for each Bill 8. Rials, albeit they stood him in no more stead, than if he had put up none at all. And for the space of three or four Months this fellow missed not twice a day, attending every morning and after-noon at the Inquisitors Palace, suing unto them upon his knees for his dispatch, but especially to the Bishop of Tarragon, who was at that very time chief in the Inquisition at Sivill, that he of his absolute Authority would command restitution to be made thereof;

Anno

The manner of the Popish Spaniards in carrying Nicholas Burton a blessed Martyr of Christ after most spitefull sort to the burning.

but the Booty was so good and so great, that it was very hard to come by it again.

At the length, after he had spent whole four Months in suits and requests, and also to no purpose, he received this Answer from them, that he must shew better evidence, and bring more sufficient Certificates out of England, for proof of this matter, than those which he had already presented to the Court. Whereupon the party forthwith posted to London, and with all speed returned to Spain again with more ample and large Letters Testimonial and Certificates, according to their requests, and exhibited them to the Court.

Notwithstanding the Inquisitors still shifted him off, excusing themselves by lack of leisure, and for that they were occupied in greater and more weighty Affairs, and with such Answers delayed him other four Months after.

At the last, when the party had well-nigh spent all his Money, and therefore sued the more earnestly for his dispatch, they referred the matter wholly to the Bishop. Of whom, when he repaired unto him, he made this Answer, That for himself, he knew what he had to do; howbeit he was but one man, and the determination of the matter appertained unto the other Commissioners as well as unto him: and thus by posting and passing it from one to another, the party could obtain no end of his Suit. Yet, for his importunity sake, they were resolved to dispatch him, it was on this sort: One of the Inquisitors called Gasco, a man very well experienced in these practices, willed the party to resort unto him after Dinner.

The Fellow being glad to hear these News, and supposing that his goods should be restored unto him, and that he was called in for that purpose to talk with the other that was in Prison, to confer with him about their Accounts, the rather through a little misunderstanding, hearing the Inquisitors cast out a word, that it should be needful for him to talk with the Prisoner, and being thereupon more than half perswaded, that at the length they meant good Faith, did so, and repaired thither about the Evening. Immediately upon his coming, the Gaoler was forthwith charged with him, to shut him up close in such a certain Prison, where they appointed him.

The party hoping at the first that he had been called for about some other matter, and seeing himself contrary to his expectation cast into a dark Dungeon, perceived at the length that the world went with him far otherwise than he supposed it would have done.

But within two or three days after, he was brought forth into the Court, where he began to demand his goods; and because it was a device that well served their turn, without any more circumstance they bade him say his Ave Maria. The party began and said it after this manner; Ave Maria gratia plena, Dominus tecum, benedicta tu in mulieribus, & benedictus fructus ventris tui Jesus, Amen.

The same was written word by word as he spake it, and without any more talk of claiming his goods, because it was bootless, they command him to Prison again, and enter an Action against him as an Heretick, inasmuch as he did not say his Ave Maria after the Romish fashion, but ended it very suspiciously, for he should have added moreover; Sancta Maria mater Dei, ora pro nobis peccatoribus; by abbreviating whereof, it was evident enough (said they) that he did not allow the mediation of Saints.

Thus they picked a quarrel to detain him in Prison a longer season, and afterwards brought him forth into their Stage disguised after their manner: where Sentence was given, that he should lose all the goods which he sued for, though they were not his own, and besides this suffer a years Imprisonment.

But of these and such other acts and matters past in Spain, because they fell not within the compass of Q. Maryes Reign, but since her time, another place shall serve hereafter (the Lord willing) to intreat more at large of the same, when we come to the years and reign of the Queen that now is, where we have more conveniently to infer not only of these matters of the Martyrs (whereof somewhat also hath been touched before) but also of the whole Inquisition of Spain and Plackarde of Flawnders, with the tragical tumults and troubles happening within the last memory of these our later days, according as it shall please the mercy of the Lord to enable our endeavour with grace and space to the accomplishment thereof.

A Chapter or Treatise concerning such as were Scourged and Whipped by the Papists in the true Cause of Christs Gospel.

A Chapter concerning such as were Scourged for Religion.

Of this State read before.

And thus through the merciful assistance and favourable aid of Christ our Saviour, thou hast as in a general Register (good Reader) the story collected, if not of all, yet of the most part, or at least, not many I trust omitted of such good Saints and Martyrs as have lost their Lives, and given their Blood, or died in Prison for the Testimony of Christs true Doctrine and Sacraments, from the time of the cruel Statute first given out by King Henry the fourth Ex officio, unto this present time, and especially under the Reign of Q. Mary. Now after this bloody laughter of Gods good Saints and Servants thus ended and discurfed, let us proceed (by the good pleasure of the Lord) somewhat likewise to intreat of such as for the same cause of Religion have been, although not put to death, yet Whipped and Scourged by the Adversaries of Gods Word, first beginning with Richard Wilmot and Thomas Fairfax, who about the time of Anne Askew, were pitifully rent and tormented with Scourges and Stripes for their faithful standing to Christ, and of his Truth, as by the story and examination both of the said Richard Wilmot, and of Thomas Fairfax now following may appear.

The Scourging of Richard Wilmot and Thomas Fairfax.

The Scourging of Rich. Wilmot and T. Fairfax. Dr. Cromes Sermons.

After the first Recantation of Doctor Cromes for his Sermon which he made the fifth Sunday in Lent at Saint Thomas Acrees, being the Mercers Chappell, his Sermon was on the Epistle of the same day, written in the Tenth Chapter to the Hebrews; wherein he proved very learnedly by the same place of Scripture and others, that Christ was the only and sufficient Sacrifice unto God the Father for the sins of the whole world, and that there was no more Sacrifice to be offered for sin by the Priests, forasmuch as Christ had offered his Body on the Crosse, and shed his Blood for the sins of the People, and that once for all. For the which Sermon he was apprehended of Boner, and brought before Stephen Gardiner and other of the Council where he promised to recant his Doctrine at Pauls-Crosse, the second Sunday after Easter. And accordingly he was there and preached, Boner with all his Doctors sitting before him: but he so preached and handled his matter, that he rather verified his former saying, than denied any part of that which he before had preached. For the which the Protestants praised God, and heartily rejoiced.

D. Cromes Recantation.

But Bishop Boner with his Champions were not therewith pleased, but yet notwithstanding they had him home with them, and so handled him among the Wolfish generation, that they made him come to the Crosse again the next Sunday.

Dr. Cromes caused to recant the second time.

And because the Magistrates should now hear him, and be witnesses of this Recantation which was most blasphemous, to deny Christs Sacrifice to be sufficient for penitent sinners, and to say that the Sacrifice of the Mass was good, godly, and a holy Sacrifice, propitiatory and available both for the quick and the dead: Because Anno (I say) that they would have the Nobles to hear this blasphemous Doctrine, the vicious generation procured all the chief of the Council to be there present.

Now to come to our matter; at this time, the same week, between his first Sermon and the last, and while Doctor Cromes was in durance, one Richard Wilmot being Apprentice in Bow-Lane, being of the age of 18 in Ben Lane. R. Wilmot Apprentice in Ben Lane. and sitting at his work in his Masters Shop, the Tuesday, in the month of July, one Lewes a Welchman, being one of the Guard, came into the Shop, having things to do for himself.

One asked him what News at the Court, and he answered, that the old Heretick Dr. Cromes had recanted the now indeed before the Council, and that he should on Sunday next be at Pauls-Crosse again, and there declare it.

Then Wilmot sitting at his Masters Work, and hearing him speak these words, and rejoicing in the same, began to speak unto him, saying, that he was sorry to hear these News. For (said he) if Cromes should say otherwise than he had said, then is it contrary to the Truth of Gods Word, and contrary to his own Conscience, which shall before God accuse him.

Lewes answered and said, that he had preached and taught Heresie; and therefore it was meet that he should in such a place revoke it.

Wilmot told him that he would not so say, neither did he hear him preach any Doctrine contrary to Gods Word written, but that he proved his Doctrine, and that sufficiently by the Scriptures.

Lewes then asked him how he knew that. Wilmot answered, by the Scriptures of God, wherein he shall find Gods will and pleasure, what he willeth all men to do, and what not to do; and also by them he should prove and try all Doctrines, and the false Doctrine from the true.

Lewes said, it was never merry since the Bible was in English: and that he was both an Heretick and a Traitor that caused it to be translated into English (meaning Cromwel) and therefore was rewarded according to his deserts.

Wilmot answered again, what his deserts and offences were to his Prince a great many do not know, neither doth it force whether they do or no; Once, he was sure that he lost his life for offending his Prince, and the Law did put it in execution; Adding moreover concerning that man, that he thought it pleased God to raise him up from a low estate, and to place him in high Authority, partly unto this, that he should do that which all the Bishops in the Realm yet never did, in restoring again Gods holy Word, which being laid long before from the People in a strange Tongue, and now coming abroad amongst us, will bring our Bishops and Priests, said he, in less estimation among the People.

Lewes asked why so? Wilmot said, because their doctrine and living was not according to his Word.

Then said Lewes, I never heard but that all men should learn of the Bishops and Priests, because they are Learned men, and have been brought up in Learning all the days of their lives. Wherefore they must needs know the Truth, and our Fathers did believe their Doctrine and Learning, and I think they did well, for the world was far better then, than it is now.

Wilmot answered, I will not say so: For we must not believe them because they are Bishops, neither because they are Learned, neither because our Fathers did follow their Doctrine. For I have read in Gods Book, how that Bishops and Learned men have taught the People false Doctrine, and likewise the Priests from time to time and indeed those People our Fore-fathers believed as they taught, and as they did think, so did the People think. But for all this, Christ calleth them false Prophets, Thieves, and Murderers, blind leaders of the blind, willing the People to take heed of them, lest they should both fall into the Ditch.

Moreover we read, that the Bishops, Priests, and Learned men have been commonly resistors of the Truth from time to time, and have always persecuted the Prophets in the old Law, as their Successors did persecute

ANNO our Saviour Christ and his Disciples in the new Law. We must take heed therefore that we credit them no further than God will have us, neither follow them nor our Forefathers otherwise than he commandeth us. For Almighty God hath given to all People, as well to Kings and Princes, as Bishops, Priests, learned and unlearned men, a Commandment and Law, unto the which he willeth all men to be obedient. Therefore if any Bishop or Priest preach or teach, or Prince or Magistrate command any thing contrary to his commandment, we must take heed how we obey them. For it is better for us to obey God than man.

Marry Sir, quoth Lewes, you are an holy Doctor indeed. By Gods Blood if you were my man, I would fet you about your business a little better, and not suffer you to look upon Books, and so would your Master if he were wife. And with that in came his Master, and a young man with him, which was Servant with Mr. Dawney in Walling-fee.

His Master asked what the matter was, Lewes said, that he had a Knaveish Boy here to his Servant, and how that if he were his, he would rather hang him, than keep him in his house.

Then his Master, being somewhat moved, asked his fellows what the matter was.

They said, they began to talk about Dr. Crome, Then his Master asked him what he had said, swearing a great Oath, that he would make him to tell him.

He said, that he trusted he had said nothing, whereby either he or Master Lewes may justly be offended. I pray (quoth Wilmet) ask him what he said.

Marry (said Lewes) this he said, that Dr. Crome did preach and teach nothing but the Truth, and how that if he recant on Sunday next, he would be sorry to hear it, and that if he do, he is made to do it against his Conscience. And more he said, that we must not follow our Bishops Doctrine and preaching: For, said he, they be hinderers of Gods Word, and persecutors of that; and how Cromwel did more good (that Traytor) in setting forth the Bible, than all our Bishops have done these hundred years: thus reporting the matter worse then he had said.

Then said Wilmet, that in many things he made his Tale worse than it was. His Master hearing of this, was in a great fury, and rated him, saying, that either he would be hanged or burned, swearing that he would take away all his Books and burn them.

The young man (Mr. Dawneys Servant) standing by hearing this, began to speak on his part unto Lewes; and his talk confirmed all the sayings of the other to be true.

This young man was learned, his name was Thomas Fairfax. Lewes hearing this mans talk as well as the others went his way in a rage unto the Court.

On the morrow they heard news, so that the said Wilmet and Thomas Fairfax were sent for, to come to the Lord Mayor. The Messenger was Mr. Smart, Swordbearer of London. They came before dinner to the Mayors house, and were commanded to sit down at dinner in the Hall, and when the dinner was done, they were both called into a Parlour, where the Mayor and Sir Roger Cholmley was, who examined them severally, the one not hearing the other.

The effect of their talk with them was this; Sir Roger Cholmley said unto the foresaid Wilmet, that my Lord Mayor and he had received a Commandment from the Council, to fend for him and his Company, and to examine them of certain things which were laid unto their charge.

Then said Master Cholmley to him, Sirra, what Countryman art thou? He answered, that he was born in Cambridge-shire, and in such a Town. Then he asked him, how long he had been in the City. He told him.

Then he asked what learning he had. He said, little learning and small knowledge. Then (deridingly) he asked how long he had known Doctor Crome. He said, but a while, about two years. He said that he was a lying Boy; and said that he the said Wilmet was his Son.

The other said unto him, that was unlike, for that he never saw his Mother, nor the him. Cholmley said he lied. Wilmet said he could prove it to be true. Then he asked him how he liked his Sermon that he made at Saint Thomas Acre Cappel in Lent. He said that indeed he heard him not. He said, yes, and the other, nay. Then said he, what say you to his Sermon made at the Crofs the last day, heard you not that?

Wilmet. Yes, and in that Sermon he deceived a great number of People.

Cholmley. How so?

Wil. For that they looked that he should have recanted his Doctrine that he taught before, and did not, but rather confirmed it.

Cholm. Yea Sir, but how say you now to him? for he hath recanted before the council: and hath promised on Sunday next to be at the Crofs again, how think ye in that?

Wil. If he so did, I am the more sorry to hear it; and said, he thought he did it for fear and fainguard of his life.

Cholm. But what say you? was his first Sermon Heretic or not?

Wilmet. No, I suppose it was no Heretic. For if it S. Pauls were, Saint Pauls Epistle to the Hebrews was Heretic, Doctrine and Paul an Heretic that preached such Doctrine, but he with the God forbid that any Christian man should so think of the holy Apostle; neither do I so think.

Cholm. Why, how knowest thou that Saint Paul wrote those things that are in English now, to be true, whereas Paul never wrote English or Latin?

Wilmet. I am certified that Learned men of God, that did seek to advance his Word, did translate the same out of the Greek and Hebrew into Latin and English, and that they durst not presume to alter the sense of the Scripture of God, and last Will and Testament of Christ Jesus.

Then the Lord Mayor, being in a great fury, asked him what he had to do to read such Books, and said, that it was pity that his Master did suffer him so to do, and that he was not set better to work; and in fine said unto him, that he had spoken evil of my Lord of Winchester and Boner, those Reverend and Learned Fathers and Counsellors of this Realm, for the which his fact he saw no other but he must suffer, as was due to the time. And Mr. Cholmley said, yea my Lord, there are such a sort of Heretics and traitorly Knaves taken now in Ellex by my Lord Rich, that it is too wonderful to hear. They shall be sent to the Bishop shortly; and shall be hanged and burned all.

Wilmet. I am sorry to hear that of my Lord Rich, for that he was my Godfather, and gave me my name at my Baptism.

Cholm. asked him when he spake with him. He said; not these 12. years.

Cholm. If he knew that he were such a one, he would do the like by him, and in so doing he should do God great Service.

Wilmet. I have read the same saying in the Gospel, that Christ said to his Disciples, The time shall come (saith he) that whosoever killeth you, shall think that he shall do God high Service.

Well Sir, said Cholmley, because you are so full of your Scripture, and so well learned, we consider you lack a quiet place to study in. Therefore you shall go to a place where you shall be most quiet, and I would will you to study how you will answer to the Council of those things which they have to charge you with; for else it is like to cost you your best joynt. I know my Lord of Winchester will handle you well enough, when he heareth thus much. Then was the Officer called in, to have him to the Counter in the Pauletry, and the other to the other Counter, not one of them to see another; and thus remained they eight days. In the which time their Masters made great labour unto the Lord Mayor, and to Sir Roger Cholmley, to know their Offences, and that they might be delivered.

At length they procured the Wardens of the Company of Drapers to labour with them in their suit to the Mayor. The Mayor went with them to the Council: but at that time they could find no grace at Winchesters hand, and Sir Anthony Browne, but that they had deserved death, and that they should have the Law.

At length through intreatance, he granted them thus much favour, that they should not die as they had deserved, but should be tied to a Carts Tail, and be whipped three Market days thorow the City. Thus they came home that day, and went another day, and the Mayor and the Wardens of the Company kneeled before them to have this open punishment released, forasmuch as they were Servants of so worshipful a Company, and that they might be punished in their own Hall before the Wardens and certain of the Company. At length it was granted with condition, as some said, as shall be hereafter declared.

Then were they sent before the Masters the next day to the Hall, both their Masters being also present, and there were laid to their charge the hainous offences by them committed, how they were both Hereticks and Traytors, and have deserved death for the same, and this was declared with a long proces by the Master of the Company, whose name was Master Brookes, declaring what great labour and suit the Mayor and the Wardens had made for them, to save them from death, which they (as he said) had deserved, and from open shame which they should have had, being judged by the Council to have been whipped three days through the City at a Carts Tail, and from these two dangers had they laboured to deliver them, but not without great suit and also charge. For (saith he) the Company hath promised unto the Council for this their mercy and favour shewed towards them, being of such a worshipful Company, a hundred pounds, notwithstanding we must see them punished in our Hall within our selves for those their offences. After these and many other words he commanded them to address themselves to receive their punishment.

Then were they put asunder, and stripped from the Waist upward one after another, and had into the Hall, and in the midst of the Hall, where they use to make their fire, there was a great ring of Iron, to the which there was a rope tied fast, and one of their Feet thereto fast tied.

Brookes a
rant.

Then came two men down, disguised in Mummers Apparel, with Vifors on their Faces, and they beat them with great Rods until the Blood did follow in their Bodies. As concerning this Wilmot, he could not lye in his Bed six nights after, for Brookes played the Tyrant with them. So it was, that with the beating and fright and fear, they were never in health since, as the said Wilmot with his own mouth hath credibly ascertained us, and we can no less but tell the same.

Thus have we briefly rehearsed this little tragedy, wherein we may note the malice of the enemies at all times to those which profess Christ, and take his part, of what estate or degree sever they be, according to the Apostles saying, It is given unto you not only to believe, but also to suffer with him. To whom be honour and glory, Amen.

Next after these two above specified, followeth the beating of one Thomas Green; who, in the time of Queen Mary, was caused likewise to be scourged and beaten by Dr. Story. What the cause was, here followeth in Story and Examination to be seen, which he penned with his own hand, as the thing it self will declare to the Reader. The Copy and words of the same, as he wrote them, here follow. Wherein as thou mayst note (gentle Reader) the simplicity of the one, I pray thee, mark the cruelty of the other part.

The Scourging of Thomas Green.

The Master

the Servant.

IN the Reign of Queen Mary, I Thomas Green being brought before Doctor Story by my Masters, whose name is John Wayland a Printer, for a Book called Antichrist, the which had been distributed to certain honest men; He asked me where I had the Book, and said I was a Traytor. I told him I had the Book of a French Man. Then he asked me more questions, but I told him I would tell him no more, nor could not. Then he said, It was no Heretic, but Treason, and that I should be hanged, drawn, and quartered, and so he called for Cluny, the Keeper of the Lollards-Tower, and bade him fet me fast in the Stocks.

I was not in the Lollards-Tower two hours; but Cluny came and took me out, and carried me to the Cole-house, and there I found a French man lying in the Stocks, and he took him out, and put on my right leg a Bolt and a Fetter, and on my left hand another, and so he fet me cross-fettered in the Stocks, and took the French man away with him, and there I lay a day and a night. On the morrow after, he came and said, let us shift your hand and your leg, because you shall not be lame; and he made as though he pitied me, and said, tell me the Truth and I will be your Friend.

And I said, I had told the Truth, and would tell no other. Then he put no more but my leg in the Stocks, and so went his way, and there I remained six days, and could come to no answer.

Then Doctor Story sent for me, and asked whether I would tell him the Truth, where I had the Book. I said I had told him, of a French man. He asked me where I came acquainted with the French man, where he dwelt, and where he delivered me the Book. I said, I came acquainted with him in Newgate, I coming to my Friends which were put in for Gods Word and Truths sake, and the French man coming to his Friends also, there we did talk together, and became acquainted one with another, and did eat and drink together there with our Friends in the fear of God.

Then Story scoffed at me and said, then there was, Brother in Christ, and Brother in Christ, and reviled me, and called me an Heretic, and asked me if I had the Book of him in Newgate. I said no, and I told him; as I went on my business in the Street I met him, and he asked me how I did, and I him also; so falling in communication, he shewed me that Book, and I desired him that he would let me have it.

In this Examination Story said, it was a great Book, and asked me whether I bought it or had it given me. I told him I bought it. Then said he, I was a Thief, and had stoln my Masters money. And I said, a little money served, for I gave him but four pence, but I promised him, that at our next meeting I would give twelve pence more. And he said, that was boldly done, for such a Book as spake both Treason and Heresie.

Then Story required me to bring him two Sureties, and watch for him that I had the Book of, and I should have no harm. I made him answer, I would bring no Sureties, nor could I tell where to find them. Then said he, this is but a lie, and so called for Cluny, and bade him lay me fast in the Cole-house, saying, he would make me tell another Tale at my next coming; and so I lay in the Stocks day and night, but only when I eat my meat, and there remained ten days before I was called for again.

Then Dr. Story sent for me again, and asked if I would yet tell him the Truth I said, I could tell him no other Truth than I had, nor would. And while I was there standing, there were two brought which I took to be Prisoners.

Then Mrs. Story fell in a rage, and swore a great Oath, that it were a good deed to put a hundred or two of these Heretic Knaves in an house, and I my self (said she) would set in on fire. So I was committed to Prison again, where I remained fourteen days, and came to no answer.

Then Story sent for me again, and called me into the Garden, and there I found with him my Lord of Windsors Chaplain, and two Gentlemen more, and he told them all what they had said and done. They said, the Book was a wondrous evil Book, and had both Treason and Heresie in it. Then they asked me what I said by the Book. And I said, I know no evil by it.

At which words Story chafed, and said he would hang me up by the hands with a rope, and said also he would cut out my Tongue, and mine ears also from my head. After this they alleged two or three things unto me out of the Book. And I answered, I had not read the Book thorowout, and therefore I could give no judgment of the Book.

Then my Lord of Windsors Chaplain and the other two Gentlemen took me aside, and intreated me very gently, saying, tell us where you had the Book, and of whom whom, and we will give you harmles. I made them answer, I had told all that I could to Doctor Story and began to tell it them again : but they said, they knew that already ; so they left that talk, and went again to Story with me.

Then Story burdened me with my Faith, and said I was an Heretick. Whereupon the Chaplain asked me how I did believe. Then I began to rehearse the Articles of my Belief, but he bade me let that alone. Then he asked me how I believed in Christ. I made him answer, that I believed in Christ which died and rose again the third day, and sitteth on the right hand of God the Father.

Whereupon Story asked me mockingly, what is the right hand of God ? I made him answer, I thought it was his glory. Then said he, so they say all. And he asked me when he would be weary of sitting there. Then inferred my Lord of Windsor's Chaplain, asking me what I said by the Maf. I said, I never knew what it was, nor what it meant, for I understood it not, because I never learned any Latin, and since the time that I had any knowledge, I had been brought up in nothing but in reading of English, and with such men as have taught the same ; with many more questions, which I cannot rehearse.

Moreover he asked me if there were not the very Body of Christ, Flesh, Blood and Bone in the Maf, after the Priest had consecrated it. And I made him answer ; as for the Maf I cannot understand it ; but in the New Testament I read, that as the Apostles stood looking after the Lord when he ascended up into Heaven, an Angel said to them, Even as you see him ascend up, so shall he come again. And I told them another Sentence, where Christ saith, The poor shall you have always with you, but me ye shall not have always.

Then Mr. Chaplain put to me many questions more, to the which I could make him no answer. Among all other, he brought Chrysostom and Saint Hierome for his purpose. To whom I answered, that I neither minded nor was able to answer their Doctors, neither knew whether they alleged them right, or no, but to that which is written in the New Testament I would answer. Here they laughed me to scorn, and called me Fool, and said, they would reason no more with me.

Then Doctor Story called for Cluny, and bade him take me away, and let me fast, and let no man speak with me. So was I sent to the Cole-house ; where I had not been a week, but there came in 14. Prisoners : but I was kept still alone without company, in a Prison called Salt-house, having upon my Leg a Bolt and a Petter, and my hands manacled together with Irons, and there continued ten days, having nothing to lye on, but bare stones or a Board.

On a time whilst I lay there in Prison, the Bishop of London coming down a pair of Stairs on the backside untruss, in his hose and Dubler, looked in at the Grate, and asked wherefore I was put in, and who put me in.

I made him answer, that I was put in for a Book called Antichrist, by Dr. Story. And he said, you are not ashamed to declare wherefore you were put in, and said it was a very wicked Book, and bade me confess the Truth to Story. I said, I had told the Truth to him already, and desired him to be good unto me, and help me out of Prison, for they had kept me there long. And he said, he could not meddle with it ; Story hath begun it, and he must end it.

Then I was removed out of the Salt-house to give place to two women, and carried to the Lollards-Tower, and put in the Stocks ; and there I found two Prisoners, one called Lion a Frenchman, and another with him : and so I was kept in the Stocks more than a month both day and night, and no man to come to me, or to speak with me, but only my Keeper which brought me meat.

Thus we three being together, Lyon the Frenchman sung a Psalm in the French Tongue, and we sang with him, so that we were heard down into the Street, and the Keeper coming up in a great rage, swore that he would put us all in the Stocks, and so took the Frenchman and commanded him to kneel down upon his knees, and put both his hands in the Stocks, where he remained all that night till the next day.

After this, I being in the Lollards-Tower 7 days, at my last being with Story, he swore a great Oath, that he would rack me, and make me tell the Truth. Then Story intending for me, commanded me to be brought to Wall-broke, where he and the Commissioners dined ; and by the way my Keeper told me that I should go to the Tower and be racked. So when they had dined, Story called for me in, and so there I stood before them, and some said I was worthy to be hanged for having such Heretical Books. After I had staid a little while before them, Story called for the Keeper, and commanded him to carry me to the Lollards-Tower again, and said ; I have other matters of the Queens to do with the Commissioners, but I will find another time for him. Whilst I lay yet in the Lollards-Tower, the Woman which brought the Books over, being taken, and her Books, was put in the Clink in Southwark by Hufsey, one of the Arches ; and Thomas Green testifie before God, now, that I neither defied the man nor the Woman, the which I had the Books of.

Then I lying in the Lollards-Tower, being sent for by T. Green before Mr. Hufsey, he required of me, wherefore I was put into the Lollards-Tower, and by whom. To whom I made answer, that I was put there by Doctor Story for a Book called Antichrist. Then he made as though he would be my Friend, and said he knew my Friends, and my Father and Mother, and bade me tell him of whom I had the Book, and said, Come on, tell me the Truth. I told him as I had told Dr. Story before.

Then he was very angry and said, I love thee well, and therefore I sent for thee, and looked for a further Truth : but I would tell him no other ; whereupon he sent me again to the Lollards-Tower. At my going away he called me back again, and said that Dixon gave me the Books being an old man, dwelling in Birch-lane : and I said he knew the matter better than I. So he sent me away to the Lollards-Tower, where I remained seven days and more.

Then Mr. Hufsey sent for me again, and required of me to tell him the Truth. I told him I could tell him no other Truth than I had told Dr. Story before.

Then he began to tell me of Dixon of whom I had the Books, the which had made the matter manifest afore ; and he told me of all things touching Dixon and the Books, more then I could my self, inasmuch that he told me how many I had, and that he had a sack full of the Books in his house, and knew where the Woman lay, better then I my self. Then I saw the matter so open and manifest before my face, that it profited not me to stand in the matter. He asked me where I had done the Books, and I told him I had but one, and that Dr. Story had. He said I lied, for I had three at one time, and he required me to tell him of one.

Then I told him of one that John Beane had of me being Prentice with Mr. Tottle. So he promised me before and after, and as he should be saved before God, that he should have no harm. And I kneeling down upon my knees, desired him to take my Blood, and not to hurt the young man. Then he said, because you have been so stubborn, the matter being made manifest by other and not by you, being so long in Prison, tell me if you will stand to my judgment. I said, yes, take my Blood, and hurt not the young man.

Then he made me answer, I should be whipped like a Thief and a Vagabond ; and so I thanked him, and went my way with my Keeper to the Lollards-Tower, where I remained two or three days, and so was brought by the Keeper Cluny, by the commandment of the Commissioners, to Christ's-Hospital, sometime the Gray-Friers, and accordingly had there for the time the correction of Thieves and Vagabonds, and so was delivered to Trinius Street, the Porter, and put into a stinking Dungeon.

And after a few days, I finding friendship, was let out of the Dungeon, and lay in a bed in the night, and walked in a yard by the Dungeon in the day time, and so remained Prisoner a month and more.

Whither at length Dr. Story came and two Gentlemen with him, and called for me, and so I was brought into a Counting-house before them. Then he said to the Gentlemen, here cometh this Heretick, of whom I had the Book called Antichrist, and began to tell them how many times I had been before him, and said, I have them before beating, some with Nettles, drawing some through bushes of Nettles naked, and some they made leap into the Thames to save themselves, that it was marvel they were not drowned.

Now as the Children for fear did cry, and as this skirmishing was between them, immediately came a greater Lad thither, to know what the matter meant that the Boys made such a noise. Whom when the Bishop espied, he asked him whether he would maintain them in their doings or no. Unto whom the young Fellow made answer stoutly, Yea. Then the Bishop commanded him to be taken also; but he ran away with speed, and there avoided the Bishops blessing. Now when the Bishop saw him to flee away, and another man sitting upon a Rail in the way where he ran, he willed him likewise to stop the Boy: and because he would not, he commanded his man to fetch that man to him also; but he hearing that, ran away as fast as he could, and by leaping over the Ditch, escaped the Bishop in like manner.

Then the Bishop, seeing the success of his battel to prove no better, cried to a couple of Ferry-Boys to run and hold him that last ran away. And for that they said they could not (as indeed it was true) therefore he caused his men by and by to take and beat them. The Boys hearing that, leapt into the Water to save themselves; notwithstanding they were caught, and in the Water by the Bishops men holden and beaten.

Now, after the end of this great skirmish, the Bishops men returned to their Master again into the Barge, and he and Harpsfield his Chaplain went to their Evening stroll where they left, and so forthwith the rest of their Service, as clean without malice, as an egg without meat. The Lord give him repentance (if it be his will) and grace to become a new man, Amen.

The Whipping of a Beggar at Salisbury

A poor Beggar whipped at Salisbury, for not receiving with the Papists at Easter.

Unto these above specified, is also to be added the miserable whipping of a certain poor starved Beggar, who, because he would not receive the Sacrament at Easter in the Town of Colmehorow, was brought to Salisbury with Bills and gloves to the Chancellor Dr. Gessery, who cast him into the Dungeon, and after caused him miserably to be whipped of two Catch-poles. The fight whereof made all godly hearts to rue it, to see such tyranny to be shewed upon such a simple and silly Wretch: for they which saw him have reported, that they never saw a more simple Creature. But what pity can move the hearts of merciless Papists?

Besides these abovemented, divers others also suffered the like Scourgings and Whippings in their bodies for their faithful standing in the Truth. Of whom it may be said, as it is written of the Apostles in the Acts. Which departed from the Council, rejoicing that they were counted worthy to suffer for the Name of Jesus.

Another Treatise of such as being pursued in Queen Maries time, were in great danger, and yet through the good Providence of God, mercifully were preserved.

Although the secret purpose of Almighty God, which disposeth all things, suffered a great number of his faithful Servants both Men and Women, and that of all ages and degrees, to fall into the enemies hands, and to abide the brunt of this persecution, to be tried with Rods, with Whips, with Racks, with Fetters, Famine, with burning of Hands, with plucking off Beards, with burning also both Hand, Beard, and Body, &c.

Yet notwithstanding those there were again, and that a great number, who miraculously by the merciful providence of God, against all mans expectation, in safety were delivered out of the fiery rage of this persecution, either by voyding the Realm, or shifting of place, or the Lord so blinding the eyes of the Persecutors, or disposing the opportunity of time, or working some such means or other for his Servants, as not only ought to stir them up to perpetual thanks, but also may move all men both to behold and magnifie the wondrous works of the Almighty.

A Treatise of Gods mercy and providence in preserving good men and Women, in the time of this Persecution.

About what time it began to be known that Queen Mary was sick, divers good men were in hold in divers quarters of the Realm, some at Bury, some at Salisbury, as John Hunt, and Richard White, of whom we have storied before, and some at London, amongst whom was William Living with his Wife, and John Lithal, of whom something remaineth now compendiously to be touched.

The Trouble and deliverance of William Living with his Wife, and of John Lithal, Ministers.

About the time of the latter end of Queen Mary, she then being sick, came one Cox a Promoter, to the house of William Living, about fix of the Clock, accompanied with one John Launce of the Gray-Hound. They being not ready, they demanded for Buttons, saying, they should be as well paid for them, as ever was any; and he would come about three hours after again for them.

In the mean while he had gotten the Constable called Mr. Dean, and George Hancock the Beadle of that Ward, and searching his Books, found a Book of Astronomy, called the work of Joannes de Sacro Bosco de Sphaera, with figures some round, some triangle, some quadrate: which Book because it was gilt, seemed to him the chiefest Book there, and that he carried open in the street, saying I have found him at length. It is no marvel the Queen be sick, seeing there be such Conjurers in privy corners; but now, I trust he shall conjure no more, and so brought him and his Wife from Shoe-Lane thorough Fleet-street into Pauls Church-yard, with the Constable, the Beadle, and two other following them, till they were entred into Darbshires house, who was Bishop Boners Chancellor: And after the Constable and they had talked with Darbshire, he came forth and walked in his Yard saying these words.

Darbshire. What is your Name?

Living. William Living.

Darb. What are you? a Priest?

Living. Yea.

Darb. Is this your Wife that is come with you?

Living. That she is.

Darb. Where were you made Priest?

Living. At Osbourne.

Darb. In what Bishops days?

Living. By the Bishop of Lincoln, that was King Henries Ghostly Father in Cardinal Wolfes time.

Darb. You are a Schismatick and a Traitor.

Living. I would be sorry that were true. I am certain I never was Traitor, but always have taught obedience according to the tenour of Gods Word; and when Tumults and Schisms have been stirred, I have preached Gods Word, and swaged them as in the time of King Edward.

Darb. What, you are a Schismatick. You be not in the unity of the Catholick Church: for you pray not as the Church of Rome doth: you pray in English.

Living. We are certain we be in the true Church.

Darb. There be that doubt thereof, forso much as there is but one true Church.

Well, you will learn against I talk with you again, to know the Church of Rome, and to be a Member thereof.

Living. If the Church of Rome be of that Church, whereof Christ is the Head, then am I a Member thereof: for I know no other Church but that.

Darb. Well, Clumy, take him with thee to the Cole-house.

Then called he Clumy again, and spake secretly to him, what I know not.

Then said Clumy, wilt thou come? and so plucked me away violently, and brought me to his own House in Pater-Noster-Row; where he robbed me of my Purse, my Girdle, and my Pflaster, and a New Testament of Geneva, and then brought me to the Cole-house to put me in the Stocks, saying, put in both your Legs and your Hands also, and except you fine with me, I will put a Collar about your Neck. What is the fine, quoth I? Forty shillings, quoth he: I am never able to pay it, said I.

Then, said he, you have Friends that be able. I denied it; and so he put both my Legs into the Stocks till Supper time, which was six of the Clock, and then a Cousin of my Wifes brought me Meat, who seeing me to sit there, said, I will give you forty Pence, and let him go at liberty: and he took her money, and presently let me forth in her sight, to eat my Supper. And at seven of the Clock, he put me into the Stocks again, and so I remained till two of the Clock the next day, and so he let me forth till Night. This Woman above-mentioned, was Griffins first Wife, a Brother dwelling then in Alder-mansbury, and yet alive in Cheapside.

Lollards-Tower.

The Thursday following at Afternoon was I called to the Lollards-Tower, and there put in the Stocks, having the favour to put my Leg in that Hole that Mr. John Philips Leg was in, and so lay all that Night, no Body coming to me either with Meat or Drink.

W. Living delivered.

At 11. of the Clock on the Friday, Cluny came to me with Meat, and let me forth, and about one of the Clock he brought me to Darbysheires House, who drew forth a froll of Names, and asked me if I knew none of them: I said, I know none of them but Foster. And so I kneeled down upon my knees, and prayed him that he would not enquire thereof any farther. And with that came forth two godly Women, which said, Mr. Darbysheire, it is enough, and so became Sureties for me, and paid to Cluny 15 s. for my Fees, and bade me go with them.

And thus much concerning William Living. After this came his Wife to Examination, whose Answers to Darbysheire the Chancellor, here likewise followeth.

The Examination of Julian Living, Wife to William Living.

Talk between Darbysheire and Living wife.

Darbysheire. Ah Sirrah; I see by your going you be one of the Siffers.

Julian. I wear not my Gown for Sisterhood, neither for Nunnerly, but to keep me warm.

Darb. Nun? No, I dare say you be none: Is that Man your Husband?

Julian. Yea.

Darb. He is a Priest.

Julian. No, he saith no Mass.

Darb. What then? he is a Priest. How darest thou marry him?

Then he shewed me a Roll of certain Names of Citizens.

To whom I answered, I knew none of them.

Then said he, you shall be made to know them.

Then said I, Do no other but justice and right, for the day will come, that you shall answer for it.

Darb. Why Woman, thinkest thou not that I have a Soul?

Julian. Yes, I know you have a Soul: but whether it be to salvation or damnation, I cannot tell.

commanded to the Lol-lards-Tower.

Darb. Ho Cluny, have her to the Lollards-Tower. And one Dale a Promoter, which said to me, Alas good Woman, wherefore be you here?

What is that to you, said I.

Dale a Promoter.

You be not ashamed, quoth Dale, to tell wherefore you came hither.

No, quoth I, that I am not: for it is for Christs Testament.

Christs Testament, quoth he? it is the Devils Testament.

O Lord, quoth I, God forbid that any man should speak any such word.

Mark the hope of the Papists.

Well well, quoth he, you shall be ordered well enough. You care not for burning, quoth he. Gods blood, there must become other means found for you.

What, quoth I, will you find any worse than you have found?

Well, quoth he, you hope, and you hope: but your hope shall be slope. For though the Queen sail, the that you hope for shall never come at it: For there is my Lord Cardinals Grace, and many more between her and it.

Then, quoth I, my hope is in none but God.

Then said Cluny, Come with me: and so went I to the Lollards-Tower. On the next day Darbysheire sent for me again, and enquired again of those Citizens that he enquired of before.

I answered, I knew them not.

Where were you, quoth he, at the Communion on Sunday was fortnight?

And I said, in no place.

Then the Constable of St. Brides being there, made suit for me.

And Darbysheire demanded of him, if he would be bound for me.

He answered, Yea. And so he was bound for my Appearance betwixt that and Christmas.

Then Darbysheire said, You be Constable, and should give her good counsel.

So do I, quoth he. For I bid her go to Mass, and to say as you say: For by the Mass, if you say the Crow is white, I will say so too.

And thus much concerning the Examination of William Living and his Wife, whom although thou seest here delivered through the request of Women, his Sureties: yet it was no doubt, but that the deadly sickness of Queen Mary abated and bridled then the cruelty of those Papists, which otherwise would never have let them go.

The Trouble and Deliverance of John Lithall.

AT the taking of William Living, it hapned that certain of his Books were in the custody of one John Lithall; which known, the Constable of the Ward of Southwark, with other of the Queens Servants, were sent to his house, who breaking up his Doors and Chests, took away not only the Books of the said William Living, but also all his own Books, Writings, and Bills of Debts, which he never had again. All this while Lithall was not at home.

The next Saturday after, as he was returned, and known to be at home, John Avoles and certain of the Queens Servants beset his house all the night, with such careful Watch, that as he in the Morning issued out of doors, thinking to escape their hands, John Avoles bursting out upon him, cried, Stop the Traytor, Stop the Traytor. Whereat Lithall being amazed, looked back.

And so John Avoles came running to him, with other that were with him, saying, Ah Sirrah, you are a pretty traitorly Fellow indeed, we have had somewhat to do to get you. To whom he answered, that he was a truer man to the Queens Majesty than he. For you (said he) are commanded by God to keep holy the Sabbath-day, and you seek to shed your Neighbours Blood on the Sabbath-day. Remember that you must answer therefore to God. But he said, Come on you Villain, you must go before the Council. So was Lithall brought into Pauls-Churchyard to the Bishops Chancellor, by John Avoles, saying, that he had there caught the Captain of these Fellows, and so caused him to be called to Examination before Dr. Darbysheire, who entred talk with him in this wise:

Chan. What Countryman are you?

Lith. I am an Englishman, born in Staffordshire.

Chan. Where were you brought up?

Lith. In this our Country of England.

Chan. In what University?

Lith. In no University, but in a Free-School.

Chan. We had certain Books from your House, and Writings, wherein is both Treason and Heresie.

Lith. Sir, there is neither Treason nor Heresie in them.

Chan. Then he asked for certain other men that I knew.

Lith. If you have ought to lay to my charge, I will answer it: but I will have no other mans Blood upon my head.

Chan. Why come you not to the Church? Of what Church be you, that you come not to your own Parish Church?

Lith. I am of the Church of Christ, the Fountain of all goodness.

Chan. Have you no Ministers of your Church, but Christ?

Lith. We have others.

Chan. Where be they?

Lith.

Lithall and the Chan-

Anno 1558. Lith. In the whole world, dispersed, preaching and professing the Gospel and Faith only in our Saviour Jesus, as he commanded them.

Chan. You boast much every one of you of your Faith and Belief: let me here therefore the effect how you believe.

Lith. I believe to be justified really by Christ Jesus, according to the saying of St. Paul to the Ephesians, without either deeds or works, or any thing that may be invented by Man.

Chan. Faith cannot save without Works.

Lith. That is contrary to the Doctrine of the Apostles.

Chan. John Auales, you and the Keeper have this Fellow to Prison.

Cluny and John Auales. Then John Auales and Cluny the Keeper had me into Pauls, and would have had me seen the Apostles Maf.

Lith. I know none the Apostles had, and therefore I will see none.

Cluny and John Auales. Come and kneel down before the Rood, and say a Paternoster, and an Ave in the worship of the five wounds.

Lith. I am forbidden by Gods own mouth to kneel to any Idol or Image: therefore I will not.

Then they pulled me, with great extremity, the one having me by one Arm, and the other by the other; but God gave me at that present time more strength than both thes, his Name be praised for it.

Then when they could not make me to kneel before the Rood, neither to see the Maf, there gathered a great Company about us, and all against me. Some spit on me, and said, Fie on thee Heretick; and others said, it was pity I was not burned already.

Then they carried me to Lollards-Tower, and hanged me in a great pair of Stocks, in which I lay three days and three nights, till I was so lame that I could neither stir nor move.

Then I offered the Keeper certain Mony and Gold that I had about me, to release me out of the Stocks: and he said, I would not be ruled by him, either to see Maf, or to kneel before the Rood, and therefore I should lie there still. But I said, I would never do the thing that should be against my Conscience: and though you have lamed my Body, yet my Conscience is whole, I praise God for it. So shortly after he let me out of the Stocks, more for the love of my Mony (as it may be thought) than for any other affection, and within four or five days my Wife got leave of Mr. Chancellor to come to me, to bring me such things as were needful for me, and there I lay five weeks and odd days. In the which time divers of my Neighbours and Friends made suit to the Chancellor for my deliverance: the Bishop, as they said, at that time being at Fulham sick. So my Neighbours being there, about twenty of them, the Chancellor sent for me out of the Lollards-Tower to his own house, and said as followeth:

Chan. Lithall, here be of thy Neighbours which have been with me to intreat for thee, and they have informed me, that thou hast been a very honest and quiet Neighbour among them, and I think it be Gods will that I should deliver thee before my Lord come home. For if he come, and thou go home again, I will be burned for thee: for I know his mind already in that matter.

Lith. I give you hearty thanks for your gentleness, and my Neighbours for their good report.

Chan. Lithall, if thy Neighbours will be bound for thy forth-coming whensoever thou shalt be called for; and also if thou wilt be an obedient Subject, I shall be content to deliver thee.

Neigh. If it please your Worship, we will be bound for him in Body and Goods.

Chan. I will require no such Bond of you; but that two of you will be bound in twenty Pound a piece, that he shall come to answer when he shall be called.

Lith. Where find you, Mr. Chancellor, in all the Scriptures, that the Church of God did bind any man for the profession of his Faith? which Profession you have heard of me, that all our Justification, Righteousness, and Salvation cometh only and freely by the merits of our Saviour Jesus Christ; and all the inventions and works of men, be they never so glorious, be altogether vain, as the Wise man saith.

Chan. Lo, where he is now. I put no such matter to you; for in that I believe as you do: but yet St. James saith, That a man is justified by works.

Lith. St. James spake to them that boasted themselves of Faith, and shewed no works of Faith: But O, Mr. Chancellor, remember I pray you, how all the Promises and Prophecies of the holy Scripture, even from the first Promise that God made to Adam, and so even to the latter end of the Revelation of St. John, do testify that in the Name of Jesus, and only by his Merits, all that believe shall be saved from all their sins and offences.

Esay saith, Chap. 65. I am found of them that sought me not, and am manifest to them that asked not after me: but against Israel he saith, All day long have I stretched out my hand to a People that believe not. And when the Jaylor asked St. Paul, what he should do to be saved, the Apostle said, Acts 16. Believe on the Lord Jesus, and thou shalt be saved, and all thy household.

Again, St. John saith in the Revelation, that there was none, neither in Heaven nor in Earth, neither under the Earth, that was able to open the Book nor the Seals thereof, but only the Lamb Jesus our only Saviour. And St. Paul saith, Hebr. 9. With one offering hath he made perfect for ever them that are sanctified.

Chan. With vain glory you rehearse much Scripture, as all the sort of you do: but you have no more understanding than a many of Sheep. But to the purpose. Will you that your Neighbours shall enter into bonds for you, or not?

Lith. By my mind they shall not. Wherefore I desire you that you would not bind me, but let me serve God with my Conscience freely. For it is written, Apoc. 13. They that lead into Captivity, shall go into Captivity, and they that strike with the Sword shall perish with the Sword.

Also it is written in the Gospel of our Saviour Jesus Christ, That whose doth offend one of these little ones which believe in me, it were better for him that a Millstone were hanged about his neck, and that he were cast into the depth of the Sea, Matth. 18. Of the which I am assured by his holy Spirit that I am one. Wherefore be you well assured that such mercy as you shew, unto me you shall be shewed the like.

Chan. You are a mad man. I would not bind you, but that I must needs have somewhat to shew for your deliverance. Then he called two of my Neighbours, Thomas Daniel and Saunders Mayne, which offered themselves to be bound, and called me before them, and said, I have a Letter of his own hand writing, with his Name and Seal at it, with a Book also against the Regiment of Women, for the which I could make him to be hanged, drawn and quartered; but no my Faith I will him no more hurt than I mean to my own Soul.

Lith. I desire you that be my Neighbours and Friends, that you will not enter into bonds for me: for you know not the danger thereof, neither I my self: it goeth against my Conscience that ye should so do.

Chan. Why; I will not bind you to do any thing against your Conscience.

Neigh. Then they made the Bond and sealed to it, and willed me that I should seal to it also; and I said that I would not, neither could I observe the Bond, and therefore I would not set to my hand.

Chan. It is pity that thou hast so much favour shewed thee: yet for these honest mens sakes I will discharge thee.

Notwithstanding all these dissembling words of Mr. Darbyshire, pretending for favour of his Sureties, to set him at liberty, it was no such thing, nor any zeal of charity that moved him so do; but only fear of the time, understanding the dangerous and unrecoverable sickness of Queen Mary, which then began somewhat to affrage the cruel proceeding of these Persecutors, where by they durst not do that they would: for else Lithall was not like to have escaped so easily.

Edward Grew.

Moreover, there was one Edward Grew Priest, and Appline, his Wife, compelled to fly from their dwelling at a Town called Broke; and the man being very aged, travelled abroad to keep a good Conscience.

At the last he was taken and laid in Colchester Castle, where he remained till Q. Elizabeth came to her Regal Seat, and by the alteration of Religion he was delivered. His Wife, good Woman, was in great care for him, and to her power did what she could to succour him.

William Browne.

Mr. Brown of Suffolk.

William Browne, Parson of little Stranham, in the County of Suffolk, made a Sermon in the said Town, incontinently after the burial of our good King Edward, and in his Sermon he said, There goeth a report that our good King is buried with a Mals by the Bishop of Winchester, he having a Mitre upon his head. But if it were so, faith he, they are all Traytors that so do, because it is both against the Truth, and the Laws of this Realm, and it is great Idolatry and Blasphemy, and against the glory of God; and they are no Friends either to God, the King, or yet unto the Realm, that so do. For this his preaching one Robert Blomefield, an Adversary to the Truth, being then Constable of the Town, and Bayliff unto Sir John Jerningham Knight (the Chief Lord of the Town) immediately rode forth, and brought home with him one Edward Golding, which was then under-sheriff, Sir Thomas Cornwallis being then high Sheriff.

Rob. Blomefield, Persecutor.

Edw. Golding under Sheriff Cornwallis high Sheriff.

So the said Golding and Blomefield sent for certain men of the said Town, and examined them for the Sermon. Whereunto they made but a small answer. Then the Sheriff made a bill, and so feared the men, that two or three of them set to their hands, and one of them never joyed after but it was a grief to him till he died.

Mr. Browne persecuted and taken.

Then did they take men with them unto the Parsons house, and in the night they took him and with Watchmen kept him until it was day. Then should he have been carried the next day to the Council; but the said Robert Blomefield was taken so sick, that he was like to die: so that he could not carry him for his life.

Mr. Browne delivered.

Then the said Sheriff sent him to Ipswich again and there he was for a time. Then he was sent to Bury Prison, and from thence to the Council, and then into the Fleet: and so he lay in Prison from the beginning of harvest till it was nigh Christmas; and said, God gave him such answers to make when he was examined, that he was delivered with quietness of Conscience. And having his liberty, he came again unto the fore-said Town; and because he would not go to Mals, his living was taken away, and he and his Wife were constrained to fly here and there for his life and Conscience. In the last year of Queen Maries Reign God did take him out of this life in peace.

Example of Gods punishment upon a Persecutor.

Where moreover is to be noted, that this Robert Blomefield abovenamed, immediately after he had apprehended the said Brown, fell very sick: And although at that time he was wealthy Man and of great substance (beside his land which was better than twenty pound a year) after this time, God so plagued his household, that his eldest Son died, and his Wife had a pining sickness till she departed this life also.

Then married he another, a Rich Widdow: but all would not help, and nothing would prosper: For he had a fore pining sickness, being full of Botches and Sores, whereby he walked away both Body and Goods, till he died.

So when he died, he was above nine score pounds in debt, and it was never heard of any repentance he had. But a little before his death he bragged, and threatened a good Man, one Simon Hariston, to put him forth to the officers, because he did wear no Surplus when he said Service.

Wherefore it is pity such Baits of Popery are left to the enemies to take Christians in. God take them away, or ease us from them: for God knoweth they be the cause of much blindness and strife amongst Men.

Furthermore, out of the said Town were constrained to fly Robert Boela and John Trapne, because they would not go to Mals and receive their Sacrament of the Altar.

Anno 1558.

Elizabeth Young.

YE heard before in the treatise of the scourging of Thos. Greene, how he was troubled and beaten by Dr. Story, for a certain Book called Antichrist, which he received of a Woman, because in no case he would detect her.

This Woman was one Elizabeth Young, who coming from Emden to England, brought with her divers Books, and sparfed them abroad in London; for the which she, being at length espied and layd fast, was brought to examination, 13. times before the Catholick Inquitors of Heretical pravity. Of the which her examinations, nine have come to our hands.

Wherein how fiercely she was assaulted, how shamefully she was reviled, how miserably handled, and what answers she made unto the Adversaries in her own defence, and finally after all this, how she escaped and passed through the Pikes, (being yet, as I hear say, alive) as I thought to give the Reader here to see and understand.

The first Examination of Elizabeth Young, before Mr. Huffy.

WHO examined her of many things: First, where she was born, and who was her Father and Mother.

The Examination of Eliz. Young.

Eliz. Young. Sir, all this is but vain talk, and very superfluous. It is to fill my head with fantasies, that I should not be able to answer unto such things as I came for. Ye have not (I think) put me in Prison to know who is my Father and Mother. But I pray you go to the matter that I came hither for.

Mr. Huffy. Wherefore wentest thou out of the Realm?

Eliz. To keep my Conscience clean.

Huf. When wast thou at Mals?

Eliz. Not these three years.

Huf. Then wast thou not there three years before that?

Eliz. No Sir, nor yet three years before that: for if I were I had evil luck.

Huf. How old art thou?

Eliz. Forty and upwards.

Huf. Twenty of those years thou went to Mals.

Eliz. Yea and twenty more I may, and yet come home as wife as I went thither first, for I understand it not.

Huf. Why wilt thou not go to the Mals?

Eliz. Sir, my Conscience will not suffer me: for I had rather all the world should accuse me, than mine own Conscience.

Huf. What if a louse, or a flea stick upon thy skin, and bite thy flesh? thou must make a Conscience in taking her off; is there not a Conscience in it?

Eliz. That is but an easie Argument to displace the Scriptures, and especially in such a part as my Salvation dependeth upon: for it is but an easie Conscience that a Man can make.

Huf. But why wilt thou not swear upon the Evangelists before a Judge?

Eliz. Because I know not what a Book-Oath is.

Huf. Then he began to teach her the Book-Oath.

Eliz. Sir, I do not understand it, and therefore I will not learn it.

Huf. Then said he, thou wilt not understand it, and with that rose up and went his way.

The second Examination before Doctor Martin.

WHO said to her, Woman, thou art come from beyond the Sea, and hast brought with thee Books of Heresie and Treason, and thou must confesse to us who translated them, printed them, and who sent them over (for once I knew thee to be but a messenger, and in so doing the Queens Highness will be good to thee (for she hath forgiven greater things than this) and thou shalt find 1558. as much favour as is possible. But if thou be stubborn, and wilt not confesse, thou wilt be wondrous evil handled: for we know the Truth already, but this we do, only to see whether thou wilt be true of thy word or no.

Eliz. Sir, ye have my Confession, and more than that I cannot say.

M. Thou must say more, and shalt say more. Dost thou think that we will be fully answered by this Examination that thou hast made? Thou Rebel Whore and Traitor Heretick, thou dost refuse to swear upon the Evangelist before a Judge, I hear say. Thou shalt be racked Inch-meal, thou traitor Whore and Heretick, but thou shalt swear before a Judge before thou go: yea, and thou shalt be made to confesse how many booksthou hast fold, and to whom.

Eliz. Sir, I understand not what an Oath is, and therefore I will take no such thing upon me. And no man hath bought any Books of me as yet, for those Books that I had, your Commissioners have them all.

Martin. Thou traitor Whore, we know that thou hast fold a number of Books, yea, and to whom: and how many times thou hast been here, and where thou layest, and every place that thou hast been in: Dost thou think that thou hast Fools in hand?

Eliz. No Sir, ye be too wife for me; for I cannot tell how many places I have been in myself but if we in Turkey, I should have meat, and drink and lodging for my money.

Martin. Thou Rebel Whore, thou hast spoken evil words by the Queen, and thou dwellest amongst a fort of Traitors and Rebels that cannot give the Queen a good word.

Eliz. I am not able to accuse any man thereof, neither yet is there any man that can prove any such things by me, as ye lay unto my charge. For I know by Gods Word, and Gods Book hath taught me what is my duty to God, and unto my Queen, and therefore (as I said) I am assured that no man living upon the earth, can prove any such things by me.

Mart. Thou Rebel and traitor Whore, thou shalt be so racked and handled, that thou shalt be an Example to all such traitor Whores and Hereticks; and thou shalt be made to swear by the holy Evangelists, and confesse to whom thou hast fold all and every of these heretical Books that thou hast fold: for we know what number thou hast fold, and to whom; but thou shalt be made to confesse it in spite of thy Blood.

Eliz. Here is my Carcase; do with it what you will and more there that you cannot have. M. Martin, ye can have no more but my Blood.

Th en fared he, as though he had been stark mad, and said, Martin? Why callest thou me Martin?

Eliz. Sir, I know well enough, for I have been before you ere now. Ye delivered me once at Westminster.

Mart. Where didst thou dwell then?

Eliz. I dwelled in the Minories.

Mart. I delivered thee and thy Husband both,; and I thought then that thou wouldst have done otherwise than thou dost now. For if thou hadst been before any Bishop in England, and said the words, that thou didst before me, thou hadst fied a Pagot: and though thou didst not burn then, thou art like to burn or hang now.

Eliz. Sir, I promised you then, that I would never be fed with an unknown Tongue, and no more will I yet.

Mart. I shall feed thee well enough. Thou shalt be fed with that (I warrant thee) which shall be finally to chine calf.

Eliz. Do what God shall suffer you to do: for more ye shall not. And then he arose, and so departed, and went to the Keepers house, and said to the Wife. Whom hast thou suffered to come to this vile traitor Whore and Heretick to speak with her? Then said the Keepers Wife, as God receive my Soul, here came neither Man, Woman, nor Child, to ask for her.

Martin. If any Man, Woman, or Child, come to ask for her, I charge thee in pain of death, that they be laid full, and give her one day Bread, and another day Water.

Eliz. If ye take away my meat, I trust that God will take away my hunger: and so he departed and said, that was too good for her: and then was she shut up under two locks in the Clink where she was before.

The third Examination before Dettor Martin again.

Then was she brought before him in his Chamber, within my Lord Chancellors house. Who asked her, saying; Elizabeth, wilt thou confesse these things that thou hast been examined upon? For thou knowest that I have been thy Friend, and in so doing, I will be thy Friend again; giving her many fair words, and then many demanding of her how many Gentlemen were beyond the Seas.

Eliz. It is too much for me to tell you how many are on the other side.

Mart. No, I mean but in Frankford and Emden, where thou hast been.

Eliz. Sir, I did never take account of them, it is a thing that I look not for.

Mart. When shall I have a true word come out of thy mouth?

Eliz. I have told you the Truth, but because that it soundeth not to your mind, therefore ye will not credit it.

Mart. Wilt thou yet confesse? and if thou wilt, that I have promised, I will do: and if thou wilt not, I promise thee thou must go even hence to the Rack, and therefore confesse.

Eliz. I can say no more than I have said.

Mart. Well, so much as she will confesse no more, have her away to the Rack, and then she will be married. Then answered a Priest that sat there, and said, Woman, take an Oath, and confesse. Wilt thou be hurt for other men?

Eliz. I can confesse no more than I have. Do with my Carcase what ye will.

Mart. Did ye ever hear the like of this Heretick? What a stout Heretick is this? We have the Truth, and we know the Truth, and yet look whether she will confesse. There is no remedy, but she must needs to the Rack, and therefore away with her, and so commanded her out of the Door, and called her Keeper unto him, and said to him: There is no remedy but this Heretick must be racked; and talked with him more, but what it was he heard not.

Then he called her in again, and said, Wilt thou not confesse, and keep thee from the Rack? I advise thee so to do: for if thou wilt not, thou knowest not the pain yet, but thou shalt do.

Eliz. I can confesse no more. Do with my Carcase what ye will.

Mart. Keeper, away with her. Thou knowest what I said. Let her know the pain of the Rack. And so she departed, thinking no less, but that she should have gone to the Rack, till she saw the Keeper turn toward the Clink again. And thus did God alienate their hearts, and diminish their tyrannous power, unto the time of further Examinations; For she was brought before the Bishop, the Dean, and the Chancellor, and other Commissioners, first and last, 13. times.

The fourth Examination was before the Bishop of London, Sir Roger Cholmley, Dr. Cook, the Recorder of London, Dr. Roper of Kent, and Dr. Martin, as concerning her Faith, &c.

Left the being presented by Dr. Martin, before the Bishop of London, Dr. Martin began to declare against her, saying, The Lord Chancellor hath sent you here a Woman, which hath brought Books over from Emden, where all these Books of Heretic and Treason are printed, and hath therewith filled all the Land with Treason and Heretic, neither yet will the confesse who translated them, nor who printed them, nor yet who sent them over. Wherefore my Lord Chancellor committeth her unto my Lord of London, he to do with her as he shall think good. For she will confesse nothing, but that she bought these said Books in Amsterdams, and so brought them over to sell for gain.

Dr. Cook. Let her head be trusted in a small line, and make her to confesse.

Mart. The Book is called Antichrist, and so may be well called, for it speaketh against Jesus Christ and the Queen. Besides that, he hath a certain spark of the Anabaptists, for the refusal to swear upon the four Evangelists before a Judge: For I myself and Mr. Hussy have had her before us four times, but we cannot bring

The 3. Examination of Eliz. Young.

Eliz. Young again threatened with the Rack.

She again refused to swear to accuse others.

Eliz. Young commanded again to the Clink.

The 4. Examination of Eliz. Young. Dr. Martin presented her to the Commissioners.

The Book called Antichrist.

Dr. Martin threatened her with the Rack.

Eliz. Young charged for speaking against the Queen.

Eliz. Young and her Husband delivered by Dr. Martin.

bring her to swear. Wherefore my Lord Chancellor would that she should abstain and fast, for she hath not fasted a great while: For she hath lien in the Clink a good while, where she had too much her liberty.

Then said the Bishop, why wilt thou not swear before a Judge? that is the right trade of the Anabaptists.

Eliz. My Lord, I will not swear that this hand is mine.

No, said the Bishop? and why?

Eliz. My Lord, Christ said; That whatsoever is more than yes, or nay, nay, it cometh of evil, And moreover, I know not what an Oath is: and therefore I will take no such thing upon me.

Then said Cholmley, twenty pounds, it is a Man in a Womans Clothes, twenty pounds, it is a Man.

Bemer. Think you to my Lord?

Chol. Yea, my Lord, &c.

Eliz. My Lord, I am a Woman.

Bish. Swear her upon a Book, seeing it is but a question asked.

Then said Cholmley, I will lay twenty pounds, it is a Man.

Then Dr. Cooke brought her a Book, commanding her to lay thereon her hand.

Eliz. No, my Lord, I will not swear: for I know not what an Oath is. But I say that I am a Woman, and have Children.

Bish. That know not we: wherefore swear.

Cholm. Thou hast favoured Whore, lay thy hand upon the Book; I will lay on mine: and so he laid his Hand upon the Book.

Eliz. So will not I mine.

Then the Bishop spake a word in Latine, out of St. Paul, as concerning swearing.

Eliz. My Lord, if you speak to me of St. Paul, then speak English, for I understand you not.

Bish. I dare swear that thou dost not.

Eliz. My Lord, St. Paul said, that five words spoken in a language that may be understood, are better than many in a forain or strange tongue which is unknown.

Dr. Cooke. Swear before us, whether thou be a Man or a Woman.

Eliz. If ye will not believe me, then send for Women into a secret place, and I will be tried.

Cholm. Thou art an ill favored Whore.

Then said the Bishop, How believest thou in the Sacrament of the Altar?

Eliz. My Lord, if it will please you that I shall declare mine own Faith, I will.

The Bishop. Tell me, how believest thou in the Sacrament of the Altar?

Eliz. Will it please you that I shall declare my Faith? And if it be not good, then teach me a better, and I will believe it.

Dr. Cook. That is well said, declare thy Faith.

Eliz. I believe in God the Father almighty, the Son, and the Holy Ghost, three Persons and one God. I believe all the Articles of my Creed. I believe all things written in the holy Scripture, and all things agreeable with the Scripture, given by the Holy Ghost unto the Church of Christ, set forth and taught by the Church of Christ. I believe that Jesus Christ, the only Son of God, that immaculate Lamb, came into the world to save sinners; and that in him, by him, and through him I am made clean from my sins, and without him I could not. I believe that in the Holy Sacrament of Christs Body and Blood, which he did institute and ordain, and left among his Disciples that night before he was betrayed, when I do receive this Sacrament in Faith and Spirit, I do receive Christ.

Bish. No more, I warrant you, but the Sacrament of Christs Body and Blood, received but in Spirit and Faith, with those Hereticks.

Chol. Ah Whore, Spirit and Faith, Whore?

Eliz. This Sacrament never Man could or did make, but only he, that did what no Man could do.

Mart. Then thou must allow that grais is a Sacrament; for who could make grais but he only?

Eliz. Sir, he hath suffered, and made a sufficient Sacrifice once for all, and so hath he made his Sacrament sufficient once for all: for there was never Man that could say, Take, eat, this is my Body, that is broken for you, but only Jesus Christ, who had his Body broken for the sins of the world; which Sacrament he hath left here amongst us for a Testimonial of his Death, even to the worlds end.

Mart. Who taught thee this Doctrine? did Scory?

Eliz. Yea, Bishop Scory and other that I have heard.

Bish. Why, is Scory Bishop now?

Eliz. If that do offend you, call him Dr. Scory, if ye will Roper knew when he was but a poor Doctor.

Mart. What do ye call Scory?

Eliz. Our Superintendent,

Bish. Loe! their Superintendent.

Mart. And what are ye called?

Eliz. Christs Congregation.

Bish. Loe! Christs Congregation, I warrant you.

Dr. Cooke. What living hath Scory?

Eliz. Sir, as far as I do know, he liveth by his own, for I know no Man that giveth him ought.

Recorder. Yes, I warrant you, he hath enough sent him out of England.

Eliz. Sir, I know no such thing.

Cholm. Hark Whore, hark; hark, how I do believe.

Eliz. My Lord, I have told you my belief.

Chol. Hark, thou art favored whore, how I do believe. When the Priest hath spoken the words of Consecration, I do believe that there remaineth the very Body that was born of the Virgin Mary, was hanged on the Cross, was Dead and Buried, and Descended into Hell, and Rose again on the third day, and Ascended into Heaven, and sitteth at the Right hand of God. The same Body when the Priest hath spoken the words, cometh down, and when the Priest lifteth up his Body on this wife (he lifting up his Hands, said) there it is.

Eliz. I have told you also how I do believe.

Mart. Away with her.

Cholm. Ah evil favoured Whore! nothing but Spirit and Faith, Where?

Mart. Away with her, we have more to talk withall.

Then was she carried into the Colehouse, and searched for Books, and then put into the Stockhouse, and her knife, girdle, and apron taken from her.

The fifth Examination before the Bishop of London Chancellor.

Then was she brought out of the Stockhouse, and brought before the Bishops Chancellor, who required of her, what age she was of.

Eliz. Sir, forty years and upwards.

The Chan. Why, thou art a Woman of a fair years; what shouldst thou meddle with the Scriptures? it is necessary for thee to believe, and that is enough. It is more fit for thee to meddle with thy distaff, than to meddle with the Scriptures. What is thy Belief? I would hear it: for it cannot be good, in that thou art brought into Prison.

Eliz. Sir, if it will please you to hear, I will declare it unto you. But I pray you that you will take your pen and write it, and then examine it; and if ye find any thing therein that is not fit for a Christian Woman, then teach me better, and I will learn it.

Chan. Well said. But who shall judge between thee and me?

Eliz. The Scripture.

Chan. Wilt thou stand by that?

Eliz. Yea Sir.

Chan. Well go thy way out at the door a little while, for I am busy, and I will call for thee anon again.

Then he called me again and said, Now Woman, the time is too long to write. Say thy mind, and I will bear it in my head.

Then Elizabeth began, and declared her Faith to him as she had done before the Bishop.

Chan. Woman, Spirit and Faith I do allow, but dost thou not believe that thou dost receive the Body of Christ, really, corporally, and substantially?

Faith cometh of God
Jrgs. no untruth ought to be believed.
Christ is flesh of our flesh, but not in our flesh.
Johs. 6.

This Man dare not expound the Scripture, yet he dare judge upon Scripture.

The Papists dare not ascribe themselves to have the Holy Ghost.
The Capernaites faith.

The flesh of John. cap. 6, expounded how Christs flesh is meat.

Christs flesh is meat for our flesh, say the Papists.

Christs flesh is meat for our Soul, say the Calvinists.

Eliz. These words, really and corporally, I understand not; as for substantially, I take it, ye mean I should believe that I should receive his humane Body (which is upon the right hand of God, and can occupy no more places at once) and that believe not I.

Chan. Thou must believe this, or else thou art damned.

Eliz. Sir, can ye give me Belief or Faith?

Chan. No, God must give it thee.

Eliz. God hath given me no such Faith or Belief. The Chancellor then declared a text of S. Paul in Latin, and then in English, saying, I could make thee believe, but that thou hast a cankered Heart, and wilt not believe. Who then can make thee to believe?

Eliz. You said even now, that faith or belief cometh of God, and ye believe I, and then may not I believe an untruth to be a truth.

Chan. Dost thou not believe that Christs Flesh is Flesh in thy Flesh?

Eliz. No Sir, I believe not that; for my Flesh shall putrifie and rot.

Chan. Christ said, my Flesh is Flesh in Flesh.

Eliz. Who so receiveth him fleshly, shall have a fleshly resurrection.

Chan. Christ faith in the 6. of John, My Flesh is meat indeed, and my Blood is drink indeed.

Eliz. Christ preached to the Capernaites, saying; Except ye eat the Flesh of the Son of Man, and drink his Blood, ye shall not have life in you: And the Capernaites murmured, at it. And his Disciples also murmured, saying among themselves, This is an hard saying, and who can abide it? Christ understood their meaning, and said; Are ye also offended? Will ye also go away? What and if ye shall see the Son of Man ascend up to Heaven, from whence he came? will that offend you? It is the Spirit that quickneth, the Flesh profiteth nothing. I pray you Sir, what meaneth Christ by that?

Chan. O God forbid. Would ye have me to interpret the Scriptures? We must leave that for our old ancient Fathers, which have studied Scriptures a long time, and have the Ghost given unto them.

Eliz. Why Sir, have you not the Holy Ghost given and revealed unto you?

Chan. No, God forbid that I should so believe; but I hope, I hope: But yet say, ye are of the Spirit. Will you say that ye have no profit in Christs Flesh?

Eliz. Sir, we have our profit in Christs Flesh, but not as the Capernaites did understand it: For they understood that they must eat his Flesh as they did eat Ox Flesh and other, and drink his Blood, as we drink wine or beer out of a bowl. But to we must not receive it. But our profit that we have by Christ, is to believe that his Body was broken upon the Crofs, and his Blood shed for our sins; that is the very meaning of Christ, that to we should eat his Flesh, and drink his Blood, when he said; My Flesh is meat indeed, and my Blood is drink indeed.

Chan. How doth thy Body live, if Christs Flesh is not Flesh in thy Flesh?

Eliz. Sir, I was a Body before I had a Soul; which Body God had created, and yet it could not live, till God had breathed life into me, and by that life doth my Body live. And when it shall please God to dissolve my life, my Flesh will offer it self unto the place from whence it came, and through the merits of Christ my Soul will offer it self to the place from whence it came.

Chan. Yea, but if thou do not believe that Christs Flesh is Flesh in thy Flesh, thou canst not be saved.

Eliz. Sir, I do not believe that.

Chan. Why doth not Christ say, My Flesh is meat indeed, and my Blood is drink indeed? Canst thou deny that?

Eliz. I deny not that; for Christs Flesh and Blood is meat and drink for my Soul, the food of my Soul. For whosoever believeth that Jesus Christ the Son of God hath dyed and shed his Blood for his sins, his Soul feedeth thereon for ever.

Chan. When thou receivest the Sacrament of the Altar, dost thou not believe that thou dost receive Christs Body?

Eliz. Sir, when I do receive the Sacrament which Christ did institute and ordain the night before he was betrayed, and left among his Disciples, as often I say as I receive it, I believe, that spiritually and by Faith I receive Christ. And of this Sacrament, I know Christ himself to be the Author, and none but he. And this same Sacrament is an establishment to my Conscience, and an augmenting to my Faith.

Chan. Why, did not Christ take Bread, and gave thanks, and brake it, and gave it to his Disciples, and said; Take, eat, this is my Body that is given for you? Did he give them his Body, or not?

Eliz. He also took the cup, and gave thanks to his Father, and gave it unto his Disciples, saying Drink ye all of this: for this is the cup of the New Testament in my Blood, which shall be shed for many. Now I pray you Sir, let me ask you one question. Did he give the cup the name of his Blood, or else the wine that was in the cup?

Then was he very angry, and said; Dost thou think that thou hast an hedge-Priest in hand?

Eliz. No Sir, I take you not to be an hedge-Priest. I take you for a Doctor.

Chan. So me thinketh. Thou wilt take upon thee to teach me.

Eliz. No Sir: But I let you know what I know; and by argument one shall know more.

Christ said; As oft as ye do this, do it in the remembrance of me; but a remembrance is not of a thing present, but absent. Also S. Paul faith; So oft as ye shall eat of this Bread, and drink of this cup, ye shall shew forth the Lords Death till he come: Then we may not again look for him here, until his coming again at the latter day. Again is not this Article of our belief true, He that is at the Right hand of God the Father Almighty; from thence he shall come to judge both the quick and the dead? But if he shall not come before he come to judgment, then how is he here present in your Sacrament of the Altar? Wherefore I believe that the Humane Body of Christ occupieth no more but one place at once; for when he was here, he was not there.

The sixth Examination before the said Chancellor.

W Ho said unto her; Woman, the last time that thou wast before me, our talk was concerning the Sacrament.

Eliz. Sir, true it is, and I trust that I said nothing that ye can deny by the Scriptures.

Chan. Yea, thou wilt not believe that Christs Flesh is Flesh in thy Flesh.

Eliz. No Sir, God hath given me no such belief; for it cannot be found by the Scriptures.

Chan. Wilt thou believe nothing but what is in the Scripture? Why, how many Sacraments dost thou find in the Scripture?

Eliz. The Church of Christ doth set down twain.

Chan. I will as well find seven by the Scripture, as thou shalt find twain.

Eliz. Sir, I talk not to you thereof, but I say that the Church of Christ setteth out twain, and I have been taught no more.

Chan. What are those twain?

Eliz. The Sacrament of Christs Body and Blood, and the Sacrament of Baptism.

Chan. What saith thou by the Sacrament of Wedlock?

Eliz. I have not heard it called a Sacrament, but the Holy Estate of Matrimony, which ought to be kept of all Men that take it upon them.

Chan. How saith thou by Priests? Is it good that they should marry? is it to be kept of them?

Eliz. I come not hither to reason any such matters, for I am no Divine, and also it is no part of my Faith.

Chan. Can ye not tell? ye shall tell or ever you go.

Eliz. Sir, then must ye keep me a good while: for I have not studied the Scriptures for it.

Chan. No? why, ye will not be allamed to flee unto the highest mystery, even to the Sacrament at the first dash and ye are not afraid to argue with the best Doctor in the land.

In the Sacrament ministered and received according to Christs institution, we receive Christ.

A question asked by another.

There Sacrament a witness both of Christs death and of his coming again.

Christs Body occupieth but one place at once.

He said that the sixth examination of Elizabeth Young.

The fleshy nature of the Papists.

Name of Sacraments given by the Church. Two Sacraments.

Priests marriage.

Eliz.

Eliz. Gods mysteries I will not meddle with, but all things that are written, are written for our edification.

Chan. What say you by prayer for the dead? it is not meet that if a Mans Friend be dead, his Friend commend his Soul unto God?

Eliz. There is no Christian Man that will commend his Friend nor his foe unto the Devil. And whether it be good for him when he is dead or no, sure I am, that it is good when he is alive.

Chan. Then thou allowest not prayer to bee good for them when they be dead, and lying in Purgatory. Is it not meet that prayer be made unto God for them?

Eliz. Sir, I never heard in the Scriptures of Purgatory, but in the Scripture I have heard of Heaven and Hell.

Chan. Why, ye have nothing but the Skimming of the Scriptures. Our ancient Fathers could find out in the bottom of the Scriptures that there is a Purgatory. Yea, they could find it in the New Testament, that a Priest shall take the Sacrament, and go to the Altar, and make an Oblation, and offer it up every day.

Eliz. Sir, that could never be found in the Bible nor Testament, as far as ever I could hear.

Chan. Whom dost thou hear read either the Bible or Testament, but a sort of Schismatics, bawdy Bishops, and hedge-Priests (which have brought into the Church a stinking communion, which was never heard of in any place in the world, but here in England) which have deceived the King and all the Nobility, and all the whole Realm?

Eliz. Sir, it is a vile name that ye give them all.

Chan. Where are all the hedge-knaves become now, that they come not to their Answer?

Eliz. Answer Sir? why, they have answered both with the Scriptures, and also with their Bloody; and then where were you that ye came not forth to answer in their times? I never knew any of you that were troubled, but twain, and that was not for Gods Word, it was for their disobedience.

Chan. No, I pray you? did ye not know that we were killed, hanged, burned, and headed.

Eliz. Sir, I never knew that any of you ever was either hanged, killed, burned, or headed.

Chan. No? did ye never hear that the Bp. of Rochester lost his head for the Supremacy of the Bishops of Rome?

Eliz. Then he died not for Gods Word.

Chan. Well, thou wilt believe nothing but that which is written in Gods Word. Where canst thou find the Sabbath written in the Scripture, by the name of the Sabbath? For the right Sabbath day will I prove to be Saturday. Or where canst thou find the Articles of the Creed in the Scripture by the name of the Articles? Or where canst thou find in the Scripture, that Christ went down into Hell?

Eliz. What place or part in the Scripture can ye find to disprove any of these things?

Chan. What Priest hast thou lien withal that thou hast so much Scripture? Thou art some Priests Woman, I think, for thou wilt take upon thee to reason, and teach the best Doctor in all the land, thou.

Eliz. I was never yet Priests Wife, nor yet Priests Woman.

Chan. Have I touched your Conscience?

Eliz. No Sir, ye have not touched my Conscience, but beware ye hurt not your own.

Chan. Thou hast read a little in the Bible or Testament and thou thinkest that thou art able to reason with a Doctor that hath gone to school thirty years; and before God, I think if I had talked thus much with a Jew, as I have done with thee, he would have turned ere this time. But I may say by you as Christ said by Jerusalem, saying; O Jerusalem, Jerusalem, how oft would I have gathered thee together, even as a Hen gathereth her chickens, but thou wouldest not. And so would we gather you together in one Faith, and ye will not: and therefore your own Blood be upon your own heads; for I can do no more but teach you. Thou art one of the rankest Hereticks that ever I heard; for thou believest nothing but what is in the Scripture: and therefore thou art damned.

Eliz. I do believe all things written in the Scripture, and all things agreeable with the Scripture, given by the Holy Ghost unto the Church of Christ, set forth and taught by the Church of Christ, and shall I be damned because I believe the Truth, and will not believe an untruth?

Then the Chancellor called the Keeper, saying; Carry take her away, thou knowest what thou hast to do with her. And so she departed, and was brought again to the stock-house, and there she lay certain days, and both her hands manacled in one iron; and afterward she was removed into the Lollards Tower, and there she remained with both her feet in the stocks and irons till the next time of examination.

The seventh Examination before the Chancellor and the Bishops Scribe.

When she was brought before the said Chancellor and the Scribe, the Chancellor said unto her; Woman, thou hast been twice before me, but thou and I could not agree, and here be certain Articles that my Lord the Bishop of London would that thou shouldst make answer unto, which are these: First, how many Sacraments thou dost allow?

Eliz. Sir, as many as Christs Church doth allow; and that is twain.

Then said the Scribe. Thou wast taught seven before King Edwards daies.

Chan. Which two Sacraments be those that thou dost allow?

Eliz. The Sacrament of the Body and Blood of Jesus Christ, and the Sacrament of Baptism.

Chan. Dost thou not believe that the Pope of Rome is the Supreme Head of the Church, immediately under God in Earth?

Eliz. No Sir, no Man can be the Head of Christs Church; for Christ himself is the Head, and his Word is the Governor of all that be of that Church, wherefore they be scattered abroad.

Chan. Dost thou not believe that the Bishop of Rome can forgive thee all thy sins Heretical, detestable, and damnable, that thou hast done from thine infancy unto this day?

Eliz. Sir, the Bishop of Rome is a sinner as I am, and no man can forgive me my sins, but he only that is without sin, and that is Jesus Christ which dyed for my sins.

Chan. Dost thou not know that the Pope sent over his Jubilee, that all that ever would fast and pray, and go to the Church, should have their sins forgiven them?

The Scribe. Sir, I thing that she was not in the Realm then.

Chan. Hast thou not desired God to defend thee from the Tyranny of the Bishop of Rome, and all his detestable enormities?

Eliz. Yes that I have.

Chan. And art thou not sorry for it?

Eliz. No Sir, not a whit.

Chan. Hast thou not said, that the Mass was wicked, and the Sacrament of the Altar most abominable?

Eliz. Yes that I have.

Chan. And art thou not sorry for it?

Eliz. No Sir, not a whit.

Chan. Art thou not content to go to the Church, and hear Mass?

Eliz. I will not go to the Church, either to Mass or Mattens, till I may hear it in a tongue that I can understand: for I will be fed no longer in a strange language. And always the Scribe did write every of these Articles, as they were demanded, and answered unto.

Then the Scribe asked her from whence she came.

The Chancellor said, this is the that brought over all these Books of Heresy and Treason.

Then said the Scribe to her; Woman, where hadst thou all these Books?

Eliz. I bought them in Amsterdam, and brought them over to sell, thinking to gain thereby.

Then said the Scribe, What is the Name of the book?

Eliz. I cannot tell.

Dean. Then ye would stand in disputation how many Bodes Christ had.

Eliz. Sir, indeed that question ye did ask me.

Dean. Who shall be the Sureties that thou wilt appear before my Lord of London and me upon Friday next?

Eliz. Sir, I have no Sureties, nor know I where to have any.

Two Women
Sureties for Eliz. Young

Then spake the Dean unto two Women that stood there, who had earnestly sued for her, saying: Women, will ye be her Sureties, that she shall appear before my Lord of London and me upon Friday next?

The Women. Yea Sir, and it please you.

Dean. Take heed that I find you no more a Brabler in the Scripture.

Eliz. Sir, I am no brabler in the Scripture, nor yet any Man can burthen me therewith.

Dean. Yes, I have heard of you well enough what ye are.

Then said he to the two Women, What if a Man should touch your Conscience, do ye not smell a little of Heresie also?

The Women. No, Sir.

Dean. Yes, a little of the Frying-pan, or else wherefore have ye twain so earnestly sued for her?

The one Woman answered, because that her Children were like to perish, and therefore God put me in mind to sue for her.

Then said the other Woman; And I gate her Child a Nurse, and I am threatned to stand to the keeping of her Child; and therefore it standeth me in hand to sue to have her out.

Dean. Woman, give thanks unto these honest Women, who have so earnestly sued for thee, and I promise thee so have I. These great Hereticks will receive nothing but in Spirit and Faith, and so he rose and departed.

Eliz. Sir, God be praised, and I thank you for your goodness and theirs also, and so he went away; and up in the Friday next, because she was accused, her two Sureties went thither, and were discharged.

Elizabeth Lawfon.

Eliz. Lawfon
Confessor.

IN the Town of Bedford, and in the County of Suffolk, was dwelling an antient Godly matron, named Elizabeth Lawfon, about the age of sixty years. This Elizabeth was apprehended as an Heretic by the Constables of the same Town, named Robert Kestrich, and Thomas Elas, in the year of our Lord 1556. because she would not go to Church to hear Mass, and receive the Sacrament, and believe in it.

Rob. Kestrich,
Th. Elas, Persecutors.

First, they laid her in a Dungeon, and after that she was carried unto Norwich, and from thence to Bury Goal, where at last she was condemned to be burnt. In the mean time Sir John Sylliard had her home unto his House, he being High Sheriff that year, where she was hardly kept, and wrapped in Irons, till at length, when they by no means could move her to recant, she was sent to Prison again with shameful revilings.

Sheriff.

Thus she continued in Prison the space of two years and three quarters. In the mean time there was burnt her Son and many more, whereby she would often say; Good Lord, what is the cause that I may not yet come to thee with thy Children? Well, good Lord, thy blessed will be done, and not mine.

Not long after this (most happily) followed the death of Queen Mary, after whom succeeded our Queen that now is. At which time this Elizabeth Lawfon remained yet still in Bury Prison, till at last she was bailed upon Sureties, or else she could not be delivered. For the being a condemned person, neither the Temporality, nor yet Spiritual Authority would discharge her without Sureties.

Now she being abroad and her Sureties made afraid by wicked Men, said, they would cast her again in Prison, except she would see them discharged.

Then she got a Supplication to go unto the Queens Majesty, and came to a friend of hers to have his Counsel therein; who willed her to stay a while, because she was old, the days short, and the expenses great, and Weather foul (for it was a little before Christmas) and to tarry until Summer. In the mean time God brake the bond, and shortened her journey; for he took her home to himself out of this life in peace.

This good old Woman, long before she went to Prison, had the falling sickness, and told a friend of hers, one Simon Harlison, after she was apprehended, that she never had it more, but lived in good health and joy of heart, through our Lord Christ.

She had a very unkind Man to her Husband; who while she was in Prison, sold away her raiment, and would not help her; and after she was out of Prison, she returned home unto him, yet would he shew her no kindness, nor help her neither; and yet the House and Land that he dwelt in he had by her: wherefore as long as she lived, she was found of the Congregation.

The said Elizabeth Lawfon also had a Sister, Wife to one Robert Hollon in Mickfield in the same County of Suffolk, which likewise was persecuted and driven out from House to House, and a young Man her Son with her, because they would not go to the Church to hear Mass, and receive the Sacrament of the Altar.

Thomas Christenmas and William Wats.

IN this perillous rage of Queen Maries Reign were two Men persecuted, one called Thomas Christenmas, the other William Wats of Tunbridge in Kent. As these travelled from place to place, not resting two nights together in one place, it happened them on a time to come to Rochester in Kent, where as they entering into the Town, even at the Towns end met with a little Damfel of eight years of age, but whither she went, they knew not. It was then night, and they weary, and faint therefore would have lien in the same Town, but could not tell where, they feared so the bloody Catholics. At last they devised to ask the Damfel whether there were any Hereticks in the Town, or no? and she said, Yea. They asked her where. She answered them; At such an Inn, telling them the name, and where the Inn was. Shortly after, as they were gone from her, they be thought themselves better, and God so moving their Hearts, they went to the Child again, and asked her how she knew that the Innkeeper (of whom she spake before) was an Heretic. Marry, quoth she, well enough, and his Wife also. How knowest thou, pretty Maiden, said they? I pray thee tell us. How know I, said she? Marry because they go to the Church; and those that will not hold up their hands there, they will present them, and he himself goeth from House to House, to compel them to come to Church. When these two Men heard this, they gave God praise, and avoided that House, taking the warning of that Maid (of good bringing up as it should seem) to be Gods marvellous providence towards them.

Another escape of William Wats.

His foresaid William Wats, dwelling in Queen Maries days at Seal in Kent, the last year of her Reign save one, was apprehended by his enemies, and brought by the Constables before the Bishop and Justices at Tunbridge, where the Bishop and Justices would have persecuted him all they could, to turn from the truth: howbeit in vain, for they could not remove him, although they spent all the forenoon thereabout, with many flattering words; so merciful was the Lord unto him.

Now when dinner time was come, as they should rife, they committed the Prisoner to the Constables again, and so rose up to go to dinner. The Constables took Wats, and led him to a Victualling-House, where after they had well filled themselves, they fell asleep, supposing their Prisoner to be sure enough under their hands. Wats Wife being then in the House with her Husband, and very careful for his well doing, seeing the Constables thus fast asleep, desired her Husband to depart and go thence, forasmuch as the Lord had made such a way for him. Unto which her words he would not consent, although she perswaded him all that she could.

At the last (they replying one against another) a stranger heard them, and asked her what the matter was, that she was so earnest with her Husband. The Wife told him. Then said the stranger unto Wats these words; For-

Anno 1558. ther, go thy ways in Gods Name, and herry no longer: the Lord hath opened the way unto thee. Whereupon the said Wats went his way, and his Wife departed from him, and went home to her Houfe at Seale, thinking her Husband had gone another way. Now as she was going in at her door, telling her Friends of his deliverance, immediately came the said Wats in also, and they all being amazed thereat, willed him in all haile to get him away; for they thought there would be search for him immediately.

Then Wats said, he would eat meat first, and also pray; which he did, and afterward departed thence. So soon as he was out of the doors, and had hid himself in an holly bush, immediately came the said Constables with thirty persons into the said Houfe to search for him, where they pierced the Featherbeds, broke up his chests, and made such havock, that it was wonderful; and ever anon as they were searching, the Constable cried, I will have Wats, I will have Wats, I tell thee, I will have Wats; but (God be thanked) Wats could not be found. And when they saw it bootied not to search for him, in the end they took his Wife, and set her in a pair of Stocks where she remained two days, and she was very bold in the truth, and at the last delivered through the providence of God; whose name be glorified in all his works. Amen.

John Glover of Mancetter Gentleman.

What a Fatherly and manifest providence of the Lord likewise did appear in the preserving of Mr. John Glover in the Diocess of Covenry and Lichfield, in the Town of Mancetter, first, at the taking of Robert his Brother. At which time although the Commission came down for him, yet so God ordered the matter, that his Brother being sick was apprehended, and yet he being whole escaped, whereof mention is made before.

And again, another time how miraculously the merciful providence of the Lord wrought his escape out of his enemies hands, they being at his Chamber door, and drawing the latch to search for him; and how his Wife the same time was taken and sent to Lichfield, read before.

One Dabney.

There was at London a certain honest godly person, a Painter, Named Dabney, whom John Avalles in the time of Queen Mary had brought before Boner to be examined for his Faith. It happened the same time, as the said Dabney was there, that the Bishop was occupied with the Examination of other, so that he was bid to stand by, and to wait the Bishops leisure. Upon the same, or not long after, suddenly cometh word to the Bishop to prepare him in all speed, the general Procession tarried for him. The Bishop hearing that, setting all business apart, busied himself with all speed possible, to the Church, there to furnish Procession. By reason whereof Dabney, which newly came to the House, was there left alone, while every man else was busied in preparing and setting themselves forward, according as the case required.

To be short, as the time called on, Boner with his Household maketh haile, so fast as they can, out of the doors to the Procession. Dabney being left alone, cometh down to the outward Court next the gate, there walking with himself all heavy, looking for nothing less than to escape that danger. The Porter, who was only left at home, seeing the Man to walk alone, supposing he had been some Citizen there left behind, and waiting for opening the gate, went and opened the wicket, asking if he would go out. Yea, said he, with a good will, if ye will let me out. With all my Heart, quoth the Porter, and I pray you so do.

And thus the said Dabney taking the occasion offered of God, being let out by the Porter, escaped out of the Wolfs Mouth. The Procession being done, when the Bishop returned home, Dabney was gone, and could not be found. Whereupon prayer was wait for him; who after long searching, when he could not get him, at length received fifteen Crowns of his Wife to let him alone when he should see him, and so that good Man escaped.

Alexander Wimbush.

A Like example of God Almightyes goodness towards his afflicted Servants in that dangerous time of persecution, may also appear evidently in one Alexander Wimbush a Priest sometime of Magdalen Colledge in Oxford, and then the Popes own Knight, but since an earnest enemy to Antichrist, and a Man better instructed in the true fear of God: It happened that one had promoted him to Boner for Religion, upon what occasion I do not understand. According to the old manner in such cases provided, he sent forth Robin Caly, otherwise called Robin Papist, one of his whelps to bring in the game, and to cause this silly poor Man to appear before him. Little Robin, like a proper Man, bestirreth him in his business, and smelleth him out, and when he had gotten him, bringeth him along by Cheapside, not suffering him to talk with any of his acquaintance by the way, though they were of his old friends of Oxford that offered to speak unto him.

When they came into Pauls, it happened this Alexander to espy Doctor Chadsey there walking up and down. To whom, because he was able in such a case to do pleasure, and for that he had been of his old acquaintance in Oxford, he was very desirous to speak to him ere he went through. Chadsey, perceiving that Robin Caly did attend upon him, said that he durst not meddle in the matter. Yea (saith little Robin) you may talk with him if it please you Master Doctor. To be short, Alexander openeth his case, and in the end desireth, for old acquaintance sake, that he would find means he might be rather brought before Doctor Marim to be examined, than any other. Nay, saith he (alleging the words of Christ unto Peter in the last chapter of S. John.) You remember, Brother, what is written in the Gospel; When thou wast young, thou didst gird thy self, and wentest whither thou wouldest: but being aged, other Men shall gird thee, and lead thee whither thou wouldest not. Thus abusing the Scripture to his private meaning, whereas notwithstanding he might easily have accomplished his final a request, if it had liked him.

Thence was he carried to Story and Cook Commissioners, there to learn what should become of him. Before them he did use himself boldly and stoutly, as they on the other side did urge him with captious questions very cruelly. When they had baited the poor Man their fill, they asked him where his whore was. She is not my whore (said he) but my lawful wife. She is thy whore, said they. She is not my whore (said he again) but my wife, I tell you. So when they perceived that he would not give place unto them, nor attributed to them so much as they looked for at his hand, according to the ordinary manner, they commanded him to Prison. And now mark well the providence of God in his preservation.

He was brought into Clunies House at Pater-noster-row, thence to be carried to Lollards Tower out of hand, but that Cluny (as it happened) his wife and his maid were so earnestly occupied about present business, that as then they had not leisure to lock up their Prisoner. In the Hall where Alexander fate was a strange Woman, whose Husband was then presently in trouble for Religion, which perceived by some one occasion or other, that this Man was brought in for the like cause. Alack good Man, saith she, if you will you may escape the cruel hands of your enemies, forasmuch as they be all away that should look unto you. God hath opened the way unto you for a deliverance, and therefore lose not the opportunity thereof, if you be wise. With those and such like words being then perswaded, he gate out of the doors, and went away without any haile making at all; so that if any had followed, he might have been easily recovered again. But undoubtedly, it was Gods will that he should so escape the fury of his adversaries, and be preserved from all dangers of death and imprisonment.

Bojomes Wife.

Bojomes wife.

As the Works of the Lord are not to be kept secret, whatsoever the Persons be in whom it pleaseth him to work; so cometh to remembrance the Story of one Bojomes Wife, not unworthy to be considered. This good Woman being at Richmond with her Mother, was greatly called upon, and urged to come to Church. At length, through importunate crying and calling upon, she granted unto them, and came. Being in the Church, and sitting with her Mother in the Pew, contrary in all things to the doings of the Papists, she behaved her self; to wit, when they kneeled, she stood, when they turned forward she turned backward, &c.

The behaviour of Bojomes wife in the Church.

Bojomes wife is summoned to appear at Kingston.

This being notorious in the Church, at length the Constable and Churchwarden, named Sanders, attached her in the Queens Name, charging her with her Mother, the next day to appear at Kingston. Who, at their command, so did.

Bojomes wife through Gods help escapes.

The next day, according as they were assigned, they came to Kingston to appear before the foresaid Officers, who at the same time (as it chanced) were going over the Ferry, and meeting them by the way, saluted them by their names, but at that time had no further power to speak unto them. Afterward, as they were in the Boat going over, they knockt their hands, stamp and stared, lamenting that they had let them so pass their hands. This the Ferry-man declared unto them, and what they said in the Boat. Whereupon the good Woman taking her Journey to London, escaped their cruelty, through the secret working (no doubt) of the Lord, who in all his works and evermore be praised, Amen.

Lady Knevett in Norfolk.

The Lady Anne Knevett.

Among the number of the godly that were kept under the Providence of the Lord in those perilous days, I may not forget an ancient good Lady of much worth, called Lady Anne Knevett, who till her death dwelt in Norfolk, in a Town named Wimondham, six miles from Norwich. Which said good Lady in Q. Maryes days being judged by the Common People to be more than an hundred years of Age, and by her own estimation well toward a hundred, kept her self from their Popish Church, or having any Papistical Trash ministered in her House, but only the Service that was used in the later days of King Edward the sixth, which daily she had said before her, either by one Mr. Tollin, who was then by Gods Providence preserved in her House, or else by one of her Gentlewomen or Household Servants, that could serve the place in the said Mr. Tollins absence.

Lady Knevett threatened by the Bishop.

Now this worshipful Lady continuing in this manner of true serving of God, she and her Family were many times threatened by Messengers, that the Bishop would visit her therefore. Unto which Messengers she would always answer, 'That if his Lordship sent word before what day he would come, he would thereafter be entertained at her hand. But God, whose Providence ruleth the raging Seas, never suffered them all that toiling time to molest her: Although oftentimes when she had Service before her, there were very great Enemies to the Truth, and of much Authority, that came in, and kneeled to Prayer among them, and yet had no power to trouble her therefore.

The great Age of the Lady Knevett.

This good Lady (gentle Reader) kept good Hospitality, as in that Country of her living. She also succoured many persecuted that came to her House in the said Queen Maryes days. Were they never so simple, they were esteemed of her as the Friends of the Gospel, and departed not from her without money and meat. Born she was long before King Edward the fourth died, and ended her life in the Lord Jesus's peace, about the beginning of the second year of our most Sovereign Lady Queen Elizabeths Reign, as one falling into a most sweet sleep.

Lady Elizabeth Vane a great reliever of Gods people.

Unto whom not unworthily may be compared the Lady Elizabeth Vane, who likewise, being a great Harbinger and Supporter of the afflicted Martyrs and Confessors of Christ, was in great hazards and dangers of the Enemies, and yet notwithstanding, through the merciful Providence of the Lord, remained still untouched. Of Anno this Lady Vane thou shalt read before. 1558.

John Davis, of the Age of twelve years, and under.

Anno Dom. 1546. and the last year of K. Henry the eighth, John Davis, a Child of twelve years and under, who dwelling in the House of Mr. Johnson Apothecary, in the Town of Worcester, his Uncle, using sometimes to read of the Testament and other good English Books, was complained of by Alice Johnson his Mistress, which Alice being an obstinate person, consulted with one Thomas Parson, and one Alice, Wife to Nicholas Brook Organmaker, with certain of the Canons, and Mr. Johnson Chancellor to Dr. Heath their Bishop. The means whereby he was entrapped was wrought by the foresaid Alice Brook, who procured Oliver her Son, Schoolfellow with the said John Davis, to feign Friendship with him, and under pretence to be instructed to see his English Books, and especially to get something of his writing against the six Articles. Which being had, was soon brought to the Canons of the Church, and the Chancellor. Whereupon Thomas Parson, whether being sent, or of his own mind, came to apprehend him, and his Uncle was forced against his will, to bind the poor Boys Arms behind him; and so he was brought to the Officers of the Town, where he lay from the 14th of August, till the last of September. Then was he commanded to the Freemans Prison, where one Richard Howbrough, coming to persuade him from burning, willed him to prove first with a Candle: who then holding his finger, and the other a Candle under it a good space, yet (as the party himself to me assured) felt no burning thereof, neither would the other that held the Candle believe him a great while, till he had looked, and saw no scorching of the Candle at all appeared.

John Davis a Child under the Age of twelve years, called to be burned for the six Articles, and yet by Gods Providence preserved.

Then was the Child removed from thence to an inner Prison, called Peepbole, where the low Bayliff, called Robert Towld, laid upon him a pair of Bolts, so that he could not lift up his small Legs, but leaning on a staff, flipt them forward upon the ground, the coldness of which Irons he feeleth yet in his Ankles, and shall so long as he liveth: with these Bolts his lying was upon the cold ground, having not one lock of Straw nor Cloth to cover him, save only two Sheep-skins, neither durst Father or Mother, or any of his Friends come at him. Besides this, and many great threats of the Papists, there was a mad man put to him in the Prison, with a Knife about him, wherewith he oft times in his Frantick rage proffered to thrust him in.

After this came to him one Joslyff and N. Taver, two Canons, which had his Writings against the six Articles, and his Ballad, called, Come down for all your shaven Crowns, to see whether he would stand to that he had written. Which done, with many great raging words, not long after fate Mr. Johnson the Chancellor in the Guildhall upon the poor Lad. Where first were brought in his Accusers and sworn, then were sworn also twenty four men which went on his Quest, and found him guilty, but he never came before the Chancellor. Upon this he was sent to the common Goal among Thieves and Murderers, there to tarry the coming of the Judges, and so to be had strait to Execution. But the mighty mercy of the Lord, who helpeth the desolate and miserable when all other help is past, so provided for this filly condemned Lad, that the purpose of all his hard-hearted Enemies was disappointed: For before the Judges came, God took away Henry the eighth out of this life. By reason whereof the force of the Law was then staid, howbeit he was nevertheless arraigned, being holden up in a mans Arms at the Bar before the Judges, who were Portman and Marven. Which, when they perceived that they could not burn him, would have him presently whipped. But Mr. Bourne Esq; declared to the Judges how he had whipping enough. After that he had lain a week more in Prison, he had him home to his House, his Wife anointed his Legs her self with Ointment, which then were stiff and numb'd with Irons, till at length when Mr. Bourne and his Wife saw they could not win him to the belief of their Sacrament, they put him away, lest he should infect their Son Anthony, as they thought, with Heresie.

Thus

Anno 1558. Thus John Davis of the age aforesaid, in what danger he was for the Gospel ye see, and how the Lord preferred him, ye understand. He endured in Prison from the 14th day of August till within seven days of Easter, who is yet alive, and a profitable Minister this day in the Church of England: Blessed be the Lord, qui facit mirabilia solus.

Mrs. Roberts.

Furthermore, to both these may be also associate another Gentlewoman, to make the third, named Mrs. Roberts, yet living and dwelling (as I understand) in the Town of Hawkhurst in Suffex. She being earnestly addicted to the truth of Christs Gospel, and no less constant in that which she had learned therein, so kept her self during all the brunt of Q. Maries time, that she never came to their Popish Service, nor would pollute her Conscience with hearing their Idolatrous Mass. There dwelt the same time not far off a Justice, called Sir John Gilford, who being as fervent on the contrary side to set forward the proceedings of Q. Mary, thought to prove matters with this Gentlewoman, in forcing her into the Church. And first sending his wife, he attempted her by fair words and gentle persuasions to conform her self to the Princes Laws, and to come, as other Christian People did, to the Church. Notwithstanding, the constantly persisting in the sincerity of the Truth, would by no persuasions be won to do therein against her Conscience; and so kept at home a certain space, till again the second time, Mr. Gilford thinking not to give her over so, sent his Officers and Servants to her, by force and power to hale her out of her House to the Church, and so did. Where by the way, she for grief of Conscience fainted, and so of necessity was brought home again, and falling into an Ague, was for that time dispersed withal.

The third time, yet the unquiet spirit of Mr. Gilford being not contented, after the time that she recovered health again, he would needs come in his own person to compel her, with the, till she, to the Church. But (as the Proverb goeth) Who can let that God would have done? For when Mr. Gilford had purposed as pleased him, the Lord so disposed for his Servant, that as the said Mr. Gilford was coming up the stairs toward her Chambers, suddenly his old Disease the Gout took him, and terribly tormented him, that he could go no further: And so he, that purposed to carry her to the Church against her will, was him self to be carried home to his House to his pain; protesting and swearing that he would never from henceforth trouble that Gentlewoman more, and no more he did.

Mrs. Anne Lacy.

In the number of good Gentlewomen being in trouble and danger for Gods Word, is not to be omitted the memory of one Mrs. Anne Lacy widow in Nottinghamshire, who was in great danger in Q. Maries time, inasmuch that the Process was forth against her, and she ready to have been apprehended, being so nearly pursued, that she was driven to hide her Bible and other Books in a Dunghill. Mr. Lacy her Brother was then Justice of Peace: but to whom (as I have heard) she was but finally beholden. Nevertheless, where Kindred faileth, yet Gods Grace never faileth such as stick to him; for in this mean time, as the Process came out against her, Q. Mary died, and so she escaped.

Croftman's Wife.

One Croftman's Wife of Tibham Longrow in Norfolk, in Q. Maries time, for not going to Church, was sought for at her House by one Barber of the said Town, then Constable of the Hundred, who when he came to her House, she being at home with a Child sucking in her Arms, stepped into a corner on the one side of the Chimney, and they seeking the Chambers the Child never cried (although before they came it did) as long as they were there; and so by this means the Lord preferred her.

The Congregation at Stoke in Suffolk.

There was some likewise which avoided the violent rage of the Adversaries by means only of their number, and mutual concord in godliness, wherein they did so hold together, that without much ado none well could be troubled: whereof we have an example in a certain Town of Suffolk called Stoke. After the three sharp years of Q. Maries Persecution being past, yet notwithstanding the Inhabitants of the Town aforesaid, especially the women, came not to their Church to receive, after the Popish manner, the Sacrament. Who, if they had been but few, they could by no means have escaped Imprisonment. But because there were so many, the Papists thought it not best to lay hands upon them. Only they appointed them sixteen days respite after Easter, wherein as many as would, should receive the Sacrament; those that would not, should stand to the peril that would follow. Of this Company, which were many; giving their hands together, the chiefest doers were these:

Eve, an old woman of 60. years.
Alice Coker her daughter.
Elizabeth Foxe.
Agnes Cutting.
Alice Spencer.
Henry Canker.
Joan Fawke.
Agnes Spaulding.
John Steyre and his Brother.
John Foxe.

Confessors.

These, after the order was taken for their not coming to the Church, took advisement among themselves what was best to be done, and at length concluded by promise one to another, that they would not receive at all. Yet some of them afterward, being persuaded with fair promises that the Communion should be ministered unto them according to K. Edwards Book, gate them unto the Parish Priest (whose name was Cotes) and asked him after which sort he would minister the Sacrament. He answered to such as he favoured, that he would give it after the right sort; the rest should have it after the Papistical manner.

To be short, none did communicate so, but only John Steyre and John Foxe; of which the one gave his Wife leave to do as she thought best. The other went about with threats to compel his Wife, saying, that otherwise he would divorce himself from her. As for the rest, they did withdraw themselves from Church, resorting to their wonted Company. Only Foxes Wife tarried still at home, all in her dumps and heaviness; whose Husband practised with the Curate in the mean time, that the next day after he should give her the Sacrament, which was the 17 day after Easter. But the very same day, unknowing unto her Husband, she gate her self secretly to her Company, and with tears declared how violently her Husband had dealt with her. The other women bade her notwithstanding to be of a good cheer, and said that they would make their earnest Prayers unto the Lord, both for her and her Husband, and indeed when they had so done, the matter took very good success. For the next day after Goodman Foxe came of his own accord unto them, a far other man than he was before, and bewailed his own headiness and rashness, praying them that they would forgive him; promising ever after to be more strong in faith, to the great rejoicing both of them and his Wife.

About half a year after this, the Bishop of Norwich sendeth forth certain of his Officers or Apparitors thither, which gave them warning every one to come to the Church the next Sunday following. If they would not come, they should appear before the Commissary out of hand, to render account of their absence. But the women having secret knowledge of this before, kept themselves out of the way for the nonce, to avoid the summons or warning. Therefore when they were not at the Church at the day appointed, the Commissary did first suspend them, according to the Bishop of Romes Laws, and within three weeks after did excommunicate them. Therefore when they perceived that an Officer of the Town was set to take some of them, they conveying themselves privily out of the Town, escaped all danger.

vation of the Congrega-on at London.

NO less marvellous was the preservation of the Congregation in London, which from the first beginning of Queen Mary, to the later end thereof, continued, notwithstanding whatsoever the malice, device, searching and inquisition of men, or strictness of Laws could work to the contrary. Such was the merciful hand of the Lord, according to his accustomed goodness, ever working with his People. Of this great bountiful goodness of the Lord, many and great examples appeared in the Congregation which now I speak of. How oft, and in what great danger did he deliver them?

The Congregation at the Lucas House.

First, At the Black-Friers, when they should have resorted to Sir Thomas Carden house, privy watch was laid for them, but yet through the Lords vigilant Providence the mischief was prevented, and they delivered.

The Congregation
again delivered.

Again, How narrowly did they escape about Algate, where Spies were laid for them? and had not Thom. Simson the Deacon espied them, and bid them disperse themselves away, they had been taken. For within two hours the Constable coming to the House after they were gone, demanded of the Wife what Company had been there.
To whom she, to excuse the matter, made answer again, saying, That half a dozen good Fellows had been there at breakfast, as they went a Maying.

The Congregation
again delivered.

Another time also about the great Conduit, they passing there through a very strait Alley, into a Clothwork-ers loft, were espied, and the Sheriffs sent for: but before they came, they having privy knowledge thereof, immediately shifted away out of the Alley, John Avelles standing alone in the Mercers Chappel staring at them.

The Congregation in a Ship at Billingsgate.

Another like escape they made in a Ship at Billingsgate, belonging to a certain good man of Leys, where in the open sight of the People they were congregated together, and yet through Gods mighty Power escaped.

The Congregation in a Ship betwixt Ratcliff and Redriff.

Between Ratcliff and Redriff, in a Ship called Jesus
Ship, twice or thrice they assembled, having there closely, after their accustomed manner, both Sermon, Prayer, and Communion, and yet through the protection of the Lord they returned, although not unspied, yet untaken.

The Congregation in a Coopers House in Pudding Lane.

Moreover, in a Coopers House in Pudding Lane, so near they were to perils and dangers, that John Avelles coming into the House where they were, talked with the Goodman of the House, and after he had asked a question or two, departed: God so working that either he had no knowledge of them, or no power to apprehend them.

The Congregation in a House in Thames-street.

But they never escaped more hardly, than once in Thames-street in the night time, where the House being beset with Enemies, yet, as the Lord would, they were delivered by the means of a Mariner, who being at that present in the same Company, and seeing no other way to avoid, plucked off his slops and swam to the next Boat, and so rowed the Company over, using his shoes in stead of Oars, and so the jeopardy was dispatched.

I have heard of one, who being sent to them to take their Names, and to spy their doings, yet being in amongst them, was converted, and cried them all mercy.

Another notable example of Gods merciful Providence.

What should I speak of the extream and precious danger which that goodly Company was in at the taking of Mr. Rough their Minister, and Cuthbert Symson their Deacon, had not the Lords Providence given knowledge before to Mr. Rough in his sleep, that Cuthbert Symson should leave behind him at home the Book of all their Names, which he was wont to carry about with him; whereof mention is made before.

In this Church or Congregation there were sometime forty, sometimes an hundred, sometimes two hundred, sometimes more, and sometimes less. About the later time of Queen Mary it greatly increased. From the first beginning, which was about the first entry at Q. Maries reign, they had divers Ministers; first Mr. Scammer, then Thos. Foulle, after him Mr. Rough, then Mr. Augustine Bernher, and last Mr. Bentham. Concerning the deliverance of which Mr. Bentham (being now Bishop of Coventry and Lichfield) Gods mighty Providence most notably is to be considered. For how is it possible, by mans chimation, for the said Mr. Bentham to have escaped, had not the present power of the Lord, passing all mens expectation, been prest and ready to help his Servant in such a freight. The story and case is this.

A Story of Mr. Bentham.

At what time the seven last burned in Smithfield, mentioned in this Book before, were condemned and brought to the Stake to suffer, came down in the name of the King and Queen a Proclamation, being twice pronounced openly to the People, first at Newgate, then at the Stake where they should suffer, strictly charging and commanding, that no man should either pray for them, or speak to them, or once say God help them.

It was appointed before of the godly there standing together, which was a great Multitude, that so soon as the Prisoners should be brought, they should go to them to embrace and to comfort them, and so they did. For as the said Marys were coming towards the place in the Peoples sight, being brought with Bills and Gleevs (as the custom is) the godly Multitude and Congregation with a general sway made toward the Prisoners, in such manner, that the Bill-men and the other Officers, being all thrust back, could nothing do, nor any thing come nigh. So the godly People meeting and embracing, and kissing them, brought them in their arms (which might as easily have conveyed them clean away) unto the place where they should suffer.

This done, and the People giving place to the Officers, the Proclamation with a loud voice was read to the People, containing (as is before said) in the King and Queens Name, that no man should pray for them, or once speak a word unto them, &c. Mr. Bentham the Minister then of the Congregation, not sparing for that, but as Zeal and Christian Charity moved him, and seeing the fire set to them, turning his eyes to the People, cried and said, We know they are the People of God, and therefore we cannot chuse but wish to them, and say, God strengthen them; and so boldly he said, Almighty God, for Christs sake strengthen them. With that all the People with a whole consent and one voice followed and said, Amen, Amen. The noise whereof was so great, and the cries thereof so many, that the Officers could not tell what to say, or whom to accuse. And thus much concerning the Congregation of the Faithful assembling together at London in the time of Queen Mary.

The said Mr. Bentham another time, as he passed through
S. Katherine, intending to walk and take the Air abroad, was enforced by two or three men, approaching upon him, needs to go with them to a place, whither they would lead him. Mr. Bentham alighted at the suddenness of the matter, and marvelling what the thing should be, required what their purpose was, or whether they would have him. They answered, that by the occasion of a man there found drowned, the Coroners Quest was called and charged to sit upon him, of the which Quest he must of necessity be one, &c.
He again loth to meddle in the matter, excused himself, alleging that in such kind of matters he had no skill, and less experience; if it would please them to let him go, they should meet with other more meet for their purpose. But when with this they would not be satisfied, he alleged further, that he was a Scholar of Oxford, and thereby was priviledged from being of any Inquest. The Coroner demanded the sight of his Priviledge. He said, if he would give him leave, he would fetch it. Then said the Coroner, the Queen must be served without all delay, and so constrained him notwithstanding to be with them in hearing the matter.

Being brought to the House where the Coroner and the rest of the Quest were sitting, as the manner is, a Book was offered to him to swear upon. Mr. Bentham opening the Book, and seeing it was a Papistical Primer, refused to swear thereupon, and declared moreover what Superstition in the Book was contained. What? said the Coroner; I think we shall have here an Heretick among us. And upon that, after much reasoning amongst them, he was committed to the custody of an Officer till further examination: by occasion whereof, to all mens reason, hard it had been and inevitable for Mr. Bentham to have escaped, had not the Lord helped where man was not able. What followed? the Incontinent as they were thus contending and debating about matters of Herefie, suddenly cometh the Coroner of the Admiralty, disannulling and repealing the order and calling of that Inquest, for that it was (as he said) pertaining to his Office; and therefore the other Coroner and his Company in that place had nothing to do. And so the first Coroner was discharged and displaced; by reason whereof Mr. Bentham escaped their hands, having no more said unto him.

& his Wife

THe worthy works of the Lords mercy toward his people manifold, and cannot be comprehended, so that when he living in the earth almost who hath not experienced the helping hand of the Lord at some time or other upon him? And thus many other of the works of Gods tender provision were shewed of late upon our English Brethren and Countrymen, what time Calicut was taken by the Tyrant Guzner, a cruel enemy to Gods truth and our English Nation? And yet the gracious provision of the Lord, few or none at all, for that many of the Christians were saved by the Lord, and by the goodly Christ and his Gospel: in that terrible time of affliction. In the number of whom there was a goodly couple as John Thorpe and his Wife, which feared the Lord, and loved his truth: who being sick the same time, and cast out in the wild fields, harborless, desolate, and despairing of all hope of life, having their young Infant moreover taken from them in the said fields, and carried away of the Soldiers; yet the Lord so wrought, that the poor Woman, being almost past recovery of Life, was fet and carried the space well nigh of a mile by strangers whom they never knew, into a village, where both she was recovered for that night, and also the next day coming toward England, they chanced into the same Inn at the next Town, where they found their young Child sitting by the fire side,

O Ne Edward Benet about the second year of the Reign of Queen Mary, then dwelling at Queens-hithe with one Grynocke a Baker, was desired of one Tingle Prisoner then in Newgate, to bring him a New Tale.
 He procuring one of Master Coverdales translation, wrapt it in a handkerchief, saying to George the Keeper, which asked him what he had, that it was a piece of poudred beef. Let me see it, said he. Perceiving what it was, he brought him to Sir Roger Cholmely, who examined him why he did so, saying that Book was not lawful, and so committed him to the Compter in Woodstreet, where he continued 25. weeks.

Ed. Bennett 2 1/2 weeks in the Counter, for bringing a New Testament to Tungle. Which after died in Prison, and was buried on dunghil. D. Stierus words to Ed. Bennett.

Doctor Story coming to the Prison to examine other Prisoners, this Bener looking out at the grate, spake to him, desiring him to be good unto him, and to help him out; for he had lien long in Prison. To whom D. Story then answering; What, said he, wast thou not before me in Chrils Church? Yes forsooth, said Bener. Ah, said Story, thou dost not believe in the Sacrament of the Altar? Marry I will help thee out; Come, said he to the Keeperturn him out, I will help him: and so took Bener with him, and brought him to Clary in Pater-noster-row, and bade him bring him to the Colebous, and there he was in the Stocks a week.

Ed. Brier
brought to Baker, and examined.

Then the Bishop sent for him to talk with him, and first asked him if he were shirven? No, said Bener. He asked him if he would be shirven? No, said he. Then he asked him if the Priest could take away his sins? No, said Bener. I do not so believe. Then he and Harpsfeld laughed at him, and mocked him, asking him if he did not believe that whatsoever the Priest here bound in earth, should be bound in Heaven, and whatsoever he loofeth in earth, should be loofed in Heaven. No, quoth Bener: But I believe that the Minister of God preaching Gods Word truly, and ministering the Sacraments according to the same, whatsoever he bindeth in earth, should be bound in Heaven, and whatsoever he lofeth, &c. Then the Bishop, putting him aside, said he should go to Fulham and be whipped.

Then came him M. B. B. and Priselt lying in the Colebrook's in the Stocks, and brought Crammers: recanting, saying that he had recanted. My Faith, faith the other, lyeth in no Mans Book, but in him which hath redeemed me.

The next Saturday, Bener with five other was called for to come to Mafs in the Chappel. The Mafs being done, and they coming out, five of them went to Prison, and were after bound. Bener being behind, and coming toward the gate, the Porter, opening to a company going out, asked if there were no Prisoners there. No, said they.

Bener standing in open sight before him, with other serving-men which were there by reason that Bener made many Priselt that day (having one of his flukes and half the forepart of his coat burned off in Prison, being more like a Prisoner than any of the other) when the gates were opened, went out amongst them, and so escaped.

Again, in the last year of Queen Mary, the late Bener being taken again with the 24. beyond Islington, and brought to St Roger Cholmsley, the people coming very thick did cut off some of them, to the number of 8. which were behind, among whom was Bener. then he knocked at the gate to come in, the Porter said, that he was none of the company. He said, Yes, and knocked again. Then there stood one by of the Congregation, named Johnsen, dwelling now at Hammermissh, which said, Edward, thou hast done well; do not tempt God: go thy way. And he taking the warning as sent of God, with a quiet Conscience eschewed burning.

 years. The which years being expired, he gave himself at of her Tenants for her sake, but notwithstanding he must needs execute his Office. And again you must (said he) note this, that a scabbed Sheep is able to infect a great number; and especially having, as he hath, so many Brethren and Sisters, he is able to marr them all, if he be not looked unto in time. And thus concluding, M. Leland entred into the House, and being come in, set himself in a chair in the middle of the House; and sending Sir Ralph Parkinson his Priest, and one of his Men, and one of Mistress Shakerley Men about the House, to search and rifle the chests for Books (which so did) in the mean time he talked with Hurfs Mother, being of the age almost of 60. years. And chiding with her that she would suffer her Son to order and behave himself like an Heretick, said; Thou old fool, I know my self that this new learning shall come again; but for how long; even for three Months or four Months, and no longer. But I will lay thee old fool in Lancaster Dungeon for this gear, and well worthy.

J. Hurfs and Alice his brother's under sentence, Justice by the Death of Q. Mary released.

J. Hurfs in Q. Mary's death, he put in a petition to the proctor of the Court.

Now as concerning the searchers, they found nothing but Latin Books, as Grammar, and such like. These be not they that we look for (said they) we must see further, and so looked into Hurfs Chamber; here they found the forefaid Books. Then Sir Ralph taking up the Testament, lookt on it, and smiled. His Master seeing that, said, Now Sir Ralph, what have we here? Forsooth, said he, a Testament of Tindals Translation, plain Heretic, and none worse than it. Then is all their goods, said he, lost to the Queen, and their Bodies to Prison, and was wonderfully hasty; notwithstanding through Mistress Shakerley, for a space, he was content to see further.

Then the Priest looked on the other Book. What say ye to that Sir Ralph? is that as evil as the other? No, said he, but it is not good that they should have such English Books to look on; for this and such others may do much harm. Then he asked his Mother where her eldest Son was, and her daughter Alice? She answered she could not tell; they were not with her of long time before. And he swore by Gods Body, he would make her tell where they were, or he would lay her in Lancaster Dungeon; and yet he would have them notwithstanding too. To be short, for fear, he had his Brother J. Hurfs and his Mother bound in an hundred pound to bring the parties before him within fourteen days, and so departed he, and the Priest put both the Books in his bosom, and carried them away with him. Then John Hurfs went after them, desiring that he might have the Book which the Priest found no fault with; but he said, they should answer to them both, and which soever was the better, was not good.

As this past on, when the time was come that Jeffery Hurfs and his Sister should be examined, the Justice sent for them betimes in the morning, and had prepared a Maf to begin withal, asking Jeffery Hurfs if he would first go and see his Maker, and then he would talk further with him. To whom when Jeffery answered and said; Sir, my Maker is in Heaven, and I am assured in going to your Maf I shall find no edification thereby; and therefore I pray you hold me excused.

Well, well, said he, I perceive I shall find you an Heretick, by God; but I will go to Maf, and I will not lose it for all your prating. Then into his Chappel he went, and when Maf was done he sent for them, and caused his Priest to read a scrole unto them as concerning the seven Sacraments; and ever as he spake of the Body and Blood of Christ, he put off his Cap, and said; Loe ye may see, you will deny these things, and care not for your Prince; but you shall feel ere I have done with you, and all the faculty of you, with other talk more between them, I know not what; but in the end they were licensed to depart unto Sureties to appear again before him within three weeks, and then to go to Lancaster. However, in the mean while it so pleased God, that within four days of the day appointed, it was noised that the Queen was dead, and within fourteen days after the said Jeffery Hurfs had sent home his two Books, and nothing was said unto him.

It followed after this that Gods Word begun to take place, and the Queens Visitors came down into that Country, who did chuse four Men in the Parish, to wit Simon Smith, Jeffery Hurfs, Henry Brown, George

Eccersly, which four were Protestants, to see the Queens proceedings to take place, which according to their power did the same, notwithstanding it did little prevail; and therefore the said Jeffery being sore grieved with the Office, fell sick, in which sickness it pleased God to call him, making a very Godly end, God have the praise for it.

Now to return to the forefaid Thomas Leland again, he continuing in his Office still, did very few times come to the Church, but said he was aged, and might not labour, and there kept with him Sir Ralph Parkinson his Priest, which could (as it was said) minister the Communion unto the people, and sing Maf unto his Master; yes, and (as the same reported) did a prettier feat than all that; for he begat two Children by a Servant in a House, his Master knowing it, and saying nothing, for that he would not lose his good Maf Priest.

Furthermore, this was noted in the same Justice Leland's behaviour at Service time, that he had a little dog which he would play with all Service time, and the same dog had a collar full of bells, so that the noise of them did molest and trouble others, as well as himself, from hearing the Service. Also in the same Justice it was noted and observed, that as he sat in his Chappel at Service time, his manner was on a Willow bark to knit knots, for that he could not be suffered to have his Beads, and to put the same upon a string also. Witness hereof Edward Hurfs, with others.

Furthermore, as concerning Henry Brown one of the four chosen Men above mentioned, this is also to be headed, that the said Henry Brown dwelling in the Town of Pinnington in the same Parish, Anno 1564, had a little Boy, who as he was playing in the Town, one Glaives Wife gave unto the Boy a pair of Beads made of wood, for him to play withal. The little Boy, being glad thereof to have such a trim thing, went home and shewed his Father of them. His Father seeing the Beads, took them and burned them, and when he had so done, went forth and asked who had given unto his little Boy that pair of Beads.

That did I, said Glaives Wife. Well, said he, I have burned them. Haft thou so, said she? and thrust him from her. They shall be the dearest Beads that ever thou sawest, and incontinent went and complained unto the said Justice, how Brown had burned her Beads.

This matter the Justice took sore to snuff, and was very angry, and did direct his Letter unto the Constables of the same Town, by his own hand subscribed; the title of which superscription on the backside was this, To the Constables of Punnington give this.

This done, the Constables according to this their charge did bring him afore the Justice at the time appointed; and when the Justice came to talk with him, he was in such a heat, that he called him Thief, and said that he had robbed his neighbour in burning of her Beads, and that there was Rings and other Jewels on them, and that he might as well have picked her purse, wherefore (said he) I will lay thee in Lancaster Dungeon for this gear.

What if they were thus talking, there came all his Servants about them from their work, saying; Is this Master Doctor Brown that will burn Beads? I pray you Sir, let us have him here and preach. I will give you a quarters wages, said one; and I will give money faith another, and he shall be Master Doctor, with much derision and scoffing at this poor Man.

He hearing this, spake again boldly, and said; Did you send for me to make a laughingstock of me? You be in Office, and ought rather to come to the Church, and see such Papistry abolished your self, than thus to trouble me for doing my duty; but I tell you plainly, that you do not come to Church as you ought to do, and therefore with more things that I have to charge you withal, I say you do lamentably not well. When all this misdemeanour of the Justice laid to his charge would not prevail, and also witness came in of the Papists which did know the Beads, and testified that they were plain, and cost but a half penny, he then went into his parlour in a chafe, and one Master Exberfsen a Papist with him; which Exberfsen turned back, and said, Is it you Henry Brown, that keepeth this fire? you are one of them that pulled down Crosses in the Church, and pulled down the Rood fellow, and all the Saints; you

The Examination of William Wood Baker, dwelling in the Parish of Sirrowd, in the County of Kent, before Doctor Kenall Chancellor of the Diocese of Roche-ster, Doctor Chadsey, the Major of Roche-ster, and M. Robinson the Scribe, the 19 day of October and in the second year of Q. Mary, in S. Nicholas Church in Roche-ster.

M. Robinson. Will. Wood, you are presented, because you will not come to the Church, nor receive the blessed Sacrament of the Altar. How say you? have you received, or have you not?

Wood. I have not received it, nor dare I receive it as you now minister it.

Kenall. Thou Heretick, what is the cause that thou hast not received the blessed Sacrament of the Altar? and at this word all they put off their caps and made low obeisance.

Three causes why W. Wood doth not receive the Sacrament of the Altar.

Wood. There be three causes that make my Conscience afraid that I dare not receive it. The first, Christ did deliver it to his twelve Apostles and said, Take, eat, and drink ye all of this, &c. and ye eat and drink up all alone.

The second cause is; you hold it to be worshipped, contrary to Gods Commandment, Thou shalt not bow down nor worship. The third cause is; you minister it in a strange Tongue, contrary to S. Pauls Doctrine, I had rather have five words with understanding, than ten thousand with Tongues; by reason whereof the people be ignorant of the death of Christ.

Kenall. Thou Heretick, wilt thou have any plainer words then these, Hoc est corpus meum? Take, eat, this is my Body? Wilt thou deny the Scripture?

Wood. I will not deny the holy Scriptures, God forbid, but with my heart I do faithfully believe them. S. Paul. faith, God calleth the things that are not, as though they were: and Christ faith, I am a vine: I am a dove. S. Paul faith, The rock is Christ: All which are figurative speeches, wherein one thing is spoken, and another thing is understood.

Robinson. You make a very long talk of this matter: Learn, Wood, learn.

Kenall. Nay, these Hereticks will not learn: Look how this Heretick glorieth in himself: Thou fool, art thou wiser than the Queen and her Council, and all the learned Men of this Realm?

Wood. And please you, M. Chancellor, I think you would be loath to have such glory, to have your life and goods taken away, and to be thus called upon, as you rail upon me. But the Servant is not greater than his Master. And where you do mock me, and say that I am wiser than the Queen and her Council, S. Paul faith, The wisdom of the wise of this World is foolishness before God, and he that will be wise in this World, shall be accounted but a fool.

Kenall. Dost not thou believe that after these words spoken by a Priest, Hoc est corpus meum, This is my Body, there remaineth no more Bread and Wine, but the very Flesh and Blood of Christ, as he was born of the Virgin Mary, really and substantially, in quantity, and quality as he did hang upon the Cross?

Wood. I pray you, M. Chancellor, give me leave, for my learning, to ask you one question, and I will answer you after.

Kenall. It is some wise question, I warrant you.

Wood. God spake to the Prophet Ezekiel, saying, Thou Son of Man, take a Razor, and have off the hair of thy Head and of thy Beard, and take one part and cast into the air, take the second part and put it into thy coat lap, and take the third part and cast it into the Fire: and thus is Jerusalem. I pray you M. Chancellor, was this hair that the Prophet did cast into the Fire, or was it Jerusalem.

Kenall: It did signifie Jerusalem.

Wood. Even so this word of Christ, This is my Body, The natural is not to be understood, that Christs carnal, natural, and real Body is in the same, in quantity and quality, as it was born of the Virgin Mary, and as he was Crucified upon the Cross, is present or inclosed in the Sacrament: but it doth signifie Christs Body, as Saint Paul faith, So oft as ye do eat of this Bread and drink of this Cup, you shall shew forth the Lords death till he come. What should the Apostle mean by this word, till he come, if he were here carnally, naturally, corporally, and really in the same quantity and quality as he was born of the Virgin Mary, and as he did hang on the Cross, as you say? but Saint Paul faith, You shall shew the Lords death till he come. This doth argue that he is not here as you would have us to believe.

D. Chadsey. I will prove that Christ is here present under the form of Bread, but not in quantity and quality.

Kenall said, Yes, he is here present in quantity and quality.

Chadsey. He is here present under a form, and not in quantity and quality.

Yes, said Kenall.

No, said Chadsey.

I will prove him here in quantity and quality, said Kenall.

I will prove the contrary, said Chadsey.

And these two Doctors were so earnest in this matter, the one to affirm, the other to deny, contending and raging so fore one at the other, that they fomed at the Mouth, and one was ready to spit in anothers face, so that in great fury and rage the two Doctors rose up from the Judgment seat, and D. Kenall departed out of the Church in great Rage and Fury immediately.

Wood. Behold good people, they would have us to believe, that Christ is naturally, really, in quantity and quality, present in the Sacrament, and yet they cannot tell themselves, nor agree within themselves how he is there.

At these words the people made a great shout, and the Major stood up and commanded the people to be quiet, and to keep silence. And the God that did deliver Saint Paul out of the hands of the high Priests, by the contention that was between the Pharisees and Sadduces, did even so deliver me at that time out of the Mouths of the Bloody Papists, by the means of the contention of these two Doctors. Blessed be the name of the Lord, which hath promised to lay no more upon his, than he will make them able to bear, and in the midst of temptation he can make his way for his (how, and when it pleaseth him) to escape out of all dangers.

Many other like examples of Gods helping hand have been declared upon his elect Saints and Children, in delivering them out of danger by wonderful and miraculous ways, some by one means, some by another. What a notable work of Gods mighty hand was seen in Simon Grinaeus, mentioned in the Commentary of Melancthon upon Daniel? Who having a sudden warning by a certain old Man, who was not seen after, nor known then of any what he was, avoided the peril of taking and burning, as by the relation of Melancthon, writing and witnessing the same, may appear in the words of his own Story here following.

The History of Simon Grinaeus, collected out of Melancthons commentaries upon the tenth Chapter of Daniel.

When I was (faith he) at the assembly holden at Spire, in the year of our Lord, 1539, by chance Simon Grinaeus came thither unto me from the University of Heidelberg, where he heard Faber, the Bishop of Vienna, in a Sermon defend and maintain certain detestable errors. When the Sermon was done, he followed Faber going out of the Church, and saluted him reverently, declaring unto him that he was moved of a good zeal and intent, somewhat to lay unto him, Faber was contented to talk with him.

Then

The natural quantity of Christ was in the Sacrament.

The Papists could not agree in their own Doctrine.

W. Wood delivered as was said by the contention of the Pharisees and Sadduces.

The Story of Simon Grinaeus Commentary Phil. Melancthon Daniel. John Faber Bishop of Vienna Obsequium amicorum, veritas odium parit.

Ezek. 5. W. Wood question propounded to the Doctors.

Then Grinaeus said unto him, that he was very sorry that a Man of such learning and Authority should openly maintain such errors as were both contumelious against God, and also might be refuted by the manifest testimonies of the Scriptures. Irenaeus writeth (said he) that Polycarpus was wont to stop his ears whensoever he heard any erroneous and wicked Doctrine. With what mind then (think you) would Polycarpus have heard you argue and reason what it is that the mouse eateth, when he gnaweth the Consecrated Host? Who would not bewail such ignorance and blindness of the Church? With this Faber brake off his talk, as he was about to say more, and asked his name. This Man dissembling nothing, gently told him that his Name was Grinaeus.

This Faber (as many well know) was also timorous and fearful in the company of learned Men. Wherefore he fearing the learning, eloquence, and fervent zeal of Grinaeus, specially in such a matter as this was, fained as though he had been sent for by the King, and that he had no leisure now to reason upon this matter. He pretended that he was very desirous of acquaintance and longer talk with Grinaeus, intreating him, that both for his own private cause, and also for the Common Wealth, he would come again the next day unto him, and so shewed him his lodging, and appointed him an hour when he should come: Grinaeus, thinking that he had spoken unfeignedly, promised so to do.

Godly warning sent by an old Man to Grinaeus.

When he was departed from Faber, he came straightway unto us, and was scarcely set at the table (for it was supper time) reciting a part of his talk with Faber unto me and others there present, when as I sitting with my company, was suddenly called out of the Parlour by a certain ancient Fatherly Man, who shewing a singular gravity in his countenance, words, and behaviour, spake unto me, and said, that the Sergeants would by and by come unto our lodging, being sent by the Kings commandment, to carry Grinaeus to Prison, whom Faber had accused to the King; commanding that Grinaeus should straightways depart out of the Town, and exhorted me, that we should in no case delay the time and so bidding me farewell, departed. But what old Man this was, neither did I know then, nor afterward could I understand. I returning again unto my company, bade them rise, and told them what the old Man had said unto me.

Grinaeus so called and passed.

Grinaeus warned to fly & escape.

Gods merciful providence in delivering the crafty purpose of Persecutors.

By and by, we taking Grinaeus in the midst of us, carried him through the Street to the River of Rbene, whereas after we had stayed upon the hither bank a while, until Grinaeus with his companion were carried over in a small boat, returning again to our lodging, we understood that the Sergeants had been there, when we were but a little way gone out of the House. Now in what great danger Grinaeus should have been, if he had been carried to Prison, by this cruelty of Faber every Man easily may conjecture: Wherefore we judged, that that most cruel intent and purpose of him, was disappointed by Gods merciful providence. And as I cannot say, what old Man it was that gave me that warning, even so likewise the Sergeants made such quick speed, that except Grinaeus had been covered and defended by the Angels through the marvellous providence of God, he could never have escaped.

Concerning the truth of this matter, there be many good Men yet alive, which know both the same, and also were present at the doing thereof. Therefore let us give thanks unto God, which hath given us his Angels to be our keepers and defenders, whereby with more quiet minds we may fulfill and do the Office of our vocation.

With such like examples of Gods mighty and merciful custody, the Church of Christ in all ages doth abound, as by manifold experiences may appear as well among the Germanes, as also in other places and ages: but in no place more, nor in any time more plentiful, than in this persecuting time of Q. Mary, in this our Realm of England, as partly hath been already historied, and partly yet remaineth (the Lord willing) moreover hereunto to be added.

The Lady Katherine, Dutches of Suffolk.

1558.

Stephen Gardiner Bishop of Winchester, furnishing the Lady Katherine Barones of Willoughby and Essex, by, and Dutches Dowager of Suffolk, to be one of his antient enemies, because he knew he had deserved no better of her, deviled, in the holy time of the first Lent in Queen Maries Reign, a holy practise of revenge, first by touching her in the person of her Husband Master Richard Berty Esquire, for whom he sent an attachment (having the great Seal at his Devotion) to the Sheriff of Lincolnshire, with a special Letter commanding most straightly the same Sheriff, to attach the said Richard immediately, and without bail to bring him up to London to his great Lordship. M. Berty her Husband being clear in Conscience, and free from offence toward the Q. could not conjecture any cause of this strange Process, unless it were some quarrel for Religion, which he thought could not be so fore as the Process pretended.

The Sheriff, notwithstanding the commandment, adventured only to take the bond of M. Berty with two Sureties, in a thousand pound for his appearance to be made before the Bishop on good Friday following, at which day Master Berty appeared, the Bishop then lying at his House by Saint Mary Overie. Of whose presence when the Bishop understood by a Gentleman of his Chamber, in a great rage he came out of his Gallery into his dining Chamber, where he found a press of Suters, saying he would not that day hear any, but came forth only to know of M. Berty, how he being a Subject, durst so arrogantly set at light two former Processes of the Queen.

M. Berty answered, that albeit my Lords words might seem to the rest somewhat sharp toward him, yet he conceived great comfort of them. For whereas he before thought it extremity to be attached, having used no obsequy or contumacy, now he gathered of those words, that my Lord meant not otherwise but to have used some ordinary Process; albeit indeed none came to his hands.

Yea Mary, quoth the Bishop, I have sent you two Subpoenas to appear immediately, and I am sure you received them, for I committed the trust of them to no worse Man but to M. Solicitor, and I shall make you an example to all Lincolnshire for your obsequy.

M. Berty denying the receipt of any, humbly prayed his Lordship to suspend his displeasure and the punishment till he had good trial thereof, and then, if it please him, to double the pain for the fault, if any were.

Well, quoth the Bishop, I have appointed my self this day (according to the holiness of the same) for Devotion, and I will not further trouble me with you: but I enjoin Friday, you in a thousand pound not to depart without leave, and to be here again to morrow at 7. of the clock. Master Berty well observed the hour, and no jot failed: at which time the Bishop had with him M. Sergeant Stampford, to whom he moved certain questions of the said Master Berty, because Master Sergeant was towards the Lord Wriothestley, late Earl of Southampton, and Chancellor of England, with whom the said Master Berty was brought up. Master Sergeant made very friendly report of M. Berty, of his own knowledge for the time of their Conversation together. Whereupon the Bishop caused M. Berty to be brought in, and first making a false train (as God would, without fire) before he would defend to the quarrel of Religion, he assaulted him in this manner.

Winch. The Queens pleasure is, quoth the Bishop, that you shall make present payment of 4000. pound due to her Father by Duke Charles, late Husband to the Dutches your Wife, whose Executor she was.

Berty. Pleaseth it your Lordship, quoth Master Berty, that debt is stalled, and is according to that stallment truly answered.

Winch. Tush (quoth the Bishop) the Queen will not be bound to stallments in the time of Kettess Government: for so I esteem the late Government.

Berty. The stallment (quoth M. Berty) was appointed by K. Henry the eighth: besides, the same was by ANNO 1558. by ſpecial Commiſſioners confirmed in K. Edwards time; and the Lord Treafurer being an Executor alſo to the Duke Charles ſolely and wholly took upon him, before the ſaid Commiſſioners, to diſcharge the ſame.

Winch. If it be true that you ſay (quoth the B.) I will ſhew you favour. But of another thing Maſter Berty I will admoniſh you, as meaning you well. I hear evil of your Religion; yet I hardly can think evil of you, whoſe Mother I know to be as Godly and Catholick, as any within this Land; your ſelf brought up with a Maſter, whoſe education if I ſhould diſallow, I might be charged as Author of his error. Beſides, partly I know you my ſelf, and underſtand of my friends enough to make me your friend: wherefore I will not doubt of you; but I pray you, if I may ask the queſtion of my Lady your Wife, is ſhe now ready to ſet up the Maſs, as ſhe was lately to pull it down, when the cauſed in her progreſs, a dog in a Rochet to be carried, and called by my Name; or doth the think her Lambs now ſafe enough, which ſaid to me, when I vaild my bonnet to her out of my Chamber window in the Tower, that it was merry with the Lambs, now the Wolfe was thruſt up? Another time my Lord her Husband, having invited me and divers Ladies to Dinner, deſired every Lady to chooſe him whom ſhe loved beſt, and ſo place themſelves: My Lady your Wife taking me by the hand, for that my Lord would not have her to take himſelf; ſaid, that ſo far (much as ſhe could not fit down with my Lord whom the loved beſt, ſhe had choſen him whom the loved worſt.

Of the device of the Dog, quoth Maſter Berty, ſhe was neither the Author, nor the allower. The words, though in that ſeaſon they ſounded bitter to your Lordſhip, yet if it would pleaſe you without offence to know the cauſe, I am ſure the one will purge the other. As touching ſetting up of Maſs, which the learned not only by ſtrong perſwaſions of divers excellent learned Men, but by univerſal conſent and order whole fix years paſt, inwardly to abhor, if the ſhould outwardly allow, ſhe ſhould both to Chriſt ſhew her ſelf a falſe Chriſtian; and to her Prince a maſking Subject. You know, my Lord, one by Judgment reformed, is more worth than a thouſand transformed temporizers. To force a Confeſſion of Religion by Mouth, contrary to that in the heart, worketh damnation where Salvation is pretended.

Yea Marry (quoth the Biſhop) that deliberation would do well if ſhe were required to come from an old Religion to a new. But now ſhe is to return from a new to an ancient Religion: Wherein when ſhe made me her Goſſip, ſhe was as earneſt as any.

For that, my Lord (ſaid Maſter Berty) not long ſince, ſhe answered a friend of hers uſing your Lordſhips ſpeech; That Religion went not by age, but by truth: and therefore ſhe was to be turned by perſwaſion, and not by commandment.

I pray you (quoth the Biſhop) think you it poſſible to perſwade her?

Yea verily (ſaid M. Berty) with the truth: for ſhe is reaſonable enough.

The Biſhop thereunto replying, ſaid, It will be a marvellous grief to the Prince of Spain, and to all the Nobility that ſhall come with him, when they ſhall find but two Noble perſonages of the Spaniſh race within this land, the Queen, and my Lady your Wife, and one of them gone from the Faith.

Maſter Berty answered, that he truſted they ſhould find no fruits of infidelity in her.

So the Biſhop perſwaded M. Berty to travel careleſly for the reformation of her opinion, and offering large frienſhip, releaſed him of his bond from further appearance.

The Dutcheſs and her Husband, daily more and more, by their friends underſtanding that the Biſhop meant to call her to an account of her Faith, whereby extremity might follow, deviſed ways how by the Queens licence they might paſs the Seas. Maſter Berty had a ready mean: for there reſted great Sums of Money due to the old Duke of Suffolk (one of whoſe Executors the Dutcheſs was) beyond the Seas; the Emperor himſelf being one of thoſe debtors. Maſter Berty communicated this his purpoſed ſite for licence to paſs the Seas, and the cauſe to the Biſhop, adding, that he took this time moſt meet to deal with the Emperor, by reaſon of likelihood of marriage between the Queen and his Son.

I like your device well (quoth the Biſhop) but I think it better that you tarry the Princes coming, and I will procure you his Letters alſo to his Father.

Nay (quoth M. Berty) under your Lordſhips correction and pardon of ſo liberal ſpeech; I ſuppoſe the time will then be leſs convenient: for when the marriage is confirmed, the Emperor hath his deſires; but till then he will reſuſe nothing to win credit with us.

By Saint Mary (quoth the Biſhop, ſmiling) you gueſs ſhrewdly. Well, proceed in your ſute to the Queen, and it ſhall not lack my helping hand.

Maſter Berty found ſo good ſucceſs, that he in few days obtained the Queens Licence, not only to paſs the Seas, but to paſs and repaſs them ſo often as to him ſeemed good; till he had finiſhed all his buſineſs, and cauſes beyond the Seas. So he paſſed the Seas at Dover about the beginning of June, in the firſt year of her Reign, leaving the Dutcheſs behind, who, by agreement and conſent betwixt her and her Husband, followed, taking Barge at Lion Key, very early in the morning, on the firſt day of January next enſuing, not without ſome peril.

There was none of thoſe that went with her, made privy to her going till the inſtant, but an old Gentleman, called Mr. Robert Cranwell, whom M. Berty had ſpecially provided for that purpoſe. She took with her her Daughter, an Infant of one year, and the meaneſt of her Servants, for the doubted the beſt would not adventure that fortune with her. They were in number four Men, one a Greek born, which was a rider of Horſes, another a Joyner, the third a Brewer, the fourth a fool, one of the Kitchen, one Gentlewoman, and a Landreſs.

As ſhe departed her Houſe called the Barbican, betwixt four and five of the clock in the morning, with her company and baggage, one Atkinſon a Herald, Keeper of her Houſe, hearing noiſe about the Houſe, roſe and came out with a torch in his hands as ſhe was yet iſſuing out of the gate: wherewith being amazed, ſhe was forced to leave a male with neceſſaries for her young Daughter, and a milk-pot with milk in the ſame gate-houſe, commanding all her Servants to ſpeed them away before to Lion Key: and taking with her only the two Women and her Child: ſo ſoon as ſhe was forth of her own Houſe perceiving the Herald to follow, ſhe ſtept in at Charterhouſe hard by. The Herald coming out of the Dutcheſs Houſe, and ſeeing no Body ſtirring nor aſſured (though by the male ſuſpecting) that he was departed, returned in; and while he ſtayed ranſacking parcels left in the male, the Dutcheſs iſſed into the Streets, and proceeded in her journey, he knowing the place only by Name where ſhe ſhould take her boat, but not the way thither, nor any with her. Likewiſe her Servants having divided themſelves, none but one knew the way to the ſaid Key.

So ſhe appeared like a mean Merchants Wife, and the reſt like mean Servants, walking in the ſtreets unknown, ſhe took the way that led to Finsbury Field, and the others walked the City Streets as they lay open before them, till by chance more than diſcretion, they met all ſuddenly together a little within Moregate, from whence they paſſed directly to Lion Key, and there took Barge in a morning ſo milky, that the Stearman was loath to launch out, but that they urged him. So ſoon as the day permitted, the Council was informed of her departure, and ſome of them came forth with to her Houſe, to enquire of the manner thereof Purſuite after and took an inventory of her goods, beſides further order the Dutcheſs deviſed for ſearch and watch to apprehend and ſlay her.

The ſarve of her departure reached to Leigh, a Town the Dutcheſs at the Lands end, before her approaching thither. By which ſhe remained in M. Gollings Houſe my acquaintance of Cranwells, whither the ſaid Cranwell brought the Dutcheſs, naming her Miſtreſs White, the Daughter of Maſter Gollings, for ſuch a Daughter he had which never was in that Country. There the reſt of her, and made new Garments for her Daughter, having loſt her own in the male at Barbican.

When the time came that ſhe ſhould take ſhip, being conſtrained that night to lye at an Inn in Leigh (where ſhe was again almoſt bewrayed) yet notwithstanding ing by Gods good working the eſcaped that hazzard; at length, as the tide and wind did ſerve, they went abroad, and being carried twice into the Seas, almoſt into the coaſt of Zeland, by contrary wind were driven to the place from whence they came, and at the laſt recoil, certain perſons came to the ſhore, ſuſpecting the was within that ſhip; yet having examined one of her company that was aland for ireſh Achates, and finding by the ſimplicity of his tale, only the appearance of a mean Merchants Wife to be a ſhipboard, he ceaſed any further to ſearch.

The Dutcheſs
landed in Brabant.
M^r. Berry with the Dutcheſs his Wife arrived at Santon, a free Town of Weſell in Clevesland.

To be ſhort, ſo ſoon as the Dutcheſs had landed in Brabant, ſhe and her Women were apparelled like the Women of Netherland with hoods; and ſo the and her Husband took their journey towards Clevesland, and being arrived at a Town therein called Santon, took a houſe there, until they might further deviſe of ſome ſure place, where to ſettle themſelves.

A protection procured for the Dutcheſs of the Magiſ-trates of Weſell.

About five miles from Santon, is a free Town called Weſell, under the ſaid Duke of Cleves Dominion, and one of the Hance Towns, privileged with the Company of the Steelyard in London, whither divers *Walloon*s were fled for Religion, and had for their Miniſter one Francis Peruſſell, then called Francis de Rivers, who had received ſome courteſie in England at the Dutcheſs hands. Maſter Berry, being yet at Santon, practiſed with him to obtain a protection from the Magiſtrates for his abode and his Wives at Weſell; which was the ſooner procured, becauſe the ſtate of the Dutcheſs was not diſcovered, but only to the chief Magiſtrate, earnestly bent to ſhew them pleaſure, whiles this protection was in ſeeking.

In the mean while, at the Town of Santon was a muttering that the Dutcheſs and her Husband were greater perſonages than they gave themſelves forth, and the Magiſtrates not very well inclined to Religion, the Biſhop of Arras alſo being Dean of the great Minſter, order was taken, that the Dutcheſs and her Husband ſhould be examined of their Condition and Religion upon the ſudden. Which practiſe diſcovered by a Gentleman of that Country to M^r. Berry, he without delay taking no more than the Dutcheſs, her Daughter, and two other with them, as though he meant no more but to take the air, about three of the Clock in the afternoon in February, on foot, without hiring of Horſe or Wagon for fear of diſcloſing his purpoſe, meant privily that night to get to Weſell, leaving his other family ſtill at Santon.

After the Dutcheſs and he were one Engliſh mile from the Town, there fell a mighty rain of continuance, whereby a long froſt and Ice before congealed, was thawed, which doubled more the wearineſs of thoſe new Lacquies. But being now on the way, and overtaken with the night, they ſent their two Servants (which only went with them) to villages as they paſt, to hire ſome Carr for their caſe, but none could be hired. In the mean time Maſter Berry was forced to carry the Child, and the Dutcheſs his Cloak and Rapier. At laſt, betwixt fix and ſeven of the clock in the dark night, they came to Weſell, and repairing to the Inns for lodging, and ſome repoſe after ſuch a painful journey, found hard entertainment: for going from Inn to Inn offering large money for ſmall lodging, they were reſuſed of all the Inn-holders, ſuſpecting Maſter Berry to be a Launce-knight, and the Dutcheſs to be his Woman. The Child for cold and ſuſtenance cryed pitifully, the Mother wept as faſt, the Heavens rained as faſt as the Clouds could pour.

contentment of
M^r. Berry, & the Dutcheſs at their returning into Weſell.

M^r. Berry, deſtitute of all other ſuccour of Hoſpitality, reſolved to bring the Dutcheſs to the Porch of the great Church in the Town, and ſo to buy coals, victuals, and ſtraw for their miſerable repoſe there that night, or at leaſt till by Gods help he might provide her better lodging. Maſter Berry at that time underſtood not much dutch, and by reaſon of evil weather and late ſeaſon of the night, he could not happen upon any that could ſpeak Engliſh, French, Italian, or Latin, till at laſt, going towards the Church Porch, he heard two ſtriplings talking Latin, to whom he approached, and offered them two Stivers to bring him to ſome *Walloon*s Houſe.

Gods providence in time of direſſion.

By the Boys, and Gods good conduct; he changed at the firſt upon the Houſe where Maſter Peruſſell ſupped that night, who had procured them the protection of the Magiſtrates of that Town. At the firſt knock, the Goodman of the Houſe himſelf came to the door, and opening it, asked Maſter Berry what he was. Maſter Berry ſaid, An Engliſhman, that fought for one Maſter *Peruſſell*s Houſe. The Walloon willed Maſter Berry to ſtay a while, who went back, and told Maſter Peruſſell, that the ſame Engliſh Gentleman, of whom they had talked the ſame ſupper, had ſent by likelihood his Servant to ſpeak with him. Whereupon Maſter Peruſſell came to the door, and beholding Maſter Berry, the Dutcheſs, and their Child, their faces, apparels, and bodies ſo far from their old form, deformed with dirt, weather, and heavineſs, could not ſpeak to them, nor they to him for tears. At length recovering themſelves, they ſaluted one another, and ſo together entered the Houſe, God knoweth full joyfully; M^r. Berry changing his apparel with the good Man, the Dutcheſs with the good Wife, and their Child with the Child of the Houſe.

Within few days after, by Maſter *Peruſſell*s means, they hired a very fair Houſe in the Town, and did not let to ſhew themſelves what they were, in ſuch good fort as their preſent condition permitted. It was by this time thorow the whole Town what diſcourteſie the Innholders had ſhewed unto them at their entry, inſomuch as on the Sunday following, a Preacher in the Pulpit openly in ſharp terms rebuked that great incivility toward ſtrangers, by allegation of ſundry places out of holy Scriptures, diſcourſing how not only Princes ſometimes are received in the Image of private perſons, but Angels in the ſhape of Men, and that God of his Juſtice would make them ſtrangers one day in another Land, to have more ſenſe of the afflicted heart of a ſtranger.

The time thus paſſing forth, as they thought themſelves thus happily ſettled, ſuddenly a watch-word came from Sir John Maſon, then Queen Maries Embaſſador in Netherland, that my Lord Pages had ſailed an errand to the Barthes that ways: and whereas the Duke of Brunſwike was ſhortly with ten Enſigns to paſs by Weſell for the Service of the Houſe of Auſtrick againſt the French King, the ſaid Dutcheſs and her Husband ſhould be with the ſame charge and company intercepted.

Wherefore to prevent the cruelty of theſe enemies, Maſter Berry with his Wife and Child departed to a place called Wincheim in high Dutchlund under the *Palgrave*s Dominion; where under his protection they continued till their neceſſaries began to fail them, and they, almoſt fainting under ſo heavy a burden, began to fall of hope.

At what time, in the miſt of their deſpair, there came ſuddenly Letters to them from the Palatine of Vilova, and the King of Pole, being inſtructed of their hard eſtate by a Baron, named Joannes Alaſco, that was ſometime in England, offering them large courteſie. This purviſion unlooked for, greatly revived their heavy Spirits. Yet conſidering they ſhould remove from many their Countrymen and Acquaintance, to a place ſo far diſtant, a Country not haunted with the Engliſh and perhaps upon their arrival not finding as they looked for, the end of their journey ſhould be worſe than the beginning; they deviſed thereupon with one Maſter Carloe, late Biſhop of Chiecheſter, that if he would vouchſafe of Vilova to take ſome pains therein, they would make him a ſellow of that journey. So finding him prone, they ſent with him Letters of great thanks to the King and Palatine, and alſo with a few Principal Jewels (which only they had left of many) to ſolicit for them, that the King would vouchſafe under his Seal, to aſſure them of the thing which he ſo honourably by Letters offered.

That ſute, by the forwardneſs of the Palatine, was as ſoon granted as uttered. Upon which aſſurance the ſaid Dutcheſs and her Husband, with their family, entered the journey in April, 1557. from the Caſtle of Wincheim, where they before lay, towards Frankford. In the which their journey, it were long here to deſcribe what dangers fell by the way upon them and their whole company, by reaſon of their Langraves Captain, who, under a quarrel pretended for a ſpaniel of Maſter Berries, ſet upon them in the High-way with his Horſemen, Anno 1558. Horsemen, thrusting their Bore-Spears throw the Wagon where the Children and Women were, Master Berty having but four Horsemen with him. In the which brabble it hapned the Captains Horse to be slain under him.

Whereupon a rumor was sparfed immediately thorow Towns and Villages about, that the Langyaves Captain should be slain by certain Wallons, which incensed the ire of the Countrymen there more fiercely against Master Berty, as afterward it proved. For as he was motioned by his Wife to save himself by the swiftness of his Horse, and to recover some Town there by for his rescue; he so doing was in worse case than before: for the Townsmen and the Captains Brother, supposing no less but that the Captain had been slain, pressed so eagerly upon him, that he had been there taken and murdered among them, had not he (as God would) spying a Ladder leaning to a Window, by the same got up into the House, and so gone up into a Garret in the top of the House, where he with his Dagger and Rapier defended himself for a space: but at length the Burgh-master coming thither with another Magistrate which could speak Latine, he was counselled to submit himself to the order of the Law. M. Berty knowing himself clear, and the Captain to be alive, was the more bold to submit himself to the judgment of the Law, upon condition that the Magistrate would receive him under safe conduct, and defend him from the rage of the multitude. Which being promised, M. Berty putteth himself and his Wagon into the Magistrates hand, and so was committed to safe custody, while the truth of his cause should be tryed.

Then Master Berty writing his Letters to the Langyaves, and to the Earl of Erbaugh, the next day early in the Morning the Earl of Erbaugh, dwelling within eight miles, came to the Town whither the Dutches was brought with her Wagon, Master Berty also being in the same Town under custody.

The Earl, who had some intelligence of the Dutches before, after he was come and had shewed such curtesie as he thought to her estate was seemly, the Townsmen perceiving the Earl to behave himself so humbly unto her, began to consider more of the matter, and further understanding the Captain to be alive, both they, and especially the Authors of the stir flunk away, and made all the friends they could to M. Berty and his Wife, not to report their doings after the worst sort.

And thus M. Berty and his Wife, escaping that danger, proceeded in their journey toward Poeland, where in conclusion they were quietly entertained of the King, and placed honourably in the Earldom of the said King of Poles in Sanogelia, called Crozan, where M. Berty with the Dutches, having the Kings absolute power of Government over the said Earldom, continued both in great quietness and honor, till the death of Q. Mary.

Thomas Horton Minister.

As ye have heard of the dangerous trouble of the Dutches of Staffolk in the time of her exile for Religion sake, whom notwithstanding the Lords present protection still delivered in all distresses, as well from her enemies in England, as in Dutchland from the Lanceknights there: so have we no less to behold and magnifie the Lords merciful goodness in preserving of Thomas Horton from the like perils of the same Country.

Which Thomas Horton, what a profitable instrument he was to the Church of Christ in Q. Maries time, all our Englishmen almost, beyond the Seas then, did both know and feel.

This good Thomas Horton, as he used oftentimes to travel between Germany and England, for the behoof and sustenance of the poor English exiles there: so he journeying upon a time between Malbrick and Cullen, chanced to be taken there by certain Revers, and so being led by them away, was in no little danger: and yet this danger of his was not so great, but the present help of the Lord was greater to aid and deliver him out of the same.

Thomas Sprat of Kent, Tanner.

Unto these afore rehearsed examples of Gods blessed providence towards his Servants, may also be added the happy deliverance of Thomas Sprat and William Porrege his companion, now Minister. Whose story rega. briefly to course over is this.

This Thomas Sprat had been Servant sometimes to one Master Brent a Justice, and a heavy persecutor, and therefore forsaking his Master for Religion sake, he went to Calice, from whence he used often with the said William Porrege, for their necessary affairs, to have recourse into England.

It so happened about the fourth year of Queen Maries Reign, that they landing upon a time at Dover, and taking their journey together toward Sandwich, suddenly upon the way within three miles of Dover, met with the foresaid Master Brent, the two Blachendens, and other Gentlemen more, with their Servants, to the number of ten or twelve Horses. Of the which two Blachendens, being both haters and enemies of Gods Word and people, the one had perfect knowledge of William Porrege, the other had not seen him, but only had heard of his name before.

Thus they being in the way where this Justice with his mates should meet them directly in the face, Thomas Sprat first spying Master Brent, was fore dismayed, saying to his companion, Yonder is Master Brent, William Porrege, God have mercy upon us. Well, quoth the other, seeing now there is no remedy, let us go on our way. And so thinking to pass by them, they kept themselves aloof, as it were a score off from them, Thomas Sprat also shadowing his face with his Cloke.

Notwithstanding one of Master Brents Servants advising him better than his Master did, Yonder said he to his Master, is Thomas Sprat, At which words they all reined their Horses, and called for Thomas Sprat to come to them. They call you, said William Porrege. Now here is no remedy but we are taken: and so persuaded him to go to them being called, for that there was no escaping from so many Horsemen in those plains and downs, where there was no wood near them by a mile, nor hedge neither, but only one, which was a birdbolt shot off.

All this notwithstanding, Sprat staid, and would not go. Then they called again, sitting still on horseback. Ah Sirrah (quoth the Justice) why come ye not hither? And still his companion moved him to go, seeing there was no other shift to flee away. Nay (said Sprat) I will not go to them, and therewithal took his Legs, running to the hedge that was next him. They seeing that, set Spurs to their Horse, thinking by and by to have him, and that it was impossible for him to escape their hands, as it was indeed, they being on Horseback, and he on foot, had not the Lord miraculously delivered his silly Servant from the gaping mouth of the Lion ready to devour him. For as God would, so it fell out that he had got over the hedge, scrawling through the bushes, when as they were even at his heels, striking at him with their Swords, one of the Blachendens crying cruelly, cut off one of his Legs.

Thus Sprat had scarcely recovered the hedge from his enemies, when one of Master Brents Servants, which had been fellow sometimes in House with him, followed him in his Boots; and certain rode up at one side of the hedge, and certain at the other, to meet him at the upper end.

Now while they were following the chase after Thomas Sprat, only one remained with William Porrege (who was one of the Blachendens, not he which knew him, but the other) who began to question with him, not asking what was his name (as God would) for then he had been known and taken; but from whence he came, and how he came into Sprats company, and whether he went? Unto whom he answered and said, From Calice, and that Sprat came over with him in the passage boat, and they two were going to Sandwich, and so without any more questions he let him depart.

Anon, as he kept along the hedge, one of the Horfmen which rode after Sprat, returning back, and meeting with the said W. Porree, demanded the very same questions as the other had done, to whom he made also the like answer as afore, and so departed, taking another contrary way from the meeting of the other Horfmen. And thus W. Porree escaped.

Now concerning Thomas Sprat, he being pursued on the one side by Horfmen, and on the other side by his own fellow, who followed after him in his Boots, crying, you were as good to tarry, for we will have you, we will have you yet notwithstanding he kept still on his course, till at length he came to a steep down hill at the hedge end, down the which hill he ran from them, for they could not ride down the hill, but must fetch a great compass about, and so this Thom. Sprat ran almost a mile, and (as God would) got a Wood.

By that time he came to the Wood, they were even at his heels: but the night drew on, and it began to rain, and so the malice of these persecutors was at an end, the Lord working for his Servants, whose name be praised for ever and ever, Amen.

Not long after this, one of the two Blachendens afore said, which so cruelly fought the destruction of other, was cruelly murdered by his own Servants.

John Cornet.

Here might also be recited the hard adventures and sufferings of John Cornet, and at length his deliverance, by Gods good working, out of the same.

Who, being a prentice with a Minstrel at Colchester, was sent by his Master, about the second year of Q. Maries Reign, to a wedding in a Town thereby called Roughedge, where he being requested by a company there of good Men, the Constables also of the Parish being present therat, to sing some songs of the Scripture, chanced to sing a song called News out of London, which tended against the Mass, and against the Queens misproceedings.

Whereupon the next day he was accused by the Parson of Roughedge, called Yackley, and so committed, first to the Constable, where both his Master gave him over, and his Mother forsook and cursed him. From thence he was sent to the next Justice, named Master Cannall, and then to the Earl of Oxford, where he was first put in Irons and Chains, and after that so manacled, that the Blood spurt out of his Fingers ends, because he would not confesse the names of them which allured him to sing.

And marvel it was that the cruel Papists were so contented, that they sent him not also to Bishop Boner, to suffer the extremity of the Fire. But Gods gracious providence disposed otherwise for his Servant. For after he was manacled, the Earl commanded him to be brought again to the Town of Roughedge, and there to be whipped till the Blood followed, and to be banished the Town for ever: and so he was, during all the time of Queen Mary.

Thomas Bryce.

If our Story would proceed so wide and so large, as did the exceeding mercy of Gods providence in helping his Servants out of wretchedness and thraldom of those Bloody days, our traffic (I think) would extend to an endless process.

For what good Man or Woman, was there almost in all this time of Queen Mary, who either in carrying a good Conscience out of the Land, or tarrying within the Realm, could well escape the Papists hands, but by some notable experience of the Lords mighty power and helping hand working for him? What should I here speak of the miraculous deliverance of Thomas Bryce? who being in the House of John Seal, in the Parish of Horsing, and the Bailiff with other neighbours coming in, sent by Sir John Baker to search and apprehend him, and knowing perfectly both his stature and colour of his garments, yet had no power to see or know him standing before their faces. So mightily the Lord did blind their eyes, that they asking for him, and looking upon him, yet notwithstanding he quietly took up his bagge of Books, and so departed out of the House without any hand laid upon him.

Also another time, about the second year of Queen Mary, the said Thomas Bryce, with John Bryce his Elder Brother, coming then from Wesell, meeting together at their Fathers House, as they journeyed towards London, to give warning there to one Springfield, which else was like to be taken unawares by his enemies waiting for him upon Gads-Hill, fell in company with a Promoter, which dogged them and followed them again to Gravesend, into the Town, and laid the House for them where they were, all the ways as they should go to the waters side, so that it had not been possible for them to have avoided the present danger of those persecutors, had not the Lords provident care otherwise disposed for his Servants, through the Hostler of the Inn, covertly to convey them by a secret passage; whereby they took Barge a mile out of the Town, and so in the end both the lives of them, and also of Springfield were preserved, through the Lords gracious protection.

Gertrude Crockhay.

Gertrude Crockhay dwelling at Saint Katherines by the Tower of London, and being then in her Husbands House, it happened in the year 1556. that the Popes Childish Saint Nicholas went about the Parish. Which the understanding, shut her door against him, not suffering him to enter into her House.

Then Doctor Mallet hearing thereof, and being then Master of the said Saint Katherines, the next day came to her with twenty at his tail, thinking belike to fray her, and asked why she would not the night before let in Saint Nicholas, and receive his blessing, &c. To whom she answered thus: Sir, I know not Saint Nicholas (said she) that came hither. Yes quoth Mallet, here was one that represented S. Nicholas.

Indeed Sir (said she) here was one that was my neighbours Child, but not Saint Nicholas: for Saint Nicholas is in Heaven. I was afraid of them that came with him, to have had my purse cut by them: for I have heard of Men robbed by Saint Nicholas Clerks, &c. So Mallet perceiving that nothing could be gotten at her hands, went his way as he came, and she for that time so escaped.

Then in the year 1557. a little before Whitsontide it hapned that the said Gertrude answered for a Child that was Baptized of one Thomas Saunders; which Child was Christened secretly in a House after the order of the Service book in King Edwards time; and that being shortly known to her Enemies, she was sought for. Which understanding nothing thereof, went beyond the Sea into Gilderland, to see certain Lands that should come to her Children in the right of her first Husband, who was a stranger born: and being there about a quarter of a year, at the length coming homeward by Antwerp, she chanced to meet with one John Johnson a Dutchman alias John de Villa of Antwerp Shipper, who seeing her there, went of malice to the Margrave, and accused her to be an Anabaptist, whereby she was taken and carried to Prison. The cause why this naughty Man did thus, was for that he claimed of Master Crockhay her Husband a piece of Money which was not his due, for a Ship that Master Crockhay bought of him, and for that he could not get it, he wrought this displeasure. Well, she being in Prison, lay there a fortnight. In the which time the saw some that were Prisoners there, who privily were drowned in Rhenish Wine Fats, and after secretly put in sacks and cast into the River. Now she, good Woman, thinking to be so served, took thereby such fear, that it brought the beginning of her sickness, of the which at length she died.

Then at the last was she called before the Margrave, and charged with Anabaptistry: which she there utterly denied, and detested the error, declaring before him in Dutch her Faith boldly, without any fear. So the Margrave hearing the same, in the end being well pleased with the profession, at the desire of some of her friends delivered her out of Prison, but took away her Book, and so she came over into England again.

William Mauldon.

I Lightly pass over here the tedious afflictions of William Mauldon, how in the dangerous time of the six Articles, before the burning of Anne Askew, he was scourged, being young, of his Father for professing and confessing of true Religion; and afterward being examined in Auricular Confession by the Priest, his Books were searched for, and so at length he was presented up by the same Priest, in a Letter written to the Bishop. Which Letter, had it not been burned by another Priest, to whose hands it came (as the Lord would have it) it had undoubtedly cost him his life.

This one thing in the same William Mauldon is to be noted, that being young, in those days of King Henry, when the Mass most flourished, the Altars with the Sacrament thereof being in their most high veneration, that to Mans reason it might seem unpoffible that the Glory and Opinion of that Sacrament and Sacramentals, so highly worshipped, and so deeply rooted in the Hearts of so many, could by any means possible so soon decay and vanish to nought: yet notwithstanding he being then so young, under the age of seventeen years, by the Spirit (no doubt) of prophesie, declared then unto his Parents, that they should see it shortly even come to pass, that both the Sacrament of the Altar and the Altars themselves, with all such plantations which the Heavenly Father did not plant, should be plucked up by the roots; and even so within the space of very few years the event thereof followed accordingly: the Lord therefore be praised for his most gracious reformation.

Robert Horneby.

I Let pass likewise the dangerous escape of Robert Horneby by Servant sometime and Groom of the Chamber to Lady Elizabeth, the being then in trouble in Queen Maries days; who being willing to come to Mass, refused to do so, and therefore coming afterward from Woodstock to Hampton Court, was called before the Council, and by them committed to the Marshalsey, and not unlike to have sustained further danger, had not the Lords goodness better provided for him, who at length by Doctor Martin was delivered.

Mistress Sands.

THe like also may be testified and recorded of Mistress Sands, now Wife to Sir Morrice Bartlet, then Gentlewoman waiter to the said Lady Elizabeth being in the Tower. Which Mistress Sands denied in like manner to come to Mass, and therefore, beside the heavy displeasure of her Father, was not only displaced from her room, and put out of the House, but also was in great jeopardy of further trial. But the Lord, who disposeth for every one as he seeth best, wrought her a way out of her enemies hands by flying over the Seas, where she continued amongst other banished exiles in the City of Geneva and of Basill, till the death of Queen Mary.

The Story of Thomas Rose yet living, a Preacher of the age of lxxvi. years, in the Town of Luton and County of Bedford.

THis Thomas Rose a Devonshire Man, was born in Ermouth, and being made Priest in that Country, was brought out of it by one M. Fabian, to Polfed in Suffolk, where the said M. Fabian was Parson, and in short time after by his means was placed in the Town of Hadley, where he, first coming to some knowledge of the Gospel, began first there to intreat upon the Creed, and thereupon to take occasion to inveigh against Purgatory, praying to Saints and Images, about the time that Master Latimer began first to Preach at Cambridge, in the time of Bilney and Arthur, forty seven years agoe, or thereabout; inso much that many embracing the truth of Christs Gospel, against the said Purgatory and other points, and the number of them daily increasing, the adversaries began to stir against him, insomuch that M. Bate (who afterward became a Godly zealous Man) was then brought to Preach against the said Thomas Rose, and so did. This notwithstanding he continued still very vehemently against Images, and the Lord so blessed his labours, that many began to devise how to deface and destroy them, and especially four Men, whose names were, Ra. Ring, Ra. Deham, Nich. Marjand, and Re. Gard, which usually resorted to his Sermons, and upon his Preaching were so inflamed with zeal, that shortly after they adventured to destroy the Rood of Dover Court, which cost three of them their lives as appeareth before. The three persons which suffered, and were hanged in Chains, were offered their lives, to have accused the said Tho. Rose, as of Counsel with them, which refused so to do, and therefore suffered. The said Thomas Rose had the Coat of the said Rood brought unto him afterward, who burned it. The Rood was said to have done many great miracles and great wonders wrought by him, and yet being in the Fire could not help himself, but burned like a block, as in very deed he was.

At this time there were two fore enemies in Hadley, Walter Clerk, and John Clerk, two brethren: these complained to the Council, that an hundred Men were not able to fetch the said Thomas Rose out of Hadley, who then was upon Examination of his Doctrine committed to the Commisfaries keeping. And indeed such was the zeal of a number towards the truth then in that Town, that they were much offended that their Minister was so taken from them, and had therefore by force fet him from the Commisfary, if certain Wife Men had not otherwise perswaded, which at length also with more quiet did fet him in his Office again: which thing so angered the two Brethren, Walter Clerk, and John Clerk, that they complained to the Council, as is aforesaid, whereupon a Sergeant at Arms, named Cartwright, was sent from the Council, who arrested the said Thomas Rose, and brought him before the Council. Then his adversaries being called, they laid to his charge, that he was privy of the burning of the Rood of Dover Court, and upon this he was committed to Prison in the Bishop of Lincolns House in Holborn, Bishop Langley the Kings Confessor, and there remained he in Prison, from Shrovetide to Midsomer, very sore stocked till after Easter.

The Stocks were very high and great, so that day and night he did lye with his back on the ground, upon a little straw, with his heels so high, that by means the Blood was sollen from his feet, his feet were almost without sense for a long time, and he herewith waxed very sick, inso much that his Keeper pitying his Estate, and hearing him cry sometime through the extremity of pain, went to the Bishop, and told him that he would not keep him to dye under his hand, and upon this he had some more ease and liberty. Now at this time his Mother was come from Hadley to see him, but she might not be suffered to speak with the said Thomas Rose her Son (such was their cruelty) but the Bishop flattered her, and gave her a pair of pardon beads and bade her go home and pray, for she might not see him; which thing pierced the hearts both of the Mother and Son, not a little. At this time also certain Men of Hadley, very desirous to see him, travelled to speak with him, but might not be suffered, till at length they gave the Keeper 4*s*. and yet then might not speak to him, or see him otherwise than through a grate. And thus continued he till Midsomer in Prison there. Then was he removed to Lambeth, in the first year of Doctor Crammer:

Confecration, who used him much more courteously than ever the Bishop of Lincoln did, and at length wrought his deliverance, and set him at liberty: but yet so, that he was bound not to come within 20. miles of Hadley. After this he came to London, and there Preached the Gospel half a year, till Hadley Men hearing thereof, laboured to have him to Hadley again, and indeed by means of Sir Jo. Rainford Knight, obtained at the Archbishops House to have him thither: Howbeit, by means one was placed in the Cure at Hadley, he could not enjoy his Office again there, but went to Stratford three miles off, and there continued in Preaching the word three years, till at length the adversaries procured an inhibition from the Bishop of Norwich, to put him to silence. But a great number travelled to have him continue in Preaching, and subscribed a Supplication to the Archbishop, with sevenfold hands, who under their Seals also testified of his honest demeanor, so that the adversaries this way not prevailing, they indicted him at Bury in Suffolk, so that he was constrained to flee to London, and to use the aid of the Lord Audley, then Lord Chancellor, who removed the matter from them, and called it before him, and after certain Examination of the matter, did set him free, and did send him by a token to the Lord Cromwell, then Lord Privy Seal, for a Licence from the King to Preach: which thing obtained by the Lord Cromwell his means (who hereupon also had admitted the said Thomas Rofe his Chaplain) forthwith he was sent into Lincolnshire and to Tork. In the mean time such complaint was made to the Duke of Norfolk, for that he Preached against Auricular Confession, Transubstantiation, and such other points contained in the six Articles (which then to have done, by Law was death) that the Duke in his own person not only fought him at Norwich, but also befell all the Havens for him, from Tarmouth to London, and being Lieutenant commanded, that whosoever could take the said Thomas Rofe, should hang him on the next Tree. Howbeit, the said Thomas Rofe at his coming home, having warning hereof by certain Godly persons, was conveyed away, and passed over in to Flanders, and so to Germany unto Zuricke, where a time he remained with Master Bullinger, and afterward went to Basil, and there hosted with Master Grimm, till Letters came that Master Doctor Barnes should be Bishop of Norwich, and things should be reformed and be reformed. But when he came into England again, it was nothing so, and therefore forthwith fled again beyond the Seas, being so beset, as if the mighty providence of God had not sent him in a readines to receive him the self same Man, boat and boy that before carried him over, it had not been possible for him to have escaped. But such was the goodness of God towards him, that he safely was conveyed, and lived at Barrow the space of three years, till at length purposing to come over into England, about business that he had, he, his Wife, and their Child, being but a year and three quarters old, upon the Seas, the ship being in great danger, wherein they layd (for the malt being hewn down in that peril, they were carried whither the waves tossed them,) they with divers others made a full account of death. Howbeit, at length they were taken Prisoners, and carried into Diepe in France, having all their stuff taken from them, and forty pound in Money. There they remained Prisoners from Michaelmas till Hallowtide, in great heaviness, not knowing what would become of them, but depending only upon Gods providence. It pleased God at the same time, that one M. Young of the Town of Rye (who had heard him preach before) came thither for the redeeming of certain Englishmen there taken Prisoners. This M. Young moved to see them in this case, much pittied them, and comforted them, and told them he would pay their ransom, and so he did, had them away, and brought them to Rye, and from thence by stealth came they to London. At length the honourable Earl of Suffex, hearing of the said Thomas Rofe, sent for him, his Wife, and his Child, and had them to his House at Attleborough, where they continued, till at length it was blazed abroad, that the Earl was a maintainer of such a Man to read in his House, as had Preached against the Catholick Faith (as they term it) The Earl being at the Parliament, and hearing thereof, wrote a Letter to warn him to make shift for himself, and to avoid. So that from thence he passed to London, making straight shift for a year there and somewhat more, till the death of King Henry. After the Kings death, he and others which in the Kings General Pardon were excepted (and therefore dead Men, if they had been taken whilst King Henry lived) by certain of the Council were set at liberty, and at length, after King Edward was Crowned, were licensed to Preach again by the King; who gave unto the said Thomas Rofe, the Benefice of West-Ham by London. But at the Death of that virtuous and noble Prince, he was deprived of all, and so should also have been of his Life, had not God appointed him friends, who received him in London secretly, as their Teacher in the Congregation, among whom for the poor Prisoners at their assemblies x. li. a night often times was gathered. And thus he continued amongst them, and with the Lady Vane almost a year in the Reign of Queen Mary. But although he oftentimes escaped secretly whilst he read to the Godly in Sundry places of London, yet at length through a Judas that betrayed them, he with 35. that were with him, were taken in Bow-Church-yard at a Sheremans House on New-years-day at night being Tuesday. The residue being committed to Prison, the said Thomas Rofe was had to the Bishop of Winchester Stephen Gardiner, but the Bishop would not speak with him that night, but committed him to the Clink till Tuesday after.

The first Examination of Thomas Rofe, before Winch. at S. Mary Overies.

ON Thursday being brought before the B. of Winchester, at S. Mary Overies, the said Thomas Rofe spake as followeth.

Rofe. It maketh me to marvel (my Lord quoth he) that I should be thus troubled for that which by the word of God hath been established, and by the Laws of this Realm allowed, and by your own writing so notably, in your Book De vera obedientia, confirmed.

Bish. Ah Sirra, hast thou gotten that?

Rofe. Yea, my Lord, I thank God, and do confesse myself much thereby confirmed. For as touching the Doctrine of the Supremacy, against the Bishop of Rome usurped Authority, no Man hath said further. And as I remember, you confesse in it, that when this truth was revealed unto you, you thought the scales to fall from your eyes.

Bish. Thou leest like a varlet, there is no such thing in my Book, but I shall hand thee and such as thou art well enough. I have long looked for thee, and at length have caught thee. I will know who be thy maintainers, or else I will make thee a foot longer.

Rofe. My Lord, you shall do as much as pleaseth God, and no more, yet the Law is in your hand: but I have God for my maintainer, and none other. At these words one of his Servants stepped forth, and said, My Lord, I heard this Man Preach by Norwich in Sir John Robbers House, and in his Prayer he desired God to turn Queen Maries Heart, or else to take her out of the World; and this was in King Edwards time.

Rofe. My Lord I made no such prayer, but next after the King I prayed for her after this sort, saying, Ye shall pray for my Lady Maries Grace, that God will vouchsafe to endue her with his Spirit, that the graciously may perceive the Mysteries contained within his holy Laws, and so render unto him her heart purified with true Faith, and true and Loyal Obedience to her Sovereign Lord and King, to the good ensample of the inferior Subjects. And this, my Lord, is already answered in mine own handwriting to the Council. Unto this he said little, but turning his face to certain that were by him; This is he (quoth the Bishop) that my Lord of Norwich told me had begotten his maid with Child.

Rofe. This is no Heresie, my Lord, although it be a lye. Indeed certain wicked persons raised this report of me, for the hatred they bare to the Doctrine which I Preached: but for purgation of my self herein I had no less than fix of the Councils hands, that there might be due and diligent Examination for this matter in the Countrey by Men of worship appointed for that purpose, who can all testify (I thank God) that I am most clear from such wickedness, and indeed they have cleared me from it, and therefore I doubt not, but all good Men will espy the mischievous device of mine adversaries, which (when other ways failed) by such sinister means went about to draw me into discredit and hatred: but God which is the helper of the innocent, and searcher of Mens hearts, hath and doth defend me, and hath laid open things that were hid to their shame. One of the chief reporters of this, that I should so abuse my self, was one M. Clark, Servant and in some estimation with the old Lord Treasurer of England, reputed and taken for a Conjuror, who afterward for his good demerits hanged himself in the Tower. Then the Bishop commanded that I should be carried to the Tower, and kept safely, where I did lye till it was the week before Whitsontide. After which time

Anno 1558. time I was twice called, when as the Bishop came to the Tower about other Prisoners. Notwithstanding, the Bishop had no great talk with me, but spake friendly. Howbeit, one Sir Richard Southwell, Knight, still accused me for my Prayer, and said I did put a difference betwixt Lady Mary and Lady Elizabeth, for that I prayed in King Edwards Faith, and prayed that he would confirm Lady Elizabeth in that which was well begun in her. Unto this the Bishop said little. But in the week before Pentecost, I was conveyed from the Tower to Norwich, there to be examined by the Bishop and his Clergy, as concerning my Faith, the manner whereof here followeth.

The second Examination of Thom. Rose before the Bishop of Norwich, Hopkins by name, in his own Palace, in the presence of Sir W. Woodhouse Knight, M. Steward the Chancellor, D. Barret, with divers others, the Wednesday in Whitson-week, Anno Dom. 1553.

After I was presented by my Keeper, the Bishop immediately asked me what I was. I told him I had been a Minister.

Bish. What is this to the purpose, were ye a Frier or a Priest?

Rose. Frier was I never, but a Priest have I been, and benched by the Kings Majesty.

Bish. Where were ye made Priest?

Rose. In Exeter, in the County where I was born. Then the Bishop required of me my Letters of Orders. I told him I knew not where they were become, for they were things of me not greatly regarded.

Bish. Well, you are sent to me to be examined; what say you, will you submit your self to the order of the Church of England?

Rose. My Lord, I trust I am not out of the order of Christs Church in England, neither do I know my self an offender there against.

Bish. What? yes, ye have here preached most damnable and devillish doctrine.

Rose. Not so, my Lord. The Doctrine by me here Preached was both true, sincere and holy. But indeed the Doctrine that is now set forth, is most wicked and damnable, yea, and that both against Gods Laws and Mans But as for the Doctrine by me preached, it is grounded upon the Word of God, set out also by the Authority of two most mighty Kings, with the consent of all the Nobility and Clergy of the same: so that I Preached nothing but their lawful proceedings, having their lawful Authority under their Broad Seals for confirmation of the same, for which my doing ye cannot justly charge me. For why, sithence the Law ceased, I have kept silence, so that the Council which sent me unto you have not charged me therewith. Wherefore ye do me open wrong to burden me with that wherein I am free.

Chan. What Sir? ye are very captious; answerest thou my Lord after such a sort?

Rose. Sir (said I) I answer for my self, and according to the truth: wherewith ye ought not to be offended, if ye be of God.

Chan. Thou art an evil Man. Waite thou not abjured before now?

Rose. No, ye untruly report me, and are in no wise able to prove that which ye have spoken: so that your words appear to proceed altogether of malice, which I have not deserved at your hands. But in this I well perceive ye are made an Instrument to utter other Mens malice conceived of old.

Chan. What sayest thou to the real presence in the Sacrament?

Rose. I wist right well ye were made an Instrument to seek innocent Blood: well ye may have it, if God permit, it is present at hand, for I am not come hither to lye, but to dye (if God see it good) in defence of that which I have said. Wherefore ye may begin when ye shall think good, for I have said nothing but the truth, and that which in those days was of all Men allowed for truth, and against the which ye at that time durst not once whisper, although ye now brag never so much.

Bish. Well Father Rose, said he, whatsoever hath been in times past, shall not now be called in question, so that ye now submit your self. For not only you, but all the whole Realm hath been out of the right way; both high and low, spiritual and temporal, but all notwithstanding have submitted themselves and acknowledged their Faith. Wherefore if ye will be accounted for an Englishman, ye must likewise submit your self.

Rose. My Lord, I am an Englishman born; and do most humbly require of the Christian Congregation of England, to be counted as a particular member of the same, and with all due reverence submit my self as in the form and manner following: That whatsoever Law or Laws shall be set forth in the same for the establishment of Christs true Religion, and that according to the Faith and Doctrine of the holy Patriarchs and Prophets, Jesus Christ, and his holy Apostles, with the faithful Fathers of Christs Primitive Church, I do not only hold it and believe it, but also most reverently obey it. At which my asseveration, the B. seemed to be greatly rejoiced, and said, Well, then we shall soon be at a point. But said he, you shall take this for no day of Examination, but rather of Communication, so that ye shall now depart and pawle your self, until we call for you again, and so ended our first meeting.

The third Examination of Tho. Rose.

On the Friday following, I was called again into Christs Church within their Ladies Chappel (as they termed it,) where was gathered a great part of the whole City of Norwich, and after I was by my Keeper presented, the B. began with a great protestation, and after many words demanded of me whether according to my former promise I would submit my self or no. I answered as before I had done, that according to my former protestation, I would most gladly obey. Then said the Chancellor, to utter his gentleness, I think you do but vain.

Rose. The fault then (said I) shall be in your self, and not in me. For if ye burthen me with nothing but Scriptures, and the Fathers of Christs Primitive Church, then as I said before, so I say again, I shall most gladly obey.

Chan. Well then, seeing you challenge to be a member of the Church of England, your Mother here for a trial of obedience provoketh you, as Mothers are wont to allure you, to receive this little gift at her hand.

Rose. Forsooth said I, if he offer it me, as received of God my Father, I shall gladly receive it, as from the hand of my very true and Ghostly Mother.

Chan. What say you to ear Confection? Is it not a Law Ecclesiastical and necessary for the Church of England.

Rose. Some ways it might be permitted, and some ways not, and that because it had not its original of God and his blessed Word; and yet I deny not, but that a Man being troubled in his Conscience, and resorting to a discreet, sober and Christian learned Man for the quieting of his mind, might well be permitted: but to bind a Man under pain of Damnation, once every year, to number his Sins into the ears of a filthy lecherous Priest, is not of God, neither can be approved by his word.

Bish. Ah Sirrah, ye will admit nothing but Scripture, I see well.

Rose. No truly, my Lord, I admit nothing but Scripture for the Regiment of the Soul: for why, Faith cometh by hearing, and hearing by the Word of God, and where the Word of God is not, there ought no belief to be given. For whatsoever is not of Faith is Sin: and here they left off speaking any more of that matter.

But then M. Chancellor began to whet his teeth at me, saying, Yea, but you have preached, that the real, natural, and substantial presence of Christ is not in the Sacrament of the Altar: what say ye to that?

Rose. Verily, I say, that you are a Bloody Man, and seek to quench your thirst with the Blood of an innocent, and therefore to satisfy you in that behalf, I say verily unto you, that even so I have here preached: and although contrary to Law, you charge me with the same, yet will I in no wifedney it, though justly I might do it, but stand thereunto, even to seal it with my Blood, desiring all that be here present, to testify the same, and believe it as the only truth.

Bish. I charge you all to believe it not.

Rose. Yea, but my Lord (said I) if ye will needs have credence given you, you must bring Gods Word to maintain your sayings.

Bishp. Why, doth not Christ say, This is my Body? and can there be any plainer words spoken?

Rose. It is true my Lord, the words be as plain as can be, and even so be these, whereas it is said, I am a door, a vine, and Christ called a stone, a Lyon, and yet is he naturally none of these: for they be all figurative speeches, as both the Scriptures and Fathers do sufficiently prove.

At which my saying, the Bishop would have had me stay, saying, I should have another day, wherein I might take better advisement.

Transubstantiation & real presence against the Scriptures & the ancient Fathers of the Primitive Church.

Rose. Not so, my Lord, said I, for I am at a full point with my self in that matter, and am right well able to prove both your Transubstantiation, with the real presence, to be against the Scriptures and the ancient Fathers of the Primitive Church. For Justinus, which is one of the ancientest writers that ever wrote upon the Sacraments, writeth in his second Apology, that the Bread, Water, and Wine in the Sacrament, are not to be taken as other meats and drinks, but be meats purposely ordained to give thanks unto God, and therefore be called Eucharistia, and also have the names of the Body and Blood of Christ, and that it is not lawful for any Man to eat and drink of them, but such as profess the Religion of Christ, and live also according to their profession: and yet (saith he) the same Bread and Drink is changed into our Flesh and Blood, nourisheth our Bodies. By which saying it is evident, that Justinus means, that the Bread and Wine remain still, or else they could not have been turned into our Flesh and Blood, and nourish our Bodies. At which my saying they were not a little troubled, but enforced themselves, to have denied the Doctrin, and would suffer me to speak no more, but straightway was I carried away unto my lodging: and so ended the second day of mine appearance, which was the Friday in Whitsun week, and then was I appointed to appear again on the Monday following. Howbeit, upon what occasion I know not, it was deferred unto the Wednesday, which was Corpus Christi Even.

His talk with the Earl of Suffex, Sir William Woodhouse, and the Bishops Chaplains.

IN the mean time the Bishop sent two of his Chaplains to me, with whom I had Communication about the real presence: and after long reasoning to and fro, concerning this point, at length I drave them to this issue, whether they did confess that Christ in the self same Body which was conceived of the Virgin Mary, and wherein he suffered and rose again, do in the self same Body, naturally, substantially, and really sit at the right hand of God the Father, without return from thence, until the day of the general judgment or not? Whereunto they answered, Yes truly, said they, we confess it, hold it, and believe it. Then I again demanded of them, whether they did affirm, after the words pronounced by the Minister, there to remain Flesh, Blood, Bones, Hairs, Nails, as is wont most grossly to be Preached, or not? And they with great deliberation answered, that they did not only abhor the teaching of such gross Doctrine, but also would detest themselves, if they should so think.

The Papists affirmed the real Body of Christ to be in the Sacrament, but they know not how.

At which two principal points, wherein they fully condemned my Doctrine which I ever taught, I was not a little comforted and rejoiced, but marvelously encouraged. Whereupon I demanded again of them, what manner of Body they then affirmed to be in the Sacrament? Forsooth (said they) not a visible, palpable, or circumscribable Body, for that is always at the Fathers right hand: but in the Sacrament it is invisible, and can neither be felt, seen, nor occupy any place, but is there by the omnipotency of Gods Word they know not how.

And for this they brought in Saint Augustine, although of them not truly understood, yet would they admit none other sense than their own, but would take upon them to confirm it with Martin Luther, Melancthon, Bucer, and Calvin: so that I perceiving their obstinacy in that behalf, gave them over for that time, and afterward talked with Doctor Barret, whom I also found of the same judgment in that behalf. For (said he) if ye would dissent from the Fathers of the Primitive Church in this behalf, of which Saint Augustine is one, ye shall be contented to dye out of the Favour of God. Well, all this their obstinacy and blasphemous errors imprinted and deeply weighed in my mind, I gave them all over, and the more quietly to bring them to confess that openly, which they unto me had granted privately, I granted them according to the Scriptures, and my former protestation, a presence, although not as they supposed.

After all this, came there unto me the honourable Earl of Suffex, and that gentle Knight, Sir William Woodhouse, with great persuasions: unto whom I said, after long talk, that I would do all that I might, saving my Conscience, which I would in no wise pollute, and no more I have, as knoweth God by whom all Men must be judged.

His last appearance before the Bishop.

NOW to come to my last appearance, after I was before the Bishop presented, he forthwith demanded of me, whether I were resolved, as he had heard say. To whom I answered, that even as always I had said before, even so I was now. Unto whom, by low bowing my knee, I gave my due reverence, and the rather for that the honourable Earl of Suffex was there. Wherewith some which would be counted great Gospellers, were contrary to all Christianity I sore offended. Then I said, that whatsoever Laws were set forth for the establishment of Christs true Religion, and that according to the Doctrine of Christs holy Apostles, and the Faithful Fathers of the Primitive Church, I did not only obey them, but most earnestly embrace and believe them. Yea, and yet to the further blinding of their eyes, I said, that if any thing could justly be proved by Gods holy Word, by me heretofore preached, or taught untruly, either for lack of learning, slide of Tongue, or of ignorance; yet by better knowledge when it shall justly be tried and examined by the same. I shall not refuse (the thing perfectly approved) to revoke the same. Provided always, the Word of God herein to be judge.

All this spake I (as God knoweth) to keep them from suspecting that which I went about, and that they should have none occasion to judge me of obstinacy. Then said I moreover, All you must of force confess, that the Doctrine by me heretofore preached, had, besides the Authority of Gods eternal verity, the Authority of two most noble and mighty Princes, with the advice and Counsel of all the Nobility and Clergy of the same, and that with great deliberation from time to time, with open disputations in both the Universities, enacted also by Parliament with the consent of the whole Body and Commons of the same, and that without any reluctance or gain-saying established, as a Religion most pure and perfect, most earnestly and sincerely Preached by the principal Bishops and Doctors, and that before the Kings Majesties Persons; and I, as one being called to that Office, did the like with all the rest, and in the zeal of God, and with a pure Conscience did set forth the same as the only and absolute truth of God, and the just and most true proceedings of my Sovereign Lord and King: and I had then my head at that present even where it now standeth, betwixt mine ears, altogether applying the same, to apprehend with all diligence that which then was established and taught, as the only and absolute truth, and a thing unto me most desirable, and well willing, without any desire to hear the contrary, till now through this my captivity I am compelled to hear the contrary part speak, who are even here present, and which my Lord sent unto me.

Of whom, after long disputations privately to and fro before this time had bewit us, at length I have heard of them a contrary Doctrine, which I never before had heard; and therefore must confess mine own ignorance in the same. For (quoth I) after I had informed these Men here present (meaning the Bishops two Chaplains) to confess Jesus Christs Natural Body with his full compleat members in due order and proportion of a perfect Mans Body to be present at the right hand of God the Father, and that without return from thence, until the last Judgment, and also that after the words pronounced by the Priest, there remaineth no such gross presence of Anno 1558. of Flesh, Blood, Bones, Hair, and Nails, as was wont to be preached; but after I had demanded of them what manner of Body they affirmed to be present, they said; A Body invivible by the omnipotency of Gods Word, which neither can be felt or seen, nor that hath any distinction of members, but such a Body as occupieth no place, but is there they know not how; necessity compelled me to confesse mine ignorance in that behalf, although in very deed they perceived not my meaning therein, neither was it in my thought they should do so. For by this their confession, and my silence, afterward I perceived their horrible Blasphemies.

And me thought in this I had well discharged at that time my Conscience, in causing them in open audience to confesse the same, and so I granted a presence, but not as they supposed.

For only I said, that Christ after the words pronounced, is present in the lawful use and right distribution of his holy Supper; which thing I never denied, or any Godly Man that ever I heard of. For (said I) Enthusiasmus. a Man of singular fame and learning, about 300. years after Christs ascension, saith, That the conversion of the visible Creatures of Bread and Wine into the Body and blood of Christ, is like unto our conversion in Baptism. Where nothing is outwardly changed, but all the change is inwardly by the mighty working of the holy Ghost, which fashioneth and frameth Christ in the heart and mind of Man, as by the example of Peter preaching to the people, Acts 2. By which he so pierced their Conscience, that they openly with most earnest repentance confessed their sins, saying; Men and Brethren, what shall we do? Repent, and be baptised every one of you (said Peter) in the name of Jesus Christ; so that at this Sermon there were turned unto Christ three thousand persons; in whom Christ was so fashioned and framed, as that he did dwell in every one of them, and they in him; and after the like manner (said I) is Christ present in the lawful use and right distribution of his holy Supper, and not otherwise. For although I said, according to the truth, that Christ dwelt in every one of these persons rehearsed, yet meant I nothing less than that he in them should have a gross, carnal, or fleshly dwelling.

Now Christ is present in the Sacrament.

And no more meant I (as God knoweth) him carnally or spiritually to be in the Sacrament, but according to the Scriptures, and my former protestation, that is, to the Spiritual nourishment of all such as worthily come unto that holy Supper, receiving it according to his holy institution.

And thus I ended; which the Papists most maliciously and slanderously named a recantation; which I never meant; nor thought (as God knoweth.)

Now after I had thus concluded my speech, the Bishop taking me by the hand, said; Father Rose, you may be a worthy instrument in Gods Church, and we will see to you at our coming home (for he was about to take his journey in visitation of his Diocess) and they feared much at this very time, lest Queen Mary should have miscarried in child-travel, which was looked for, being then accounted very great with Child, so that they were not so fierce as they had been, and doubted very much of some stir, if I should have suffered; and therefore were glad to be rid of me, so that by any colourable means for their own discharge it might be; so the night following was I only committed to mine own lodging.

On the morrow, when the Bishop was ready to ride forth in visitation, he called me before him, and perceiving that Sir W. Woodhouse did bear me great favor, said, he was sorry for me and my expences; and therefore willed that I were some where, where I might spend no more money, till his return. Why, my Lord (quoth Sir William Woodhouse) he shall have meat and drink, and lodging with me, till you return again, seeing you now break up house; and hereupon I went home with Sir William that good Knight, who most gently entertained me, and I had great liberty. Upon this the Papistical Priests of the Colledge of Christs Church in Norwich, for that they saw meat liberty in Sir Williams absence (who also was then from home a fortnight) blazed it abroad, that Sir William was bounden for me in Body and Lands. At his coming home therefore I asked Sir William if he were so bounden for me; and he denied it. Then said I; Sir, but for reverence I bear to you, I might have been an hundred miles from you ere this. But I trust now, Sir, seeing you be not bound for me, I may go visit my friends. Go where you will, said Sir William, for (quoth he) I told the Bishop I would not be his Jaylor, but promised only meat, drink, and lodging for you. Shortly after, upon the device of some friends, I was closely conveyed to a friends House where almost a Month I was secretly kept, till rumours were over. For at the Bishops return searching was for me, inasmuch as all Houses, where it was known I had been acquainted, were searched, and the Ships at Tarmouth.

At the length the Bishop sent to a Conjuror, to know of him which way I was gone, and he answered, that I was gone over a water, and in the keeping of a Woman. And in very deed I was passed over a small water, and was hid by a blessed Woman and Godly Woman (which lived in a poor cottage) the space of three weeks, till all the great heat was over.

Then was I conveyed to London, and from thence passed over the Seas, where I lived till the death of Queen Mary, and till that it pleased God for the comfort of his Church, and restoring of all poor exiles and prisoners for his names sake, to bless this Realm with the government of our noble Queen, whom God to the Glory of his own name, and the defence of his Church according to his good will and pleasure, long preserve and continue over us.

A brief discourse concerning the troubles and happy deliverance of the reverend Father in God, Doctor Sands, first Bishop of Worcester, next of London, and now Archbishop of York.

King Edward dyed, the World being unworthy of him, the Duke of Northumberland came down to Cambridge with an Army of Men, having Commission to proclaim Lady Jane Queen, and by power to suppress Lady Mary, who took upon her that Dignity, and was proclaimed Queen in Northfolk. The Duke sent for Doctor Sands, being Vicechancellor, for Doctor Parker, for Dr. Bill, and Master Leaver to sup with him. Amongst other speeches he said; Masters, pray for us, that we speed well: if not, you shall be made Bishops, and we Deacons. And even so it came to pass, Doctor Parker, and Dr. Sands were made Bishops, and he and Sir John Gates, who was then at the Table, were made Deacons, ere it was long after on the Tower-Hill. D. Sands being Vicechancellor, was required to preach on the morrow. The warning was short for such an Auditory, and to speak of such a matter; yet he refused not the thing, but went into his chamber, and so to bed. He rose at three of the clock in the morning, took his Bible in his hand, and after that he had prayed a good space; he shut his eyes, and holding his Bible before him, earnestly prayed to God, that it might fall open, where a most fit text should be for him to intreat of. The Bible, as God would have it, fell open upon the first chapter of Jeshuab, where he found so convenient a piece of Scripture for that time, that the like he could not have chosen in all the Bible. His Text was thus: Responditque Josua et dixit: Omnia quae preceperit vobis faciemus, & quocunque miseris ibimus: sicut obedivimus in cunctis Moysi, ita obediemus & tibi, tantum sit Dominus Deus tuus sicut fuit cum Moysi: qui contradixit ori tuo, & non obedivisti cunctis sermonibus quos preceperat ei, moriatur, tu tantum confortare & revivere age. Who shall consider what was concluded by such a named themselves the State, and withal, the Auditory, the time and other circumstances, he shall easily see that this Text most fitly served for the purpose. And as God gave the Text, so gave he such order and utterance, as pulled many tears out of the eye of the biggest of them.

In the time of his Sermon one of the Guard lift up to him into the Pulpit a Mass Book and a Grail, which Sir George Howard with certain of the Guard had taken that night in Master Harlestone House, where Lady Mary had been a little before, and there had Mass. The Duke, with the rest of the Nobility, required Doctor Sands to put his Sermon in writing, and appointed Master Leaver to go to London with it, and to put it in print. Doctor Sands required one day and a half for writing of it. At the time appointed he had made it ready, and Master Leaver was ready Booted to receive it at his hands, and carry it to London. As he was delivering of it, one of the Beadles, named M. Adams, came weeping to him, and prayed him to shift for himself, for the Duke was retired, and Queen Mary proclaimed.

Doctor Sands was not troubled herewithal, but gave the Sermon written to Master Layfield. Master Leaver departed home, and he went to dinner to one Master Mores a Beadle, his great friend. At the dinner Mistress More seeing him merry and pleasant (for he had ever a Mans courage, and could not be terrified) drank unto him, saying; Master Vicechancellor, I drink unto you, for this is the last time that I shall see you. And so it was; for she was dead before Doctor Sands returned out of Germany. The Duke that night retired to Cambridge, and sent for Doctor Sands to go with him to the Market place to proclaim Queen Mary. The Duke caft up his cap with others, and so laughed, that the tears ran down his Cheeks for grief. He told Doctor Sands that Queen Mary was a merciful Woman, and that he doubted not thereof; declaring that he had sent unto her to know her pleasure, and looked for a general pardon.

Doctor Sands answered; My Life is not dear unto me, neither have I done or said any thing that urgeth my Conscience. For that which I spake of the State, I have instructions warranted by the subscription of sixteen Counsellors, neither can speech be Treason, neither yet have I spoken further than the Word of God, and the Laws of the Realm do warrant me, come of me what God will. But be you assured, you shall never escape death; for if he would save you, those that now shall rule, will kill you.

That night the Guard apprehended the Duke, and certain Grooms of the Stable were as busie with Doctor Sands, as if they would take a prisoner. But Sir John Gates, who lay then in Doctor Sands his House, sharply rebuked them, and drave them away. Doctor Sands, by the advice of Sir John Gates, walked in the Fields. In the mean time the University, contrary to all order, had met together in consultation, and ordered that Doctor Musfe and Doctor Hatcher should repair to Doctor Sands lodging, and fet away the Statute Book of the University, the Keyes, and such other things that were in his keeping, and so they did: for Doctor Musfe being an earnest Protestant the day before, and one whom Doctor Sands had done much for, was now become a Papist, and his great enemy. Certain of the University had appointed a Congregation at afternoon. As the bell rang to it, Doctor Sands cometh out of the Fields, and sending for the Beadles, asketh what the matter meaneth and required them to wait upon him to the Schools, according to their duty. So they did. And so soon as Doctor Sands, the Beadles going before him, came into the regent House and took his chair: One M. Mitch, with a rabble of unlearned Papists, went into a by-school, and conspired together to pull him out of his chair, and to use violence unto him. Doctor Sands began his Oration, expostulating with the University, charging them with great ingratitude, declaring, that he had said nothing in his Sermon, but that that he was ready to justify and their case was all one with his: For they had not only concealed, but consented to that which he had spoken.

And thus while he remembered unto them how beneficial he had been to the University, and their unthankfulness to him again, in cometh Master Mitch with his conspirators about twenty in number. One layeth hand upon the chair, to pull it from him, another told him that that was not his place, and another called him Traitor. Whereat he perceiving how they used violence, and being of great courage, groped to his dagger, and had dispatched some of them as Gods enemies, if Doctor Bill and Doctor Blisk had not fallen upon him, and prayed him for Gods sake to hold his hands and be quiet, and patiently to bear that great offered wrong. He was persuaded by them, and after that tumult was ceased, he ended his Oration, and having some money of the Universities in his hand, he there delivered the same every farthing. He gave up the Books, Reckonings, and Keyes pertaining to the University, and withal yielded up his Office, praying

God to give the University a better Officer, and to give them better and more thankful hearts, and so repaired home to his own Colledge.

On the morrow after, there came unto him one M. Gerningham, and one M. Thomas Mildmay. Gerningham told him that it was the Queens pleasure that two of the Guard should attend upon him, and that he must be carried Prisoner to the Tower of London, with the Duke. M. Mildmay said, he marvelled that a learned Man would speak so unadvisedly against so good a Prince, and wilfully run into such danger. Doctor Sands answered; I shall not be ashamed of bonds, but if I could do as M. Mildmay can, I needed not to fear bonds. For he came down in payment against Queen Mary, and armed in the Field, and now he returneth in payment for Queen Mary; before a Traitor, and now a great friend. I cannot with one Mouth blow hot and cold after this fore.

Upon this, his Stable was robbed of four notable good Geldings, the best of them Master Huddelstone took for his own saddle, and rode on him to London in his fight. An Inventory was taken of all his goods by Master More Beadle for the University. He was set upon a lame Horse that halted to the ground; which thing a friend of his perceiving, prayed that he might lend him a Nagg. The Yeomen of the Guard were contented. As he departed forth at the towns end, some Papists reforted thither to jeer at him; some of his friends to mourn for him. He came in the rank to London, the people being full of out-cries. And as he came in at Bishopsgate, one like a milk-wife hurled a stone at him, and hit him on the breast, with such a blow, that he was like to fall off his Horse. To whom he mildly said; Woman, God forgive it thee. Truth is, that journey and evil intreating fo mortified him, that he was more ready to dye than to live.

As he came through Tower-bill-freet, one Woman standing in her door cried; Fie on thee thou Knave, thou Knave, thou Traitor, thou Heretic. Whereat he smiled. Look, the desperate Heretic (said she) laughed at this jeer. A Woman on the other side of the Street answered, saying; Fye on thee neighbour, thou art not worthy to be called a Woman, railing upon this Gentleman whom thou knowest not, neither yet the cause why he is thus intreated. Then she said; Good Gentleman, God be thy comfort, and give thee strength to stand in Gods cause even to the end. And thus he passed through Fire and Water into the Tower, the first prisoner that entered in that day, which was Saint James day. The Yeomen of the Guard took from him his borrowed Nagg, and what else soever he had. His Man, one Quining Swainston, brought after him a Bible, and some shirts, and such like things. The Bible was sent in to him, but the shirts and such like served the Yeomen of the Guard.

After he had been in the Tower three weeks in a bad prison, he was lift up into Nuns-Bower a better prison, where was put to him M. John Bradford.

At the day of Queen Maries Coronation their prison door was set open, ever thus before. One Master Mitchell his old acquaintancce, which had been prisoner before in the same place, came in to him, and said; Master Sands, there is such a stir in the Tower, that neither gates, doors, nor prisoners are looked to this day. Take my cloak, my hat, and my rapier, and get you gone, you may go out of the gates without questioning, save your self, and let me do as I may. A rare friendship; but he refused the offer, saying; I know no just cause why I should be in Prison. And thus to do were to make my self guilty. I will expect Gods good will, yet must I think my self most bounden unto you: and so Master Mitchell departed.

While Doctor Sands and Master Bradford were thus in close Prison together 29. weeks, one John Bowler was their Keeper, a very perverse Papist, yet by often persuading of him, for he would give ear, and by gentle using of him, at the length he began to mislike Popery, and to favour the Gospel, and was so persuaded in true Religion, that on a Sunday when they had Mass in the Chappel, he bringeth up a Service Book, a Manchet, and a glass of Wine, and there Doctor Sands ministred the Communion to Bradford and to Bowler. Thus Bowler Anno 1558. was their Son begotten in bonds. When Wyat was in Arms, and the old Duke of Northfolk sent forth with a power of Men to apprehend him; that room might be made in the Tower for him and other his complices. Dr. Cranmer, Dr. Ridley, and Master Bradford were cast into one Prison, and D. Sands with 9. other Preachers were sent unto the Marshalsey.

The Keeper of the Marshalsey appointed to every Preacher, a Man to lead him in the Street; he caused them to go far before, and he and Doctor Sands came behind, whom he would not lead, but walked familiarly with him. Yet Doctor Sands was known, and the people every where prayed to God to comfort him, and to strengthen him in the truth. By that time the peoples minds were altered, Popery began to be unfavoury. After they passed the Bridge, the Keeper Thomas Way said to Doctor Sands; I perceive the vain people would set you forward to the Fire. Ye are as vain as they, if you being a young Man will stand in your own conceits, and prefer your own knowledge before the judgment of so many worthy Prelates, ancient, learned, and grave Men as be in this Realm. If you so do, you shall find me as frail as a Keeper, as one that utterly misliketh your Religion. Doctor Sands answered; I know my years young, and my learning small, it is enough to know Christ Crucified, and he hath learned nothing that seemeth not the great Blasphemy that is in Popery. I will yield unto God, and not unto Man: I have read in the Scriptures of many Godly and courteous Keepers. God may make you one. If not, I trust he will give me strength and patience to bear your hard dealing with me. Saith Thomas Way; Do ye then mind to stand to your Religion? Yes, saith Doctor Sands, by Gods Grace. Truly, saith the Keeper, I love you the better, did but tempt you. What favour I can shew you ye shall be sure of, and I shall think my self happy, if I may dye at the stake with you. The said Keeper shewed Doctor Sands ever after all friendship; he trusted him to go into the Fields alone, and there met with Master Bradford, who then was removed into the Beuch, and there found the like favour of his Keeper. He laid him in the best Chamber in the House, he would not suffer the Knight Marshall Man to lay fetters on him, as others had. And at his request he put M. Sanders in to him, to be his Bed-fellow, and sundry times suffered his Wife, who was Master Sands Daughter of Elsex, a Gentlewoman beautiful both in Body and Soul, to resort to him. There was great resort to Doctor Sands, and Master Sanders; they had much Money offered them, but they would receive none. They had the Communion there three or four times, and a great sort of Communicants. Doctor Sands gave such exhortation to the people for at that time being young, he was thought very eloquent; that he mov'd many tears, and made the people abhorre the Mass, and desise all Popery.

When Wyat with his army came into Southwark, he sent two Gentlemen into the Marshalsey to Doctor Sands, saying, that Master Wyat would be glad of his company and advice, and that the gates should be set open for all the Prisoners. He answered, tell M. Wyat, if this his Rising be of God, it will take place; if not, it will fall. For my part, I was committed hither by order, I will be discharged by like order, or I will never depart hence. So answered M. Sanders, and the rest of the Preachers, being there Prisoners.

After that D. Sands had been 9. weeks Prisoner in the Marshalsey by the mediation of Sir Thomas Holcroft, then Knight Marshall: he was set at liberty. Sir Thomas sued earnestly to the Bishop of Winchester, Doctor Gardner, for his deliverance after many repulses: but he could not prevail, except Doctor Sands would be one of their Sect, and then he could want nothing. He wrung out of him at last, that if the Queen could like of his deliverance, he would not be against it; for that was Sir Thomas his last request. In the mean time he had procured two Ladies of the Privy Chamber to move the Queen in it; who was contented if the Bishop of Winchester would like of it. The next time that the Bishop went into the Privy Chamber to speak with the Queen, M. Holcroft followed, and had his warrant for D. Sands remission ready, and prayed the two Ladies, when as the Bishop should take his leave, to put the Queen in mind of Doctor Sands.

So they did, and the Queen said; Winchester, what think you by D. Sands, is he not sufficiently punished? As it please your Majesty, saith Winchester. That he spake, remembering his former promise to Master Holcroft, that he would not be against D. Sands, if the Queen should like to discharge him. Saith the Queen; Then truly, we would that he were set at liberty. Immediately Master Holcroft offered the Queen the Warrent. Who subscribed the same, and called Winchester to put to his hand, and so he did. The Warrent was given to the Knight Marshall again, Sir Thomas Holcroft. As the Bishop went forth of the Privy Chamber door, he called M. Holcroft to him: Commanding him not to set Doctor Sands at liberty, until he had taken Sureties of two Gentlemen of his Country with him, every one bound in 500. pounds, that D. Sands should not depart out of the Realm without licence. Master Holcroft immediately after met with two Gentlemen of the North, friends and cousins to D. Sands, who offered to be bound in Body, Goods, and Lands for him. After Dinner, the same day, Master Holcroft sent for Doctor Sands to his lodging at Westminster, requiring the Keeper to company with him. He came accordingly, finding Master Holcroft alone walking in his Garden. Master Holcroft imparted his long sute, with the whole proceeding, and what effect it had taken, to D. Sands: much rejoicing that it was his good hap to do him good, and to procure his liberty, and that nothing remained, but that he would enter into bonds with his two Sureties, for not departing out of the Realm. Doctor Sands answered; I give God thanks, who hath moved your heart to mind me so well, and I think my self most bound unto you. God shall require, and I shall never be found unthankful. But as you have dealt friendly with me, I will also deal plainly with you. I came a freeman into Prison; I will not go forth a bondman. As I cannot benefit my friends, so will I not hurt them. And if I be set at liberty, I will not tarry six days in this Realm, if I may get out. If therefore I may not get free forth, send me to the Marshalsey again, and there ye shall be sure of me.

This Answer much misliked M. Holcroft: He told Doctor Sands that the time would not long continue, a change would shortly come, the state was but a cloud, and would soon shake away. And that his cousin Sir Edward Bray would gladly receive him and his Wife into his House, where he should never need to come at Church, and how the Lady Bray was a zealous Gentlewoman, who hated Popery. Adding, that he would not so deal with him to lose all his labour. When Doctor Sands could not be removed from his former saying, Master Holcroft said; Seeing you cannot be altered, I will change my purpose, and yield unto you. Come of it what will, I will set you at liberty: And seeing you mind to go over Sea, get you gone so quickly as you can. One thing I require of you, that while you are there, you write nothing to come hither, for so you may undo me. He friendly kissed Doctor Sands, bade him farewell, and command the Keeper to take no fees of him, saying; Let me answer Winchester as I may. Doctor Sands returning with the Keeper to the Marshalsey, tarried all night. There on the morrow, he gave a Dinner to all the Prisoners, bade his bed-fellow, and sworn stake-fellow, if it had so pleased God, Master Sanders farewell, with many rears and kissings, the one falling on the others neck, and so departed, clearly delivered without Examination or Bond. From thence he went to the Beuch, and there talked with M. Bradford and M. Farrer Bishop of Saint *David*s, then Prisoners. Then he comforted them, and they praised God for his happy deliverance. He went by Winchester House, and there took boat, and came to a friends House in London, called William Banks, and tarried there one night. On the morrow at night he stifted to another friends House, and there he learned that search was made for him.

Doctor Watson and Master Christopherson, coming to the Bishop of Winchester, told him that he had set at liberty the greatest Heretick in England, and one that had of all other most corrupted the University of Cambridge, Doctor Sands. Whereupon the Bishop of Winchester, being Chancellor of England, sent for all the Constables of London, commanding them to watch for Doctor Sands, who was then within the City, and to apprehend him, and whosoever of them should take him and bring him to him, he should have five pounds for his labour. Doctor Sands suspecting the matter, conveyed himself by night to one M. Barties House a stranger, who was in the Marshallsey Prisoner with him a while, he was a good Protestant, and dwelt in Mark-Lane. There he was six days, and had one or two of his friends that repaired unto him. Then he repaired to an acquaintance of his, one Hurlestone a Skinner, dwelling in Cornhill; he caused his Man Quinting to provide two Geldings for him, minding on the morrow to ride into Essex to Master Sands his Father in Law, where his Wife was.

At his going to bed in Hurlestones House, he had a pair of Hofs newly made that were too long for him. For while he was in the Tower, a Taylor was admitted him to make him a pair of Hofs. One came unto him, whose name was Benjamin, a good Protestant, dwelling in Birchin-Lane: he might not speak to him, or come unto him to take measure of him, but only look upon his Leggs, he made the Hofs, and they were two inches too long. These Hofs he prayed the goodwife of the House to send to some Taylor to cut them two inches shorter. The Wife required the Boy of the house to carry them to the next Taylor to cut. The boy chanced (or rather God so provided) to go to the next Taylor, which was Benjamin that made them, which also was a Constable, and acquainted with the Lord Chancellors commandment. The Boy required him to cut the Hofs. He said, I am not thy Masters Taylor. Saith the Boy, because you are our next neighbour, and my Masters Taylor dwelleth far off, I came to you; for it is far night, and he must occupy them timely in the morning. Benjamin took the Hofs, and looking upon them, he knew his handy-work, and said; These are not thy Masters Hofs, but D. Sands, them I made in the Tower. The Boy yielded and said, it was so. Saith he, Go to thy Mistress, pray her to sit up till 12. of the clock, and then I will bring the Hofs and speak with D. Sands to his good.

At midnight the goodwife of the House, and Benjamin the Taylor cometh into D. Sands Chamber: The Wife prayeth him not to be afraid of their coming. He answered nothing can be amiss; what God will, that shall be done. Then Benjamin telleth him that he made his Hofs, and by what good chance they now come to his hands. God used the means, that he might admonish him of his peril, and advise him how to escape it, telling him that all the Constables of London, whereof he was one, watched for him, and some were so greedily set, that they prayed him, if he took him, to let them have the carriage of him to the Bishop of Winchester, and he should have the five pound. Saith Benjamin, it is known that your Man hath provided two Geldings, and that you mind to ride out at Algate to morrow, and there then you are sure to be taken. Follow mine advice, and by Gods Grace ye shall escape their hands. Let your Man walk all the day to morrow in the street where your Horses stand, booted and ready to ride. The goodmans Servant of the House shall take the Horses, and carry them to Bednol-Green. The goodman shall be booted, and follow after, as if he would ride. I will be here with you to morrow about eight of the Clock; it is both Term and Parliament time, here we will break our fast, and when the streets is full, we will go forth. Look wildly, and if you meet your Brother in the streets, shun him not, but outface him, and know him not. Accordingly Doctor Sands did, clothed like a Gentleman in all respects, and looked wildly, as one that had been long kept in Prison out of the light. Benjamin carried him through Birchin-Lane, and from one Lane to another, till he came to Morgate. There they went forth until they came to Bednol-Green, where the Horses were ready, and Master Hurlestone, to ride with him as his Man. Doctor Sands pulled on his boots and taking leave of his friends Benja- min, with tears they kissed each other; he put his Anno Hand in his Purse, and would have given Benjamin a great part of that little he had, but Benjamin would take none. Yet since D. Sands hath remembered him thankfully. He rode that night to his Father in Law M. Sands, where his Wife was: he had not been there two hours, but it was told M. Sands, that there were two of the Guard which would that night apprehend Doctor Sands, and so they were appointed.

That night Doctor Sands was guided to an honest Farmer near the Sea, where he tarried two days and two nights in a Chamber without all company. After that he shifted to one James Mower a Shipmaster, who dwelt at Milton-Shote, where he expected wind for the English Fleet ready into Flanders. While he was there, James Mower brought to him 40. or 50. Mariners, to whom he gave an Exhortation; they liked him so well, that they promised to dye for it, ere that he should be apprehended.

The 6. of May, being Sunday, the wind served. He took his leave of his Host and Hostess, and went towards the Ship. In taking his leave of his Hostess who was barren, and had bin married 8. years, he gave her a fine handkerchief and an old Royal of Gold in it, thanking her much, and said; Be of good comfort, ere that one whole year be past, God shall give you a Child, a Boy. And it came to pass, for that day twelve month lacking one day, God gave her a fair Son.

At the Shore Doct. Sands met with M. Isaac of Kent, who had his Eldest Son there, who, upon the liking he had to D. Sands, sent his Son with him, who afterward dyed in his Fathers House in Frankford. D. Sands and D. Coxe were both in one Ship, being one Cockrel Ship. They were within the kenning, when two of the Guard came thither to apprehend D. Sands. They arrived at Anwerp, being bid to Dinner to Master Locke. And at dinner time one George Gilpin being Secretary to the English House, and Kinsman to Doctor Sands, came to him, and rounded him in his ear, and said; King Philip hath sent to make search for you, and to apprehend you. Hereupon they rose from their Dinner in a marvellous great shower, and went out at the gate toward the Land of Cleves. They found a Wagon, and halted away, and came late to Ausburge in Cleveland, where D. Sands tarried 14. days, and then journeyed towards Strausborough, where after he had lived one year, his Wife came unto him. He fell sore sick of a flux, which kept him nine Months, and brought him to deaths door. He had a Child which fell sick of the Plague, and died. His Wife at length fell sick of a Consumption, and dyed in his Arms; no Man had a more Godly Woman to his Wife.

After this, Master Sampson went away to Emanuel, a Man skilful in Hebrew. Master Grindall went into the Country to learn the Dutch Tongue. Doctor Sands still remained in Strausborough, whose sustentation then was chiefly from one Master Isaac, who loved him most dearly, and was ever more ready to give than he to take. He gave him in that space above an hundred Marks, which Sum the said Doctor Sands paid him again, and by his other gifts and friendliness shewed himself to be a thankful Man. When his Wife was dead, he went to Zurike, and there was in Peter Martyrs House for the space of 5. weeks. Being there, as they fate at Dinner, word suddenly came that Queen Mary was dead, and D. Sands was sent for by his friends at Strausborough. That news made Master Martyr, and Master Jarret then there, very joyful; but Doctor Sands could not rejoice, it smote into his heart that he should be called to misery.

Master Bullinger and the Ministers seasted him, and he took his leave and returned to Strausborough where he Preached; and so Master Grindall and he came towards England, and came to London the Tene day that Queen Elizabeth was Crowned.

The

Anno 1558.

The miraculous Preservation of the Lady ELIZABETH, now Queen of England, from extream Calamity and danger of Life, in the time of Queen MARY, her Sister.

The blessed protection of Almighty God in preserving the Lady Elizabeth in her most dangerous
and troubles.

BUt when all hath been said and told, whatsoever can be recited touching the admirable working of Gods present Hand in defending and delivering any one person out of thralldom, never was there, since the memory of our Fathers, any example to be shewed, wherein the Lords mighty Power hath more admirably and blessedly shewed it self, to the glory of his own Name, to the comfort of all good hearts, and to the publick felicity of this whole Realm, than in the miraculous custody and out-scape of this our Sovereign Lady, now Queen, then Lady Elizabeth, in the strait time of Queen Mary her Sister.

The troubles of the Lady Elizabeth
in Q.
Maries time.

In which Story we first have to consider in what extream misery, sickness, fear, and peril her Highness was; into what care, what trouble of mind, and what danger of death she was brought: First, with great Routs and Bands of armed Men (and happy was he that might have the carrying of her) being fetched up as the greatest Traitor in the World, clapped in the Tower, and again tossed from thence, and from House to House, from Prison to Prison, from Post to Pillar, at length also Prisoner in her own House, and guarded with a sort of Cut-throats, which ever gaped for the spoil, whereby they might be fingering of somewhat.

Secondly, We have to consider again, all this notwithstanding, how strangely, or rather miraculously, she was delivered from dangers, what favour and grace she found with the Almighty; who, when all the help of man and hope of recovery was past, stretched out his mighty Protection, and preserved her Highness, and placed her in this Princely Seat of Rest and Quietness, wherein now she sitteth, and long may she sit, the Lord of his glorious mercy grant we beseech him.

In which Story, if I should set forth at large and at full all the Particulars and Circumstances thereunto belonging, and as just occasion of the History requireth; heide the importunate length of the Story discourseth, peradventure it might move offence to some being yet alive, and truth might get me hatred. Yet notwithstanding I intend (by the grace of Christ) therein to use such brevity and moderation, as both may be to the glory of God, the discharge of the Story, the profit of the Reader, and hurt to none, suppressing the names of some, whom here although I could recite, yet I thought not to be more cruel in hurting their name, than the Queen hath been merciful in pardoning their lives.

The History of the Lady
Elizabeth.

Therefore now to enter into the Discourse of this tragical matter, first here is to be noted, That Queen Mary when she was first Queen, before she was crowned, would go no whither, but would have her by the hand, and send for her to dinner and supper; but after she was crowned, she never dined nor supped with her, but kept her aloof from her. After this it happened immediately upon the rising of Sir Thomas Wyatt (as before was mentioned) that the Lady Elizabeth and the Lord Courtney were charged with false suspicion of Sir Thomas Wyatts rising. Whereupon Queen Mary, whether for that surmise, or for what other cause I know not, being offended with the said Lady Elizabeth her Sister, at that time lying in her House at Ashbridge, the next day after the rising of Wyatt, sent to her three of her Counsellors, to wit, Sir Richard Southwell, Sir Edward Hastings, then Master of the Horse, and Sir Thomas Cornwallis, with their retinue and troop of Horsemen, to the number of 250. who at their sudden and unprovided coming, found her at the same time sore sick in her Bed, and very feeble and weak of body. Whither when they came, ascending up to her Graces Chamber, they killed one of her Ladies, whom they met, to declare unto her Grace, that there were certain come from the Court, which had a message from the Queen.

Sir R. Southwell, Sir E. Hastings, and Sir T. Cornwallis sent to fetch up the Lady Elizabeth, with whom also afterwards was sent the L. W. Howard, &c.

Her Grace having knowledge thereof, was right glad of their coming; howbeit being then very sick, and the night far spent (which was at ten of the Clock) she requested them by the Messenger, that they would resort thither in the morning. To this they answered, and by the said Messenger sent word again, that they must needs see her, and would so do, in what case soever she were. Whereat the Lady being agast, went to shew her Grace their words, but they, hastily following her, came rushing as soon as she into her Graces Chamber unbidden.

At whose so sudden coming into her Bed-chamber, her Grace, being not a little amazed, said unto them; Is the haste such that it might not have pleased you to come to morrow in the morning?

They made answer, that they were right sorry to see her in that case. And I (quoth she) am not glad to see you here at this time of the night. Whereunto they answered, that they came from the Queen to do their message and duty, which was to this effect, that the Queens pleasure was, that she should be at London the 7. day of that present Month. Whereunto the said, Certes, no Creature more glad than I to come to her Majesty, being right sorry that I am not in case at this time to wait on her, as you your selves do see, and can well tell.

Indeed we see it true (quoth they) that you do say; for which we are very sorry. Albeit we let you to understand, that our Commission is such, and so straiteth us, that we must needs bring you with us, either quick or dead. Whereat she being amazed, sorrowfully said, that their Commission was very fore; but yet notwithstanding she hoped it to be otherwise, and not so strait. Yes verily, said they. Whereupon they calling for two Physicians, Dr. Oswald and Dr. Wendy, demanded of them whether the might be removed from thence with life, or no. Whole answer and judgment was, that there was no impediment in their judgment to the contrary, but that she might travel without danger of life.

In conclusion, they willed her to prepare against the next Morning at nine of the Clock to go with them, declaring that they had brought with them the Queens Litter for her. After much talk, the Messengers declaring how there was no prolonging of times and days, so departed to their Chamber, being entertained and cheered, as appertained to their Worthips.

On the next morrow at the time prescribed, they had her forth as she was, very faint and feeble, and in such case, that she was ready to swoond three or four times between them. What should I speak here, that cannot well be expressed, what an heavy House there was to behold the un-reverend and doleful dealing of these men, but especially the carnal fear and captivity of their innocent Lady and Mistress.

Now to proceed in her Journey from Ashbridge, all sick in the Litter, she came to Redborne, where she was guarded all night. From thence to S. Albanes to Sir Ralph Rowlets House, where the tarried that night, both feeble in body, and comfortless in mind. From that place they passed to Mr. Dods House at Mymms, where also they remained that night; and so from thence came to Highbury, where the being very sick, tarried that night and the next day. During which time of her abode, there came many Purfervants and Messengers from the Court; but for what purpose I cannot tell.

From that place she was conveyed to the Court, where by the way came to meet her many Gentlemen to accompany her Highness, which were very sorry to see her in that case. But especially a great multitude of People there were standing by the way, who then flocking about her Litter, lamented and bewailed greatly her estate. Now when she came to the Court, her Grace was there straightways shut up, & kept as close Prisoner a fortnight, which was till Palm-Sunday, seeing neither King nor Queen, nor Lord, nor Friend, all that time, but only the then L. Chamberlain, Sir J. Gage, and the Vice-chamberlain, which were attendant unto the doors. About which time Sir William Sentlowe was called before the Council. To whose charge was laid, that he knew of Wyatts Rebellion. Which he stoutly denied, professing that hee was a True Man both to God and his Prince, defying all Traytors and Rebels, but being finally examined, he was in Conclusion committed to the Tower.

The Friday before Palms-Sunday, the Bishop of Winchester with 19. other of the Council (who shalbe here nameless) came unto her Grace from the Queens Majesty, and burdened her with Wyatts conspiracy; which she utterly denied, affirming that she was altogether guiltlesstherein. They being not contented with this charged her Grace with busines made by Sir Peter Carew, and the rest of the Gentlemen of the West Country: which also she utterly denying, cleared her Innocency therein.

In Conclusion, after long debating of matters, they declared unto her, that it was the Queens will and pleasure that she should go unto the Tower, while the matter were further tried and examined.

Whereat she being agast, said, that she trusted the Queens Majesty would be a more Gracious Lady unto her, and that her Highness would not otherwise conceive of her, but that she was a True Woman; declaring furthermore to the Lords, that she was Innocent in all those matters wherein they had burdened her, and desired them therefore to be a further mean to the Queen her Sister, that she being a True Woman in thought word, and deed, towards her Majesty, might not be committed to so Notorious and doleful a place, professing that she would request no favour at her hand, if she should be proved to have consented unto any such kind of matter as they laid unto her charge; and therefore in fine desired their Lordships to think of her what she was, and that she might not so extremely be dealt withal for her Truth.

Whereunto the Lords answered again, that there was no remedy, for that the Queens Majesty was fully determined that she should go unto the Tower. Wherewith the Lords departed, with their caps hanging over their eyes. But not long after, within the space of an hour or little more, came four of the foresaid Lords of the Council, which were the Lord Treasurer, the Bp. of Winchester, the Lord Steward, the Earl of Suffex, with the Guard; who warding the next Chamber to her, secluded all her Gentlemen and Yeomen, Ladys and Gentlemen; saving that for one Gentleman Usher, three Gentlemen, and two Grooms of her Chamber, were appointed in their rooms, three other men of the Queens, and three waiting women to give attendance upon her, that none should have access to her Grace.

At which time there was a hundred of Northern Soldiers in white Coats, watching and warding about the Gardens all that night, and a great fire being made in the midst of the Hall, and two certain Lords watching there also with their band and company.

Upon Saturday following, two Lords of the Council (the one was the Earl of Suffex, the other shall be nameless) came and certified her Grace, that forthwith she must go unto the Tower, the Barge being prepared for her, and the Tide now ready, which tarrieth for no Body. In heavy mood her Grace requested the Lords that she might tarry another Tide, trusting that the next would be better; and more comfortable. But one of the Lords replied, that neither time nor Tide was to be delayed.

And when her Grace requested him that she might be suffered to write to the Queens Majesty, he answered, that he durst not permit that: adding, that in his judgement it would rather hurt, than profit her Grace in so doing.

But the other Lord, more courteous and favourable (who was the Earl of Suffex) kneeling down, told her Grace that she should have liberty to write, and as he was a True Man, he would deliver it to the Queens Highness, and bring an answer of the same, whatsoever came thereof. Whereupon she wrote, albeit she could in no case be suffered to speak with the Queen, to her great discomfort, being no offender against the Queens Majesty.

And thus the time and Tide passed away for that season, they privily appointing all things ready that she should go the next Tide, which fell about midnight;

but for fear she should be taken by the way, they durst not. So they staid till the next day, being Palms-Sunday, when about nine of the clock these two returned again, declaring that it was time for her Grace to depart. She answered, if there be no remedy, I must be contented, willing the Lords to go on before. Being come forth into the Garden, she did call her eyes towards the Window, thinking to have seen the Queen, which she could not. Whereat she said, she marvelled much what the Nobility of the Realm meant, which in that sort would suffer her to be led into Captivity, the Lord knew whither, for she did not. In the mean time commandment was given in all London, that every one should keep the Church, and carry their Palms, while in the mean season she might be conveyed without all recourse of people in the Tower.

After all this, she took her Barge with the two foresaid Lords, three of the Queens Gentlewomen, and three of her own, her Gentleman Usher, and two of her Grooms, lying and hovering upon the water a certain space, for that they could not shoot the Bridge, the Bargemen being very unwilling to shoot the same, so soon as they did, because of the danger thereof: for the Stern of the Boat strook upon the ground, the fall was so bigg, and the water was so shallow, that the Boat being under the Bridge, there staid again a while. At landing the first staid and denied to land at those Stairs where all Traytors and Offenders customably used to land, neither well could she, unless she should go over her shoes. The Lords were gone out of the Boat before, and asked why she came not. One of the Lords went back again to her, and brought word she would not come.

Then said one of the Lords, which shall be nameless, that she should not chafe; and because it did then rain, he offered to her his Cloak, which shee, putting it back with her hand with a good dash, refused. So the coming out, having one foot upon the stair, said; Here landeth as true a Subject, being Prisoner, as ever landed at these Stairs: And before thee, O God, I speak it, having no other friends but thee alone.

To whom the same Lord answered again, that if it were so, it was the better for her. At her landing there was a great multitude of their Servants and Warders standing in their order. What needed all this, said she? It is the use (said some) to be when any Prisoner came thither. And if it be (quoth she) for my cause, I beseech you that they may be dismissed. Whereat the Poor Men kneeled down, and with one voice desired God to preserve her Grace, who the next day were released of their cold Coats.

After this, passing a little further, she sat down upon a cold stone, and there rested her self. To whom the Lieutenant then being said; Madam, you were best to come out of the rain, for you sit unwholsomely. She then replying, answered again; It is better sitting here, than in a worse place; for God knoweth, I know not whither you will bring me. With that her Gentleman Usher wept; the demanding of him what he meant so uncomfortably to use her, seeing she took him to be her comfort, and not to dismay her, especially for that she knew her truth to be such that no man should have cause to weep for her. But forth she went into Prison.

The Doors were locked and bolted upon her, which did not a little discomfort and dismay her Grace. At what time she called to her Gentlewoman for her Book, desiring God not to suffer her to build her foundation upon the sands, but upon the Rock, whereby all blasts of blustering weather should have no power against her. The doors of being thus locked, and she close shut up, the Lords had great Conference how to keep ward and watch, every man declaring his own opinion in that behalf, agreeing finally and circumspectly to keep her.

Then one of them, which was the Lord of Suffex, (wearing a cap) said: My Lords, let us take heed, and do no more than our Commission will bear us out in, whatsoever shall happen hereafter. And further, let us consider that she was the King our Masters daughter; and therefore let us use such dealing, that we may answer it hereafter, if it shall so happen: for just dealing, quoth he, is always answerable; whereunto the other Lords agreed that it was well said of him, and thereupon departed. mandment was that he should have Maſs within her houſe. One Maſter Young was then her Chaplain, and becauſe there was none of her men ſo well learned to help the Priſt to ſay Maſs, the Maſs ſtaied for that day.

The next day two of her Yeomen, who had gone long to School before, and were learned, had two Abcies provided, and delivered them, ſo that upon the Abcies they ſhould help the Priſt. One of the ſaid Yeomen, holding the Abcie in his hand, pretending Ignorance at Kyrie Eleiſon, ſet the Priſt, making as though he could answer no farther.

It would make a pitiful and a ſtrange ſtory, here by the way to touch and recite what examination and rackings of Poor Men there were to find out that knife that ſhould cut her throat; what gaping among my Lords of the Clergy, to ſee the day wherein they might waſh their goodly white Rochets in her Innocent Blood; but eſpecially the Biſhop of Wincheſter Stephen Gardiner, then Lord Chancellor, Ruler of the Roſt, who then within 5. days after came unto her, with divers other of the Council, and examined her of the talk that was at Aſbridge, betwixt her and Sir James Acroft, concerning her removing from thence to Dunmington Caſtle, requiring her to declare what ſhe meant thereby.

At the firſt ſhe being ſuddenly asked, did not well remember any ſuch houſe; but within a while, well adviſing her ſelf, ſhe ſaid; Indeed (quoth ſhe) I do now remember that I have ſuch a place, but I never lay in it in all my life. And as for any that hath moved methereunto, I do not remember.

Then to enforce the matter, they brought forth Sir James Acroft. The Biſhop of Wincheſter demanded of her what ſhe ſaid to that man. She answered, that ſhe had little to ſay to him, or to the reſt that were then Priſoners in the Tower. But my Lords (quoth they) you do examine every mean Priſoner of me, wherein me thinks you do me great injury. If they have done evil, and offended the Queens Maſteſty, let them answer to it accordingly. I beſeech you, my Lords, joyn not me in this ſort with any of theſe offenders. And as concerning my going unto Dunmington Caſtle, I do remember that Maſter Hooby and mine Officers, and you Sir James Acroft had ſuch talk, but what is that to the purpoſe, my Lords, but that I may go to mine own houſes at all times?

The Lord of Arundel kneeling down, ſaid, Your Grace ſith true, and certainly we are very ſorry that we have ſo troubled you about ſo vain matters. She then ſaid; My Lords, you do ſift me very narrowly. But well I am aſſured, you ſhall not do more to me than God hath appointed, and ſo God forgive you all.

At their departure Sir James Acroft kneeled down, declaring that he was ſorry to ſee the day in which he ſhould be brought as a witneſs againſt her Grace. But I aſſure your Grace (ſaid he) I have been marvellouſly toſſed and examined touching your Highneſs, which the Lord knoweth is very ſtrange to me. For I take God to record before all your Honours, I do not know any thing of that Crime that you have laid to my charge, and will thereupon take my death, if I ſhould be driven to ſo ſtrict a trial.

That day, or thereabouts, divers of her own Officers, who had made proviſion for her diet, brought the ſame to the outer gate of the Tower, the common rascal Soldiers receiving it; which was no final grief unto the Gentlemen, the bringers thereof. Wherefore they required to ſpeak with the Lord Chamberlain, being then Conſtable of the Tower. Who, coming before his preſence, declared unto his Lordſhip, that they were much afraid to bring her Graces diet, and to deliver it unto ſuch common and deſperate perſons as they were which did receive it, beſeeching his Honour to conſider her Grace, and to give ſuch order, that her viands might at all times be brought in by them which were appointed thereunto. Yea, ſaid he? who appointed you this Office? They answered, her Graces Council. Council, quoth he? There is none or them which hath to do either in that caſt, or any thing elſe within this place; and I aſſure you, for that there is a Priſoner, ſhe ſhall be ſerved with the Lieutenants men, as other the Priſoners are.

Whereat the Gentlemen ſaid, that they truſted for more favour at his hands, conſidering her perſonage; ſaying, that they miſtruſted not, but that the Queen and her Council would be better to her Grace than ſo, and therewith ſhewed themſelves to be offended at the ungrateful words of the Lord Chamberlain towards their Lady and Miſtreſs.

At this he ſware by God, ſtriking himſelf upon the breaſt, that if they did either frown or ſhrug at him, he would ſet them where they ſhould ſee neither Sun nor Moon. Thus taking their leave, they deſired God to bring him into a better mind toward her Grace, and departed from him.

Upon the occaſion whereof, her Graces Officers made great ſute unto the Queens Council, that ſome might be appointed to bring her diet unto her, and that it might no more be delivered unto the common Soldiers of the Tower. Which being reaſonably conſidered, was by them granted. And thereupon were appointed one of her Gentlemen, her Clerk of her Kitchen, and her two Purveyors to bring in her Proviſion, once a day. All which was done, the Wardens ever waiting upon the bringers thereof.

The Lord Chamberlain himſelf being always with them, circumſpectly and narrowly watched and ſearched what they brought, and gave heed that they ſhould have no talk with any of her Graces waiting Servants, and ſo warded them both in and out. At the ſaid ſute of her Officers were ſent by the commandment of the Council, to wait upon her Grace, two Yeomen of her Chamber, one of her Robes, two of her Pantry and Ewry, one of her Buttry, another of her Cellar, two of her Kitchen, and one of her Larder, all which continued with her the time of her trouble.

Here the Conſtable, being at the firſt not very well pleaſed with the coming in of ſuch a company againſt his will, would have had his men ſtill to have ſerved with her Graces men. Which her ſervants at no hand would ſuffer, deſiring his Lordſhip to be contented, for that order was taken, that no ſtranger ſhould come within their Offices. At which answer being fore diſpleaſed, he brake out into theſe threatnings words. Well (ſaid he) I will handle you well enough. Then went hee into the Kitchen, and there would needs have his meat roſted with her Graces meat, and ſaid that his Cook ſhould come thither and dreſs it. To that her Graces Cook answered; My Lord, I will never ſuffer any ſtranger to come about her diet, but her own ſworn men, ſo long as I live. He ſaid they ſhould. But the Cook ſaid, his Lordſhip ſhould pardon him for that matter. Thus did he trouble her poor ſervants very ſtoutly; though afterward he were otherwiſe adviſed, and they more courteouſly uſed at his hands. And good cauſe why. For he had good chear, and fared of the beſt, and her Grace payed well for it. Wherefore he uſed himſelf afterward more reverently toward her Grace.

After this ſort, having lien a whole Month there in cloſe Priſon, and being very evil at eaſe therewithal, the ſent for the Lord Chamberlain, and the Lord Shandoyes to come and ſpeak with her. Who coming, ſhe requeſted them that the might have liberty to walk in ſome place, for that ſhe felt her ſelf not well. To the which they answered, that they were right ſorry that they could not ſatiſfie her Graces requeſt, for that they had commandment to the contrary, which they durſt not in any wiſe break. Furthermore, ſhe deſired of them, if that could not be granted, that the might walk but into the Queens lodging. No, nor yet that (they answered) could by any means be obtained without a further ſute to the Queen and her Council. Well, ſaid ſhe, my Lords, if the matter be ſo hard that they muſt be ſued unto for ſo ſmall a thing, and that friendſhip be ſo ſtrict, God comfort me, and ſo they departed, the remaining in her old dungeon ſtill, without any kind of comfort but only God.

The next day aſtor the Lord Shandoyes came again unto her Grace, declaring unto her that he had ſued unto the Council for further liberty. Some of them conſented thereunto, divers other diſſented, for that there were ſo many priſoners in the Tower. But in conclusion, they did all agree that her Grace might walk into thoſe lodgings, ſo that he and the Lord Chamberlain, and three Liberty granted to Lady Eliz. to walk in a little garden. Afterwards there was liberty granted to her Grace to walk in a little Garden the Doors and Gates being shut up, which notwithstanding was as much discomfort unto her, as the walk in the Garden was pleasant and acceptable. At which times of her walking there, the prisoners on that side straitly were commanded not to speak or look out at the Windows into the Garden, till her Grace were gone out again, having in consideration thereof their Keepers waiting upon them for that time. Thus her Grace with this small liberty contented herself in God, to whom he praiseth therefore.

Suspicious heads. During this time, there used a little Boy, a mans Child in the Tower, to resort to their Chambers, and many times to bring her Grace Flowers, which likewise hee did to the other Prisoners that were there. Whereupon naughty and suspicious heads, thinking to make and wring out some matter thereof, called on a time the Child unto them, promising him Figgs and Apples, and asked of him when hee had been with the Earl of Devonshire, not ignorant of the Childs wonted frequenting unto him. The Boy answered, that hee would go by and by thither. Further, they demanded of him, when he was with the Lady Elizabeths Grace. Hee answered, every day. Furthermore, they examined him, what the Lord of Devonshire, sent by him to her Grace. The Child said, I will go know what he will give to carry to her. Such was the discretion of the Child, being yet but 4. years of age. This same is a crafty Boy, quoth the Lord Chamberlain. How say you my Lord Shandoyes? I pray you my Lord (quoth the Boy) give me the Figgs, you promised me. No Mary (quoth he) thou shalt be whipped if thou come any more to the Lady Eliz. or the Lord Courtenay. The Boy answered, I will bring my Lady my Mistres more Flowers. Whereupon the Childs Father was commanded to permit the Boy no more to come up into their Chambers.

The next day, as her Grace was walking in the Garden the Child peeping in at a hole in the Door, cried unto her, saying; Mistres, I can bring you no more Flowers, Whereat she smiled, but said nothing, understanding thereby what they had done. Wherefore afterwards the Chamberlain rebuked highly his Father, commanding him to put him out of the house. Alas Poor Infant! quoth the Father. It is a crafty knave, quoth the Lord Chamberlain; let me see him here no more.

The fifth day of May, the Constable of the Tower was discharged of his Office, and one Sir Henry Benisfield placed in his room, a Man unknown to her Grace and therefore the more feared; which so sudden mutation was unto her no little amaze. He brought with him an hundred Souldiers in Blew Coats, wherewith she was marvelously discomforted, and demanded of such as were about her, whether the Lady Janes Scaffold were taken away or no, fearing by reason of their coming, lest she should have played her part. To whom answer was made, that the Scaffold was taken away, and that her Grace needed not to doubt of any such Tyranny; for God would not suffer any such Treason against her person. Wherewith being contented, but not altogether satisfied, she asked what Sir Henry Benisfield was, and whether hee was of that Confidence, or no, that if her murdering were secretly committed to his charge he would see the execution thereof.

She was answered, that they were ignorant what manner of man he was. Howbeit they perswaded her that God would not suffer such wickedness to proceed. Well, quoth she, God grant it be so. For thou, O God, canst mollifie all such Tyrannous hearts, and dis appoint all such cruel purposes; and I beseech thee to hear me thy creature, which am thy servant and at thy commandment, trusting by thy Grace ever so to remain.

About which time it was spread abroad, that her Grace should be carried from thence by this new Jolly Captain and his Souldiers; but whither, it could not be learned. Which was unto her a great grief, especially for that such a company was appointed to her guard, requiring rather to continue there still, than to be led thence with such a sort of Rascals. At last, plain answer was made by the Lord Shandoyes, that there was no remedy, but from thence she must needs depart to the Manour of Woodstock, as he thought. Being demanded of her, for what cause; for that (quoth he) the Tower is like further to be furnished. She being desirous to know what he meant thereby, demanded wherewith. He answered, with such matter as the Queen and Council were determined in that behalf, whereof he had no knowledge; and so departed.

In conclusion, on Trinity Sunday, being the nineteenth day of May, she was removed from the Tower, the Lord Treasurer being then there for the lading of her Carcs, and discharging the place of the same, Where Sir Henry Benisfield (being appointed her Jayler) did receive her with a company of rike-hels to guard her, besides the Lord of Darbies Band, waiting in the Country about for the Moonshine in the water. Unto whom at length came my Lord of Tame joyned in Commission with the said Sir Henry, for the safe guiding of her to Prison; And they together conveyed her Grace to Woodstock, as hereafter followeth.

The first day they conducted her to Richmond, where she continued all night, being restrained of her own men, which were lodged in out-chambers, and Sir Henry Benisfields Souldiers appointed in their rooms to give attendance on her Person. Whereat the being marvelously dismayed, thinking verily some secret mischief to be a working towards her, called her Gentleman Usher, and desired him with the rest of his company to pray for her. For this night (quoth she) I think to die. Wherewith he being stricken to the heart, saying; God forbid that any such wickedness should be pretended against your Grace. So comforting her as well as he could, at last he brast out into tears, and went from her down into the Court, where were walking the Lord of Tame, and Sir Henry Benisfield.

Then he coming to the Lord of Tame (who had professed to him much friendship) desired to speak with him a word or two. Unto whom he familiarly said, he would with all his heart. Which when Sir Henry, standing by, heard, he asked what the matter was. To whom the Gentleman Usher answered; No great matter, Sir; (said hee) but to speak with my Lord a word of two.

Then when the Lord of Tame came to him, he spake on this wise: My Lord (quoth he) you have been always my good Lord, and so I beseech you to remain. The cause why I come to you at this time, is to desire your Honour unfainedly to declare unto me whether any danger is meant towards my Mistres this night, or no, that I and my poor fellows may take such part as shall please God to appoint: For certainly we will rather die, than she should secretly and innocently miscarry. Mary (said the Lord of Tame) God forbid that any such wicked purpose should be wrought; and rather than it should be so, I with my men are ready to die at her foot also: and so (praised be God) thy passed that doleful night, with no little heaviness of heart.

Afterwards passing over the water at Richmond, going towards Windsor, her Grace espied certain of her poor Servants standing on the other side, which were very desirous to see her. Whom when she beheld, turning to one of her men standing by, she said; Yonder I see certain of my men: go to them and say these words from me, Tanquam ovem. Like a sheep to the slaughter.

So the passing forward to Windsor, was lodged there that night in the Dean of Windsores house, a place more meet indeed for a Priest than a Prince.

And from thence her Grace was guarded and brought the next night to Maffet Dorners house, where much People standing by the way, some presented to her one gift, and some another, so that Sir Henry was greatly moved therewith, and troubled the poor People very fore, for shewing their loving hearts in such a manner, calling them Rebels and Traitors; with such like vile words.

Besides, as the passed through the Villages, the Townsmen rang the Bells, as being joyful of her coming, thinking verily that it had been otherwise than it

Mr. Benfield judging at the great contentment of the Lady Eliz.

On the Morrow her Grace passing from Mr. Dormers (where was for the time of her abode there, a strait watch kept) came to the Lord of Tames house, where she lay all the night, being very princely entertained both of Knights and Ladies, Gentlemen and Gentlewomen. Whereat Sir Henry Benfield grunted, and was highly offended, saying unto them, that they could not tell what they did, and were not able to answer their doings in that behalf, letting them to understand, that she was the Queens Majesties prisoner, and no otherwife; advising them therefore to take heed and beware of afterclaps. Whereunto the Lord of Tames answered in this wise; that he was well advised of his doings, being joynd in commission as well as he, adding with warrant, that her Grace might and should in his house be merry.

The next day, as she should take her journey from Richmond toward Woodstock, the Lord of Tame with another Gentleman being at Tables, playing, and dropping vie Crowns, the Lady Elizabeth passing by, staied and said she would see the game played out, which Sir Henry Benfield would scarce permit. The game running long about, and they playing, drop vie Crowns, Come on, faith he; I will tarry faith she, and will see this game out.

The rude & ungentlemanly behaviour of Sir Henry Benfield.

After this Sir Henry went up into a chamber, where was appointed for her Grace a chair, two cushions, and a foot-carpet very fair and Prince-like wherein presumptuously he fate and called one Barwick his man to pull off his boots. Which as soon as it was known among the Ladies and Gentles, every one mused thereat, and laughed him to scorn, observing his undirect manners in that behalf, as they might very well.

When supper was done, he called my Lord, and willed him that all the Gentlemen and Ladies should withdraw themselves every one to his lodging, marvelling much that he would permit there such a company, considering so great a charge committed to him.

Sir Henry (quoth my Lord) content your self, all shall be voided, your men and all. Nay, my Souldiers (quoth Sir Henry) shall watch all night. The Lord of Tames answered, it shall not need. Well, said he, need or need not, they shall so do, mistrusting belike the company, which God knoweth was without cause.

Lady Eliz. cometh to Woodstock.

The next day her Grace took her Journey from thence to Woodstock, where she was inclosed, as before in the Tower of London, the Souldiers guarding and warding both within and without the Walls, every day to the number of 60. and in the night without the Walls 40. during the time of her Imprisonment there.

The strait watch kept at Woodstock.

At length he had gardens appointed for her walk, which was very comfortable to her Grace. But always when she did recreate her self therein, the Doors were fast locked up, in as strait manner as they were in the Tower, being at the least five or six locks between her lodging and her walks; Sir Henry himself keeping the keys, and trusting no man therewith. Whereupon she called him her Jaylor; and he kneeling down, desired her Grace not to call him so, for he was appointed there to be one of her Officers. From such Officers (quoth she) good Lord deliver me.

A merry story concerning the strait keeping of the Lady Eliz.

And now by the way, as digressing, or rather refreshing the Reader, if it be lawful in so serious a story to recte a matter incident, and yet not impertinent to the same; occasion here moveth, or rather inforceth me to touch briefly what happened in the same place and time by a certain merry conceited man, being then about her Grace: who noting the strait and strange keeping of his Lady and Mistres by the said Sir Henry Benfield, with so many locks and doors, with such watch and ward about her, as was strange and wonderful, spied a Goat in the ward where her Grace was; and whether to refresh her oppressed mind, or to notifie her strait handling by Sir Henry, or else both, he took it upon his neck, and followed her Grace therewith as she was going into her lodging.

Which when she saw, she asked him what he would do with it, willing him to let it alone. Unto whom the said party answered; No, by Saint Mary (if it like your Grace) will I not; for I cannot tell, whether he be one of the Queens Friends, or no. I will carry him to Sir Henry Benfield (God willing) to know what he is. So leaving her Grace, he went with the Goat on his neck, and carried it to Sir Henry Benfield, who when he saw him coming with it, askt him, half angrily, what he had there.

Unto whom the party answered, saying; Sir (quoth he) I cannot tell what he is. I pray you examine him, for I found him in the place where my Ladies Grace was walking, and what talk they have had I cannot tell. For I understand him not, but he should seem to me to be some stranger, and I think verily a Welchman, for he hath a white Frize Coat on his Back. And forasmuch as I being the Queens Subject, and perceiving the strait charge committed to you of her keeping, that no stranger should have access to her without sufficient license, I have here found a stranger (what he is I cannot tell) in place where her Grace was walking; and therefore for the necessary discharge of my duty, I thought it good to bring the said stranger to you, to examine, as you see cause; and so he set him down. At which his words Sir Henry seemed much displeased, and said; Well, well, you will never leave this gear I fee: and so they departed.

The trust of Sir Henry Benfield to write to the Queen.

Now to return to the matter from whence we have digressed, after her Grace had been there a time, she made sute to the Council that the might be suffered to write to the Queen. Which at last was permitted: So Sir Henry Benfield brought her pen, ink, and paper; and standing by her while she wrote (which he straitly observed) always the being weary, hee would carry away her Letters, and bring them again when she called for them. In the finishing thereof, he would have been messenger to the Queen of the time. Whose request her Grace denied, saying, one of her own men should carry them, and that she would neither trust him, nor any of his therein.

The cruel dealing of Sir Henry Benfield to write to the Queen.

Then he answered again, saying; None of them durst be so bold (he throwed) to carry her Letters being in that case. Yes (quoth she) I am assured I have none so dishonest that would deny my request in that behalf, but will be as willing to serve me now as before. Well said (said he) my Commission is to the contrary, and I may not so suffer it. Her Grace replying again, said; You charge me very often with your Commission. I pray God you may justly answer the cruel dealing you use towards me.

Then he kneeling down, desired her Grace to think and consider how he was a Servant, and put in trust there by the Queen to serve her Majesty; protesting that if the case were hers, he would as willingly serve her Grace, as now he did the Queens Highness. For the which his answer her Grace thanked him, desiring God that the might never have need of such Servants as he was; declaring further to him, that his doings towards her were not good nor answerable, but more than all the Friends he had would stand by.

To whom Sir Henry replied and said, that there was no remedy but his doings must be answered, and so they should, trusting to make good account thereof. The cause which moved her Grace so to say, was for that he would not permit her Letters to be carried four or five days after the writing thereof. But in fine he was the Queens content to send for her Gentleman from the Town of Woodstock, demanding of him whether he durst enterprise the carriage of her Graces Letters to the Queen, or no: and he answered, Yea Sir, that I dare, and will with all my heart. Whereupon Sir Henry, half against his Stomack, took them unto him.

The Letters of the Lady Eliz. sent to the Queen.

Then about the eighth of June came down Doctor Owen and Dr. Wendy, sent by the Queen to her Grace, for that she was sickly; who ministering to her, and letting her Blood, tarried there and attended on her Grace five or six days. Then the being well amended, they returned again to the Court, making their good report to the Queen and the Council of her Graces behaviour.

behaviour and humbleness toward the Queens Highness. Which her Majesty hearing, took very thankfully: but the Bishops thereat repined, looked black in the mouth, and told the Queen, they marvelled that she submitted not her self to her Majesties mercy, considering that she had offended her Highness.

About this time, her Grace was requested by a secret Friend, to submit her self to the Queens Majesty, which would be very well taken, and to her great quiet and commodity. Unto whom she answered, that she would never submit her self to them whom she never offended. For (quoth she) if I have offended and am guilty, I then crave no mercy, but the Law, which I am certain (quoth she) I should have had ere this, if it could be proved by me. For I know my self (I thank God) to be out of the danger thereof, wishing that I were as clear out of the peril of my enemies, and then I am assured I should not be so locked and bolted up within walls and doors as I am. God give them a better mind when it pleaseth him.

Lady Eliz.
to a Spaniard.

About this time there was a great consulting among the Bishops and Gentlemen, touching a marriage for her Grace, which some of the Spaniards wished to be with some Stranger, that she might go out of the Realm with her Portion; some saying one thing, and some another.

Wicked
Counsel given of the Lord Paget against the
Lady Eliz.

A Lord (who shall be here nameless) being there, at last said, that the King should never have any quiet Commonwealth in England, unless her Head were stricken from the shoulders. Whereunto the Spaniards answered, saying, God forbid that their King and Master should have that mind to consent to such a mischief.

Spaniards more ferocious to the Lady Eliz. than some Englishmen

This was the courteous answer of the Spaniards to the Englishmen, speaking after that sort against their own Country. From that day the Spaniards never left off their good persuasions to the King, that the like Honour he should never obtain, as he should in delivering the Lady Elizabeth Grace out of Prison; whereby at length she was happily released from the same. Here is a plain and evident example of the good clemency and nature of the King and his Counsellors toward her Grace (praised be God therefore) who moved their hearts therein. Then hereupon she was sent for shortly after to come to Hampton-Court.

Lady Eliz.
in danger of fire.

But before her removing away from Woodstock, we will a little stay to declare in what dangers her life was, during this time she there remained: first through fire, which began to kindle between the Boards and Ceiling under the Chamber where she lay, whether by a spark of fire gotten into a crany, or whether of purpose by some that meant her no good, the Lord doth know. Nevertheless a worshipful Knight of Oxfordshire, which was there joynted the same time with Sir Henry Benfield in keeping that Lady (who then took up the Boards and quenched the fire) verily supposed it to be done of purpose.

Lady Eliz.
in danger of killing.

Furthermore it is thought, and also affirmed (if it be true) of one Paul Peny a Keeper of Woodstock a notorious Ruffian and a Butcherly wretch, that he was appointed to kill the said Lady Elizabeth: who both saw the man being often in her sight, and also knew thereof.

Another conspiracy of murder against Lady Eliz.

Another time, one of the Privy Chamber, a great man about the Queen, and chief darling of Stephen Gardiner, named Master James Balfour, came to Blendenbridge a mile from Woodstock, with twenty or thirty Privy Coats and sent for Sir Henry Benfield to come and speak with him. But as God would, which disposeth all things after the purpose of his own will, so it happened, that a little before, the said Henry Benfield was sent for by Post to the Council, leaving straight word behind him with his Brother, that no man, whatsoever he were, though coming with a Bill of the Queens hand, or any other Warrant, should have access to her before his return again. By reason whereof it fell out, that Master Benfields Brother, coming to him at the Bridge, would suffer him in no case to approach in, who otherwise (as is supposed) was appointed violently to murder the innocent Lady.

Winche-

Platform or whereon

read before

In the life of Stephen Gardiner we declared before, how that the Lady Elizabeth being in the Tower, a Writ came down, subscribed with certain hands of the Council for her execution. Which if it were certain, as it is reported, Wincheffer (no doubt) was deviser of that mischievous drift: and doubtless the same Actiopol had brought his impious purpose that day to pass, had not the fatherly Providence of Almighty God (who is always stronger than the Devil) stirred up Master Bridger, Lieutenant the same time of the Tower, to come in haste to the Queen, to give Certificate thereof, and to know further her consent touching her Sisters death. Whereupon it followed, that all that device was disappointed, and Wincheffers devilish platform, which he said he had call, through the Lords great goodness came to no effect.

Where moreover is to be noted, that during the imprisonment of this Lady and Princess, one Master Edmund Tremaine was on the Rack, and Master Smith-wike, and divers other in the Tower were examined, and divers offers made to them to accuse the guiltless Lady, being in her Captivity. Howbeit, all that notwithstanding, no matter could be proved by all Examinations, as she the same time lying at Woodstock had certain intelligence by the means of one John Geyer; who, under a colourable pretence of a Letter to Mrs. Cleve from her Father, was let in, and so gave them secretly to understand of all this matter. Whereupon the Lady Elizabeth, at her departing out from Woodstock, wrote these Verses with her Diamond in a glass Window.

Much suspected by me:
Nothing proved can be.

Quoth Elizabeth, Prisoner.

Verses written by Lady Eliz. in the dow.

And thus much touching the Troubles of Lady Elizabeth, at Woodstock. Whereunto this is move to be added, that during the same time, the Lord of Tame had laboured to the Queen, and became Surety for her, to have her from Woodstock to his House, and had obtained grant thereof. Whereupon preparation was made accordingly, and all things ready in expectation of her coming. But through the procurement either of Master Benfield, or by the doing of Wincheffer her mortal Enemy, Letters came over night to the contrary; whereby her Journey was stopped.

Lady Eliz.
not suffered to come to the Lord of Tames house.

Thus this worthy Lady, oppressed with continual sorrow, could not be permitted to have recourse to any Friends she had, but still in the bands of her Enemies was left desolate, and utterly destitute of all that might refresh a doleful heart, fraught full of terror and thraldom. Whereupon no marvel if she hearing upon a time, out of her Garden at Woodstock, a certain Milk-maid singing pleasantly, wished her self to be a Milk-maid as she was, saying that her case was better, and life more merry than was hers, in that state as she was.

Lady Eliz.
wished her self to be a Milk-maid.

Now after these things thus declared, to proceed further there where we left before, Sir Henry Benfield and his Souldiers, with the Lord of Tame, and Sir Ralph Chamberlaine, guarding and waiting upon her, the first Night from Woodstock she came to Ricor. In which Journey such a mighty wind did blow, that her Servants were fain to hold down her cloaths about her: Inasmuch that her Hood was twice or thrice blown from her Head. Whereupon the desiring to return to a certain Gentlemans House there near, could not be suffered by Sir Henry Benfield to do, but was constrained under an Hedgeto trim her Head as well as she could.

Lady Eliz.
from Woodstock to Hampton-Court.

After this, the next night they journeyed to Master Dormers, and so to Colbrooke, where she lay all that night at the George, and by the way coming to Colbrooke, certain of her Graces Gentlemen and Yeomen met her, to the number of threecore, much to all their comforts, which had not seen her Grace of long season before: notwithstanding they were commanded in the Queens Name immediately to depart the Town, to both their, and her Graces no little heaviness, who could not be suffered once to speak with them. So that night all her men were taken from her, saving her Gentleman Usher, three Gentiewomen, two Grooms, and one of her Wardrobe, the Souldiers watching and warding about the House, and she close shut up within her Prison.

The next day following, her Grace entred Hampton-Court on the backside, into the Princes Lodging, the doors being shut to her, and the guarded with Souldiers, as becom, lay there a fortnight at the least, ere any had recourse unto her: At length came the Lord William Howard, who marvellous honourably used her Grace. Whereat she took much comfort, and requested him to be a mean that she might speak with some of the Council. To whom (not long after) came the Bishop of Winchester, the Lord of Arundel, the Lord of Shrewsbury, Secretary Peter, who with great humility humbled themselves to her Grace. She again likewise saluting them, said, My Lords, I am glad to see you: for me think, I have been kept a great while from you desolately alone. Wherefore I would desire you to be a mean to the King and Queens Majesties, that I may be delivered from Prison, wherein I have been kept a long space, as to you my Lords it is not unknown.

Lady Eliz. requested by Words to submit her self to the Queens mercy.

Lady Eliz. Randeth to be tried by the Law.

Talk again between Winchester and Lady Eliz. who consent to commit any fault done to the Queen.

When she had spoken, Stephen Gardiner the Bishop of Winchester kneeled down, and requested that she would submit her self to the Queens Grace, and in so doing he had no doubt, but that her Majesty would be good to her. She made answer, that rather than the would do, that she would lie in Prison all the days of her life; adding, that she craved no mercy at her Majesties Hand, but rather desired the Law, if ever she did offend her Majesty in thought, word or deed: And besides this, in yielding (quoth she) I should speak against my self, and confesse my self to be an offender, which I never was towards her Majesty, by occasion whereof the King and the Queen might ever hereafter conceive of me an evil Opinion: And therefore I say, my Lords, it were better for me to lie in Prison for the Truth, than to be abroad and suspected of my Prince. And so they departed, promising to declare her Message to the Queen.

On the next day the Bishop of Winchester came again unto her Grace, and kneeling down declared that the Queen marvelled that she had so stoutly use her self, not confessing that she had offended: so that it should seem that the Queens Majesty had wrongfully imprisoned her Grace.

Nay, quoth the Lady Elizabeth, it may please her to punish me as she thinketh good.

Well quoth Gardiner, her Majesty willett me to tell you, that you must tell another Tale ere that you be set at Liberty.

Her Grace answered, that she had as lief be in Prison with honesty and Truth, as to be abroad, suspected of her Majesty; and this that I have said, I will (said she) stand unto, for I will never bely my self.

Winchester again kneeled down, and said, Then your Grace hath the vantage of me and other the Lords for your wrong and long imprisonment.

What vantage I have (quoth she) you know, taking God to record, I seek no vantage at your hands for your fo dealing with me, but God forgive you and me also. With that the self kneeled, desiring her Grace that all might be forgotten, and so departed, she being fast Locked up again.

Lady Eliz. is set to the Queens.

A leventnight after the Q. sent for her Grace at ten of the Clock in the night to speak with her: for she had not seen her in two years before. Yet for all that she amazed at the sudden sending for, thinking it had been worse than afterwards it proved, desired her Gentlemen and Gentlewomen to pray for her, for that she could not tell whether ever she should see them again or no.

At which time Sir Henry Benisfield with Mrs. Clarencius coming in, her Grace was brought into the Garden unto a stairs foot that went into the Queens Lodging, her Graces Gentlewoman waiting upon her, her Gentleman Usher and her Grooms going before with Torches; where her Gentlemen and Gentlewomen being commanded to stay all saving one Woman, Mrs. Clarencius conducted her to the Queens Bed-Chamber where her Majesty was.

Lady Eliz. brought to the Queens Bed chamber.

At the sight of whom her Grace kneeled down, and desired God to preserve her Majesty, not mistrusting but that she should try her self as true a Subject towards her Majesty, as ever did any, and desired her Majesty even so to judge of her; and said, that she should not find her to the contrary, whatsoever report otherwise had gone of her.

To whom the Queen answered, you will not confesse your offence, but stand stoutly to your Truth; I pray God it may fall out.

If it doth not (quoth the Lady Elizabeth) I request neither Favour nor Pardon at your Majesties hands. Well (said the Queen) you stiffly still persevere in your Truth. Belike you will not confesse but that you have been wrongfully punished.

I must not say so (if it please your Majesty) to you.

Why then (said the Queen) belike you will to other. No, if it please your Majesty (quoth she) I have born the Burden and must bear it. I humbly beseech your Majesty to have a good Opinion of me, and to think me to be your true Subject, not only from the beginning hitherto, but for ever, as long as Life lasteth: and so they departed with very few comfortable words of the Queen in English: but what she said in Spanish, God knoweth. It is thought that King Philip was there behind a Cloth and not seen, and that he shewed himself a very Friend in that matter, &c.

Thus her Grace departing, went to her Lodging again, and that day leventnight was released of Sir Henry Benisfield her Gaoler (as he termed him), and his Souldiers, and so her Grace being set at liberty from imprisonment went into the Country, and had appointed to go with her Sir Thomas Pope, one of Q. Maries Counsellors, and one of her Gentlemen Ushers, Master Gage: and thus finally was she looked to all Queen Maries time. And this is the discourse of her Highness imprisonment.

Then there came to Lambeyre, Mr. Ferningham, and Mr. Norris Gentleman Usher, Queen Maries men, who took away from her Grace, Mrs. Ashley to the Fleet, and three other of her Gentlemen to the Tower; which thing was no little trouble to her Grace, saying, that she thought they would fetch all away at the end. But God be praised, shortly after was fetched away Gardiner through the merciful providence of the Lords goodness, by occasion of whole opportune decease (as is partly touched in this Story before) the life of this excellent Prince, the wealth of all England was preserved. For this is credibly to be supposed, that the said wicked Gardiner of Winchester had long laboured his wits, and to this only most principal bent all his devices, to take this our happy and dear Sovereign out of the way, as both by his words and doings before notified, may sufficiently appear.

But such was the gracious and favorable providence of the Lord, to the preservation not only of her Royal Majesty, but also of the miserable and woful state of this whole Island, and poor Subjects of the same, whereby the proud Platforms and peevish Practices of this wicked Absitophel prevailed not: but contrariwise, both he, and all the Snares and Trapps of his pernicious counsel laid against another, were turned to a Net to catch himself, according to the Proverb, Malum consilium confusorem pessimum.

After the death of this Gardiner, followed the death also and drooping away of other her Enemies, whereby by little and little her Jeopardy decreased, fear diminished, hope of comfort began to appear as out of a dark Cloud: and albeit as yet her Grace had no full assurance of perfect safety, yet more gentle entertainment daily did grow unto her, till at length in the month of November, and seventeenth day of the fame, three years after the death of Stephen Gardiner, followed the death of Queen Mary, as hereafter God granting shall be more declared.

Although this History following be not directly appertaining to the former matter, yet the same may here not unsafely be inferred, for that it doth discover and shew forth the malicious hearts of the Papists towards Lady this virtuous Queen our Sovereign Lady in the time of Queen Mary her Sister, which is reported, as a Truth credibly told, by sundry honest Persons, of whom some are yet alive, and do testify the same. The matter whereof is this.

Anno 1558.

Talk between the Queen and Lady Eliz.

Sms comfort at the Queens hand toward her Sister.

King Philip thought to be a Friend to Lady Elizabeth.

Lady Eliz. by Gods providence set at liberty Sir H. Benisfield discharged.

Mrs. Ashley sent to the Fleet, Gentlemen of the Tower sent to the Tower. No one of the Lords working of the Lords providence in saving of Lady Elizabeth.

Lady Eliz. delivered by the death of Sir H. Gardiner.

How the Lord here began to work for Lady Elizabeth.

A note of a Story declaring the malignance hearts of the Papists toward Lady Elizabeth.

Anno 1558. Soon after the fir of Wiat and the troubles that happened to this Queen for that cause, it fortun'd one Robert Farrer a Haberdasher of London, dwelling near unto Newgate-Market, in a certain morning to bee at the Rose Tavern (from whence he was seldom absent) and falling to his common drink, as he was ever accustomed, and having in his company three other companions like to himself, it chanced the same time one Lawrence Shirriff Grocer, dwelling also not farr from thence, to come into the said Tavern, and finding there the said Farrer (to whom of long time he had born good will) fate down in the seat to drink with him, and Farrer having in his full cups, and not having consideration who were present, began to talk at large, and namely against the Lady Elizabeth, and said, that Jill hath bin one of the chief Doers of this Rebellion of Wiat, and before all be done, she and all the Hereticks her partakers, shall well understand of it. Some of them hope that she shall have the Crown, but she and they (I trust) that so hope, shall hop headless, or be fried with fagots before she come to it.

The fore said Lawrence Shirriff Grocer being then Servant unto the Lady Elizabeth, and sworn unto her Grace, could no longer forbear his old acquaintance and neighbour Farrer in speaking to unreverently of his Mistress, but said unto him; Farrer, I have loved thee as a neighbour, and have had a good opinion of thee, but hearing of thee that I now hear, I despise thee; and I tell thee I am her Graces sworn Servant, and she is a Princess, and the Daughter of a Noble King, and it evil becometh thee to call her a Jill, and for thy so saying, I say thou art a knave, and I will complain upon thee. Do thy worst said Farrer: for that I said, I will say again, and so Shirriff came from his company.

Shortly after the said Shirriff, taking an honest neighbour with him, went before the Commissioners to complain; the which Commissioners fate then at Boner the Bishop of London house beside Pauls, and there were present, Boner, then being the chief Commissioner, the Lord Mordant, Sir John Baker, Dr. Darbishire Chancellor to the Bishop, Doctor Story, Doctor Harpfield, and other.

The aforesaid Shirriff coming before them, Declared the manner of the said Rob. Farrers talk against the Lady Elizabeth. Boner answered, Peradventure you took him worse than he meant.

Yea my Lord, said Dr. Story, if you knew the man as I do, you would say there is not a better Catholick, nor an honestier man in the City of London.

Well, said Shirriff, my Lord, she is my gracious Lady and Mistress, and it is not to be suffered that such a Varlet as he is should call to Honourable a Princess by the name of a Jill: And I saw yesterday in the Court that my Lord Cardinal Pool, meeting her in the Chamber of Prefence, kneeled down on his knees and kissed her hand; and I saw also that King Phillip meeting her, made her such obeysance, that his knee touched the ground; and then me thinketh it were too much to suffer such a Varlet as this is, to call her Jill, and to wish them to hop headless that shall with her Grace to enjoy the possession of the Crown, when God shall send it unto her, as in the right of her inheritance. Yea? stay there quoth Boner. When God sendeth it unto her, let her enjoy it. But truly (said he) the man that spake the words that you have reported meant nothing against the Lady Eliz. your Mistress; and no more do we: but he like an honest and zealous man feared the alteration of Religion, which every good man ought to fear: and therefore (said Boner) good man go your ways home and report well of us toward your Mistress, and we will fend for Farrer and rebuke him for his rash and undiscreet words, and we trust he will not do the like again. And thus Shirriff came away, and Farrer had a flap with a Fox tail.

Now that ye may be fully informed of the aforesaid Farrer, whom Doctor Story prayed for so good a man, ye shall understand that the same Farrer having two Daughters being handfom Maidens the elder of them for a sum of money he himself delivered to Sir Roger Cholmley to be at his commandment, the other he sold to a Knight called Sir William Gooddelphin to be at his commandment; whom he made his lacky; and so carried her with him; being apparelled in mans apparel; to Boleia, and the said Farrer followed the camp. He also was a great and an horrible Blasphemer of God; and a common accuser of honest and quiet men, also a common drunkard. And now I refer the life of these Catholicks to your judgment, to think of them as you please.

But of this matter enough, and too much. Now let us return where we left before, which was at the Death of Queen Mary. After whose decess succeeded her fore said Sister Lady Elizabeth into the right of the Crown of England: who after so long Restraintment, so great dangers escaped, such blusterous forms overblown, so many injuries digested and wrongs sustained, by the mighty protection of our merciful God, to our no small comfort and commodity, hath been exalted and erected out of thrall to liberty, out of danger to peace and quietness, from dread to dignity, from misery to Majesty, from mourning to ruling; briefly, of a Prisoner made a Princess, and placed in her Throne Royal, proclaimed now Queen, with as many glad hearts of her Subjects, as ever was any King or Queen in this Realm before her, or ever shall be (I dare say) hereafter.

Touching whose flourishing state, her Princely Reign and peaceable government, with divers and sundry other things incident to the same, and especially touching the great fires and alterations which have happened in other foreign Nations, and also partly among our selves here at home, so far as much as the tractation hereof requirereth another Volume by it self, I shall therefore defer the Reader to the next Book or Section insuing; where in (if the Lord so please to sustain me with leaveable life) I may have to discourse of all and singular such matters done and achieved in these our latter days and memory, more at large.

Now then after these so great afflictions falling upon this Realm, from the first beginning of Queen Maries Reign, wherein so many Men, Women, and Children were burned, many imprisoned, and in Prisons starved, divers exiled, some spoyled of goods and possessions, a great number driven from house and home, so many weeping eyes, so many sobbing hearts, so many Children made Fatherless, so many Fathers bereft of their Wives and Children, so many vexed in Conscience, and divers against Conscience constrained to recant; and in conclusion, never a good man almost in all the Realm but suffered something during all the time of this bloody persecution; after all this (I say) now we are come at length (the Lord be praised) to the 17. day of November: which day as it brought to the persecuted Members of Christ rest from their careful mourning, so it easeth me somewhat likewise of my laborious writing, by the death I mean of Q. Mary. Who being long sick before, upon the said 17. day of November, in the year above said about three or four a clock in the morning, yielding up her life to nature, and her Kingdom to Queen Elizabeth, her Sister.

As touching the manner of whose death; some say that she died of a Tympany, some (by her much fighting before her death) supposed she died of thought and sorrow. Whereupon her Council seeing her fighting, and desirous to know the cause, to the end they might minister the more ready consolation unto her, feared, as they said, that she took that thought for the Kings Majesty her Husband, which was gone from her. To whom the answering again, Indeed (said she) that may be one cause, but that is not the greatest wound that pierceth my oppressed mind: but what that was she would not express to them.

Albeit; afterward she opened the matter more plainly to Mr. Rife and Mistress Clarentius (if it be true that they told me, which heard it of Mr. Rife himself) who then being most familiar with her, and most bold about her, told her that they feared she took thought for King Phillips departing from her. Not that only (said she) but when I am dead and opened, you shall find Calice lying in my heart, &c. And here an end of Q. Mary and of her persecution.

Of which Queen this truly may be affirmed, and left in story for a perpetual memorial or Epitaph for all Kings and Queens that shall succeed her, to be noted. That before her never was read in story of any King or Queen

Lady Eliz. proclaimed Queen the same day that Q. Mary died.

The Lord make England thankful to him for his great benefits.

Queen of England since the time of King Lucius under whom in time of peace, by hanging, heading, burning, and imprisoning, so much Christian Blood, so many Englishmens lives were spilled within this Realm, as under the said Queen Mary for the space of four years was to be seen, and I beseech the Lord never may be seen hereafter.

A brief declaration, shewing the unprosperous success of Queen Mary in persecuting Gods People, and how mightily God wrought against her in all her Affairs.

The Reign of Q. Mary how unprosperous it was both to her, and to her Realm, in all respects.

Now, forasmuch as Queen Mary, during all the time of her Reign, was such a vehement Adversary and persecutor against the sincere professors of Christ Jesus and his Gospel: for the which there be many which do highly magnifie and approve her doings therein, reputing her Religion to be found and Catholick and her proceedings to be most acceptable and blessed of Almighty God: to the intent therefore, that all men may understand, how the blessing of the Lord God did not only not proceed with her proceedings, but contrariwise rather, how his manifest displeasure ever wrought against her, in plaguing both her and her Realm, and in subverting all her counsels and attempts, whatsoever she took in hand, we will bestow a little time therein, to perpend and survey the whole course of her doings and chievances, and consider what success she had in the fame. Which being well considered, we shall never find any reign of any Prince in this Land, or any other, which did ever shew in it (for the proportion of times,) so many arguments of Gods great wrath and displeasure, as was to be seen in the Reign of this Queen Mary, whether we behold the shortness of her time, or the unfortunate event of all her purposes, who seemed never to purpose any thing that came luckily to pass, neither did any thing frame to her purpose, whatsoever she took in hand touching her own private Affairs.

Q. Mary never had good success in any thing she went about.

A good King always makes a flourishing Realm.

Of good Kings we read in the Scripture, in shewing mercy and pity, in seeking Gods will in his Word, and subverting the Monuments of Idolatry, how God blessed their ways, increased their honours, and mightily prospered all their proceedings; as we see in King David, Solomon, Josias, Josaphat, Ezechias, with such other. Manasses made the streets of Jerusalem to swim with the Blood of his Subjects, but what came of it the Text doth testify.

Comparison between the Reign of Q. Mary and Q. Elizabeth.

Of Queen Elizabeth, which now reigneth among us, this we must needs say, which we see, that she in sparing the Flood, not only of Gods Servants, but also of Gods Enemies, hath doubled now the Reign of Queen Mary her Sister, with such abundance of peace and prosperity, that it is hard to say, whether the Realm of England felt more of Gods wrath in Queen Maries time, or of Gods favor and mercy in these blessed and peaceable days of Q. Elizabeth.

Gamaliel's reason.

Gamaliel speaking his mind in the Council of the Pharisees concerning Christs Religion, gave this reason: That if it were of God, it should continue, whosoever said nay; If it were not, it could not stand. So may it be said of Queen Mary and her Romish Religion, That if it were so perfect and Catholick as they pretend, and the contrary Faith of the Gospellers were so detestable and Heretical as they make it; how cometh it then, that this so Catholick a Queen, such a necessary Pillar of his Spouse the Church, continued no longer, till she had utterly rooted out of the Land this Heretical generation? yea how chanced it rather, that Almighty God, to spare these poor Hereticks, rooted out Queen Mary so soon from her Throne, after she had reigned but only five years and five months?

Q. Mary prospered so long as she went not against the Lord.

Q. Maries promise to the Gospellers broken.

Now furthermore, how God blessed her ways and endeavours in the mean time, while she thus persecuted the true Servants of God, remaineth to be discussed. Where this is first to be noted, that when the first began to stand for the title of the Crown, and yet had wrought no resistance against Christ and his Gospel, but had promised her faith to the Suffolk men, to maintain the Religion left by King Edward her Brother, so long God went with her, advanced her, and by the means of the Gospellers brought her to the possession of the Realm.

But after that she breaking her promise with God and man, began to take part with Stephen Gardiner, and had given over her Supremacy unto the Pope, by-and-by Gods blessing left her, neither did any thing well thrive with her afterward during the whole time of her Regiment.

For first incontinently the fairest and greatest Ship he had, called Great Harry, was burned; such a Vessel as in all these parts of Europe was not to be matched.

Then would the needs bring in King Philip, and by her strange marriage with him, to make the whole Realm of England Subject unto a Stranger. And all that notwithstanding, that she either did or was able to do, she could not bring to pass to set the Crown of England upon his head. With King Philip also came in the Pope and his Popish Mass; with whom also her purpose was to restore again the Monks and Nuns unto their places, neither lacked there all kind of attempts to the uttermost of her ability: and yet therein also God stopt her of her will, that it came not forward. After this, what a death happened in her time here in her Land? the like whereof hath not lightly in England been seen, inasmuch that in sundry places her poor Subjects were fain to feed of Acorns for want of Corn.

Furthermore, where other Kings are wont to be renowned by some worthy victory and prowess by them achieved, let us now see what Valiant Victory was gotten in this Queen Maries days. King Edward the sixth her blessed Brother, how many Rebellions did he suppress in Devonshire, in Norfolk, in Oxfordshire and elsewhere? what a famous Victory in his time was gotten in Scotland, by the singular working (no doubt) of Gods blessed hand) rather than by any expectation of Man? King Edward the third (which was the eleventh King from the conquest) by Princely puissance purchased Calice unto England, which hath been kept English ever since, till at length came Queen Mary, the eleventh likewise from the said King Edward, which lost Calice from England again: so that the wimmings of this Queen were very small, what the losses were let other men judge.

Hitherto the affairs of Queen Mary have had no great good success, as you have heard. But never worse success had any Woman, than had she in her Childbirth. For seeing one of these two must needs be granted, that either she was with Child or not with Child: if she were with Child and did Travel, why was it not seen? if she were not, how was all the Realm deluded?

And in the mean while, where were all the Prayers, the Solemn Processions, the devout Masses of the Catholick Clergy? why did they not prevail with God, if their Religion were so godly as they pretend? If their Masses Ex opere operato be able to fetch Christ from Heaven, and to reach down to Purgatory: how chanced then they could not reach to the Queens Chamber, to help her in her Travel, if she had been with Child indeed? if not, how then came it to pass, that all the Catholick Church of England did so err, and was so deeply deceived? Queen Mary after these manifold Plagues and Corrections, which might sufficiently admonish her of Gods disfavour provoked against her, would not yet cease her persecution, but still continued more and more to revenge her Catholick Zeal upon the Lords faithful People, setting fire to their poor Bodies by dozens and half dozens.

Whereupon Gods wrathful indignation, increasing more and more against her, ceased not to touch her more near with private Misfortunes and Calamities. For after that he had taken from her the fruit of Children (which chiefly and above all things she desired) then he bereft her of that, which of all earthly things should have been her chief stay of Honour, and staff of Comfort, that is, withdrew from her the Affection and Company even of her own Husband, by whose marriage she had promised before to her self whole Heaps of Joy and Felicity: but now the Omnipotent Governor of all things so turned the Wheel of her own spinning against her, that her High Buildings of such Joys and Felicities came all to a Cattle come down; her hopes being countenanced, her purposes disappointed, and the now brought to defolation: who seemed neither to have the favour of God, nor the hearts of her Subjects, nor yet the love of her Husband; who neither had fruit by him while she had him, neither could now enjoy him whom he had married, neither yet was at liberty to marry any other whom she might enjoy. Mark here (Christian Reader) the woful Adversity of this Queen, and learn withal what the Lord can do when mans wilfulness will needs resist him, and will not be ruled.

At last, when all these fair admonitions would take no place with the Queen, nor remove her to revoke her bloody Laws, nor to stay the Tyranny of her Priests, nor yet to spare her own Subjects, but that the poor Servants of God were drawn daily by Heaps most pitifully as Sheep to the slaughter, it so pleased the Heavenly Majesty of Almighty God, when no other remedy would serve, by death to cut her off, which in her life so little regarded the life of others, giving her Throne, which she abused to the destruction of Christs Church and People, to another who more temperately and quietly could guide the same, after she had reigned here the space of five years and five months. The shortness of which years and reign, scarce we find in any other Story of King or Queen since the Conquest or before (being come to their own Government) have only in King Richard the third.

And thus much here, as in the closing up of this Story, I thought to insinuate, touching the unclucky and rueful Reign of Queen Mary: not for any detraction to her place and State Royal, whereunto she was called of the Lord, but to this only intent and effect, that forasmuch as she would needs set her self so confidently to work and strive against the Lord and his proceedings, all Readers and Rulers may not only see how the Lord did work against her therefore, but also by her may be adverted and learn what a Perillous thing it is for Men and Women in Authority, upon blind Zeal and Opinion, to stir up persecution in Christians Church, to the effusion of Christian Blood, lest it prove in the end with them (as it did here) that while they think to persecute Hereticks, they stumble at the same Stone as did the Jews in persecuting Christ and his true Members to death, to their own confusion and destruction.

The severe punishment of God upon the persecutors of his People and Enemies to his Word, with such also as have been Blasphemers, contemners, and mockers of his Religion.

LEAVING now Queen Mary, being dead and gone, I come to them which under her were the chief Ministers and doers in this persecution, the Bishops (I mean) and Priests of the Clergy, to whom Queen Mary gave all the execution of her Power; as did Queen Alexandra to the Pharisees after the time of the Maccabees. Of whom Iosephus thus writeth, Ipsa solum nomen regium ferebat, ceteram omnem regni potestatem Pharisei possidebant: that is, She only retained to her self the name and Title of the Kingdom, but all her Power she gave to the Pharisees to possess, &c. Touching which Prelates and Priests here is to be noted in like sort the wonderful and miraculous providence of Almighty God which as he abridged the Reign of their Queen, so he suffered them not to escape unvisited: first beginning with Stephen Gardiner the Arch-persecutor of Christ Church, whom he took away about the midst of the Queens Reign. Of whose poisoned life, and sinking end, forasmuch as sufficient hath been touched before, I shall not need here to make any new rehearsal thereof.

After him dropped other away also, some before the death of Queen Mary, and some after; as Morgan Bishop of St. Davids, who sitting upon the Condemnation of the blessed Martyr Bishop Farrer, and unjustly usurping his Room, notlong after was stricken by Gods hand after such a strange sort, that his meat would not go down, but rise and pick up again, sometime at his mouth, sometime blown out at his Nose most horrible to behold, and so he continued till his death: Where note moreover that when Master Leson, being then Sheriff at Bishop Farrers burnings, had set away the Cattle of the said Bishop from his Servants house called Marthrew Harbottle, into his own custody, the Cattle coming, into the Sheriffs ground, divers of them would never eat meat, but lay Belowing and Roaring, and so died.

This foresaid Bishop Morgan above mentioned, bringing me also in remembrance of Justice Morgan, who fate upon the death of the Lady Jane, and not long after the same fell mad, and was bereft of his wits, and so died, having ever in his mouth, Lady Jane, Lady Jane, &c.

Before the death of Queen Mary died Dr. Dunning the bloody and wretched Chancellor of Norwich, who, after he had most rigorously condemned and murdered so many simple and faithful Saints of the Lord, continued not long himself, but in the midst of his Rage in Q. Marys days died in Lincolnshire, being suddenly taken (as some say) sitting in his Chair.

The like sudden death fell also upon Berry Com-military in Norfolk, who (as is before shewed in the Story of Thomas Hudson) four days after Q. Marys death, when he had made a great feast, and had one of his Concubines there, coming home from the Church after Evening-song, where he had ministered Baptism the same time, between the Church-yard and his house suddenly fell down to the ground with a heavy groan, and never stirred after neither shewed any one token of repentance.

What a stroke of Gods Hand was brought upon the cruel Persecutor of the holy and harmless Saints of the Lord, Bishop Thornton, Suffragan of Dover, who after he had exercised his cruel Tyranny upon so many godly men at Canterbury, at length coming upon a Saturday from the Chapter house at Canterbury to Borne and there upon Sunday following looking upon his men playing at the Bowls, fell suddenly in a Palfrey, and so had to Bed, was willed to remember God: Yea, so I do (saide) and my Lord Cardinal too &c.

After him succeeded another Bishop or Suffragan ordained by the foresaid Cardinal. It is reported that he had been Suffragan before to Bener, who, not long after being made Bishop or Suffragan of Dover, brake his Neck falling down a pair of Stairs in the Cardinals Chamber at Greenwich, as he had received the Cardinals blessing.

Among other plentiful and sundry examples of the Lords Judgment and severity practised upon the cruel Persecutors of his People, that is not the least that followeth, concerning the Story of one William Fenning, the effect and circumstance of which matter is this.

John Cooper of the age of 44 years, dwelling at Wat-sam in the County of Suffolk, being by Science a Carpenter; a man of very honest report and a good house-keeper, a harboure of strangers that travelled for conscience, and one that favoured Religion, and those that were religious, was of honest conversation and good life, hating all Popish and Papistical trash.

This man being at home in his house, there came unto him one William Fenning, a Serving-man, dwelling in the said Town of Wat-sam, and understanding that the said Cooper had a couple of fair Bullocks, did desire to buy them of him; which Cooper told him that he was loath to sell them, for that he had brought them up for his own use, and if he should sell them, he then must be compelled to buy other, and that he would not do.

When Fenning saw he could not get them (for he had often assaid the matter) he said, he would fit as much in his light, and so departed, and went and accused him of high Treason. The words he was charged with were these, How he should pray, if God would not take away Queen Mary, that then the Devil would take her away. Of these words did this Fenning charge him before Sir Henry Duell Knight (unto whom he was carried by Mr. Tymperley of Hinclesam in Suffolk, and one Grimwood of Lowshaw Constable) which words Cooper flatly denied; and said he never spake them: but that could not help.

Notwithstanding, he was arraigned therefore at Berry before Sir Clement Higham, at a Lent Assize, and there this Fenning brought two naughty men that witnessed the speaking of the foresaid words, whose names were Richard White of Wat-sam, and Grimwood of Higham, in the said County of Suffolk. Whose Testimonies were received as Truth, although this good man John Cooper had said what he could to declare himself innocent therein, but to no purpose, God knoweth. For his life was determined, as in the end appeared by Sir Clement Highams words, who said he should not escape, for an example to all Heretics, as indeed he thoroughly performed. For immediately he was judged to be hanged, drawn, and quartered, which was executed upon him very shortly after, to the great grief of many a good heart. Here good Cooper is bereft of his life, and leaves behind him alive his Wife and nine Children, with Goods and Cattle, to the value of three hundred Marks, the which Substance was all taken away by the said Sir Henry Doel Sheriff, but his Wife and poor Children left to the wide World in their Cloaths, and suffered not to enjoy one Penny of that they had fore laboured for, unless they made Friends to buy it with money of the said Sheriff, so cruel and greedy was he and his Officers upon such things as were there left.

The Judgment of God upon Grimwood.

Well, now this innocent man is dead, his Goods spoiled, his Wife and Children left desolate and comfortless and all things husht, and nothing feared of any part: yet the Lord, who surely doth revenge the guiltless Blood, would not still so suffer it, but began at the length to punish it himself. For in the Harvest after, the said Grimwood of Hitcham one of the witnesses before specified, as he was in his labour flaking up a Goff of Corn, having his health, and fearing no Peril, suddenly his Bowels fell out of his Body, and immediately most miserably he died; such was the terrible judgment of God, to shew his displeasure against his Bloody Act, and to warn the rest by these his judgments to repentance. The Lord grant us to honour the same, for his mercies sake. Amen.

This forefaid Fenning, who was the procurer of this Tyranny against him, is yet alive, and is now a Minister; which if he be, I pray God he may so repent that Fact, that he may declare himself hereafter such a one as may well answer to his vocation accordingly.

But since we have heard that he is no changeling, but continueth still in his wickedness, and therefore presented before the worshipful Master Humerson, Esquire and Justice of Peace and Quorum, for that he had talk with some of his Friends (as he thought) how many honest Women (to their great infamy) were in the Parish of Wenstehaston, wherein he is now Vicar, resident: wherefore he was commanded the next Sunday ensuing, to ask all the Parish forgiveness upon his Knees openly in Service time, which he did in Wenstehaston Church before said, and moreover the abovesaid Fenning is reported to be more like a sinner than a Minister.

A terrible example of Gods severe punishment upon one Nightengale, Vicar of Crondal in Kent.

To these examples also may be added the terrible judgment of God upon the Parson at Crondal in Kent, who upon Sbrove-Sunday, having received the Popes Pardon from Cardinal Pool, came to his Parish, and exhorted the People to receive the same, as he had done himself; saying that he stood now so clear in Conscience as when he was first born, and cared not now if he should die the same hour, in the clearness of his Conscience; whereupon being suddenly stricken by the hand of God, and leaning a little on the one side, immediately thrunk down in the Pulpit, and so was found dead, speaking not one word more. Read before.

D. Gifford Chancellor of Salisbury.

Not long before the death of Queen Mary died Dr. Capon Bishop of Salisbury. About the which time also followed the unprepared death of Doctor Geffrey, Chancellor of Salisbury, who in the midst of his buildings, suddenly being taken by the mighty hand of God, yielded his life, which had so little pity of other mens lives before. Concerning whose cruelty partly mention is made before.

As touching moreover this forefaid Chancellor, here is to be noted, that he departing upon a Saturday, the next day before the same he had appointed to call before him 90. Persons and not so few, to examine them by Inquisition, had not the goodness of the Lord, and his tender providence thus prevented him with death, providing for his poor Servants in time.

And now (to come from Priests to Lay-men) we have to find in them also no less terrible demonstration of Gods heavy judgment upon such as have been Vexers and Persecutors of his People.

Before in the Story of Mr. Bradford mention was made of Master Woodroffe, who being the Sheriff, used much to rejoice at the death of the poor Saints of Christ, and so hard he was in his Office, that when Mr. Rogers was in the Cart going toward Smithfield, and in the way his Children were brought unto him, the People making a Lane for them to come; Master Woodroffe bade the Car-mans heard should be broken for staying his Cart. But what happened? He was not come out of his Office the space of a week, but he was stricken by the sudden hand of God, the one half of his Body in such sort, that he lay benumbed and bedrid, not able to move himself but as he was lifted of other, and so continued in that infirmity the space of seven or eight years, till his cying day.

Likewise touching Ralph Lardin the betrayer of George Eagles, it is thought of some, that the said Ralph afterward was attached himself, arraigned, and hanged.

Who, being at the Barr, had these words before the Judges there, and a great multitude of People. This is most justly fallen upon me, faith he, for that I have betrayed the innocent Blood of a good and just man George Eagles, who was here condemned in the time of Queen Maries Reign through my procurement, who sold his Blood for a little money. Not much unlike stroke of these feverally was shewed upon William Swallow of Chelmsford, and his Wife, also upon Richard Potts, and Justice Brown, cruel Persecutors of the said George Eagles, concerning whose Story read before.

Among other Persecutors also came to our hands the cruelty of one Mr. Swingfield an Aldermans Deputy about Thames-free, who hearing one Angels Wife, a Mid-wife that kept her self from their Popish Church, to be at the labour of one Mrs. Walter at Crooked Iseland, took three other with him, and beset the house about, and took her and carried her to Boners Officers, big with Child, eight and twenty weeks gone, who laid her in Lollards-Tower; where, the same day she came in, through fear and a fall at her taking, she was delivered of a man Child, and could have no Women with her in that needful time. Lying there five weeks, she was delivered under Sureties by friendship, and Doctor Story hearing thereof charged her with Felony, and so sent her, to Newgate. The cause was, for that she had a Woman at her house in her labour that died, and the Child also, and so he charged her with their death.

But when Sir Roger Cholmley heard her tell her Tale, he delivered her; and not much more than ten weeks after, if it were so long, died the said Master Swingfield and the other three that came to take her.

Because some there be, and not a few, which have trayed one such a great devotion in setting up the Popish Mass, I shall desire them to mark well this Story following. There was a certain Bayliff of Crowland in Lincolnshire named, Burton, who pretending an earnest friendship to the Gospel in K. Edwards days, in outward shew at least (although inwardly he was a Papist or Atheist, and well known to be a man of a wicked and adulterous life) set forth the Kings proceedings lustily, till the time that King Edward was dead and Queen Mary placed quietly in her estate.

Then perceiving by the first Proclamation concerning Religion, how the world was like to turn, the Bayliff turned his Religion likewise; and so he moved the Parish to shew themselves the Queens Friends, and to set up the Mass speedily. Nevertheless, the most Substantial of the Parish marvelled much at the Bayliffs inconsistent lightness, considering also his abominable life, and having no great devotion unto his request, knowing moreover that their duty and friendship to the Queen stood not in setting up the Mass, spared to provide for it, as long as they might: but the Bayliff called on them still in the Queens Name.

At last, when he saw his words were not regarded, and purposing to win his Spurs by playing the man in the Masses behalf and the Queens, he got him to Church upon a Sunday morning, and when the Curate was beginning the English Service, according to the Statute set forth by King Edward the sixth, the Bayliff cometh in a great Rage to the Curate, and faith, Sirrah, will you not say Mass? Whereby all fuch railing Persecutors may learn to fear Gods hand, and to take heed how or what they fpeak againft his Servants. As this James Abbes was led by the Sheriff toward his execution, divers poor People ftood in the way, and asked their Alms. He then having no money to give them, and defirous yet to diftribute fomething amongst them, did pull off all his Apparel faving his Shirt, and gave the fame unto them to fome one thing, to fome another; in the giving whereof he exhorted them to be ftiong in the Lord, and as faithful followers of Chrift, to ftand ftedefaft unto the Truth of the Gospel, which he (through Gods help) would then in their fight feal and confirm with his Blood. Whiles he was thus charitably occupied, and zealoufly intructing the People, a Servant of the Sheriffs going by and hearing him, cried out aloud unto them, and Blafphemoufly faid, Believe him not good People. he is an Heretick and a mad man, out of his wit, believe him not, for it is Herefie that he faith. And as the other continued in his godly admonitions, fo did this wicked wretch ftill blow forth his Blafphemous exclamations, until they came unto the Stake where he fhould fuffer. Unto the which this conftant Martyr was tied, and in the end cruelly burned, as in his Story more fully is already declared.

But immediately after the fire was put unto him (fuch was the fearful ftroke of Gods Juftice upon this Blafphemous Railer) that he was there prefently, in the fight of all the People, ftriken with a Frenzie, wherewith he had before moft railingly charged that good Martyr of God, who in this furious Rage and madnefs cafting off his fhooes, with all the reft of his Cloaths, cried, out unto the People, and faid, Thus did James Abbes the true Servant of God, who is faved, but I am damned. And thus ran he round about the Town of Bury, ftill crying out, that James Abbes was a good man and faved, but he was damned.

The Sheriff then being amazed, caufed him to be taken and tied in a dark houfe, and by force compelled him again to put on his Cloaths thinking thereby within a while to bring him to fome quietnefs. But he (all that notwithstanding) as foon as they were gone, continued his former raging, and cafting off his Cloaths, cried as he did before, James Abbes is the Servant of God and is faved, but I am damned.

At length he was tied in a Cart, and brought home unto his Mafters houfe, and within half a year or thereabouts, he being at the point of death, the Prieft of the Parifh was fent for: who coming unto him, brought with him the Crucifix, and their Houfeling Hoft of the Altar. light upon their own necks shortly after, and they themselves made a Publick Spectacle at the Tower-hill of bloody death, which before had no Compassion of the

So was Heliodorus in the old time of the Jews plagued

So did Antiochus, Herod, Julian, Valerianus the

they had exercised their cruelty upon Gods People, feel the like striking hand of God themselves also, in revenging the Blood of his Servants.

And thus much concerning those Persecutors, aswell of the Clergy sort, as of the Laity, which were stricken,

Besides these Bishops above named, first died in the same time.

D. Weston Dean of Westminster, afterward Dean of Windsor, chief disputer against Crammer, Ridley, and Latimer.
M. Slettsbury, Master of Trinity Colledge in Oxford, who died in the Tower.
Seth Holland Dean of Worcester, and Warden of All-soul Colledge in Oxford.

William Copinger, Monk of Westminster, who bare the great Seal before Stephen Gardiner, after the death of the said Gardiner, made himself Monk in the house of Westminster, and shortly after fell mad, and died in the Tower.

D. Steward Dean of Winchester.

To behold the working of Gods Judgments it is wondrous. In the first year of Queen Mary, when the Clergy was assembled in the Convocation-house, and also afterward, when the disputation was in Oxford against Dr. Crammer, Ridley, and Latimer, he that had been then Doctor Weston the Prolocutor in his Ruff, how highly he took upon him in the Schools, and how stoutly he stood in the Popes Quarrel against simple and naked Truth, full little would have thought, and less did he think himself (I dare say) that his glory and lofty looks should have been brought down so soon, especially by them of his own Religion, whose part he so doubtly defended. But such is the reward and end commonly of them, who presumptuously oppose themselves to strive against the Lord, as by the example of this Doctory Prolocutor right well may appear. For not long after the disputation above mentioned against Bishop Crammer and his fellows, God so wrought against the said Dr.

Weston, that he fell in great displeasure with Cardinal Pool and other Bishops, because he was unwilling to give up his Deanry and house of Westminster unto the Monks and Religious men, whom indeed he favoured not, although in other things he maintained the Church of Rome. Who notwithstanding at last, through im-portunate sute, gave up Westminster, and was Dean of Windsor; where not long after, he was apprehended in Adultery, and for the same was by the Cardinal put from all his spiritual Livings.

Wherefore he appealed to Rome, and purposed to have fled out of the Realm, but was taken by the way, and committed to the Tower of London and there remained until Queen Elizabeth was proclaimed Queen, at which time he being delivered, fell sick and died: The common talk was, that if he had not so suddenly ended his life, he would have opened and revealed the purpose of the chief of the Clergy, meaning the Cardinal, which was to have taken up King Henries Body at Windsor and to have burned it. And thus much of D. Weston.

The residue that remained of the persecuting Clergy, and escaped the stroke of death, were deprived, and committed to prisons: the Catalogue of whose names here followeth.

In the Tower.

Nicholas Heath, Archbishop of York, and Lord Chancellor.
Thomas Thurlby Bishop of Ely. Thomas Watson Bishop of Lincolne.
Gilbert Bourne Bishop of Bath and Wells.
Richard Fates Bishop of Worcester.
Trounfeld Bishop of Exeter.
John Peckham Abbot of Westminster.
John Boral Dean of Windsor and Peterborough.

Of David Pool Bishop of Peterborough, I doubt whether he was in the Tower, or in some other Prison.

Ran away.

Goldwel Bishop of Saint Asaph.
Maurice Elect of Bangor.
Edmund Borer Bishop of London, in the Marshalsea.
Thomas Wood Bishop Elect, in the Marshalsea.
Cuthbert Scot, Bishop of Chester, was in the Fleet, from whence he escaped to Lovane, and there died.

In the Fleet.

Henry Cole Dean of Pauls.
John Harpsfield Archdeacon of London, and Dean of Norwich.
Nicholas Harpsfield Archdeacon of Canterbury.
Anthony Draycot Archdeacon of Huntingdon.
William Chadsey Archdeacon of Middlesex.

Concerning which Doctor Chadsey here is to be noted, that in the beginning of King Edwards Reign he recanted, and subscribed to thirty four Articles, wherein he then fully consented and agreed with his own hand writing to the whole form of Doctrine approved and allowed then in the Church, as well concerning justification by faith only, as also the Doctrine of the two Sacraments

34. Articles of D. Chad-sey.

Anno Sacraments then received, denying as well the Popes 1558 Supremacy, Transubstantiation, Purgatory, Invocation of Saints, elevation and adoration of the Sacrament, the Sacrifice, and veneration of the Mass, as also all other like excrements of Popish Superstition, according to the Kings Book then set forth.

Wherefore the more marvel it is, that he, being counted such a famous and learned Clerke, would shew himself so fickle and unstable in his Assertions, so double in his doings, to alter his Religion according to time, and to maintain for Truth, not what he thought best, but what he might most safely defend. So long as the state of the Lord Protector and of his Brother stood upright, what was then the conformity of this Doctor Chadsey, his own Articles in Latin, written and subscribed with his own hand, do declare, which I have to shew, if he will deny them. But after the decay of the Kings Uncles, the fortune of them turned not to fall, but his Religion turned withal, and effoons he took upon him to dispute against Peter Martyr, in upholding Transubstantiation at Oxford, which a little before with his own handwriting he had overthrowen.

D. Chadsey
 mutable and inconstant in his Religion.

After this ensued the time of Queen Mary, wherein Doctor Chadsey, to shew his double diligence, was so eager in his Commission to fit in Judgment, and to bring poor Men to their death, that in the last year of Queen Mary, when the L. Chancellor, Sir Thomas Cornwallis, L. Clinton, and divers other of the Council had sent for him by a special Letter to repair unto London out of Essex, he writing again to the Bishop of London, sought means not to come at the Councils bidding, but to continue still in his persecuting progress. The Copy of whose Letter I have also in my hands (if need were) to bring forth.

The experience of D.
 Chadsey in punishing the poor Martyrs.

Mention was made not long before, of one William Mauldon, who in King Henry's time suffered stripes and scourgings for confuting the verity of Gods true Religion. It happened in the first year of Queen Elizabeth, that the said William Mauldon was bound Servant with one named Mr. Hugh Appary then a Wheat-taker for the Queen, dwelling at Greenwich. Who being newly come unto him, and having never a Book there to look upon, being desirous to occupy himself virtuously, looked about the house, and found a Primer in English, whereon he read in a Winters Evening.
 Whiles he was reading, there sat one John Apowel that had been a Serving-man, about Thirty years of age, born toward Wales, whom the said Mr. Hugh gave meat and drink unto, till such time as he could get a Service. And as the foresaid W. Mauldon read on the Book, the said John Apowel mocked him after every word, with contrary gauds and flouting words unreverent, in such sort that he could no longer abide him for grief of heart, but turned unto him and said, John, take heed what thou doest; Thou dost not mock me, but thou mockest God: For in mocking of his Word, thou mockest him; and this is the Word of God, though I be simple that read it; and therefore beware what thou doest.

Then Mauldon fell to reading again, and still he proceeded on in his mocking; and when Mauldon had read certain English Prayers, in the end he read, Lord have mercy upon us, Christ have mercy upon us, &c.

And as Mauldon was reciting these words, the other with a start suddenly said, Lord have mercy upon me.

With that Mauldon answered and said, What aileth thou John?

He said, I was afraid.

Whereof wast thou afraid said Mauldon?

Nothing now, said the other: and so he would not tell him. After this, when Mauldon and he went to bed, Mauldon asked him whereof he was afraid?

He said, when you read, Lord have mercy upon us,
Christ have mercy upon us, methought the hair of my Head stood upright, with a great fear which came upon me.

Then said Mauldon, John thou maist see, the evil Spirit could not but that Christ should have mercy upon us. Well John, said Mauldon, repent and amend thy life, for God will not be mocked. If we mock and jest at his Word, he will punish us.

Also you use Ribaldry words; and Swearing very much: therefore for Gods sake, John, amend thy life.
 So I will (said he) by the grace of God; I pray God I may. Amen said the other, with other words, and so went to bed.

On the morrow, about 8. of the Clock in the morning, the foresaid John came running down out of his Chamber in his Shirt into the Hall, and wrestled with his Mistress as if he would have thrown her down. Whereat she shrieked out, and her Servants help her, and took him by strength and carried him up into his Bed, and bound him down to his Bed; for they perceived plainly that he was out of his right mind.

After that, as he lay, almost day and night his Tongue never ceased, but he cried out of the Devil of Hell, and his words were ever still, O the Devil of Hell; now the Devil of Hell; I would see the Devil of Hell: Thou shalt see the Devil of Hell; there he was, there he goeth, with other words, but most of the Devil of Hell.

Thus he lay without amendment about six days, that his Master and all his household was weary of that trouble and noise. Then his Master agreed with the Keepers of Bedlam, and gave a piece of Money, and sent him thither.
 It seemeth that he was possessed with an evil Spirit, from the which God defend us all.

This is a terrible Example to you that be mockers of the Word of God: therefore repent and amend, lest the vengeance of God fall upon you in like manner. Witness hereof William Mauldon of Newington.

The same William Mauldon chanced afterward to dwell at a Town six miles from London called Walsam-stow, where his Wife taught young Children to read, which was about the year of our Lord 1563, and the fourth year of Q. Elizabeth's Reign. Unto this School, amongst other Children, came one Benfield's Daughter, named Dennis, about the age of 12 years.

Gods punishment

 cel of 12 years old, blaspheming the Majesty of God.

As these Children sat talking together, they happened among other talk (as the nature of Children is to be buse with many things) to fall into communication of God, and to reason among themselves, after their Childish discretion, what he should be.

Whereunto some answered one thing, some another.
 Among whom, when one of the Children had said, that he was a good old Father; the foresaid Dennis Benfield casting out impious words of horrible Blasphemy, What he (said he) is an old doting Fool.

What wretched and blasphemous words were these ye hear. Now mark what followed.

When W. Mauldon heard of these abominable words of the Girl, he willed his Wife to correct her for the same. Which was appointed the next day to be done. But when the next morrow came, her Mother would needs send her to the Market to London, the Wench greatly intreating her Mother that she might not go, being marvelloously unwilling thereunto. Howbeit through her Mothers compulsion she was forced to go, and went. And what happened? Her business being done at London, as she was returning again homeward, and being a little past Hackney, suddenly the young Girl was so stricken, that all the one side of her was black, and the speechless.
 Whereupon immediately she was carried back to Hackney, and there the same night was buried. Witness of the same story William Mauldon and his Wife, also Benfield her Father, and her Mother, which yet be all alive.

Blasphemy punished.

A terrible Example (no doubt) both to old and young,
 what it is for Children to blaspheme the Lord their God;
 and what it is for Parents to suffer their young ones to grow up in such blasphemous blindness; and not to nurure them betime in the rudiments of the Christian Catechism, to know first their Creation, and then their Redemption in Christ our Saviour, to fear the Name of God; and to reverence his Majesty. For else what do they deserve but to be taken away by death, which contemptuously despise him, of whom they take the benefit of life?

And therefore let all young Maids; Boys, and Young men, take example by this wretched silly Wench, not only not to blaspheme the Sacred Majesty of the Omnipotent God their Creator, but also not once to take his Name in vain, according as they are taught in his Commandments.

A Lesson to Children and young Girls.

Secondly;

A lesson to Fathers and Godfathers and Godmothers.

Secondly, let all Fathers, Godfathers, and Godmothers, take this for a warning, to see to the instruction and catechizing of their Children, for whom they have bound themselves in promise both to God and to his Church. Which if the Father and Godfather, the Mother and Godmothers had done to this young girl, verily it may be thought this destruction had not fallen upon her.

A lesson to all Atheists,
L. and Infidels.

Thirdly, let all blind Atheists, Epicures, Mammonists, belly gods of this world, and Sons of Belial, Hypocrites, Infidels, and Mockers of Religion, which say in their hearts, there is no God, learn also hereby, not onely what God is, and what he is able to do, but also in this miserable creature here punished in this world, behold what shall likewise fall on them in the world to come unless they will be warned betime, by such examples as the Lord God doth give them.

A lesson to all Blasphemes
and

Fourthly and lastly, here may also bee a spectacle for all them which be Blasphemers and abominable swearers, or rather tearers of God, abusing his glorious Name in such contemptuous and despiteful sort as they use to do. Whom if neither the word and commandment of God, nor the calling of the Preachers, nor remorse of Conscience, nor rule of reason, nor their withering age, nor hoary hairs will admonish; yet let these terrible examples of Gods strict judgment somewhat move them to take heed to themselves. For if this young Maiden, who was not fully twelve years old, for her unreverent speaking of God (and that but at one time) did not escape the stroke of Gods terrible hand, what then have they to look for, which being men grown in years, and stricken in age, being so often warned and preached unto, yet cease not continually with their Blasphemous Oaths, not onely to abuse his Name, but also most conuneliously and despitefully to tear him (as it were) and all his parts in pieces?

About the year of our Lord 1565. at Brighthelm in the County of Berks, upon certain communication as touching the right reverend Martyrs in Christ, Bishop Cranmer, Bishop Ridley, and Master Hugh Latimer, there came into an house in Abyngdon, one whose name is Levar, being a Plowman, dwelling in Brighthelm aforesaid, and said, that he saw that ill favored Knave Latimer when he was burned: and also in despite said, that he had teeth like a horse. At which time and hour, as near as could be gathered, the Son of the said Levar most wickedly hanged himself, at Shepton in the County aforesaid within a mile of Abyngdon.

These words were spoken in the hearing of me Thomas Jenens of Abyngdon.

Harvey a Commisary, that condemned a Poor man in Calice, was shortly after hanged, drawn and quartered.

William Swallow, the cruel Tormentor of George Egles, was shortly after so plagued of God, that all the hair of his head, and nails of his fingers and toes went off, his eyes well near closed up, that hee could scant see. His Wife also was stricken with the falling sickness, with the which malady she was never infected before.

Gods just

Likewise Richard Peto, another troubler of the said George Egles, upon a certain anger or chafe with his servants, was so suddenly taken with sickness, that falling upon his bed like a beast, there he died and never spake word.

Fetters wife stricken with madness.

The Wife of John Ferry, being the cause of the taking of her Husband, how she was immediately upon the same by Gods hand stricken with madness, and was distracted of her wits, read before.

Thomas Munf and George Revet, two persecutors, were stricken miserably with the hand of God, and so died.

Also Robert Edgore, for that he had executed the Office of a Parish Clark against his Conscience, through anguish and grief of Conscience for the same, was so bereft of his wits, that he was kept in chains and bonds many years after.

As touching John Plankney Fellow of New Colledge in Oxford, Civilian, and one Horvington, both Fellows of the same house aforesaid, and both stubborn Papiists, the matter is not much worthy the memory; yet the example is not unworthy to be noted, to see what little comfort and grace commonly followeth the comfortless Doctrine and Profession of Papistry, as in these two young men, amongst many other may well appear. Of whom the one, which was Plankney, scholar sometime to Marshall (who wrote the Book of the Crofs) is commonly reported and known to them of that University, to have drowned himself in the River about Rome, or as some do say, at Padua, and so being both drowned, were both taken up with Crucifixes, as it is said of some, hanging about their necks; the more pity that such young students did so much addict their wits, rather to take the way of Papistry, than to walk in the comfortable light of the Gospel, now so brightly spreading his beams in all the world; which if they had done, I think not contrary, but it had proved much better with them.

Albeit (I trust) the Gospel of Christ, being now received in the Queens Court amongst the Courtiers and Servants of her Guard, hath framed their lives and manners so to live in the due fear of God, and temperance of life, with all sobriety, and merciful compassion toward their own Christians, that they need not greatly any other instructions to be given them in this story: yet forso much as examples many times do work more effectually in the minds and memories of men; and also partly considering with my self, how these, above all other sorts of men in the whole Realm, in time past ever had most need of such wholesome lessons and admonitions, to leave their unordinate riot of quaffing and drinking; and their Heathenish prophanity of life; I thought here to set before their eyes a terrible example, not of a strange and foreign person, but of one of their own coat, a Yeoman of the Guard, not fained by me, but brought to me by Gods providence, for a warning to all Courtiers, and done of very truth no longer ago than in the year of our Lord, 1568. And as the story is true, so is the name of the party not unknown, being called Christopher Landelsdale, dwelling in Hackney, in Middlesex. The order of whose life, and manner of his death being worthy to be noted, is this, as in story here under followeth.

This aforesaid Landelsdale being married to an ancient Woman yet living, having by her both goods and lands, notwithstanding lived long in filthy whoredom with a younger woman, by whom he had two Children, a Son and a Daughter, and kept them in his house unto the day of his death. Also when he should have been in serving of God on the Sabbath day, he used to walk or ride about his fields, and seldom hee or any of his house came to the Church after the English Service was again received. Besides this, he was a great swearer, and a great drunkard, and had great delight also in making other men drunken, and would have them whom he had made drunkards, to call him Father, and he would call them his Sons; and of these Sons, by report, he had above forty. And if he had seen one that would drink freely, he would mark him, and spend his money with him liberally in ale or wine, but most in wine, to make him the sooner drunken. These blessed Sons of his should have great cheer oftentimes, both at his own house and at Taverns: and not long before his death hee was so beastly drunken in a Tavern over against his door, that he fell down in the Tavern yard, and could not arise alone, but lay grovelling, till he was holpen up, and so carried home.

This father of Drunkards, as he was a great feaster of the rich and wealthy of Hackney, and others; so his poor Neighbours and poor Tenants fared little the better for him: except it were with some broken meat which after his feasts his Wife would carry and fend unto them, or some Alms given at his door.

Besides all this, he did much injury to his poor Neighbours, in oppressing the Commons near about him, which was a special relief unto them, so that his Cattel did eat up all without pity or mercy.

There chanced after this about two years before he died, a poor man, being sick of the bloody Flux, for very weakness to lie down in a Ditch of the said Landedale, not a stone cast from his house, where he had a little straw brought him. Notwithstanding the said Landedale had back houses and Barns enough to have laid him in but would not fiew him so much pity. And thus poor Lazarus there lay night and day, about six weeks ere he died.

Certain good Neighbours hearing of this, procured things necessary for his relief, but he was so far spent, that he could not be recovered; who lay broyling in the hot Sun, with a horrible smell, most pitiful to behold.

This poor man, a little before he died, desired to be removed to another Ditch into the shadow. Whereupon, one of the Neighbours coming to Landedales Wife for a bundle of Straw for him to lie upon, she required to have him removed to Newington side, because, she said, if he should die, it would be very far to carry him to the Church.

Besides this, there was a marriage in this Landedales house, and the guests that came to the marriage gave the poor man money as they came and went by him, but Landedale disdained to contribute any relief unto him, notwithstanding that he had promised to Mr. Searles, one of the Queens Guard (who had more pity of him) to minister to him things necessary.

To be short, the next day poor Lazarus departed this life, and was buried in Hackney Church-yard; upon whom Landedale did not so much as bestow a winding sheet, or any thing else towards his burial. And thus much concerning the end of poor Lazarus. Now let us hear what became of the Rich Glutton.

About two years after, the said Landedale being full of Drjak (as his custom was) came riding in great haste from London on Saint Andrews-day Anno 1568, and as is reported by those that saw him, reeling to-and-fro like a Drunkard with his hat in his hand, and coming by a Ditch, there tumbled in headlong into the Ditch. Some say that the horse, fell upon him, but that is not like. This is true, the horse, more sober than the Master, came home, leaving his Master behind him. Whether he brake his neck with the fall, or was drowned (for the Water was scarcely a foot deep) it is uncertain; but certain it is, that he was there found dead. Thus he being found dead in the Ditch, the Crowner (as the manner is) sat upon him: and how the matter was handled for saving his goods, the Lord knoweth; but in the end so it fell out, that the goods were saved, and the poor horse indited for his Masters death.

The Neighbours hearing of the death of this man, and considering the manner thereof, said it was justly fallen upon him, that as he suffered the poor man to lie and die in the Ditch near unto him, so his end was to die in a ditch likewise. And thus hast thou in this Story (Christian Brother and Reader) the true Image of a rich Glutton and poor Lazarus set out before thine eyes: whereby we have all to learn, what happeneth in the end to such voluptuous Epicures and Atheists, which being void of all sense of Religion, and fear of God, yield themselves over to all Profanities of life, neither regarding any honesty at home, nor shewing any mercy to their needy Neighbours abroad.

Christ our Saviour saith, Mat. 5. Blessed be the merciful, for they shall obtain mercy: but judgment without mercy shall be executed on them which have shewed no mercy, &c. And St. John saith, 1. John 4. He that seeth his Brother have need, and shutteth up his Compassion from him how dwelleth the love of God in him &c. Again, Esay against such profane Drunkards and quaffers thus crieth out, Wo be unto them that rise up early to follow drunkennes, and to them that so continue until night, till they be set on fire with Wine. In thofe companies are Harps and Lutes, Tabrets and Pipes and Wine: but they regard not the works of the Lord, and consider not the operation of his hands, &c. Wo be unto them that are strong to spee out Wine, and expert to set up drunkennes.

A warning to Drunkards.

The punishments of them that be dead, be wholesome documents to them that be alive. And therefore as the Story above exemplified may serve to warn all Courtiers and Yeomen of the Guard; so by this that followeth, I would with all Gentlemen to take good heed and admonition betime, to leave their outrageous swearing and blaspheming of the Lord their God.

In the time and reign of King Edward, there was in Cornwall a certain lusty young Gentleman; which did ride in Company with other more Gentlemen, together with their Servants, being about the number of twenty horsemen. Among whom this lusty Yankee entering into talk, began to swear most horribly, Blaspheming the Name of God, with other ribaldry words besides. Unto whom one of the Company (who is yet alive, and witness hereof) not able to abide the hearing of such blasphemous abomination, in Gentle words speaking to him, said, he should give answer and account for every Idle word.

The Gentleman taking nauff thereat; Why, said he, takest thou thought for me? take thought for thy winding sheet. Well (quoth the other (amend, for death giveth no warning; for as soon cometh a Lambs skin to the Market, as an old Sheeps. Gods wounds, saith he, care not thou for me; Raging still after his manner worse and worse in words, till at length passing on their Journey, they came riding over a great Bridge, standing over a Piece of an arm of the Sea. Upon the which Bridge this Gentleman sweaver spurred his horse in such sort, as he sprang clean over with the man on his back.

Who as he was going, cried saying, Horse and man, and all to the Devil. This terrible Story happening in a Town in Cornwall, I would have been afraid amongst these stories here to recite, were it not that he, which was then both reprehender of his swearing, and witness of his death, is yet alive, and now a Minister, named Heynes. Besides this, Bishop Ridley, then Bishop of London, preached and uttered even the same fact and example at Pauls Cross. The name of the Gentleman I could by no means obtain of the party and witness afore said, for dread of those (as he said) which yet remain of his affinity and Kindred in the said Country.

Having now sufficiently admonished, first the Courtiers, then the Gentlemen; now thirdly for a brief admonition to the Lawyers we will here insert the strange end and death of one Henry Smith, Student of the Law.

This Henry Smith having a Godly Gentleman for his Father, and an ancient Protestant, dwelling in Camden in Gloucestershire, was by him virtuously brought up in the knowledge of Gods Word, and sincere Religion; wherein he shewed himself in the beginning such an earnest professor, that he was called of the Papists Prating Smith. After these good beginnings it followed, that he coming to be a Student of the Law in the middle Temple at London, there through sinister Company of some, and especially as it is thought of one Gifford, began to be perverted to Popery, and afterward going to Lovaine, was more deeply rooted and grounded in the same; and so continuing a certain space among the Papists, of a young Protestant, at length was made a perfect papist. Insomuch, that returning from thence, he brought with him Pardons, a Crucifix, with an Agnus Dei, which he used commonly to wear about his neck, and had in his Chamber Images, before which he was wont to pray. Besides divers other Popish trash, which he brought with him from Lovaine. Now what end followed after this I were loth to utter in story, but that the fact so lately done this present year, Anno 1559, remaineth yet so fresh in memory, that almost all the City of London not only can witness, but also doth wonder thereat. The end was this.

Not long after the said Henry Smith, with Gifford his Companion, was returned from Lowane, being now a foul peerer, and a scornful scoffer of that Religion which before he professed; in his Chamber where he lay in a house in St. Clements Parish without Temple-Barr, in the Evening as he was going to bed, and his Cloaths put off (for he was found naked) he had tied his Shirt (which he had torn to the same purpose) about his privy places, and so with his own Girdle, or ribband garter (as it seemed) fastned to the bed-post there strangled himself. They that were of his Quest, and other which saw the manner of his hanging, and the print where he fate upon his beds side, do record, that he thrust himself down from his beds side where he fate; the place where he had fastned the Girdle being so low, that his Hips well near touched the Floor, his Legs lying across, and his Arms spread abroad. And this was the manner of his hanging, having his Agnus Dei in a silver Table, with his other Idolatrous trah in the Window by him. And thus being dead, and not thought worthy to be interred in the Church-yard, he was buried in a Lane called Toskew Lane.

This heavy and dreadful end of Henry Smith, although it might seem enough to gender a Terror to all young Popish Students of the Law; yet it did not so work with all, but that some remained as obstinate still as they were before. Amongst whom was one named Williams, a Student of the Inner-Temple, who being sometime a favourer of the Gospel, fell in like manner from that to be an obstinate Papist, and despiteful railer against true Religion, and in conclusion, was so hot in his Catholic Zeal, that in the midst of his railing he fell stark mad, and so yet to this present day remaineth. The Lord of his mercy turn him to a better mind, and convert him if it be his pleasure, Amen.

The miserable end of Twysford is here no less to be remembred, a buisie doer sometimes in King Henries days by Boners appointments, in setting up of Stakes for the burning of poor Martyrs. Who, when he saw the Stakes consume away so fast; Yea, said he, will not these Stakes hold? I will have a Stake, I trow, that shall hold, and so provided a big Tree, and cutting off the Top, set it in Smithfield. But thanks be to God, ere the Tree was all consumed, God turned the State of Religion, and he fell into an horrible diseste, rotting alive above the ground before he died. Read more of him before. But because the Story both of him, and of a number such other like, is to be found in sundry places of this history sufficiently before exprest, it shall be but a double labour again to recapitulate the same.

Of the miserable end
of this Twysford

Ye have heard before of the Condemnation and Martyrdom of a certain Boy called Thomas Drenvry, condemned by Williams Chancellor of Gloucester, count any to all right and counsell of the Register then present, called Barker. Now what punishment fell after upon the said Chancellor, followeth to be declared.

The strange and fearful death of the same Dr. Williams.

When God of his inestimable mercy having pity of us, and pardoning our sins, for his Son Christ Jesus sake, had now taken from us that bloody Prince, and sent us this Jewel of Joy, the Queens Majesty that now reigneth (and long may she reign) over us; and that the Commissioners for restitution of Religion were coming toward Gloucester; the same day Doctor Williams the Chancellor dined with Master Jennings the Dean of Gloucester, who with all his men were booted ready at one of the Clock to set forward to Chipping-Norton, about fifteen Miles from Gloucester, to meet the Commissioners which were at Chipping-Norton, and said to him; Chancellor, are not thy Boots on?

Chan. Why should I put them on?

To go with me (quoth the Dean) to meet these Commissioners.

Chan. I will neither meet them nor see them.

Dea. Thou must needs see them, for now it is past twelve of the Clock, and they will be here afore three of the Clock: and therefore if thou be wise, on with they Boots, and let us go together, and all shall be well.

Chan. Go your ways, Mr. Dean, I will never see them.

As I said, W. Jennings the Dean set forward with his Company toward the Commissioners, and by and by cometh one upon horseback to the Dean, saying; Master Chancellor lieth at the mercy of God, and is speechless. At that word the Dean with his Company pricked forward to the Commissioners, and told them the whole matter and communication between them two, as above. And they sent one of their men with the best words they could devise, to comfort him with many promises. But to be short, albeit the Commissioners were now nearer Gloucester, than the Dean and his Company thought, making very great haste, especially after they had received these News: Yet Doctor Williams, though false of Religion, yet true of his promise, kept his ungracious Covenant with the Dean: for he was dead ere they came to the City, and so never saw them indeed.

Wherefore to pass over our own domestic examples of English persecutors plagued by Gods hand (where with this our present Story doth abound) I will stretch my Pen a little further, to adjoyn with a few like examples in Forain Countries.

*H*oimeister the great Archpapist, and chief Master-Pillar of the Popes falling Church, as he was in his journey going toward the Counsell of Ratisbone, to dispute against the defenders of Christs Gospel, suddenly in his Journey, not far from Ulmet, was prevented by the stroke of Gods hand, and there miserably died, with horrible roaring and crying out. Ex Illyrico de vocabulo fidei.

What a Pernicious and Pesticall Doctrine is this of the Papists, which leadeth men to seek their Salvation by Merits and works of the Law, and not by Faith only in Christ the Son of God, and to stay themselves by Grace? And what inconvenience this Doctrine of doubting and desperation bringeth men to at length, if the plain Word of God will not sufficiently admonish, yet let us be warned by examples of such as have been either teachers or followers of this Doctrine, and consider well what end commonly it hath and doth bring men unto. To recite all that may be said in this behalf, it were infinite. To note a few examples for admonitions sake, it shall be requisite.

What inconvenience cometh by the Popes desperate Doctrine.

In the University of Lowane was one named Guarlacura learned man, brought up in that School, who at length was Reader of Divinity to the Monks of Saint Gertrudes order. Where after he had stoutly maintained the corrupt errors of such Popish Doctrine, at last falling sick, when he perceived no way with him but death, he fell into a miserable agony and perturbation of Spirit, crying out of his sins, how wickedly he had lived, and that he was not able to abide the judgment of God, and so casting out words of miserable desperation, said, his sins were greater than he could be pardoned, and in that desperation wretchedly he ended his life. Ex Epistola Claudii Senarclae ad Bucerum ante Hist. de morte Diaconi.

The miserable end
of Guarlacura Reader in Lowane.

Another like example we have of Arnoldus Bomelius, a young man of the said University of Lowane, well commended for his fresh flourishing wit and ripeness of learning, who so long as he favoured the cause of the Gospel, and took part with the same against the Enemies of the Truth, he prospered and went well forward; but after that he drew to the Company of Tysleman, Master of the Popes Colledge in Lowane, and framed himself after the Rule of his unfavourable Doctrine, that is, to stand in fear and doubt of his justification, and to work his Salvation by Merits and deeds of the Law, he began more and more to grow in doubtful despair and discomfort of mind; as the nature of that Doctrine is, utterly to pluck away a mans mind from all certainty

ANNO 1558. certainty and true liberty of Spirit, to a servile doubtfulness, full of discomfort and Bondage of Soul.

Thus the young man, seduced and perverted through this blind Doctrine of ignorance and dubitation, fell into a great agony of mind, wandering and wrestling in himself a long space, till at length being overcome with despair, and not having in the Popish Doctrine wherewith to raise up his Soul, he went out of the City on a time to walk, accompanied with three other Students of the same University, his special familiars. Who as they returned home again after their walk, Arnoldus for weariness, as it seemed, fate down by a Spring side to rest him a while. The other, supposing none other but that he for weariness there rested to refresh himself, went forward a little past him. In the mean time what doth Arnoldus, but suddenly taketh out his Dagger, and strook himself into the Body.

His Fellows seeing him shrinking down, and the fountain to be all coloured with the Blood which issued out of the wound, came running to him to take him up, and so searching his Body where the wound should be, at length found what he had done, and how he had stricken himself with his Dagger into the Breast. Whereupon they took him and brought him into an house next at hand, and there exhorted him, as well as they could to repent his fact; who then by outward gesture seemed to give some shew of repentance. Notwithstanding, the said Arnoldus, eluding one of his Friends there busie about him to have a Knife hanging at his Girdle, violently plucked out the Knife, and with main force Stabbed himself to the Heart.

By these Levanian examples, as we have all to learn, no man to be sure of his life, but that he always needeth to crave and call unto the Lord to bless him with his Truth and Grace; so especially would I with our English Levanians, which now make Forts in that University against the open Truth of Christs Gospel, to be wise in time, and not to spurn so against the prick, Ne forte, &c.

Or if they think yet these examples not enough for sufficient admonition, let them joy hereunto the remembrance also of Jacobus Latomus; a chief and principal Captain of the same University of Levane. Who after he had been at Brussels and there thinking to do a great Act against Luther and his fellows, made an Oration before the Emperour, so foolishly and ridiculously, that he was laughed to scorn almost of the whole Court: Then returning from thence to Levane again, in his Publick Lecture he fell in an open fury and madness, uttering such words of desperation and blasphemous Impiety, that the other Divines which were there, and namely, Ruardus, Anchutianus, were faine to carry him away as he was raving, and so shut him into a close Chamber. From that time unto his last breath, Latomus had never any thing else in his mouth, but that he was damned, and rejected of God, and that there was no hope of Salvation for him, because he had wittingly and against his knowledge he withstood the manifest Truth of his Word. Ex Epist. Senarclai ante hist. de morte Diazai. Item, ex Oratore Pauli Eberi in comitiis Wittenbergae habita.

Thus Almighty God not only by his Word, but by examples in divers and sundry wise doth warn us, first to seek to know the perfect will and decree of the Lord our God appointed in his Word. The perfect will and full Testament of the Lord in his Word, is this, that he hath sent and given his only Son, unto us, being fully contented to accept our faith only upon him for our perfect justification and full satisfaction for all our transgressions; and this is called in Scripture, Iustitia Dei. To this will and righteousness of God, they that humble themselves, find lush peace and rest in their Souls, as no man is able to express, and have strength enough against all the invasions and temptations of Satan.

Contrariwise, they that will nosy their Obedience unto the will and ordinance of God expressed in his Word, but will seek their own righteousness, which is of man, labouring by their Merits and satisfaction to serve and please God; these not only do find with God no righteousness at all; but in stead of his favour procure to themselves his horrible indignation, in stead of comfort, heap to themselves desperation, and in the end will to inconvenience they come to by these above, received examples of Guaracus, Bomeinis, and Latomus; it is evident to see. And out of this Fountain spring not only the punishments of these men, but also all other inconveniences, which happen amongst men; wherefore this pernicious and Erroneous Doctrine of the Papists taketh place.

A Dominick Friar of Manffer, as he was inveighing in the Pulpit against the Doctrine of the Gospel, then springing up, was stricken with a sudden flash of Lightning, and so ended his life. Ex Pantal. in 2. parte Re-rum memor.

Manlius in his Book, De diffis Philippi Melancthi, maketh mention of a certain Taylors Servant in Lippis, who receiving first the Sacrament in both kinds with the Gospellers, afterward, being persuaded by the Papists, received with them under one kind. Whereupon being admonished of his Master to come to the Communion again in the Church of the Gospellers, he stood a great while and made no answer. At last, crying out upon a sudden, he ran to the Window thereby, and so cast himself out, and brake his neck.

In the same Manlius mention is also made of a certain Gentlemen of Name and Authority, but he nameth him not, who hearing these words in a long; Eius festo burg ist unfer Gott, that is, Our only hold or fortress is our God, Psalm 46. answered and said, Ich wil hilffen die burg zerbrechen, oder ich wil nix leben, that is, I will help to shoot against thy stay or fort, or else I will not live. And so within 3. days after he died without repentance, or confessing his faith. Ex Manlio, De dictis Philip. Melancthi.

Of Sadileus the learned Cardinal likewise it is reported of some, that he died not without great Torments of Conscience and desperation.

The Commendator of S. Anthony, who fate as Spi-ritual Judge over that godly learned Man Wolfgangus, burned in Lotharing in Germany, and gave Sentence of his Condemnation, fell suddenly dead shortly after.

Read before. Also his fellow, the Abbot of Clariculus, and Suffragan to the Bishop of Mentz, at the crack of Guns suddenly fell down and died.

David Beaton Archbishop of S. Andrews in Scot-land, shortly after the condemning of Master George Wishart, how he by the just stroke, of God was slain, land, perished and wretchedly ended his life within his own Castle, in the discourse of his Story is evident to see, who's listeth further to read of that matter.

Joanes Sleidanus in his 23. Book maketh relation of Cardinal Crescentius, the chief President and Moderator of the Council of Trent Anno 1552. The Story of whom is certain, the thing that hapned to him was strange and notable, example of him may be profitable to others, such as have grace to be warned by other mens evils. The narration is this.

The twenty fifth day of March in the year aforesaid, Crescentius the Popes Legate, and Vicegerent in the Council of Trent, was sitting all the day long until dark night, in writing Letters to the Pope. After his labour, when night was come, thinking to refresh himself he began to rise; and at his rising, behold there appeared to him a mighty black Dog, of a huge bigness, his eyes flaming with fire, and his Ears hanging low down well near to the ground, to enter in, and strait to come toward him, and so to couch under the Board. The Cardinal not a little amazed at the sight thereof, somewhat recovering himself, called to his Servants, which were in the outward Chamber next by, to bring in a Candle, and to seek for the Dog. But when the Dog could not be found, neither there, nor in any other Chamber about the Cardinal thereupon stricken with a sudden conceit of mind, immediately fell into such a sickness, whereof his Physicians, which he had about him, with all their industry and cunning could not cure him. And so in the Town of Verona died this Popish Cardinal; the Popes holy Legate, and President of this Council wherein his purpofe was (as Slidam faith) to recover and al again the whole Authority and Doctrine of the Romifh See, and to fettle it up for ever.

There were in this Council, befides the Popes Legates and Cardinal of Trent, 24. Bifhops, Doctors of Divinity 62. And thus was the end of that Popifh Council, by the provident hand of the Almighty, difpatched and brought to nought. Ex Slidamo. lib. 23.

By and by, while they were yet thus talking, fuddenly rofe, as it were, a mighty whirl-wind, with a terrible noife (the weather being very fair, and no wind ftirring before) and toft the Wagon over the barr into the Town ditch, the ropes wherewith the horfes had been tied, being broken afunder in fuch fort, as if they had been cut with a fharp knife, the Wagon alfo being caft upfide-down, with the fore-end thereof turned toward the Town again, and he drowned in the mire; and when he was taken up, it was found, that his neck alfo was broken. His Wife was taken up alive, but died alfo within three days after. But the Gentiewoman and the Fool, by Gods mighty providence, were preferved and had no harm. pally above all other worldly things to attend) had purposed before his death to go see Jerusalem. And thus all things being set in order, this Noble man, about to set forward on his journey, committed the care of his Wife (whom he left great with Child) and of his Lordships and Castles to an Archbishop, as to a most sure and trusty Father. To make short, it hapned in the journey this Noble man to dye. Whereof so soon as the Archbishop had intelligence, in stead of a Father he became a thief and a robber, seizing into his own hands all his Lordships and Possessions. And moreover, not yet contented with all this, he laid siege against a strong Fort of his (unto the which his Wife for safeguard of her self did flee) where in conclusion she, with the Child that the went withall, was pitifully slain, and so miserably perished. Which story was done (as testifieth Erasmus) not so long before his time, but that there remained the Nephewes of the Noble man then alive, to whom the same Inheritance should have fallen, but they could not obtain it.

What cometh of blind superstition, when a man not containing himself within the compass of Gods Word, wandreth in other by-ways of his own, and not contented with the Religion set up of the Lord, will bind his Conscience to other ordinances, prescriptions, and Religions devised by men, leaving Gods Commandments undone for the constitutions and precepts of men, what end and reward (I say) cometh thereof at length, by this one example, beside infinite other of the like sort, men may learn by experience: and therefore they that yet will defend Idolatrous Pilgrimage and rash Vows, let them well consider hereof. It is rightly said of Saint Hierome; To have been at Jerusalem is no great matter, but to live a godly and vertuous life, that is a great matter in very deed.

In the year of our Lord, 1565. there was in the Town of Ghent in Flanders, one William de Wever, accused and imprisoned by the Provost of St Peters in Ghent (who had in his Cloister a Prison and a place of execution) and the day when the said William was called to the place of judgment, the Provost sent for Mr Giles Brackleman, principal Advocate of the Council of Flanders, and Borough-Master and Judge of St Peters in Ghent, with other of the Rulers of the Town of Ghent, to sit in judgment upon him, and as they in fate judgment the Borough-Master, named Mr Giles Brackleman, reasoned with the said William de Wever upon divers Articles of his faith.

The one whereof was, why the said William de Wever denied that it was lawful to pray to Saints; and he answered (as the report goeth) for three causes. The one was, that they were but creatures, and not the Creator.

The second was, that if he should call upon them, the Lord did both see it, and hear it. and therefore he durst give the glory to none other, but to God.

The third and chiefeft cause was, that the Creator had commanded in his Holy Word to call upon him in troubles, unto which commandment he durst neither add nor take from it.

The Borough-Master Mr Giles Brackleman also demanded, whether he did not believe that there was a Purgatory which he should go into after this life, where every one should be purified and cleansed.

He answered, that he had read over the whole Bible, and could find no such place, but the death of Christ was his Purgatory: with many other questions proceeding after their order, until he came to pronounce his condemnation. But ere the said condemnation was read forth, the judgment of God was laid upon the said Borough-Master, who suddenly at that present instant was stricken with a Palsie, that his mouth was drawn up almost to his ear, and so he fell down, the rest of the Lords by and by standing up and shadowing him that the people could not well see him; and also the People were willed to depart, who being still called upon to depart, answered, the place was so small to go out, that they could go no farther. Then the Borough-Master of the Town being taken up, was carried to his house, and it is not yet understood nor commonly known that ever he spake word after he was first stricken, but was openly known to be dead the next day following. And yet notwithstanding that this was done about ten of the clock, they burned the said William de Wever within three hours after, on the same day.

The fourth day of March, 1566, the like example of the Lords terrible judgment was shewed upon Sir Garret Triest Knight, who had long before promised to the Regent to bring down the preaching. For the which act (as the report goeth) the Regent promised again to make him a Grave, which is an Earl. Of the which Sir Garret it is also said, that he coming from Bruxels towards Ghent, brought with him the death of the Preachers, and being come to Ghent, the said Sir Garret with other of the Lords having received from the Regent a Commission to swear the Lords and Commons unto the Romish Religion, the said Sir Garret the 4. day of March above noted, at night being at supper, willed the Lady his Wife to call him in the morning one hour sooner than he was accustomed to rise, for that he should the next day have much business to do in the Town-house, to swear the Lords and people to the Romish Religion. But see what hapned. The said Sir Garret going to bed in good health (as it seemed) when the Lady his Wife called him in the morning, according to his appointment, was found dead in her bed by her, and so unable to prosecute his wicked purpose.

The fifth of March, 1566. which was the day that Sir Garret Triest appointed to bee there, and the Lords of Ghent were come into the Town-house (as they had afore appointed) to proceed and to give the Oath, according as they had their Commission, and Mr Martin de Pesser the Secretary being appointed and about to give the Oath, as the first man should have sworn, the said Martin de Pesser was stricken of God with present death likewise, and fell down, and was carried away in a chair or sctell, and never spake after. About the Borders of Suevis in Germany, not far from the City of Uberling, there was a certain Monastery of Cistercian Monks, called Salmsville, founded in the days of Pope Innocent 2. by a noble Baron named Gunterham, about the year of our Lord, 1120. This Cell thus being erected, in process of time was enlarged with more ample possessions, finding many and great benefactors and endowers liberally contributing unto the same; as Emperors, Dukes, and rich Barons.

Amongst whom most especial were the Earls of Montfort, who had bestowed upon that Monastery many new liberties and great privileges, upon this condition, that they should receive with free hospitality any stranger both Horseman or Footman, for one nights lodging, whosoever came. But this Hospitality did not long continue, through a fubtle and devilish device of one of the Monks, who took upon him to counterfeit to play the part of the Devil, ratling and raging in his Chains, where the strangers should lie, after a terrible manner, in the night time to fray away the guests; by reason whereof no stranger nor traveller durst there abide, and so continued this a long space.

At length (as God would) it so hapned, that one of Earls of the said house of Montfort; benefactors to that Abbey, coming to the Monastery, was there lodged, whether of set purpose, or by chance, it is not known.

When the night came, and the Earl was at his rest, the Monk after his wonted manner beginneth his Pageant, to play the tame, yea rather the wild Devil. There was stamping, ramping, spitting of fire, roaring, thundering, bounding of boords, and rattling of chains, enough to make some man stark mad. The Earl hearing the sudden noyse, and being somewhat peradventure affraid at the first, although he had not then the feat of conjuring, yet taking a good heart unto him, and running to his sword, he laid about him well favourably, and following still the noyse of the Devil, so conjured him the last, that the Monk, which counterfeited the Devil in jest, was slain in his one likeness in earnest.

Ex Gasparo Bruchio, in Chronologia Monasteriorum Germaniae.

After the imprisonment of the Congregation, which were taken hearing Gods Word in St James-street in Paris, Anno 1558. (as is above storied) was a Letter written to the King, which was divulgate abroad, proving and declaring by divers Histories, what afflictions and calamities from time to time, by Gods righteous judgment, have fallen upon such as have been Enemies to his People, and have resisted the free passage of his holy Word. In which Letter, so far as as beside the said Examples much other good fruitful matter is contained, worthy of all mento be read, and especially of Princes to be considered, I thought good here to copy out the whole, as the French Book doth give it. The translation of the which Letter into English, is after this tenour, as followeth.

A Letter translated out of French into English, written to King Henry the Second French King.

The doings of Henry 2. French King, against the Luthers, never prospered with him.

Consider, I pray you Sir, and you shall find that all your afflictions have come upon you, since you have set your self against those which are called Lutherans.

When you made the Edict of Chasteaubriant, God sent you Wars; but when you ceased the execution of your said Edict, and as long as ye were enemy unto the Pope, and going into Almayn for the defence of the German afflicted for Religion, your affairs prospered as ye would with or desire.

This Truce was between the French King and the Emperor, which the Pope caused to be broken.

On the contrary, what hath become upon you since you were joyined with the Pope again, having received a Sword from him for his own safeguard? And who was it that caused you to break the Truce? God hath turned in a moment your prosperities into such afflictions, that they touch not only the state of your own person, but of your Kingdom also.

The cruel purpose of the Duke of Guise in Italy, going about the service of the enemy of God, and purposing after his return to destroy the Valleys of Piemont, to offer or sacrifice them to God for his Victories? The event hath well declared, that God can turn upside down our counsels and enterprizes; as he overturned of late the enterprize of the Constable of France at St. Quintins, having vowed to God, that at his return he would go and destroy Geneva, when he had gotten the victory.

The wicked Vow of the Constable of France destroyed.

To what end came the enterprize of the Duke of Guise in Italy, going about the service of the enemy of God, and purposing after his return to destroy the Valleys of Piemont, to offer or sacrifice them to God for his Victories? The event hath well declared, that God can turn upside down our counsels and enterprizes; as he overturned of late the enterprize of the Constable of France at St. Quintins, having vowed to God, that at his return he would go and destroy Geneva, when he had gotten the victory.

The marvelous judgment of God upon a burning Persecutor.

Have you not heard of L. Penches Archbishop of Tours, who made sure for the erection of a Court called Chamber Ardente, wherein to condemn the Protestants to the Fire? who afterwards was stricken with a disease called the Fire of God; which began at his feet, and so ascended upward, that one member after another to be cut off, and so died miserably without any remedy.

Gods fearful hand upon Cassellanus, Persecutor.

Also one Cassellanus, who having enriched himself by the Gospel, and forsaking the pure Doctrine thereof to return unto his vomit again, went about to persecute the Christians at Orleans, and by the hand of God was stricken in his Body with a sickness unknown to the Physicians; the one half of his Body burning as hot as fire, and the other as cold as Ice; and so most miserably crying and lamenting, ended his life.

There be other infinite Examples of Gods Judgments worthy to be remembered; as the death of the Chancellor and Legate du Prat, which was the first that opened to the Parliament the knowledge of Heresies, and gave out the first Commissions to put the faithful to death, who afterward died in his House at Nantes, swearing and horribly blaspheming God, and his Stomach was found pierced and gnawn asunder with Worms.

Also John Rufe, Counsellor in the Parliament, coming from the Court, after he had made report of the Proceeds against the poor innocents.

The wicked end of Claude de Affe, a Counsellor in the said Court.

Also one named Claude de Affe, a Counsellor in the said Court, the said day that he gave his opinion and consent to burn a faithful Christian (albeit it was not done indeed as he would have it) after he had dined, committed whoredom with a Servant in the house, and even in doing the act he was stricken with a disease called Apoplexia, whereof he died out of hand.

Peter Lister, Chief President of the said Court, and one of the Authors of the foresaid Burning-Chamber, was depoted from his Office, for being known to be out of his right wits, and bereaved of his understanding.

Also John Morin, Lieutenant Criminal of the Provost of Paris, after he had been the cause of the death of many Christians, was finally stricken with a disease in his Legs, called the Wolves, whereby he lost the use of them, and died also out of his wits, many days before denying and blaspheming God.

Likewise John Andrews, Bookbinder of the Palace, a Spy for the President Lister, and of Brusard the Kings Solicitor, died in a fury and madness.

The Inquisitor John de Roma in Provence, his flesh fell from him by piece-meal, so stinking that no man might come near him.

Also John Minervius of Provence, which was the cause of the death of a great number of Men, Women and Children, at Cabriers and at Merindol, died with bleeding in the lower Parts, the fire having taken his Belly, blaspheming and despising God: besides many other whereof we might make recital, which were punished with the like kind of death.

It may please your Majesty to remember your self that ye had no sooner determined to set upon us, but new Troubles were by and by moved by your Enemies, with whom ye could come to no agreement; which God would not suffer, forasmuch as your peace was grounded upon the Persecution which ye pretended against Gods Servants: As also your Cardinals cannot let through their cruelty the course of the Gospel, which hath taken such root in your Realm, that if God should give you leave to destroy the Professors thereof, you should be almost a King without Subjects.

Terullian hath well said, that the Blood of Martyrs is the Seed of the Gospel. Wherefore to take away all these evils coming of the riches of the Papists, which cause so much Whoredom, Sodomy and Incest, where they wallow like Hogs, feeding their idle Belies, the best way were to put them from their Lands and Possessions, as the old sacrificing Levites were, according to the express commandment which was given to Jehovah. For as long as the Commandment of God took place, and that they were void of ambition, the purity of Religion remained whole and perfect; but when they began to aspire to principalities, riches and worldly honours, then began the abomination of desolation that Christ foretold.

It was even so in the Primitive Church, for it flourished and continued in all pureness, as long as the Ministers were of small wealth, and sought not their particular profit, but the glory of God only. But since the Pope began to be Prince-like, and to usurp the dominion of the Empire under the colour of a false donation of Constantine, they have turned the Scriptures from their true sense, and have attributed the service to themselves, which we owe to God. Wherefore your Majesty may seize with good right upon all the Temporalties of the Benefices, and that with a safe Conscience to employ them to their true and right use.

First, for the finding and maintaining of the faithful Ministers of the Word of God, for such Livings shall be requisite for them, according as the case shall require. Secondly, for the entertainment of your Justices that give judgment. Thirdly, for the relieving of the Poor, and maintenance of Colleged to instruct the poor of the Youth in that which they shall be most apt unto. And the rest, which is infinite, may remain for entertainment of your own estate and affairs, to the great easement of your poor People, which alone bear the burthen, and possid in manner nothing.

In this doing, an infinite number of men, and even of your Nobility, which live of the Crucifix, should employ themselves to your service, as they see that ye recompence none but those that have deferred; whereas now there is an infinite number of men in your Kingdom, which occupy the chiefest and greatest Benefices, which never deserved any part of them, &c. And thus much touching touching the superfluous possessions of the Popes lordly Clergy. Now proceeding further in this exhortation to the King, thus the Letter importeth.

But when the Papists see that they have not to alledge for themselves any reason, they assay to make odious to your Majesty the Lutherans (as they call us) and say; If their sayings take place, ye shall be faine to remittin a private person, and that there is never change of Religion but there is also change of Princedom. A thing as false as when they accuse us to be Sacramentaries, and that wee deny the Authority of Magistrates, under the shadow of certain furious Anabaptists, which Sathan hath raised in our time to darken the light of the Gospel. For the Historiies of the Emperors which have begun to receive the Christian Religion, and that which is come to pass in our time, shew the contrary.

Was there ever Prince more feared and obeyed, than Confession in receiving the Christian Religion? was he therefore put from the Empire? No, he was thereby the more confirmed and established in the same, and also his posterity which ruled themselves by his providence. But such as have fallen away, and followed mens traditions, God hath destroyed, and their race is no more known in earth: So much doth God desert them that forsake him.

And in our time the late Kings of England and Germany, were they constrained in reprovng superstitions, which the wickedness of the time had brought in, to forsake their Kingdoms and Princedoms? All men see the contrary; and what honour, felicity, and obedience the people in our time that have received the reformation of the Gospel, do under their Princes and superiours. Yea, I may say, that the Princes knew not be ore what it was to be obeyed, at that time when the rude and ignorant people received so readily the dispensations of the Pope, to drive out their own Kings and natural Lords.

The true and only remedy, Sir, is, that ye cause to be holden a holy and free Council, where ye should be chief, and not the Pope and his, who ought but only to defend their causes by the holy Scriptures: that in the mean while ye may seek out men not corrupted, suspected, nor partial, whom ye may charge to give report faithfully unto you of the true sense of Holy Scriptures. And this done, after the example of the good Kings, Jehaphat, Ezechias, and Josias, ye shall take out of the Church all Idolatry, Superstition, and abuse, which is found directly contrary to the Holy Scriptures of the old and new Testament; and by that means ye shall guide your people in the true and pure service of God, not regarding in the mean time the cavilling pretences of the Papists, which say that such questions have been already answered at general Councils: for it is known well enough, that no Council hath been lawfull since the Popes have usurped the principallity and Tyranny upon mens Souls, but they have made them serve to their covetousness, ambition, and cruelty; and the contrary which is among those Councils, maketh enough for their disproof, beside a hundred thousand other absurdities against the Word of God, which be in them. The true proof for such matters is in the true and holy Scriptures, to the which no times, nor age hath any prescription to bee alledged against them; for by them wee receive the Councils founded upon the Word of God, and also by the same we reject that Doctrine which is repugnant.

And if ye do thus Sir, God will bless your enterprise, he will encrease and confirm your Reign and Empire, and your posterity. If otherwise, destruction is at your gate, and unhappy are the People which shall dwell under your obedience. There is no doubt but God will harden your heart as he did Pharaoh, and take off the Crown from your head, as he did to Jeroboam, Nadab, Baasa, Achab, and to many other Kings, which have followed mens traditions, against the commandment of God, and give it to your enemies to triumph over you and your Children.

And if the Emperor Antonine the meek, although he were a Pagan and Idolater, seeing himself bewrapt with so many wars, ceased the persecutions which were in his time against the Christians, and determined in the end to hear their causes and reasons, how much more ought you that bear the name of the most Christian King, to be careful and diligent to cease the persecutions against against the Poor Christians, seeing they have not troubled nor do trouble in any wise the state of your Kingdom, and your affairs; considering also that the Jews be suffered through all Christendom, although they be mortal enemies of our Lord Jesus Christ, which we hold by common accord and consent for our God, Redeemer, and Saviour; and that until ye have heard lawfully debated, and understand our reasons, taken out of the holy Scriptures, and that your Majesty have judged; if we be worthy of such punishments. For if wee bee not overcome by the Word of God, the fires, the swords, nor the cruellest torments shall make us afraid. These bee exercises that God hath promised to his, the which hee foretold should come in the last times, that they should not be troubled when such persecutions shall come upon them.

The story and the end of the French King

Whoever was the Author or Authors of this letter above prefixed, herein thou fect (good Reader) good Counsel given to the King. If he had had the grace to receive it, and had followed the same, no doubt but Gods blessing working with him, he had not only set that Realm in a blessed state from much disturbance, but also had continued himself in all flourishing felicity of princely honour and dignity. For so doth the Lord commonly bless and advance such Kings and Princes as seek his honour, and submit their wits to his obedience. But commonly the fault of Kings and Potentates of this world is, that being set about with Parasites, either they seldom hear the truth told them, or if they do, yet will they not lightly be put from their own wills, disdaining to be admonished by their inferiours, as they be Counsel never so wholesome and godly. Which thing many times turneth them to great plagues and calamities, as by plentiful example of Kings destroyed, wounded, imprisoned, deposed, drowned, poisoned, &c. may well to them that read Historiies appear: but especially this present example of Henry the French King, the second of that name, is in this our age notoriously to be considered. Who being well warned before (as may seem) would not yet forsake his cruel persecution against the Lords people, but rather was the more hardened in heart, and inflamed against them; insomuch that he said to Anne du Bourg, one of the high Court of Parliament in Paris threatening him, that he would see him burn with his own eyes.

Further, his purpose was to extend his power and force likewise against other places more, in persecuting the Gospel of Christ and professors thereof, to the utmost of his ability, I leave it to the report of them, which in this matter know more than I here will utter.

But notwithstanding all these cracks and threatnings of the King (to see what the Lord can do in making high Kings to stoop) even the same day when the King was in his most rage against these good men, Almighty God, taking the cause in hand to fight for his Church, so turned the matter, that he made the great enemy of his both with his mouth and with his hands to work his own destruction; with his mouth in commanding, with his hand in giving him the Lance into his hand, which the same day gave him his deaths wound, as by the sequels hereof in reading ye may understand.

The Stroke of Gods hands upon Henry the Second the French King.

King Henry being in the Parliament House which was kept at the Frier Augustines at Paris, because the Palace was in preparing against the marriage of his Daughter, and his Sister, and having heard the opinion in Religion of Anne du Bourg Counsellor in the Law, a man eloquent and learned, he caused the said Anne du Bourg, and Loys du Faux, Counsellors, to be taken prisoners by the Constable of France, who apprehended them, and delivered them into the hands of the County of Montgomery, the which carried them to Prison. and angry, among other talk, said to the said Ann de Bourg; These eyes of mine shall see thee burnt: And so on the 19. of June, Commission was given to Judges to make his Process.

During this mean while, great feasts and banquets were preparing in the Court, for joy and gladness of the marriage that should be of the Kings Daughter and Sister, against the last day of June save one. So when the day and time above prefixed was come, the King employed all the morning in examining as well the Presidents as Counsellors of the said Parliament against these Prisoners, and other their companions that were charged with the same Doctrine, which being done, they went to dinner.

The King, after he had dined, for that he was one of the defendants at the Tourney, which was solemnly made in Saint Antonyes-freet, near to the Prison where the foresaid Prisoners were committed, entred into the Lists; and therein justling, as the manner is, had broken many staves right valiantly as could be, running as well against the County of Montgomery, as other more.

Whereupon he was highly commended of the lookers on. And because he had done so valiantly, and was thought now to have done enough, he was desired to cease with praise: But he being the more inflamed with the hearing of his prayse, would needs run another course with Montgomery; who then refusing to run against the King, and kneeling upon his knees for pardon not to run; the King being eagerly set, commanded him upon his allegiance to run, and (as some affirm) did also himself put the staff in his hand, unto whose hands he had committed the foresaid Prisoners a little before. Montgomery thus being enforced whether hee would or no to run against the King, addrest himself after the best wise to obey the Kings commandment.

Whereupon he and the King met together so stoutly, that in breaking their spears the King was stricken with the counter-blow, so right in one of his eyes, by reason that the visour of his Helmet suddenly fell down at the same instant, that the shivers entred into his head; so that the brains were perished, and thereupon so festered, that no remedy could be found, although Physicians and Surgeons were sent from all places in the Realm, as also from Brabant by King Philip, but nothing availed, so that the 11. day after, that is, 10. of July, 1559. he ended his life in great dolour, having reigned 12. years, three Months, and 10. days.

Some report, that among other words he said, that hee feared hee was stricken for casting the Poor Christians wrongfully in Prison: but the Cardinal of Lorain standing by (as he was always at hand) said unto him, that it was the enemy that tempted him, and that he should be stedfast in the faith. By this means the Hall, which was prepared for a place of joy and gladness, did now serve for a Chappel to keep the corpse, being dressed with black mourning cloth, and night and day there was nothing heard but mourning and lamenting for the space of 40. days.

About two years after this, which was the year of our Lord, 1561. there were certain Gentlemen put to death at Amboise, for taking Arms against the house of Guise. Touching which Gentlemen this is to be noted, that as one of them should be brought to the place of execution, where the other lay dead before him, he thrust his hands into the Blood of two of his companions which were there beheaded, and the lifting up to Heaven, cried with a loud voice; Lord behold the Blood of thy Children: thou wilt in time and place revenge it.

Not long after the same, the Chancellor Oliver, who was condemner of them, at the instigation and pursuit of the Cardinal of Lorain, through great remorse of Conscience fell sick, and in a frensie casting out sighs uncessantly, and afflicting himself after a fearful and strange fashion for his unrighteous sentence, and more than barbarous cruelty, shrieked upon a sudden with an horrible cry, and said; O Cardinal, thou wilt make us all to be damned. And within a very few days after he died.

Francis the second of that name, King of France, at the perswasion of the Cardinal of Lorain, and of certain others, caused an assembly of the Estates of the Realm in the Town of Orleans, among other things to maintain the Papal See, to the overthrow of those which would live after the sincerity of the Gospel: but being fallen sick, shortly after, in the foresaid place, of a fever, through an impostume in his left ear hee died the fourth of December, 1561. having reigned but one year, and about five Months.

It was said of this King Francis (as the author above mentioned reporteth) that when hee was drawing toward his end, the Cardinal of Lorain made him to say and pronounce these words which follow; Lord forgive me my trespasses, and impute not unto me the fault, which my Ministers have done under my name and authority.

Nither is it unworthy of observation, that after the father it happened in much like sort by Gods mighty judgment unto Carol. 9. his second Son, and Brother to Francis above mentioned, in these our later days; who after the horrible and Bloody Murder of the Admiral, and other true professors of Christs Gospel, both Men, Women, and Children, to the number of many thousands of divers Cities, in somuch that the Prisons and streets are said to be coloured with Blood, smocking after such a cruel sort, as in our time or Country the like hath not hitherto been seen; by the stroke of Gods just revenge, the same King, by credible report of story, is said to dye of bleeding, not only at his ears and nose, but in all other places of his Body, where Blood might have any issue.

Unto these afore recited Histories of King Henry and his two Sons, might also be added the death of the Emperor Charles the fifth. Who in like manner being an enemy, and a great terror to the Gospel, was cut off likewise for doing any more hurt to the Church, much about the same time, Anno 1558. which was but three Months before the death of Queen Mary, and ten Months before the death of the said Henry the second. Touching the death of which Charles and Henry, and Francis, this Epitaph following was written in Latin Verses, and printed in the French Story Book above alleaged.

Vos sapere vel mori jubent.

Not long after Anne du Bourg's death, the President Minard, who was a fore persecutor, and the condemner of the said Anne du Bourg, as he returned from the Palace or Council Chamber to his own house, being upon his Mule, even hard by his house, was slain with a dagger; but who was the doer thereof, or for what cause he was slain, for all the inquisition and diligent search that could be made, it was never known.

Among many other examples worthy to be noted let us also consider the end of the King of Navar, Brother to the worthy Prince of Condé, who after hee had sustained a certain time the cause of the Gospel, at length being allured by the flattering word of the Duke of Guise, and the Cardinal of Lorain his Brother, and upon hope to have his lands restored again, which the King of Spain retained from him, was contented to alter his Religion, and to joyne side with the Papists, and so being in camp with the Duke of Guise, at the siege of Roan, was there shot in with a pellet. After which wound received, being brought to a Town three miles from the camp, called Preaux, he did vehemently repent and lament his backsliding from the Gospel, promising to God most earnestly, that if he might escape that hurt, hee would bring to pass that the Gospel should be preached freely

Of the Emperor Sigismundus.

Amongst others, here is not to be past over nor forgotten the notable example of Gods just scourge upon Sigismundus the Emperor, of whom mention is made before, in the Condemnation of John Hus, and Hierome of Prague. After the death and wrongful Condemnation of which blessed Martyrs, nothing afterward went prosperously with the said Emperor, but all contrary; so that he both died without issue, and in his Wars he ever went to the worst. And not long after, Ladislaus his Daughters Son King of Hungary, fighting against the Turk, was slain in the field. So that in the time of one Generation all the posterity and offspring of this Emperor perished. Besides this, Barbara his Wife came to such ruine by her wicked lewdness, that she became a shame and slander to the name and state of all Queens. Whereby all Christian Princes and Emperors may sufficiently be admonished, if they have grace, what it is to defile themselves with the Blood of Christs blessed Saints and Martyrs.

A note of Christopher Parker.

Christopher Parker, called Parker the wild, mentioned before in this Book of Monuments, who being a Persecutor of Richard Woodman, did manacle his hands with a cord, did cast himself into a Pond, and so drowned himself at Hertsmere, in Suffex, the 8. September, 1575.

The Story of one Drainer of Kent, commonly called Justice Nine-holes.

I May not in this place omit the tragedy of one Drainer of Smarden in the County of Kent, Esquire, who bearing grudge against one Gregory Dods, Parson of the said Town, for reproving his vicious life, sent for him by two men, which took him and brought him before him, where he was had into a Parlour, as it were to break-fast. In which behind the Door he had placed one Roger Matthews secretly, to bear witness what he should say, no more being in sight but the said Drainer and one of his men, who willed and persuaded him to speak freely his mind, for that there was not sufficient record of his words to hurt him. But the Lord kept his talk without Peril, whereby the said Drainer sent him to the next Justice called Mr. George Dorel; who, perceiving it to be done more of malice than otherwise, delivered him upon Sureties, to appear at the next Sessions at Canterbury, and at length he was banished the Country.

This said Drainer afterward, being chosen Justice, to shew himself diligent in seeking the trouble of his Neighbours, made in the Roodloft nine holes, that he might look about the Church in Mass time. In which place alway at the facing thereof, he would stand to see who looked not, or held not up his hands thereto; which persons not so doing he would trouble and punish very fore. Whereby he purchased a name there, and is called to this day Justice Nine-holes, who now (God be thanked) is John out of Office, and glad of his Neighbours good will.

It so fell out, that since this was published, the said Drainer came to the Printers house, with other associates, demanding: Is Fox here? To whom answer was given, that Master Fox was not within. Is the Printer within (quoth Drainer)? It was answered, Yea. Whereupon being required to come up into his house, he was asked what his will was. Marry saith he, you have printed me false in your Book, Why, saith the Printer, is not your name Master Drainer, otherwise called Justice Nine-holes? It is false saith he, I made but five with a great Augur and the Parson made the rest. It was answered, I have not read that a Justice should make him a place in the Rood-Loft, to see if the People held up their hands. He said, Whereas you alledged, that I did it to see who adored the Sacrament, or who not, it is untrue; for I set as little by it, as the best of you all. Indeed saith the Printer, so we understand now; for you being at Supper in Cheapside among certain honest Company, and there burdened with the matter, said then, that you did it rather to look upon fair wenches than otherwise. He being in a great rage, swore, saying to this purpose; Can a man speak nothing but you must have understanding thereof? But, saith he, did I do any man any hurt? It was answered, that he meant little good to Master Dods, aforesaid, especially procuring a secret witness behind his door, to catch some words that might tend to Dods destruction. Which thing Drainer swore, as before, was not true. To whom the Printer replied, that it was most true, for that the party there secretly hidden, hath since upon his knees, asking forgiveness for his intent, confessed the same to Dods himself. I will hang that Knave, saith he: And so he departed in a rage; and since is deceased, whose death and order thereof, I refer to the secret Judge.

Drainer convicted of falsehood.

A lamentable history of John Whitman Shoemaker, who suffered most cruel Torments at Ostend in Flanders, for the Testimony of Jesus Christ, and the Truth of his Gospel, Anno 1572.

John Whitman Shoemaker, being about the age of 49 years, born in Timen a Town in Brabant, after his coming over into England, dwelt in Rie in the County of Suffex, being married 23 years: always a professor of the Gospel, as well in the time of the freedom thereof, as in time of Persecution. About Candlemas in the year 1572. unknown to his Friends in Rie, understanding of shipping in Rie, which was ready bound for Ostend in Flanders, he went aboard the Saturday morning, and arrived at Ostend that night, where he lodged with one of his Kinsmen there dwelling. The next day being Sunday, in the morning he accompanied with his said Kinsman, took his Journey, as it were to have passed higher into the Country.

When they were about three Miles on their way out of the Town, suddenly Whitman staid and would go no further; but immediately returned back again to Ostend, whither so soon as he was come, it being Service time in their Church, he forthwith addressed himself thither, and at the time of the heave-offering stepped to the Sacrifice, and took from over his head his Idol, saying these words in the Dutch Tongue? Is this your God? and so breaking it, cast it down under his feet, and trode thereon. Forthwith the People in an uproar came to lay hold on him, and hardly in the Church escaped he death by the Souldiers there present, but being rescued by some, to the intent to be further examined and made a publick Spectacle, he was carried immediately to Prison. Upon the next day, being Monday, the Judges and other Counsellors being assembled, he was brought forth into the common Hall, and examined of his fact, the intent, the Counsel and abettors thereof, and also of his Faith: where he very constantly in defence of his Christian Faith, and great detestation of Idolatry, demeaned himself in such sort, that he wrung Tears from the eyes of divers, both of the chief, and others present. So was he committed again to Prison. The next day being Tuesday, he was brought out again before the Judges into the same place, and being examined as before, he no whit abated, but increased in his constancy. Whereupon Sentence was given upon him to have his hand cut off, and his Body scorched to death, and after to be hanged up. So the day following, being Wednesday, he was brought out of Prison to the Town Hall, standing in the Market place, all things belonging to execution being made ready there. Which when they were all ready, the Hangman went into the Hall, and with a Cord tied the hands of Whitman, and came out leading him thereby. So soon as Whitman was out of the house, he made such haste, and as it were, ran fo to the place of Execution, that he drew the Hangman after him. There was a Post set up with Spars from the top thereof, a flope, down to the ground, in manner of a Tent, to the end that he should be only scorched to death, and not burned. When he was come to the place, the Hangman commanded him to lay down his Right hand upon a Block, which he immediately with a Hatchet fmoote off: the good man still continuing constant, the Hangman stepped behind him, and bid him put out his Tongue, which he forthwith did, as far as he could out of his mouth, through the which he thrust a long Instrument like a Pack-needle, and so let it stick. Then the Judges, standing by in the Common-Hall, read again his Fact and Sentence. Whereunto he could make no answer, his Tongue hanging out of his head: so was he stripped out of his Caslock, his Hose being put off in Prison, and put within his Tent, and made fast with two Chains, and fire was put round about, which broiled and scorched his Body most miserably, all black, he not being seen, but heard to make a noise within the Tent. When he was dead, he was carried out to be hanged upon a Gibbet beside the Town.

Admonition to the Reader concerning the Examples above mentioned.

IT hath been a long perfwasion gendred in the heads of many men these many years, that to ground a mans Faith upon Gods Word alone, and not upon the See and Church of Rome, following all the Ordinances and Constitutions of the same was damnable Heresie, and to persecute such Men to death was damnable Heresie, and to persecute such Men to death was high service done to God, Whereupon have risen so great Persecutions, Slaughters and Murders, with such effusion of Christian Blood through all parts of Christendom by the space of these 70 years, as hath not before been seen. And of these Men Christ himselfe doth full well warn us long before, truly prophesying of such times to come, when they that slay his Ministers and Servants should think themselves to do good service unto God, John 16. Now what wicked service, and how detestable before God this is, which they falsly perswade themselves to be godly, what more evident demonstrations can we require, than these so many, so manifest, and so terrible Examples of Gods wrath pouring down from Heaven upon these Persecutors, whereof part we have already set forth; for to comprehend all (which in number are infinite) it is impossible. Wherefore, although there be many which will neither hear, see, nor understand, what is for their profit, yet let all moderate and well disposed Natures take warning in time. And if the plain Word of God will not suffice them, nor the Blood of so many Martyrs will move them to embrace the Truth, and forsake Error, yet let the desperate deaths and horrible punishments of their own Papists perswade them, how perilous is the end of this damnable Doctrine of Papistry. For if these Papists, which make so much of their painted Antiquity, do think their proceedings to be so Catholick, and Service so acceptable to God, let them joyn this withal, and tell us how come then their proceedings to be so accursed of God, and their end so miserably plagued, as by these Examples above specified, is here notoriously to be seen? Again, if the Doctrine of them be such Heresie, whom they have hitherto persecuted for Hereticks unto death; how then is Almighty God become a maintainer of Hereticks, who hath revenged their Blood so grievously upon their Enemies and Persecutors?

The putting out of the French Kings eyes, which promised before with his eyes to see one of Gods true Servants burned, who seeth not with his eyes to be the stroke of Gods hand upon him? Then his Son Francis after him, not regarding his Fathers stripe, would yet needs proceed in burning the same Man: and did not the same God, which put out his Fathers eyes, give him such a blow on the Ear, that it cost him his life? If the Plat-form of Stephen Gardiner had been a thing so necessary for the Church, and so grateful unto God, why then did it not prosper with him, nor he with it, but both he and his Plat-form lay in the dust, and none left behind him to build upon it? After the time of Stephen Gardiner, and at the Council of Trent, what Conspiracies and Policies were devised? what Practices and Trains were laid through the secret confederacy of Princes and Prelates, for the utter subversion of the Gospel and all Gospelers, which if God had seen to have been for his glory, why then came they to none effect? yea, how or by whom were they disclosed and foreprized, but by the Lord himself, which would not have them come forward?

The vehement Zeal of Queen Mary was like to have set up the Pope here again in England for ever, if it had so much pleased the Lord God as it pleased her self; or if it had been so godly as it was bloody, no doubt but Gods blessing would have gone withal. But when was the Realm of England more barren of all Gods Blessings? what Prince ever reigned here more shorter time, or left to his own hearts ease than did Queen Mary?

The Constable of France, when he covenanted with God, that if he had the victory of St. Quintins, he would set upon Geneva, thought (no doubt) that he had made a great good bargain with God; much like unto Julian the Emperor, who going against the Persians, made his Vow, that if he sped well, he would offer the Blood of Christians. But what did God? came not both their Vows to like effect?

The Examples of such as revolted from the Gospel to Papistry be not many; but as few as they were, scarce can any be found which began to turn to the Pope, but the Lord began to turn from them, and to leave them to their ghostly enemy; as we have heard of the King of Navar in France, of Henry Smith, and Dr. Shaxton in England, with other in other Countries more, of whom some died in great sorrow of Conscience, some in miserable doubt of their salvation, some stricken by Gods hand, some given to hang or drown themselves.

The stinking death of Stephen Gardiner, of John de Roma, of Twyford, of the Bayliff of Crowland: The sudden death of the Suffragan of Dover, of Dr. Dunning, of Dr. Geoffrey, of Berry the Promoter: The miserable and wretched end of Pouchier Archbishop of Towers, of Cardinal Crescentius, Castellatus: The desperate disease of Rockwood, of Latimus, of Guarlacus: The earthly ending of Henry Beauford Cardinal of Winchester, of Eekius, of Thorton called Dick of Dover: The wilful and self murder of Pauter, of Richard Long, of Bonelins, besides infinite other: The dreadful taking away and murren of so many persecuting Bishops, so many bloody Promoters and malicious Adversaries, in such a short time together with Queen Mary, and that without any mans hand, but only the secret working of Gods just Judgment.

To add to these also the stinking death of Edmund Boner, commonly named the bloody Bishop of London; who not many years ago, in the time and reign of Queen Elizabeth, after he had long feasted and banqueted in durance at the Marshalsea, as he wretchedly died in his blind Popery, so astinkingly and as blindly at Midnight was he brought out and buried in the outside of all the City, amongst Thieves and Murderers, a place right convenient for such a murderer; with confusion and derision both of Men and Children, who trampling upon his Grave, well declared how he was hated both of God and Man. What else be all these (I say) but plain visible Arguments, Testimonies and Demonstrations even from Heaven against the Pope, his murdering Religion, and his bloody Doctrine? For who can deny their doings not to be good, whose end is so evil? If Christ bid us to know men by their fruits, and especially seeing by the end all things are to be tried, how can the profession of that Doctrine please God, which endeth so ungodly? Esaia, Chap. 50. prophesying of the end of Gods Enemies, which would needs walk in the light of their own setting up, and not in the light of the Lords kindling, threatment to them this final malediction, in doloribus (saith he) dormietis, i. In sorrow shall ye sleep. Let us now take a survey of all those Persecutors, which of late have so troubled the Earth, (and almost have burned up the World with Fagots and Fire, for maintenance of the Popes Religion) and see what the end hath been of them that are now gone, and whither their Religion hath brought them) but either to destruction, or desolation, or confusion and shame of Life. So many great Doctors and Bishops have cried out of late so mightily against Priests marriage; and have they not, by Gods just judgment working their confusion, been derided themselves, and taken the most part of them in sinful Adultery, and shameful Fornication? Cardinal Joannes Cremenst the Popes Legate here in England, after he had let a Law that Priests should have no Wives, was he not the next day after, being taken with his Whores; driven out of London with confusion and shame enough; so that afterwards he durst not shew his face here any more? Besides the two Bishops in the late Council of Trent most shamefully taken in Adultery, mentioned before. Also besides innumerable other like foreign stories, which I let pass, to come now to our own domestic examples, I could well name half a score at least of famous Doctors; and some Bishops, with their great Masters of Popery, who, in standing earnestly against the marriages of Priests, have afterward been taken in such dishonest facts themselves, that not only they have carried the publick shame of adulterous Letchers, but some of them the marks also of burning Fornication with them in their Bodies to their Graves. Whose Names although I suffer here to be suppressed, yet the examples of them may suffice to admonish all men that be wise, and which will avoid the wrath of Gods terrible vengeance, to beware of Popery.

And thus having hitherto recited so many shameful lives and desperate ends of so many Popish Persecutors stricken by Gods hand; now let us consider again on the contrary side the blessed ends given of Almighty God unto them, which have stood so manfully in the defence of Christs Gospel, and the reformation of his Religion, and let the Papists themselves here be Judges. First, what a peaceable and heavenly end made the worthy Servant and singular Organ of God, Martin Luther?

To speak likewise of the famous John Duke of Saxony and Prince Elector, of the good Pallgrave, of Philip Melancthon, of Pomeranus, Urbanus, Rögius, Berengarius, of Ulricus Swingius, Oecolampadius, Pilicanus, Capito, Munsterus, Joannes Calvinus, Petrus Martyr, Martin Bucer, Paulus Pagnius, Johannes Musculus, Biblander, Gesnerus, Hefman, Augustinus Marloratus, Leves of Bourbon Prince of Condé, and his godly Wife before him, with many more, which were known to be learned men, and chief standers of the Gospel side against the Pope, and yet no man able to bring forth any one example either of these, or of any other true Gospeller, that either killed himself, or shewed forth any signification or appearance of despair, but full of hope and constant in Faith, and replenished with the fruit of Righteousness in Christ Jesus, so yielded their lives in quiet peace unto the Lord.

From these Forreigners, let us come now to the Martyrs of England, and mark likewise the end both of them, and semblably of all others of the same Profession. And first to begin with the blessed and heavenly departure of King Edward the sixth, that first put down the Mass in England, and also of the like godly end of his good Uncle the Duke of Somerfet, which died before him, with an infinite number of other private persons besides of the like Religion, in whose final departing no such blemish is to be noted, like to the desperate Examples of them above recited. Let us now enter the consideration of the blessed Martyrs, who although they suffered in their Bodies, yet rejoiced they in their Spirits, and albeit they were persecuted of men, yet werethey comforted of the Lord with such inward joy and peace of Conscience, that some writing to their Friends, professed they were never so merry before in all their lives, some leapt for joy, some for triumph would put on their Scarfs, some their wedding Garment, going to the fire, others killed the Stakes, some embraced the Fagots, some clapt their hands, some sung Psalms; universally they all forgave, and prayed for their Enemies, no murmuring, no repining was ever heard amongst them: so that most truly might be verified in them, which their Persecutors were wont to sing in their Hyans,

*Ceduntur gladius more hientium;
Non murmur resonat, nec querencia :
Sed corde tacito mens bene conficta
Conservat patientiam, &c.*

Briefly, so great was their patience, or rather so great was Gods Spirit in them, that some of them in the flaming fire moved no more than the Stake whereunto they were tied. In fine, in them most aptly agreed the special tokens which most certainly follow the true Children of God, that is, outward Perfection, and inward comfort in the Holy Ghost. In the world (saith Christ our Saviour) ye shall have Affliction; but in me ye shall have Peace, &c.

And likewise the words of S. Paul be plain; Whoever (saith he) studieth to live godly in Christ, shall suffer persecution.

But then what followeth with this Perfection? the said Apostle again thus declareth, saying, As the Passions of Christ abound in us, so aboundeth also our Consolation by Christ, &c. according as by these examples of these godly Martyrs right perfectly we may perceive. For as their Bodies outwardly lacked no Persecutions by the hands of the wicked; so amongst so many hundreds of them that stood and died in this Religion, what one man hath been brought forth, which either have been found to have killed himself, or to have died otherwise than the true Servant of God, in quiet peace, and much comfort of Conscience?

Which being so, what greater proof can we have to justify their Cause and Doctrine against the persecuting Church of Rome, then to behold the ends of them both? First, of the Protestants, how quietly they took their death, and cheerfully rested in the Lord, and contrariwise to mark these Persecutors, what a wretched end commonly they do all come unto.

Experience whereof we have sufficient in the examples above declared, and also of late in Bauer, who albeit he died in his Bed unrepentant, yet was it provided by God, that as he had been a Persecutor of the Light, and a Child of Darkness, so his Carcase was tumbled into the Earth in obscure darkness, at midnight, contrary to the order of all other Christians; and as he had been a Murderer, so was he laid amongst Thieves and Murderers, a place by Gods judgment rightly appointed for him.

And albeit some peradventure, that have been notable Persecutors in times past, do yet remain alive, who, being in the same Cause as the other were, have not yet felt the weight of Gods mighty hand, yet let not them think, that because the judgment of God hath lighted sooner upon other, therefore it will never lighten upon them; or because God of his mercy hath granted them space to repent, let not them therefore of Gods lenity build to themselves an opinion of indemnity. The blood of Abel cried long, yet wrought at length. The souls of the Saints slain under the Altar, were not revenged at the first. Spec. 6. but read forth the Chapter, and see what followed in the end. Blood, especially of Christs Servants, is a perilous matter, and crieth sore in the ears of God, and will not be filled with the Laws of men.

Wherefore let such Blood-guilty Homicides beware, if not by counsel, at least by the examples of their Fellows. And though Princes and Magistrates, under whose permission they are suffered, do spare their lives, let them not think therefore (as some of them shame not to say) that man hath no power to hurt them, and so think to escape unpunished, because they be not punished by man, but rather let them fear so much the more. For oftentimes such as have been Persecutors and Tormentors to Gods Children, God thinketh them not worthy to suffer by man, but either reserveth them to his own judgment, or else maketh them to be their own Persecutors, and their own hands most commonly Hangmen to their own Bodies.

So Saul, after he had persecuted David, it was unneedful for David to pursue him again: for he was revenged of him, more than he desired. It was needless to cause Achishophel to be hanged; for he himself was the sinner or stranger of his own life.

Neither for the Apostles to pursue Judas that betrayed their Master; for he himself was his own Hangman, himself, and no man else, that his Body burst, and his Guts brast out.

Senacherib, had he not for his Persecutors his own Sons, and it cost Eszechias nothing to be revenged of him for his Tyranny?

Antiochus and Herod, although the Children of God, whom they so cruelly persecuted, laid no hand upon them, yet they escaped not unpunished of Gods hand, who sent Lice and Worms to be their Tormentors, which consumed and eat them up.

Pilate, after he had crucified Christ our Saviour, within few years after was he not driven to hang himself?

Nero, after his cruel Murders and Persecutions stirred up against the Christians, when he should have been taken by the Romans, God thought him not so worthy to be punished by the hands of them, but so disposed the matter, that Nero himself, when he could find no Friend nor Enemy to kill him, made his own hands to be his own Cut-throat.

Dioclesianus, with Maximinian his Fellow Emperor, which were the Authors of the Tenth and last Persecution against the Christians, being in the midst of their furious tyranny against the Name of Christ, needed no mans help to bridle them and pluck them back: for God of his secret Judgment put such a Snaffle in the Mouths of these Tyrants, that they themselves of their own accord deposed and dispossessed themselves of their Imperial Function, and lived as private persons all their lives after: And notwithstanding that Maximinian, after that, sought to resume his Imperial State again, yet by Maxentius his Son he was resisted, and shortly after slain.

What thought I here speak of the cruel Emperor Maximian? who when he had set forth his Proclamation engraven in Brass, for the utter abolishing of Christ and his Religion, was not punished by man, but had Lice and Vermin gushing out of his Intrails, to be his Tormentors, with such a rotten stench laid upon his Body, that no Physicians could abide to come near, and was caused to be slain for the same.

Maxentius the Son of Maximinian, and Pharaoh the King of Egypt, as they were both like Enemies against God and his People, to drink they both of one Cup, not perishing by any mans hand, but both in like manner, after, were drowned with their Harneſs in the Water.

Furthermore and briefly in this matter to conclude, if the Kings among the Jews, which were bloody and wicked, were not spared, as Achaz, Achab, Jezabel, Manasse, Jechon, Zedechias, with many other, but had at length, although it were long, the hire of their iniquity: let not these bloody Catholics then think, which have been Persecutors of Christs Saints, that they being in the same cause as the other above recited were, shall escape the same Judgment, which the longer it is deferred, the sorer many times it striketh, unless by due repentance it be prevented in time; which I pray God it may.

Innumerable Examples more to the same effect and purpose might be inferred, whereof plentiful store we have in all places, and in all Ages of men to be collected. But these hitherto for this present may suffice, which I thought here to notice unto these our bloody Children of the murdering Mother Church of Rome, of whom it may well be said, Manus vestra plene sunt sanguine, &c. Your hands be full of Blood, &c. Ezay, Chap. 1. to the intent that they, by the examples of their other Fellows before mentioned, may be admonished to follow the Prophets counsel, which followeth and biddeth, Lavamina, mundi estote, &c. Be you washed, and make yourselves clean, &c. Ezay 1. and not to presume too far upon their own Security, nor think themselves the further off from Gods hand, because mans hand forbearth them.

I know and grant, that man hath no further power upon any, than God from above doth give. And what the Laws of this Realm could make against them, as against open Murderers, I will not here discuss, nor open that I could say, because they shall not say that we desire their blood to be spilled, but rather to be spared, but yet this I say, and wish them well to understand, that the sparing of their Lives, which have been murderers of so many, is not for want of power in Magistrates nor lack of any just Law against them, whereby they might justly have been condemned, if it had so pleased the Magistrates to proceed (as they might) against them; but because Almighty God peradventure in his secret purpose, having something to do with these Persecutors, hath spared them hitherto, nor that they should escape unpunished, but that peradventure he will take his own cause into his own hand, either by death to take them away (as he did by Rams, and by all Promoters in a manner of Queen Maries time) or else to make them to persecute themselves with their own hands, or will stir up their Conscience to be their own confusion, in such sort as the Church shall have no need to lay hands upon them.

Wherefore with this short Admonition to close up the matter, as I have exhibited in these Histories the terrible ends of so many Persecutors plagued by Gods hand: so would I wish all such whom Gods lenity suffereth yet to live, this wisely to ponder with themselves, that as their cruel Persecution hurteth not the Saints of God, whom they have put to death, so the patience of Christs Church, suffering them to live, doth not profit them, but rather hegeth the greater Judgment of God upon them in the day of wrath, unless they repent in time; which I pray God they may.

And now to re-entertain again to the time and story of Q. Elizabeth where we left before.

In whose advancement and this her Princely governance, it cannot sufficiently be expressed, what felicity and blessed happiness this Realm hath received in receiving her at the Lords almighty and gracious hand. For as there have been divers Kings and Rulers over this Realm, and I have read of some, yet I could never find in English Chronicle the like that may be written of this our noble and worthy Queen: whose coming in was not only so calm, so joyful, and so peaceable, without shedding any blood, but also her Reign hitherto (reigning now 24. years and more) hath been so quiet, that yet (the Lord have all the glory) to this present day, her Sword is a Virgin, spotted and polluted with no drop of blood. In speaking whereof, I take not upon me the part here of the Moral or of the Divine Philosopher, to judge of things done, but only keep me within the compals of an Historiographer, declaring what hath been before, and comparing things done with things now present, the like whereof, as I said, is not to be found lightly in Chronicles before. And this as I speak truly, so I would to be taken without flattery, to be left to our Posterity, ad sempiternam clementie illius memoriam. In commendation of which her Clemency, might also here add how mildly her Grace, after she was advanced to her Kingdom, did forgive the foresaid Sir Henry Bensfield without molestation, suffering him to enjoy Goods, Life, Lands and Liberty. But I let this pass.

Thus halt thou, gentle Reader, simply, but truly described unto thee the time, first of the sorrowful adversity of this our most Sovereign Queen that now is also the miraculous protection of God, so graciously preserving her in so many straits and distresses, which I thought here briefly to notice, the rather for that the wondrous works of the Lord ought not to be suppressed, and that also her Majesty, and we likewise her poor Subjects, having thereby a present matter always before our eyes, be admonished both how much we are bound to his Divine Majesty, and also to render thanks to him condignly for the same.

Now remaineth likewise in prosecuting the order of this, as of other Histories before, to notice and discourse of things memorable especially in the Church, such as happened in the time of this her Majesties quiet and joyful Government. And first here I let pass by the way the death of Cardinal Poole, which was the next day after the death of Queen Mary, the death also of Christopher Bishop of Chichester, Hopton Bishop of Norwich, omitting also to speak of Doctor Weston, who being as is before declared, first fell in displeasure with the Cardinal and other Bishops, because he was unwilling to part from his Deanery and House of Westminster unto the Monks, whom indeed he favoured not, although in other things a maintainer of the Church of Rome. Then being removed from thence, he was made

The nature of the Church is not to persecute with blood.

In that the Persecutors of the Church be suffered of the Church to live, it is to their confusion.

Sir H. Bensfield with- out molestation, suffering him to enjoy Goods, Life, Lands and Liberty.

November 11.

Dr. Weston.

Dean

1558.

Dean of Windſor, where he, being apprehended in Advowtry, was by the ſame Cardinal put from all his Spiritual Livings. Wherefore he appealed to Rome, and flying out of the Realm, was taken by the way, and clapt in the Tower of London, where he remained until this time that Queen Elizabeth was proclaimed. At which time being delivered, he fell ſick and died.

Alſo I let paſs the Coronation of this our moſt noble and Chriſtian Princeſs, and the order of the ſame, which was the fifteenth day of January, Anno 1559. To paſs over alſo the triumphant Paſſage and honourable Entertainment of the ſaid our moſt dread Sovereign, thorow the City of London, with ſuch Celebrity, Prayers, Wiſh-es, Welcomings, Cries, tender Words, Pageants, Enterludes, Declamations and Verſes ſet up; as the like hath not commonly been ſeen, arguing and declaring a wonderful earneſt affection of loving hearts toward their Sovereign. Item, To premit in ſilence the Letters gratulatory, ſent to her Maſteſty from divers and ſundry foreign places, as from Zurich, Geneva, Baſil, Berne, Wittemberge, Argentine, Frankford, &c. Theſe, I ſay, with many other things to let paſs, we will now (God willing) begin with the Diſſection or Conference between the Popiſh Biſhops, and the learned men exiled in Germany, had at Weſtmiſter; after that firſt we have inferſed a certain Oration of a worthy Gentleman, called Mr. John Hales, ſent and delivered to the ſaid Queen Elizabeth in the beginning of her Reign, the Copy whereof is this.

An Oration of John Hales to the Queens Maſteſty, and delivered to her Maſteſty by a certain Noble man, at her firſt Entrance to her Reign.

To the Noble Queen Elizabeth.

Great benefits and treasures do nothing profit, where the uſe of them cannot be enjoyed.

Albeit there be innumerable gifts and benefits of Almighty God, whereof every one would wonderfully comfort any perſon, on whom it ſhould pleaſe his goodneſs to beſtow it: yet is none of them either ſeparate by it ſelf, or joynd with any other, or yet all mingled together, to be companied to this one; that it hath pleaſed God of his mercy to deliver this Realm, our Country, from the tyranny of malicious Mary, and to commit it to the government of vertuous Elizabeth. For if a man had all the Treſure of Solomon, and might not be ſuffered to have the uſe thereof, in what better caſe were he than miſerable Tantalus, over whoſe head the Apples continually hang, yet being hunger-starved, he could never touch them? If a man had as ſtrong a Body as had Samſon, and beſides, were as whole as a fiſh, as the Proverb is, yet if he were kept in Bands, what ſhould it avail him? Yea, rather if it be well conſidered, it is a hurt to him, if continuance of torment and pains may be a hurt.

If a man had as many Children as had Gideon the Judge, and might not be ſo ſuffered to bring them up in the fear of God, and good knowledge and manners, had he not been more happy to be without them, than to have them? If a man had as much knowledge of God as had S. Paul, and durſt not profeſs it openly with mouth, as he is commanded, but for fear of death ſhould declare the contrary in deed, ſlander the word of God, and deny Chriſt, which is forbidden, ſhould it not rather be a furtherance to his damnation than otherwiſe?

And to be ſhort, if any one man had all theſe gifts together, or generally all the gifts of Fortune, the Body, the Mind, and of Grace, yet if he might not have the uſe of them, what ſhould they profit him? Verily nothing at all. For felicity is not in having, but in uſing; not in poſſeſſing, but in occupying, not in knowledge, but in doing.

Felicity, not in having, but in uſing.

But alas, our natural Mother England, which hath been counted to be the faireſt, the richeſt, and of late alſo the moſt godly Nation of the Earth, hath been theſe whole five years moſt violently by Tyrants forced to lack the uſe of all theſe gifts and benefits wherewith God and Nature had endued her. Her natural and loving Children could not be ſuffered to enjoy their right inheritance, whereby they might relieve and ſuccour her or themſelves;

but whatſoever they had, was either by open force, or by crafty dealing pulled from them. And ſurely this had been tolerable; if hone other miſchief had been therewith intended.

He is a gentle Thief (if Thieves may be counted gentle) that only robbeth a man of his Goods, and refraineth violent hands from his perſon. For ſuch loſs with labour and diligence may be recovered. He may be called a merciful murderher, that only killeth the aged Parents, and uſeth no force on the Children.

For Nature hath made all men mortal, and that in like ſpace; and to kill the Parents; as it were but a prevention of a ſhort time, if it were to the uttermoſt enjoyed.
But theſe Tyrants were more ungentle than common Thieves, more empty of mercy than common murderers.
For they were not only not contented to have the Goods of the People, but they would have it delivered to them by the owners own hands, that it might be ſaid to be the world they gave it with their heart; and were not therewith pleaſed, but they would have their lives; that they ſhould not betray them; and yet herewith they were not ſatisfied, but they meant to root out the whole Progeny and Nation of Engliſhmen, that none ſhould be left to revenge and cry out on their extremities, and to bring our Country into the Spaniards Dominion.

Wicked
practices of moſt cruel Tyrants.

It is an horrible cruelty for one brother to kill another;
much more horrible for the Children to lay violent and murdering hands on their Parents, but moſt horrible of all to murder the Children in the fight of their Parents; or the Parents in the fight of their Children, as theſe moſt cruel Tormentors have done.

But what do I ſtand in theſe things which have ſome defence, becauſe the Turks per chance uſe ſo to do, and Ethiicks kill one another, to make Sacrifice of men to their phantaſtical Gods?

It was not enough for theſe unnatural Engliſh Tormentors, Tyrants, and falſe Chriſtians, to be the Lords of the Goods, Poſſeſſions, and Bodies of their Brethren and Country-men: but being very Antichriſts, and Enemies of Chriſts Croſs, they would be Gods, and reign in the Conſciences and Souls of men. Every man, woman, and child muſt deny Chriſt in word openly, abhor Chriſt in their deeds, ſlander his Goſpel with word and deed, worſhip and honour falſe Gods as they would have them, and themſelves did, and ſo give Body and Soul to the Devil their Maſter, or ſecretly flee, or after inward Torments be burned openly. O cruelty, cruelty! far exceeding all cruelties committed by thoſe ancient and famous Tyrants and cruel Murderers, Pharaoh, Herod, Caligula, Nero, Domitian, Maximine, Diocleſian, Decius, whoſe names for their cruel perſecution of the People of God, and their own tyranny practiſed on the People, have been,
be, and ever ſhall be in perpetual hatred, and their Souls in continual torment in Hell. If any man would take upon him to ſet forth particularly all the acts that have been done theſe full five years, by this unnatural woman; (No, no woman, but a Monſter, and the Devil of Hell covered with the ſhape of a woman) as it is moſt neceſſary for the glory of God, and the profit of his Church, and this Realm, it ſhould be done: he ſhall find it a matter ſufficient for a perfect great Hiſtory, and not to be contained in an Oration, to be uttered at one time by the voice of man. But to comprehend the ſum of all their wickedneſs in few words; Behold, whatſoever malice in miſchief, covetouſneſs in ſpoil, cruelty in puniſh-ing, tyranny in deſtruction could do, that all this poor Engliſh Nation this full five years ſuffered already, or ſhould have ſuffered, had not the great mercy of God prevented it.

Cruelty of five days far exceeding all cruelties committed by the ancient and famous Tyrants ſix times paſt.

And albeit there have been many that have hazarded and loſt their lives to ſhake off this moſt rough brake (wherewith this Viragin, rather than Virgin, as the would be called and taken, boaſted herſelf to be ſent of God, to ride and tame the People of England) albeit there have been many that have gone about to looſe their brethern out of the yoke of this moſt miſerable Captivity, and albeit ſome have proved to break the bands of this moſt cruel Tyranny, yet could they never bring to paſs that which they ſo earneſtly laboured, and ſo manfully attempted.

And it is nothing to be wondered, let the Popiſts boaſt thereof what it pleaſeth them. For Almighty God, being

being a most indifferent governor, punishing evil, and rewarding good, could not of his justice suffer his scourge to soon be taken from this our Land, if he meant the Salvation of the people, as most manifestly it appears he did. For having once given to this Realm the greatest Jewel that might be, that is, the free use of his lively Word (which if they had embraced and followed, it would have reformed all disorders and sins for which his wrath was kindled and provoked) the people nothing regarded it, but either utterly contemned it, or abused it, and many made it a Cloak and colour to cover their mischief. So that if he should suddenly have withdrawn this plague, as Tyrants and evil Governors be the plague of God, they would neither have passed on his justice, nor yet should they have felt the sweetness of his mercy. For commonly the people regard but things present, and neither remember things past, nor yet pass on things to come, unless they be warned by exceeding extremities.

Tyrants and evil governors be the plague of God.

God worketh all things to his own glory.

Besides this, it is most evident, that he had determined to make this noble conquest alone with his own hand and mighty power, and would not that it should be done by Man, lest Man should impute any part of the glory of this victory to his own strength, or to his own policy, or that Fortune should seem to bear any stroke in so glorious a conquest, and so be partaker, in Mens opinions, of the triumph so worthy.

Neither did his almighty power work this when Man would have it dispatched, that is, as soon as the enemy began to gather their force; for it is not so great a victory to discomfit a few dispersed people, as it is to destroy a perfectly united army; but he suffered them to make their force as great as was possible, to work whatsoever mischief by smite, banishment, prisonment hangings, heading, burning, or otherwise could be imagined.

Neither would his most provident wisdom do it out of season: but as the good husbandman doth not crop his Tree, till he hath rendered his fruit: so would he not root out these pestilent Tyrants, till the most profit might be taken thereof.

Amblition tryeth Men whether they be good or evil.

When he had given sufficient leisure to all kind of Men to declare themselves who were Crocodiles, sometime lying in Water, sometime on Land, that is, both Gophers and Papists; who were Sponges, suspected whether they had life or not life, whether they were Christians or Epicures; who were Cameleons, that could turn themselves into all colours, with Protestants, Protestants; with Papists, Papists; with Spaniards, Spaniards, with Englishmen, Englishmen; who were Gnats, that could apply themselves to every Mans appetite that was in Authority; who were Marigolds, that followed Maries mad affections; who were weather-cocks, that did turn with every wind; who were Mastives, that could bite and bark not; who were curs, ever barking; who were Foxes, that would promise much, and perform nothing; who could bind themselves with many Oaths, and do clean contrary; who were Cains, that sought the innocent Abels deaths; who were the Wolves, that worried the Lambs; and finally, when he had suffered the spiritual travelers to spue out their venom, and every Man plainly to declare outwardly what he was inwardly; then doth he work this most victorious conquest. And with his works he seemeth plainly to say thus unto us: Ye see (my people) what I have done for you, not for your sakes, which nothing regarded the benefits that I most plentifully poured on you, and have deserved most grievous punishment for your unthankfulness: but of mine infinite mercy, and for my glories sake, which I will have opened to all the World in these latter days, to the fear of evil doers, and to the comfort of the well doers. Provoke no more my wrath: ye see what will follow it: be hereafter more prudent and wise than ye were before, Ye may, if ye will, be more circumspect in time to come, than ye have been in the time past: ye may if ye list put me to less trouble, and keep yourselves in more safety. I have not only discovered mine, yours, and my Land of Englands enemies, and all the crafts, subtilities, and policies that have been, or may be used by them, or any like hereafter, but I have also taken away their head and captain, and destroyed a great number of them, that ye should not be troubled with them, and some of them have I left, that ye may make them spectacles and examples to the terror and fear of their posterity. Love me, and I will love you: seek my honor and glory, and I will work your commodity and safety: walk in my ways and commandments, and I will be with you for ever. Surely, if we consider the wonderful mercy that it hath pleased God to use towards us, in the delivering of the Realm and us his people, out of the hands of those most cruel Tyrants, as we cannot but do, unless we will declare our selves to be the most unthankful people that ever lived, we must needs judge it not only worthy to be compared, but also far to exceed the deliverance of the Children of Israel out of Egypt from the Tyranny of Pharaoh, and from the powers of Holofernes and Senacherib. For it is not read, that either Pharaoh or the other two sought any other thing, than to be the Lords of the Goods and Bodies of the Israelites, they forced them not to commit Adultery, and to serve false Gods, as these English Tyrants did.

God of plenty only poureth his benediction upon us, not for our sakes, but of his infinite mercy, and for his glories sake.

But besides, if we will note the wonderful Works of God in handling this matter, we shall well perceive, that far much more is wrought to his glory, and to the profit of his Church and people, than perchance all Men at the first do see. For he hath not only dispatched the Realm of the chief personages and head of these Tyrants, but also as it were declarer, that he minded not that either they or their doings should continue. For albeit that all acts, done by Tyrants tyrannously, be by all Laws, Reason and Equity, of no force, yet because no Disputation should follow on this, what is tyrannously done, and what is not tyrannously done, he hath provided that this question needeth not to come in question. For he utterly blinded their eyes, and suffered them to build on false grounds which can no longer stand, than they be propped up with rope, sword, and figor. For her first Parliament whereon they grounded and wrought a great part of their tyranny, and wherein they meant to overthrow whatsoever King Edward had for the advancement of Gods Glory brought to pass, was of no force or Authority. For the perceiving that her Enemies Stomack could not be emptied, nor her malice speed on the people by any good order, she committed a great disorder. She by force and violence took from the Commons their liberty, that, according to the Ancient Laws and Customs of the Realm, they could not have their free election of Knights and Burgesses for the Parliament. For the well knew, that if either Christian Men, or true Englishmen, should be elected, it was not possible that to succeed which she intended. And therefore in many places divers were chosen by force of her threats, meet to serve her malicious affections. Wherefore that Parliament was no Parliament, but may be justly called a conspiracy of Tyrants and Traitors. For the greater part, by whose Authority and voices things proceeded in that Court, by their Acts most manifestly declared themselves for the rest being both Christians and true English Men, although they had good wills, yet were not able to resist or prevail against the multitude of voices and suffrages of so many evil, false to God, and enemies to their Country. Also divers Burgesses being orderly chosen, and lawfully returned, as in some places the people did what they could to resist her purposes, were disorderly and unlawfully put out, and others without any order of Law in their places placed. Doctor Taylor Bishop of Lincoln a Christian Bishop and a true Englishman, being lawfully and orderly called to the Parliament, and placed in the Lords House in his degree, was in his Robes by violence thrust out of the House. Alexander Nowell with two other, All three being Burgesses for divers shires, and Christian Men and true Englishmen, and lawfully chosen, returned, and admitted, were by force put out of the House of the Commons: for the which cause the said Parliament is also void, as by a President of the Parliament holden at Covenry in the 38. year of King Henry the sixth, it most manifestly appeareth. And the third Parliament called in the name of her Husband, and of her evil Grace, wherein they would have undone that her dear and Noble Father and the Realm had brought to pass for the restitution of the liberty of the Realm, and for extinguishment of the usurped Authority of the Bishop of Wonderful is Gods mercy in delivering this Realm from the tyranny of the Papists.

The Papists buildings stand so long, only as they be propped up with rope, sword and figor.

Burgesses used lawfully, disorderly, and violently thrust out of the Parliament House in Q. Marys days.

The third Parliament called in Q. Marys name, wherein they would have undone that her dear and Noble Father and the Realm had brought to pass for the restitution of the liberty of the Realm, and for extinguishment of the usurped Authority of the Bishop of Rome.

Anno 1558. Rome, is also void, and of none authority. For that the title and stile of Supream Head of the Church of England, which by a Statute made in the 35th year of the Reign of the said King Henry, was ordained, that it should be united and annexed for ever to the Imperial Crown of this Realm, was omitted in the Writs of summoning. Wherefore as a woman can bring forth no child without a man, so cannot those Writs bring forth good and sure fruit, because this part of the Title, which was ordained by the Parliament for the form to be always used in the Kings stile, was left out. For greater error is in lack of form, than in lack of matter. And where the foundation is naught, there can nothing builded thereon be good. There is no Law spiritual nor temporal (as they term them) nor any good Reason, but allow these Rules for infallible Principles. And if any man will say, that it was not in the free choice, liberty, and pleasure of the King of this Realm, and the Queen, whether they would express the said Title in their stile, or not, as that subtle Serpent Gardiner, being Chancellor of the Realm, and traitorously sending out the Writs of Parliament without the same stile, perceiving he had over-shot himself in calling the Parliament, and having committed many horrible murders and most mischievous acts, would have excused it, as appeareth by a piece of a Statute made in the same Parliament, in the eighth Chapter and two and twentieth Leaf, it may be justly and truly answered, that they could not so do. For although every person may by Law renounce his own private right, yet may he not renounce his right in that which toucheth the Commonwealth, or a third person.

And this Title and stile more touched the Commonwealth and Realm of England, than the King. For, as I said before, it was ordained for the conservation of the Liberty of the whole Realm, and to exclude the usurped Authority of the Bishop of Rome. And therefore no King nor Queen alone could renounce such Title: but it ought (if they would have it taken away) to be taken away orderly and formally by Act of Parliament, sufficiently called and summoned. For the natural and right way to loose and undo things, is to dissolve them by that means they were ordained. And so it most manifestly appeareth, that all their doings, from the beginning to the end, were and be of none effect, force, or authority: but all that they have done, hath been meer Tyranny. O most marvellous Providence of Almighty God, that always, and in all things, doth that is best for the wealth of his People! O most mighty Power, that so suddenly overthroweth the counsels of the wicked, and bringeth their devices to nought! O infinite mercy, that so gently dealeth with his People, that he saveth them whom he might most justly destroy! O most joyful, most merry, and never to be forgotten Hope-wednesday, in which it hath pleased thee, O God, to deliver thy Church, this Realm, and thy People from so horrible Tyranny! No Tongue can express, no Pen can indite, no Eloquence can worthily set out, much less exornate these thy marvellous doings. No, no heart is able to render unto thy goodness sufficient thanks for the benefits we have received. Who could ever have hoped this most joyful time? Yea, who did not look rather for thy most sharp visitation, and utter destruction of this Realm, as of Sodom, Gomorrah, and Jerusalem.

But we see and feel, good Lord, that thy mercy is greater than all mens sins, and far above all thy works. And albeit there is no Christian and natural Englishman, Woman, or Child, either present, or that shall succeed us, which is not or shall not be partaker of this most exceeding mercy and wonderful benefit of Almighty God, and therefore is bound continually to praise and thank him: yet there is not one Creature that is more bound to do, than you noble Queen Elizabeth. For in this horrible Tyranny, and most cruel Persecution, your Grace hath been more hunted for, than any other. Divers times they have taken you, sometime they have had you in strong hold, secluded from all liberty; sometime at liberty, but not without most cruel Gaoler's custody; and many times they determined, that without Justice ye should be murdered privily. They thought, if your Grace had been suppressed, they should have fully prevailed: If ye had been destroyed, their doings for ever should be established: If ye had been taken out of the way, there were none left that would or could undo that they had ordained. But he that sitteth on high, and laugheth at their madness, would not suffer that the malicious purposes and most cruel devised injustice should have success. He took upon him the protection of you. He only hath been our Jesse; that preserved you from this wicked Ahab. He only was the Joadah that destroyed this cruel Ahab. He only hath made you Queen of this Realm, instead of this mischievous Marana. No earthly Creature can claim any piece of thanks therefore, no mans force, no mans counsel, no mans aid, hath been the cause thereof. Wherefore the greater his benefits have been toward you, the more are you bound to seek his glory, and to set forth his honour. Ye see his Power, what he is able to do; he alone can save, and he can destroy, he can pull down, and he can set up. If ye fear him, and seek to do his will, then will he favour you, and preserve you to the end from all Enemies, as he did King David. If ye now fall from him, or juggle with him, look for no more favour than Saul had shewed to him. But I have a good hope that both his Justice and Benefits be so printed in your heart, that ye will never forget them, but seek by all means to have the one, and to fear to fall into the other. I trust also your wisdom will not only consider the causes of this late most sharp Visitation, but also to your uttermost power endeavor to out-root them.

And so far as besides this infinite mercy poured on your Grace, it hath pleased his Divine Providence to constitute your Highness to be our Deborah, to be the Governess and Head of the Body of this Realm, to have the charge and cure thereof; it is requisite above all things, as well for his glory and honour, as for your discharge, quietness and safety, to labour that the same Body now at the first be cleansed, made whole, and then kept in good order. For as if the Body of man be corrupted and diseased, he is not able to manage his things at home, much less to do any thing abroad: so if the Body of a Realm be corrupt and out of order, it shall neither be able to do any thing abroad, if necessity should require, nor yet prosper in it self. But this may not be done with piecing and patching, cobbling and botching, as was used in time past, whilst your most noble Father and Brother reigned. For as if a man cut off one Head of the Serpent Hydra, and destroy not the whole Body, many will grow instead of that one; and as in a corrupt Body that hath many diseases, if the Physician should labour to heal one part, and not the whole, it will in short time break out afresh: so unless the Body of a Realm or Commonwealth be clean purged from corruption, all the particular Laws and Statutes that can be devised shall not profit it.

We need no foreign Examples to prove it: look upon this Realm it self, it will plainly declare it. And as it is not enough to cleanse the Body from his corruption, but there must be also Preservatives ministered to keep it from putrefaction; for naturally of it self it is disposed to putrefie: so after the Body of a Realm is purged, unless there be godly Ordinances for the preservation thereof ordained and duly ministered, it will return to the old state. For this Body, which is the People, is universally naturally disposed to evil, and without compulsion will hardly do that is his duty.

Thus must your Grace do if ye mind the advancement of Gods glory, your own quietness and safety, and the wealth of this your Politick Body. And they be not hard to bring to pass, where goodwill will vouchsafe to take to her a little pain. The Realm will soon be purged, if vice and self-love be utterly condemned. It will be in good state preserved, if these three things, Gods Word truly taught and preached, Youth well brought up in godly and honest Exercises, and Justice rightly ministered, may be perfectly continued. And without this foundation, let men imagine what it pleaseth them, the Spiritual House of God shall never be well framed or builded, nor the publick state of your Realm well ordered. For in what Body Gods Word lacketh, the unity and charity that ought to be among the Members thereof, and which kniteth them together, is soon extinguished. Where the youth is neglected, there can no good success be hoped, no more than the Husbandman can look for a good Crop where he sowed no good Seed. And where Justice is not truly and rightly ministered, there the more Laws and Statutes be heaped together, the more they be condemned. And surely if this thing could not without exceeding charges be compassed, as God forbid that charges should be weighed, be they never so great, where Gods glory and the wealth of the Realm may be furthered; yet ought it not to be neglected.

Charges not glory is to

What charges did King David the Father, and King Solomon his Son, imploy to build the stony House of God? How much more charges should a Christian Prince imploy to build and set up the lively House of God? But verily, I am fully perswaded that it shall not be chargeable to do this. No great deal of superfluous charges, which otherwise your Grace shall be forced to sustain, shall thus be clean cut away, and so your Revenues by a mean most profitable, and to no good person hurtful, increased.

Wherefore for Gods sake, noble Queen, let not the opportunity, now by God offered, be by your Grace omitted. A Physician can in nothing so much declare his good will and cunning, nor purchase himself so great estimation, as when he findeth his Patient thoroughly sick and weakened, and doth restore him to his perfect health and perfection. Likewise if a Prince should desire of God a thing whereby he might declare the zeal that he beareth to God, or whereby he might win fame and glory, he could desire nothing so much, as to come into a state corrupted, as this Realm of England, at this present is, not to destroy it, as did Caesar, but to make it, as did Romulus.

If your Grace can bring this to pass, as I am out of all doubt ye may quickly; ye shall do more than any of your Progenitors did before you. All men shall confess that you are not only for Proximity of Blood preferred, but rather of God specially sent and ordained. And as the Queen of Saba came from far off to see the glory of King Solomon, a woman to a man, even so shall the Princes of our time come, men to a woman, and Kings marvel at the vertue of Queen Elizabeth. Thus shall we your Subjects be most bound to praise God, and to think our selves most happy, that coming so suddenly from the world, be forthwith preferred to the best, rid from extreamest Calamity, and brought to the greatest Felicity; and it shall be besides an example for all evil Princes, to leave their Persecution of Christ and his Members, to cease from their Tyranny, wherewith they continually oppress their poor Subjects. And so all People, not only we of this your Realm, but of all other Nations, shall have just cause to pray for your Graces health, and increase of honour.

This Oration of Mr. Hales being premised, now let us prosecute, the Lord willing, that which we promised, concerning the Disputation or Conference had at Westminster. The Copy whereof here followeth.

The Conference or Disceptation had and begun at Westminster the last of Mich, upon certain Questions or Articles of Religion proposed, and also of the breaking up of the same, by the Papists default, at the first beginning of Queen Elizabeth.

SO it pleased the Queens most excellent Majesty, having heard of the diversity of Opinions in certain matters of Religion amongst sundry of her loving Subjects, and being very desirous to have the same reduced to some godly and christian Concord (by the advice of the Lords and others of the Privy Council, as well for the satisfaction of persons doubtful, as also for the knowledge of the Truth in certain matters of difference) to have a convenient number of the best Learned of either part, and to offer together their Opinions and Reasons, and thereby to come to some good and charitable agreement. And hereupon by her Majesties commandment, certain of her Privy Council declared this purpose to the Archbishop of York (being also one of the same Privy Council) and required him that he would impart the same to some of the Bishops, and to make choice of eight, nine, or ten of them, and that there should be the like number named of the other part. And further also they declared to him (as then was supposed) what the matter should be. And as for the time, it was thought meet to be as soon as possible might be agreed upon. And then after certain days past, it was signified by the said Archbishop, that there were appointed, by such of the Bishops to whom he had imparted this matter, nine persons, that is to say, five Bishops and four Doctors. The Names of whom here follow under written.

1558.

The Papists.

The Bishop of Winchester.
The Bishop of Lichfield.
The Bishop of Chester.
The Bishop of Carlisle.
The Bishop of Lincoln.
Dr. Cole.
Dr. Harpsfield.
Dr. Langdale.
Dr. Chedsey.

The Protestants.

Dr. Story Bishop of Chichester.
Dr. Cox.
Mr. Whitehead.
Mr. Grindall.
Mr. Horne.
Mr. D. Sands.
Mr. Gess.
Mr. Aelmer.
Mr. Jewell.

Who were content, at the Queens Majesties commandment, to shew their Opinions, and, as the said Archbishop termed it, render account of their Faith in those matters which were mentioned, and that especially in writing, although he said, they thought the same so determined, as there was no cause to dispute upon them. The matter which they should talk upon, was comprehended in these three Propositions, hereunder specified.

1. It is against the Word of God, and the custome of the ancient Church, to use a Tongue unknown to the People, in common Prayer, and the Administration of the Sacraments.
2. Every Church hath authority to appoint, take away, and change Ceremonies and Ecclesiastical Rites, so the same be to edification.
3. It cannot be proved by the Word of God, that there is in the Mass offered up a Sacrifice Propitiatory for the Quick and the Dead.

It was hereupon fully resolved by the Queens Majesty, with the advice aforesaid, that according to their desire, it should be in writing on both parts, for avoiding of much altercation in words; and that the said Bishops would, because they were in authority of degree Superiors, first declare their minds and opinions to the matter, with their reasons in writing. And the other number, being also nine men of good degree in Schools, and some having been in dignity in the Church of England, if they had any thing to say to the contrary, should the same day declare their opinions in like manner, and so each of them should deliver their writings to the other, to be considered what were to be improved therein, and the same to declare again in writing at some other convenient day, and the like order to be kept in all the rest of the matters. All this was fully agreed upon with the Archbishop of York, and so also signified to both parties.

And immediately hereupon, divers of the Nobility and States of the Realm understanding that such a meeting and conference should be; and that in certain matters, whereupon (the Court of Parliament consequently following) some Laws might be grounded; They made earnest means to her Majesty, that the parties of this Conference might put and read their Assertions in the English Tongue, and that in the presence of them of the Nobility and others of her Parliament House, for the better satisfaction and enabling of their own judgments,

Anno 1558. to treat and conclude of such Laws as might depend hereupon.

This also, being thought very reasonable; was signified to both parties, and so fully agreed upon, and the day appointed for the first meeting, to be the Friday in the forenoon, being the last of March, at Westminster Church. At which forefayd day and place, both for good order and for honour of the conference, by the Queens Majesties commandment, the Lords and others of the privy Council were present, and a great part of the Nobility also. And notwithstanding this former order appointed, and consented unto by both parties, yet the Bishop of Winchester and his Collegues alledged they had mistaken that their assertions and reasons should be written, and so only recited out of the Book, saying their Book was not then ready written, but they were ready to argue and dispute, and therefore they would for that time repeat in speech, that which they had to say to the first probation.

This variation from the former order, and especially from that which themselves had by the said Archbishop in writing before required, adding thereto the reason of the Apostle, that to contend with words is profitable to nothing, but to subversion of the hearer, seemed to the Queens Majesties Council somewhat strange, and yet was it permitted without any great reprehension, because they excused themselves with mistaking the order, and agreed that they would not fail but put it in writing, and, according to the former order, delivered it to the other part; and so the said Bishop of Winchester and his Collegues appointed Doctor Cole Dean of Pauls, to be the utterer of their minds; who partly by speech only, and partly by reading of Authorities written, and at certain times being informed of his Collegues what to say, made a declaration of their meanings and their reasons to their first proposition: which being ended, they were asked by the privy Council if any of them had any more to be said, and they said, No. So as the other part was licensed to shew their minds, which they did according to the first order, exhibiting all that which they meant to be propounded, in a Book written; which, after a Prayer and invocation, made most humbly to almighty God for the ending of them with his holy Spirit, and a protestation also to stand to the Doctrine of the Catholick Church builded upon the Scriptures, and the Doctrine of the Prophets and the Apostles, was distinctly read by one Robert Horne, Bachelor in Divinity, late Dean of Durham, and after Bishop of Winchester. The copy of which their Protestation here followeth according as it was by him penned and exhibited, with their Preface also before the same.

For as much as it is thought good unto the Queens most excellent Majesty (unto whom in the Lord all obedience is due) that we should declare our judgment in writing upon certain propositions; we, as becometh us to do herein, most gladly obey.

Seeing that Christ is our only Master, whom the Father hath commanded us to hear; and seeing also his word is the truth, from the which it is not lawful for us to depart, no not one hairs breadth, and against the which (as the Apostle saith) we can do nothing; we do in all things submit our selves unto this truth, and do protest that we will affirm nothing against the same.

And forasmuch as we have for our Mother the true and Catholick Church of Christ, which is grounded upon the Doctrine of the Apostles and Prophets, and is of Christ the head in all things governed; we do reverence her judgment, we obey her Authority as becometh Children; and we do devoutly profess, and in all points follow the Faith which is contained in the three Creeds, that is to say, of the Apostles, of the Council of Nice, and of Athanasius.

And seeing that we never departed, neither from the Doctrine of God which is contained in the holy Canonical Scriptures, nor yet from the Faith of the true and Catholick Church of Christ; but have Preached truly the Word of God, and have sincerely ministered the Sacraments according to the institution of Christ; unto the which our Doctrine and Faith the most part also of our adversaries did subscribe not many years past (although now as unnatural they are revolted from the same) we desire that they render account of their backsliding, and shew some cause wherefore they do not only resist that Doctrine which they have before professed, but also persecute the same by all means they can. We do not doubt; but through the equity of the Queens most excellent Majesty, we shall in these disputations be intreated more gently than in years late past, when we were handled most unjustly and scanty after the common manner of Men. As for the judgment of the whole controversy, we refer unto the most holy Scriptures, and the Catholick Church of Christ (whose judgment unto us ought to be most sacred:) notwithstanding by the Catholick Church we understand not the Romish Church, whereunto our adversaries attribute such reverence, but that which Saint Augustine and other Fathers affirm, ought to be fought in the holy Scriptures, and which is governed and led by the Spirit of Christ.

It is against the Word of God, and the custom of the Primitive Church, to use a Tongue unknown to the people in common Prayers and administration of the Sacraments.

By these words (the Word of God) we mean only the written Word of God, or Canonical Scriptures.

And by the custom of the Primitive Church, we mean the order most generally used in the Church for the space of 500. years after Christ, in which times lived the most notable Fathers, as Justine, Irenaeus, Tertullian, Cyprian, Basil, Chrysostome, Hierom, Ambrose, Augustine, &c.

This assertion above written hath two parts. First, that the use of the Tongue not understood of the people, in common Prayers of the Church, or in the administration of the Sacraments, is against Gods Word.

The second, that the same is against the use of the Primitive Church.

The first part is most manifestly proved by the fourteenth Chapter of the Epistle to the Corinthians, almost throughout the whole Chapter. In the which Chapter Paul intreateth of this matter, ex professo, purposely. And although some do cavil that S. Paul speaketh not in that Chapter of praying, but of Preaching, yet is it most evident to any indifferent reader of understanding, and appeareth also by the exposition of the best Writers, that he plainly there speaketh not only of Preaching and Prophecy, but also of Prayer and Thanksgiving, and generally of all other publick actions, which require any speech in the Church or Congregation. For of Praying he saith, I will pray with my Spirit, and I will pray with my mind, I will sing with my Spirit, and I will sing with my mind. And of thanksgiving (which is a kind of Prayer) thou givest thanks well, but the other is not edified. And how shall he which occupieth the room of the unlearned say, Amen, to thy giving of thanks, when he understandeth not what thou sayest? And in the end, descending from particulars to a general proposition, concludeth, that all things ought to be done to edification. Thus much is clear by the very words of S. Paul, and the ancient Doctors Ambrose, Augustine, Hierom, and other, do so understand this Chapter, as it shall appear by their testimonies which shall follow afterward.

¶ Upon this Chapter of S. Paul we gather these reasons following.

1. All things done in the Church or Congregation, ought so to be done as they may edifie the same.

But the use of an unknown Tongue, in publick Prayer or administration of Sacraments, doth not edifie the Congregation.

Therefore the use of an unknown Tongue, in publick Prayer or administration of Sacraments, is not to be had in the Church.

The first part of this reason is grounded upon Saint the Major Pauls Words, commanding all things to be done to edification.

The second part is also proved by S. Pauls plain words. First by this similitude the Trumpet give an uncertain sound, who shall be prepared to battel? Even so likewise when ye speak with Tongues, except ye speak words words that have signification, how shall it be understood what is spoken? for ye shall but speak in the ayre, that is to say, in vain, and consequently without edifying.

And afterward in the same Chapter he saith, how can he that occupieth the place of the unlearned, say Amen, at thy giving of thanks, seeing he understandeth not what thou sayest? for thou verily givest thanks well, but the other is not edified.

These be S. Pauls words, plainly proving, that a Tongue not understood, doth not edifie. And therefore both the parts of the reason thus proved by Saint Paul, the conclusion followeth necessarily.

Another Argument of Probation.

2. Secondly, nothing is to be spoken in the Congregation in an unknown Tongue, except it be interpreted to the people, that it may be understood. For saith Paul, If there be no Interpreter to him that speaketh in an unknown Tongue, taceat in Ecclesia, let him hold his peace in the Church. And therefore the common Prayers and Administration of Sacraments, neither done in a known Tongue, neither interpreted, are against the commandment of Paul, and not to be used.

Another Argument.

The Minister in Prayer or Administration of Sacraments using Language not understood of the hearers, is to them barbarous, and alien, which of Saint Paul is accounted a great absurdity.

The fourth Argument of Probation.

It is not to be counted a Christian common Prayer, where the people present declare not their assent unto it by saying Amen, wherein is implied all other words of assent.

Ambrosius per hos enim impletur confirmatio precis, qui respondent Amen. The fifth Argument.

But S. Paul affirmeth, that the people cannot declare their assent in saying Amen, except they understand what is said, as afore.

Therefore it is no Christian common Prayer where the people understand not what is said.

Paul would not suffer in his time a strange Tongue to be heard in the common Prayer in the Church, notwithstanding that such a kind of speech was then a miracle, and a singular gift of the holy Ghost, whereby infidels might be persuaded and brought to the faith; much less is it to be suffered now amongst Christian and Faithful Men, especially being no miracle nor especial gift of the holy Ghost.

The sixth Argument.

Some will peradventure answer, that to use any kind of Tongue, in common Prayer or Administration of Sacraments, is a thing indifferent.

Objection dissolved.

But S. Paul is to the contrary. For he commandeth all things to be done to edification, he commandeth to keep silence if there be no interpreter, and in the end of the Chapter he concludeth thus. If any Man be spiritual or a Prophet, let him know that the things which I write, are the commandments of the Lord. And so shortly to conclude, the use of a strange Tongue, in Prayer and administration, is against the Word and Commandment of God.

To these reasons, grounded upon Saint Pauls Words, which are the most firm Foundation of this Assertion, divers other Reasons may be joyned, gathered out of the Scriptures and otherwise.

The 7. Reason.

In the Old Testament all things pertaining to the publick Prayer, Benedictions, Thanksgivings, or Sacrifices, were always in their vulgar and natural Tongue. In the 2. Book of Paralipom. Chap. 29. it is written, that Ezechias commanded the Levites to praise God with the Psalms of David, and Asaph the Prophet, which doubtless were written in Hebrew their vulgar Tongue. If they did so in the shadows of the Law, much more ought we to do the like, who (as Christ saith) must pray, in spiritu & veritate.

The 8. Reason.

The final end of our Prayer (as David saith) is, ut populi & convenient in unum, & annuncient nomen Domini in Sion, & laudes ejus in Hierusalem.

But the name and praises of God cannot be set forth to the people, unless it be done in such a Tongue as they may understand, therefore common Prayer must be had in the vulgar Tongue.

The 9. Reason.

The definition of publick Prayer out of the Words of S. Paul. Orabo spiritu, orabo & mente, Publick orare, est vota communia mente ad Deum offerre, & ea spiritu, hoc est, lingua testari. Common Prayer is to lift up our common desires to God with our minds, and to testify the same outwardly with our Tongues, which definition is approved by S. Augustine, De magistro, cap. 1. Nihil opus est (inquit) loquutione, nisi forte ut sacerdotes faciant, significanda mentis causa ut populus intelligat.

The ministrations of the Lords Supper and Baptism are as it were Sermons of the Death and Resurrection of Christ.

But Sermons to the people must be had in such Language as the people may perceive, otherwise they should be had in vain.

It is not lawful for a Christian Man to abuse the gifts of God: but he that prayeth in the Church in a strange Tongue, abuseth the gifts of God. For the Tongue serveth only to expresse the mind of the speaker to the hearer. And Augustine saith, De doctrina Christiana. lib. 4. cap. 10. Loquendi omnino nulla est causa, si quod loquimur non intelligunt, propter quos, ut intelligant, loquimur. There is no cause why we should speak, if they for whose cause we speak, understand not our speaking.

The Heathen and barbarous Nations of all Countries and sorts of Men, were they never so wild, evermore made their Prayers and Sacrifices to their Gods in their own Mother Tongue. Which is a manifest Declaration that it is the very light and voice of nature.

Thus much upon the ground of S. Paul and other reasons out of the Scriptures, joyned therewith the common usage of all Nations, as a Testimony of the Law of nature.

Now for the second part of the Assertion, which is, that the use of a strange Tongue in publick Prayer and Administration of Sacraments, is against the custom of antiquity.

For first of all Iustinus Martyr describing the order of the Communion in his time, saith thus, Die Solu urbanorum ac rusticorum eorum sunt, ubi Apostolorum Prophetarumque littera, quoad fieri potest preleguntur: Deinde cessante lectione, prepositus verba facit adhortatoria, ad imitationem tam honestarum rerum invitans. Post hæc confurgimus omnes, & preces offerimus, quibus finitius preteritur (ut diximus) panis, vinum & aqua; tum prepositus, quantum potest, preces offert, & gratiarum actiones, plebs vero Amen accinit. That is to say, Upon the Sunday assemblies are made both of the Citizens and Country Men, whereas the writings of the Apostles and of the Prophets are read, as much as may be. Afterwards when the Reader doth cease, the head Minister maketh an exhortation, exhorting them to follow so honest things. After this we rise all together and offer Prayers, which being ended (as we have said) Bread and Water are brought forth. Then the head Minister offereth Prayers and thanksgiving, as much as he can, and the people answereth Amen.

These words of Iustine, who lived about 160. years after Christ, considered with their circumstance, declare plainly, that not only the Scriptures were read, but also that the Prayers and Administration of the Lords Supper were done in a Tongue understood.

The Liturgies both of Basil and Chrysostom declare, that in the celebration of the Communion, the people were appointed to answer to the Prayer of the Minister, sometimes Amen, sometimes, Lord have mercy upon us, sometimes, And with thy Spirit, and, We have our Hearts lifted up unto the Lord, &c. Which answers they could not have made in due time, if the Prayer had not been made in a Tongue understood.

And for further proof, let us hear what Basil writeth in this matter to the Clerks of Neocaesarea. Ceterum ad obsequium in Psalmis crimen quo maxime simpliciter terrent calumniatores, &c. As touching that is laid to our charge in Psalmodes and Songs, wherewith our slanderers do fray the simple, I have thus to say, that our customs and usages in all Churches be uniform, and agreeable.

For in the night the people with us riseth, goeth to the House of Prayer, and in travel, tribulation, and continual tears, they confess themselves to God, and at the last rising rising again, go to their Songs or Psalmody, where being divided into two parts, they sing by course together, both devoutly weighing and confirming the matter of the Heavenly sayings, and also stirring up their attention and devotion of heart, which by other means be alienated and plucked away. Then appointing one to begin the song, the rest follow, and so with divers Songs and Prayers passing over the night, at the dawning of the day, all together, even as it were with one mouth and one heart, they sing unto the Lord a song of Confession, every Man framing to himself meet words of repentance.

If you will flye us from henceforth for these things, ye must flye also the Egyptians, and both the Libians, ye must eschew the Thebanes, Palestines, Arabians, the Phenicians, the Sirians, and those that dwell besides Euphrates; and to be short, all those with whom watchings, Prayers, and common singing of Psalms are had in honor.

Testimonies of Saint Ambrose, written upon the fourteenth to the Corinthians, the first Epistle.
Super illud, qui enim loquitur linguas.

Ambrosius.
Another argument of S. Ambrosius.

HO est quod dicit, quia qui loquitur incognita lingua, &c. This is it that he saith, because he which speaketh in an unknown Tongue, speaketh to God. For he knoweth all things, but Men know not, and therefore there is no profit of this thing.

Ambrosius.

The same Author after wards, Super illud, si benedixeris Spiritu.

Hoc est, si laudem Dei lingua loquaris ignota, &c. Upon these words, if thou blest or give thanks with the Spirit, how shall he that occupieth the room of the unlearned, say, Amen, at thy giving of thanks, seeing he understandeth not what thou sayest?

That is (saith Ambrosius) if thou speak the praise of God in a Tongue unknown to the hearers. For the unlearned, hearing that which he understandeth not, knoweth not the end of the Prayers, and he answereth not Amen. That is as much to say as (true) that the blessing or thanksgiving may be confirmed. For the confirmation of the Prayer is fulfilled by them which do answer, Amen. That all things spoken might be confirmed in the minds of the hearers, through the testimony of the truth.

Ambrosius.

¶ Afterward in the same place upon these words, if any Infidel or unlearned come in.

Quam enim intelligit & intelligitur, &c. For when he understandeth, and is understood, hearing God to be praised and Christ to be worshipped, he seeth perfectly that the Religion is true, and to be revered, wherein he seeth nothing to be done colourably, nothing in darkness, as among the Heathen, whose eyes are covered, that they seeing not the things which they call holy, might perceive themselves to be deluded with divers vanities. For all falsehood seeketh darkness, and sheweth false things for true. Therefore with us nothing is done privately, nothing covertly, but one God is simply praised, of whom are all things, and one Lord Jesus, by whom are all things. For if there be none which can understand, or of whom he may be tryed, he may say, there is some deceit and vanity, which is therefore sung in Tongues (not understood, he meaneth) because it is a shame to open it.

Ambrosius.

Upon this place, Omnia ad edificationem fiant.

Conclusio hæc est, ut nihil in cassum in Ecclesia geratur; hocque elaborandum magis, ut & imperiti proficiant, ne quid sit corpora pro imperitiis tenebrosus. Let all things be done to edifie.

This is the conclusion, that nothing should be done in the Church in vain, and that this thing ought chiefly to be laboured for, that the unlearned also might profit left any part of the Body should be dark through ignorance.

Ambrosius.

Again, Si non fuerit interpret, taceat in Ecclesia.

Hoc est, intra se tacite etiam loquatur Deo, qui audit omnia omnia. In ecclesia enim ille debet loqui qui omnibus profit.

If there be no interpreter, let him keep silence in the Church.

That is, let him pray secretly, or speak to God within himself, which heareth all dumb things: for in the Church he ought to speak which may profit all men.

Testimonies out of Saint Hierom, upon that place of Paul, Quomodo qui supplet locum idiotæ, &c.

Per illum; saith Saint Hierom, qui supplet locum idiotæ, locum intelligit, qui nullo gradu Ecclesiastico fungitur. It is the Lay-man, saith he, whom Paul here understandeth to be in the place of the ignorant Man, which hath no Ecclesiastical Office. How shall he answer Amen to the Prayer that he understandeth not?

And a little after upon these words, Nam si orare lingua, &c.

Hoc dicit, quoniam si quis incognitis aliis linguis loquatur, mens ejus non ipse efficitur sine fructu, sed audiens. Quicquid enim dicitur, ignorat. This is Paul's meaning, saith Hierom, if any Man speaketh in strange and unknown Tongues, his mind is not to himself without fruit and profit, but he is not profited that heareth him.

¶ And in the end of his Commentary upon the Epistle to the Galatians, he saith thus:

Quod autem (Amen) consensum significat audientis, &c. That (Amen) significeth the content of the hearer, and is the sealing up of the truth, Paul in the first Epistle to the Corinthians, teacheth, saying, But if thou shalt bless in Spirit, who supplyeth the place of the ignorant, how shall he at thy Prayer answer (Amen) seeing he knoweth not what thou sayest? Whereby he declareth that the unlearned Man cannot answer, that that which is spoken is true, unless he understand what is said.

The same Hierom saith in the Preface of S. Paul's Epistle to the Galatians, that the noise of (Amen) foundeth in the Roman Church like an Heavenly thunder.

As Hierom compareth this found of common Prayer to thunder, so compareth Cassili to the found of the Sea, in these words, If the Sea be fair, how is not the assembly of the Congregation much fairer? In the which a joynd found of Men, Women and Children, as it were of the Waves beating on the Shore, is sent forth in our Prayers unto our God.

Basilii hoc 4. hanc.

Cum populus semel audierit, sic et aliter non aliter, statim omnes respondent, Amen.

When the people once hear these words (World without end) they all forthwith answer, Amen.

And the same writer upon the same Chapter, upon these words, How shall he that occupieth the room of the unlearned, say Amen? En rursus amissi (quod dicitur) saxum applicat, Ecclesie adificationem ubique requirit; &c. Behold again, he applyeth the stone unto the square (as the Proverb is) requiring the edifying of the Congregation in all places. The unlearned he calleth the common people, and sheweth that it is no small discommodity, if they cannot say, Amen.

And again the same Chrysostom, Quin & in precibus viderit quis populum multum simul offerre, tum pro egenis, tum pro penitentibus. Communes enim preces & sunt.

Another Argument out of Chrysostom.

à sacerdote & ab illis fiant, & omnes dicunt unam orationem, orationem misericordiam plenam. Iterum, ubi excluderimus à sacerdotibus ambrosius eos qui non possunt esse participes sanctæ mensæ, alia facienda est oratio, & omnes similiter surgimus &c. That is, Yea in Prayers you may see the people offer largely, both for the possessed and the penitents. For the Priests and the people pray altogether commonly, and all one Prayer, a Prayer full of mercy and pity. And excluding out of the Priests limits all such as cannot be partakers of the holy Table, another Prayer must be made, and all after one sort lye down upon the earth, and all again after one sort rise up together. Now when the peace is given, we all in like manner salute one another, and the Priest in the reverend mysteries witheth well to the people, and the people unto him: for Et cum spiritu tuo, is nothing else but this. All things that belong to the Sacrament of thanksgiving, are common to all. But he giveth not thanks alone, but all the people with him.

Hereby

Hereby it may appear, that not the Prieſt alone communicated nor prayed alone, nor had any peculiar Prayer, but ſuch as was common to them all, ſuch as they all underſtood, and all were able to ſay with the Prieſt, which could not have been, if he had uſed a ſtrange Tongue in the miniſtration of the Sacraments.

Dionyſius. Dionyſius deſcribing the manner of the miniſtration of the Lords Supper, ſaith, That hymns were ſaid of the whole multitude of the people.

Cyprian ſer. Cyprian ſaith, The Prieſt doth prepare the minds of the Brethren, with a Preface before the Prayer ſaying, Lift up your Hearts: that whiles the people doth answer, we have our Hearts lifted up to the Lord, they may be admoniſhed that they ought to think of none other thing than of the Lord.

Aug in Pſal. S. Auguſtine, Quid hic fit, intelligere debemus, &c. What this ſhould be we ought to underſtand, that we may ſing with reaſon of Man, not with chatting of birds. For Ouſels and Papijanes, and Ravens, and Pies, and other ſuch like Birds are taught by Men to prate they know not what. But to ſing with underſtanding, is given by Gods holy will to the nature of Man.

Aug. de Magiſt. The ſame Auguſtine, There needeth no ſpeech when we pray, ſaving perhaps as the Prieſts do, to declare their meaning; not that God, but that Men may hear them, and ſo, being put in remembrance by conſenting with the Prieſts, may hang upon God.

To theſe teſtimonies of the ancient writers, we will joyn one Conſtitution of Juſtinian the Emperor, who lived 527. years after Chriſt. Jubemus ut omnes Episcopos, pariter & Presbyteros, &c. We command that all Biſhops and Prieſts do celebrate the holy Oblation, and the Prayers uſed in holy Baptiſm, not ſpeaking low, but with a clear and loud voice, which may be heard of the people, that thereby the minds of the hearers may be ſtirred up with greater devotion, in uttering the praifes of the Lord God. For ſo the holy Apoſtle teacheth in his firſt Epistle to the Corinthians, ſaying, Truly, if thou only bleſs or give thanks in Spirit, how doth he which occupieth the place of the unlearned ſay, Amen, at the giving of thanks unto God? for he underſtandeth not what thou ſayeſt. Thou verily givest thanks well, but another is not edified. And again, in the Epistle to the Romans he ſaith, Corde creditur ad juſtitiam, ore autem fit conſeſſio ad ſalutem, with the Heart a Man believeth unto righteousneſs, and with the mouth confeſſion is made unto Salvation.

Therefore for theſe cauſes it is convenient, that amongst other Prayers thoſe things alſo which are ſpoken in the holy Oblation, be uttered and ſpoken of the moſt Religious Biſhops and Prieſts unto our Lord Jeſus Chriſt our God with the Father and the holy Ghoſt, with a loud voice. And let the moſt Religious Prieſts know this, that if they neglect any of theſe things, neither the dreadful judgment of the great God and our Saviour Jeſus Chriſt, neither will we when we know it, reſt, and leave it unrevengeſd.

Out of this Conſtitution of Juſtinian the Emperor, three things are worthy to be noted.

Fiſt, that the common Prayer and miniſtration done with a loud voice, ſo as may be heard and underſtood of the people is a mean to ſtir up devotion in the people, contrary to the common aſſertion of Eckius and other adverſaries, who affirm that ignorance maketh a great admiration and devotion.

Secondly, that Juſtinian maketh this matter of not ordering common miniſtration and Prayers, ſo as it may be underſtood of the people, not a matter of indifference, but ſuch a thing as muſt be answered for at the day of Judgment.

Thirdly, that this Emperor, being a Chriſtian Emperor, doth not only make Conſtitution of Eccleſiaſtical matters, but alſo threatneth revenge and ſharp puniſhment to the violaters of the ſame.

Theſe are ſufficient to prove that it is againſt Gods Word, and the uſe of the Primitive Church, to uſe a language not underſtood of the people, in common Prayer and miniſtration of the Sacraments. Wherefore it is to be marvelled at, not only how ſuch an untruth and abuſe crept at the firſt into the Church, but alſo how it is maintained ſo ſtiffly at this day, and upon what ground theſe that will be thought guides and paſtors of Chriſts Church, are ſo loth to return to the firſt original of S. Pauls Doctrine, and the practice of the Primitive Catholick Church of Chriſt.

¶ The God of Patience and conſolation, give us Grace to be like minded one towards another in Chriſt Jeſus, that we all agreeing together, may with one Mouth praiſe God the Father of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, Amen.

And the ſame being ended with ſome likelihoode, as it ſeemed, that the ſame was much allowable to the audience; certain of the Biſhops began to ſay contrary to their former answer, that they had now much more to ſay to this matter, wherein although they might have been well reprehended for ſuch manner of cavillation; yet for avoiding of any more miſtaking of orders in this colloquy or conference, and for that they ſhould utter all that which they had to ſay, it was both ordered and thus openly agreed upon of both parts in the full audience, that upon the Monday following, the Biſhops ſhould bring their Minds and Reaſons in writing to the ſecond aſſertion, and the laſt alſo if they could, and firſt read the ſame; and that done, the other part ſhould bring likewiſe theirs to the ſame. And being read, each of them ſhould deliver to other the ſame writings. And in the mean time, the Biſhops ſhould put in writing, not only all that which Doctor Cole had that day uttered, but all ſuch other matters as they any otherwiſe could think of for the ſame: and as ſoon as they might poſſible, to ſend the ſame Book touching that firſt aſſertion to the other part, and they ſhould receive of them that writing which Mr. Horn had there read that day, and upon Monday it ſhall be agreed what day they ſhould exhibit their answers touching the firſt propoſition. Thus both parts aſſented thereto, and the aſſembly was quietly diſmiſſed.

The order of the ſecond days talk.

The Lord Keeper of the great Seal, the Archbiſhop of York, the Duke of Northfolke, and all the Council being ſet, the Biſhops on the one ſide, and the Proteſtants, that is, the late baniſhed Preachers on the other ſide, thus began the Lord Keeper.

MY Lord and Maſters, I am ſure ye remember well, what order of talk and writing was appointed to be had this day in this aſſembly, at our laſt meeting, which I will not reſuſe now to repeat again for the ſhortneſs of it, which was, that ye appointed that on both ſides ye ſhould bring in Engliſh writing, what ye had to ſay in the ſecond queſtion, and in this place appointed to read the ſame. Therefore begin my Lords.

Wincheſt. I am determined for my part that there ſhall be now read, that which we have to ſay for the firſt queſtion.

L. Keeper. Will ye not then proceed in the order appointed you?

Wincheſt. I am, as I ſaid, provided for the firſt queſtion or propoſition: and we ſhould ſuffer prejudice, if ye permit us not to intreat of that firſt, and ſo we would come to the ſecond queſtion, and this is the order we would uſe. I judge all my Brethren are ſo minded.

Biſhop. We are ſo determined.

L. Keeper. I know not what you would do for your determined order: but ye ought to look what order is appointed you to keep, which ye by this means do break and little regard.

Wincheſter,

Anno 1558. Winchester. Sith our adversaries part, if it please your Grace and Honours, have so confirmed their affliction and purpose, we suffer a prejudice or damage, if ye permit us not the like. Hereat Doctor Watson Bishop of Lincoln, being at this talk very desirous to have spoken, said now to the Bishop of Winchester; I pray you let me speak, which was permitted him: we are not used indifferently, since that you allow us not to open in present writing what we have to say for the declaration of the first question, inasmuch, as that which ye take for the infirmation of the same, was meant nothing to that purpose, for that which Master Cole spake in this last assembly, was not prepared to strengthen our cause, but he made his Oration of himself, and ex tempore, that is, with no fore-studied talk.

At such the Bishops words the Nobility and other of the audience much frowned and grudged, sith that they all well knew, that Master Cole spake out of a writing which he held in his hand, and often read out of the same, and in that the same places which the Bishops informed him, and appointed him unto with their fingers; all which things do well declare the matter to be premeditated, and not done ex tempore, for that Master Cole was appointed by them to be their speaker. Whereupon this of the Bishop of Lincoln was the worse taken, notwithstanding he went onward complaining, and said; we are also evil ordered as touching the time, our adversaries part having warning long before, and we were warned only two days before the last assembly in this place. What with this business, and other trouble we have been driven to, have been occupied the whole last night. For we may in no wise betray the cause of God, nor will do, but sustain it to the uttermost of our powers, as we ought so to endeavour by all manner of means. But hereunto we want presently indifferent using.

L. Keeper. Take ye heed that ye deceive not your selves when it shall come to just trial of the matter, and that then it be not proved against you, that ye complain without cause, when the order and your manner towards it shall be duly weighed. I am willing and ready to hear you after the order taken and appointed for you to reason therein, and further or contrary to that I cannot deal with you.

Lich. Cov. Let us suffer no misorder or injury herein, but be heard with indifferency, that is convenient and meet we should have here.

L. Keeper. I pray you, Sirs, hear me, and mark it you well. It was concluded on by my Lords of the Council, who you well know of, that their writing, which ye are now so willing to have heard, should have been read the first day, and then did we understand that Master Cole had said what you would have him, and as much as you willed him to say, and upon that indifferency among us. I judge ye were asked in the end of Master Cole's rehearsal, whether that which he spake, was it ye would have him say, and ye granted it. Then, whether ye would that he should say any more in the matter, Ye answered no, whereupon the other part was heard, which you hearing, then indeed without all good indifferency or plain dealing, ye pretended that ye had more to say. So mark you with how small equity you used your selves.

The B. We had indeed more to say, if we might have been indifferently heard.

L. Keeper. Give me leave I say, and look what gains you should have if your present request should be granted you, that call so much of indifferent using, how you should use those other Men? For many who are here present, were then away, so would you have your writing now read to them, which heard not this. Mark ye whether it had not been more fit that ye had provided it against the first day, when they orderly read theirs, sith to my knowledge, and as far as I have had to do in the matter, you were of both sides (I am sure) warned at one time. Howbeit to satisfy your importunity and earnestness of this crying out to have your first writing heard, I might well allow, if it pleased the rest of the Queens most Honourable Council, that you dispatch the work of the second question, appointed for this day, and give us up your writing for the first, so that when the day cometh that each of you shall answer the other in confirmation of the first question, then the same day ye shall have time to read this your first writing, which ye now would so fain read. To this order all the Council willingly consented.

Lich. Cov. Nay, my Lords, they reading one and we two Books in one day, we should not have time enough to read them both. It would occupy too much time.

L. Keeper. For my part I might well stay at the hearing of them both, and so I judge would the rest of the Council, and likewise the whole audience. At which saying there was a shout, crying on all sides; Yea, yea, we would hear it gladly.

Lincoln. We cannot read them both at one time: for their writing (I am sure) would require an hour and a half, if so be it be so long as their last was, and then our answer would require no less time after the first question.

L. Keeper. I have shewed you we could be well contented to tarry out the time when it cometh thereunto. Therefore ye need not to be therein so curious, and we granting you thus much, and yet ye will obey no orders, I cannot tell what I shall say unto you.

Lincoln. We have been wonderfully troubled in the order of this disputation. For first it was appointed us by my Lord the Archbishop, that we should dispute, and that in Latin, and then had we another commandment that we should provide a Latin writing, and now at last we are willed to bring forth our writings in English.

At these words the Lord Keeper of the great Seal; the Archbishop, with all the Council much mused, and many murmured at such his wrong report of the order well taken. Whereupon with an admiration the Lord Keeper answered; I marvel much of the using of your self in this point, sith I am assured the order was never otherwise taken, than that you should bring forth in English writing what you had to say for your purpose.

Hereupon the Bishops of Lichfield and Chichester, to excuse my Lord of Lincoln, said; We so understood the order, my Lords.

L. Keeper. How likely is that, sith that it was so plainly told you? But to end these delays, I pray you follow the order appointed, and begin to intreat of the second question.

Lich. Cov. We were appointed this day by your Honours to bring in what we had to say in the first question. At the which saying the audience much grudged, who heard the former talk, contrary to such his report.

L. Keeper. The order was taken, for that your writings were not ready the last time, that ye should yield the same to these Men, meaning the Protestants, as soon as ye might, and upon the receipt of your writings, you should have theirs, and this day you should intreat of the second question, and of the third, if that ye had leisure enough. This was the order, my Lords, except my memory much fail me. The same all the Council affirmed.

Lincoln. We were willed then to bring in this day our writing for the first question also.

L. Keeper. Ah Sirs, if ye be so hard to be satisfied, and to incline to the truth, let my Lords here say what was then determined.

B. York. Ye are to blame to stand in this issue, for there was a plain decreed order taken for you to intreat of the second question. Wherefore leave you your contentions herein, and shew what ye have to say in the second question.

L. Keeper. Go to now, begin my Lords.

Lich. Cov. It is contrary to the order in disputations, that we should begin.

Chichester. We have the negative, they the affirmative, therefore they must begin.

Lich. Cov. They must first speak what they can bring in against us, sith we are the defending part.

Chichester. So is the School manner, and likewise the manner in Westminster-Hall is, that the Plaintiffs part should speak first, and then the accused party to answer.

Lich. Cov. I pray you let the proposition be read, and then let us see who hath the negative part, and so let the other begin.

L. Keeper. The order was taken that ye should begin.

Lich. Cov. But then we should do against the School order.

L. Keeper.

L. Keeper. My Masters, ye inforce much the School orders. I wonder much at it, with divers of those orders are oftentimes taken for the exercise of youth, and ought to maintain a fashion, and many prescriptions, which we need not here to recite, much less observe. We are come hither to keep the order of God, and to set forth his truth, and hereunto we have taken as good order as we might, which lieth not in me to change.

Carile. We are of the Catholick Church, and abide therein, and stand in the possessions of the truth; and therefore must they say what they have to alledge against us, and so we to maintain and defend our cause.

Lich. Coven. Yea, even so must the matter be ordered.

Chester. When they bring any thing against us, it is sufficient for us to deny it: Therefore must they begin.

Lich. And when they affirm any thing, and we say nay, the proof belongeth to them, and so it behooveth them to shew first what they affirm, and for what cause and purpose.

L. Keeper. Here resteth our purpose and whole matter, whether you will begin, if they do not, with it was determined ye should begin.

Lich. Coven. We heard of no such order.

L. Keeper. No did? Yes, and in the first question ye began willingly. How cometh it to pass that ye will not now do so?

Chester. Then had we the affirmation, which with that our adversaries have now, they should presently begin.

This the Protestants denied, saying, that they in the first day had the negative, wherein they did not yet refuse to begin.

L. Keeper. If you have any thing to say, my Lords, to the purpose, say on.

Lich. A particular sort of Men can never break an Universal Church, which we now maintain: and as for these Men, our adversary part, I never thought that they would have done so much as have named themselves to be of the Catholick Church, challenging the name as well as we.

Protestants. We do so, and we are of the true Catholick Church, and maintain the verity thereof.

Lincoln. Yet would ye overthrow all Catholick order.

Her. I wonder that ye so much stand who should begin.

Lincoln. You count it requisite that we should follow your orders, as we have taken the questions at your hands, in that sort as you have assigned them.

Lich. Coven. Yea, even so we be driven to do now.

L. Keeper. Nay, I judge if ye mark the matter well, the questions are neither of their propounding them to you, nor of your device to them, but offered indifferently to you both.

Horne. Indeed, my Lords of the Queens most honourable Council, these questions or propositions were proposed unto us by your Honours, and they then having the preeminency, chose to themselves the negative, and yet freely began first: now again why do they not the like?

Lichfield being angry that he should so straitly speak against them, went quite from the matter, saying: My L. Keeper of the great Seal, and you the rest of the Queens most honourable Council, I hope that you all, and the Queens Majesty her self, are inclined to favour the verity in all things, and the truth of the Catholick Church, which we must will, or can do no otherwise, but earnestly maintain to the uttermost of our power, and to this purpose let us now well weigh who are of the true Catholick Church, they, or we.

L. Keeper. Tarry, now you go from the matter, and make questions of your own.

Lichfield. Yet not straying from his digression, said thus: We must needs go to work, and try that first, what Church they be of. For there are many Churches in Germany. Master Horne, Master Horne, I pray you which of these Churches are you of?

Horne. I am of Christs Catholick Church.

L. Keeper. Ye ought not thus to run into voluntary talk of your own inventing, nor to devise new questions of your own appointment, and thereby enter into that talk; ye ought not so to do. But say on, if you have any thing to say in this matter.

Lich. Nay, we must first thus go to work with them as I have said, if that we will search a truth: howbeit of the truth we have no doubt, for that we assuredly stand in it. These Men come in, and they pretended to be doubtful. Therefore they should first bring what they have to impugn or withstand us withal.

Winch. Let them begin; so will we go onward with our matter.

Chester. Otherwise, my Lords, if they should not begin, but end the talk, then should the verity on our sides be not so well marked; for they should depart speaking last, cum applausu populi, with the rejoicing triumph of the people.

Winch. Therefore I am resolved that they shall begin ere that we say any thing.

Chester. I am sorry, my Lords, that we should so long stand in the matter with your Honours, and make so many words, and so much ado with you, whom we ought to obey: howbeit there is no indifferency if they begin not; and surely we think it meet, that they should, for their parts, give us place.

Lichfield. Yea, that they should, and ought to do, where any indifferency is used.

Aelmer. We give you the place (do we not?) and deprive you not of the preeminence, because you are Bishops; therefore I pray you begin.

The Bishop. A goodly giving of place, I assure you: yea marry, ye gave place: such words they used, with more scoffs.

L. Keeper. If ye make this Assembly gathered in vain, and will not go to the matter, let us rise and depart.

Winch. Contented, let us be gone; for we will not in this point give over.

I pray you my Lords, require not at our hands that we should be any cause of hinderance or let to our Religion, or give any such evil example to our Posterity, which we should do if we gave over to them, which in no wise we may, or will do.

L. Keeper. Let us then break up, if you be thus minded. With these words the Bishops were straightways rising. But then said the Lord Keeper; Let us see whether every one of you be thus minded. How say you my Lord of Winchester, will you not begin to read, your writing?

Winch. No surely, I am fully determined, and fully at a point therein, howsoever my brethren do.

Then the Lord Keeper asked how the Bishop was called, who sat next to Winchester in order. It was the Bishop of Exeter, who being inquired his mind herein, answered that he was none of them. Then the Lord Keeper asked the other in order, and first Lincoln, who said he was of the same mind that Winchester was of: and likewise answered Lichfield Coven. Cole, and Ebadsey. Then Chester, being asked his sentence, said; My Lords, I say not that I will not read it, if ye command us; but we ought not to do it: yet I desire your Honours not so to take it, as though I would not have read it. I mean not so.

L. Keeper. How say you to it, my Lord of Carile?

Carile. If they should not read theirs this day, so that our writing may be last read, so am I contented that ours shall be first read.

L. Keeper. So would ye make orders your selves, and appoint that we should find one day in hearing you.

Abbot. Then the Abbot of Westminster was asked his mind; who said; If it please your Honours, I judge that my Lords here stay most on this point, that they fear when they shall begin first, and the other answer thereupon, there shall be no time given to them to speak, which my Lord misliketh.

L. Keeper. How can it otherwise be in talk appointed in such Assembly and Audience: think you that there can be continual answering one another? when should it after that sort have an end?

Lich. Coven. It must be so in disputation to seek out the truth.

L. Keeper. But how say you my Lord Abbot, are you of the mind it shall be read?

Abbot. Yea forsooth, my Lord, I am very well pleased withal. Harpisfield being inquired his mind, thought as the other did.

L. Keeper. My Lords, with that ye are not willing, but refuse to read your writing after the order taken, we will break up and depart: and for that ye will not that we should hear you, you may perhaps shortly hear of us.

Thus

1558.

1558.

Thus have we declared the order and manner of this Communication or Conference at Westminster; between these two parties, wherein if any Law or Order were broken, judge (good Reader) where the fault was, and consider what these Papists be, from whom if ye take away their Sword and Authority, you see all their cunning, how soon it lieth in the dust, or else why would they not abide the trial of writing? why would they, or durst they not stand to the order agreed upon? Whether should we say ignorance or stubbornness to be in them more, or both together? Who first being gently (as is said) and favourably required to keep the order appointed, they would not. Then being secondly (as appeared by the Lord Keepers words) pressed more earnestly, they neither regarding the Authority, &c. of that place, nor their own reputation, nor the credit of the cause, utterly refused that to do. And finally, being again particularly every of them apart distinctly by name required to understand their Opinions therein, they all saving one (which was the Abbot of Westminster, having some more consideration of order and his duty of obedience than the other) utterly and plainly denied to have their Book read, some of them as more earnestly than other, so also some other more undiscernedly and unreverently than others. Whereupon giving such example of disorder, stubbornness, and self-will, as hath not been seen and suffered in such an honourable Assembly, being of the two Estates of this Realm, the Nobility and the Commons, besides the presence of the Queens Majesties most honourable Privy Council, the same Assembly was dissolved, and the godly and most Christian purpose of the Queens Majesty made frustrate. And afterward, for the contempt so notoriously made, the Bishops of Winchester and Lincoln, having most obstinately both disobeyed common Authority and varied manifestly from their own order, and specially Lincoln, who shewed more folly than the other, were condignly committed to the Tower of London, and the rest (saving the Abbot of Westminster) stood bound to make daily their personal appearance before the Council, and not to depart the City of London and Westminster, until further order were taken with them for their disobedience and contempt.

Bishops committed to the Tower.

Besides the former Protestation or Libel written and exhibited by the Protestants concerning the first question, there was also another like writing of the said Protestants made of the second question, but not published, which if it came to our hand, we will likewise impart unto thee.

As these Bishops above-named were committed to the Tower, so Boner Bishop of London, about the same time was committed to the Marshalsea, where he both in his blind bloody Heretic, and also in his deserved captivity, long remained, abiding the Queens pleasure. Gods pleasure, I beseech him, so be wrought on that person, that the Church of Christs Flock, if they can take or look for no goodness of that man to come, yet they may take of him and of other no more harm hereafter than they have done already. We all beseech thee this, O Lord eternal, Per Christum Dominum nostrum, Amen.

Boner committed to the Marshalsea.

About this time, at the beginning of the flourishing Reign of Queen Elizabeth, was a Parliament summoned and holden at Westminster, wherein was much debating about matters touching Religion, and great study on both parts employed, the one to retain still, the other to impugn the Doctrine and Faction which before in Queen Maries time had been established. But especially here is to be noted, that though there lacked no industry on the Papists side, to hold fast that which they most cruelly from time to time had studied, and by all means practised to come by: yet notwithstanding, such was the Providence of God at that time, that for lack of the other Bishops, whom the Lord had taken away by death a little before, therefore that there were left, could do the less; and in very need, God be praised therefore, did nothing at all in effect. Although yet notwithstanding there lacked in them neither will nor labour to do what they could, if their cruel ability there might have served. But namely amongst all other, not only the industrious courage of Dr. Story, but also his words in this Parliament are worthy to be known of Posterity: who like a stout and furious Champion of the Popes side, to declare himself how lusty he was, and what he had and would do in his Masters quarrel, shamed not openly in the said Parliament House to blast out into such an impudent fore of words, as was a wonder to all good ears to hear, and no less worthy of History.

The sum of which his shameless talk was uttered to this effect: Firstly, beginning with himself, he declared, That whereas he was noted commonly abroad, and much complained of, to have been a great doer, and a setter forth of such Religion, Orders, and Proceedings, as of his late Sovereign that dead is, Queen Mary, were set forth in this Realm, he denied nothing the same, protesting moreover that he therein had done nothing, but that both his Conscience did lead him thereunto, and also his Commission did as well then command him, as now also doth discharge him for the same, being no less ready now also to do the like, and more, in case he by this Queen were authorized likewise, and commanded thereunto. Wherefore, as I see (saith he) nothing to be ashamed of, so less I see to be sorry for, but rather said that he was sorry for this, because he had done no more than he did, and that in executing those Laws they had not been more vehement and severe. Wherein he said there was no default in him, but in them, whom he both oft and earnestly had exhorted to the same, being therefore not a little grieved with them, for that they laboured only about the young and little sprigs and twigs, while they should have stricken at the root, and clean have rooted it out, &c. And concerning his persecuting and burning them, he denied not, but that he was once at the burning of an Earwig (for so he termed it) at Uxbridge, where he toft a Fagot at his face as he was singing Psalms, and set a Wheel of Thorns under his feet, a little to prick him, with many other words of like effect. In the which words he named moreover Sir Philip Hobby, and another Knight of Kent, with such other of the richer and higher degree, whom his counsel was to pluck at, and to bring them under scorn, wherein (said he) if they had followed my advice, then had they done well and wisely. This, or much like was the effect of the shameless and tyrannical excuse of himself, more meet to speak with the voice of a Beast, than a Man.

Dr. Storys impudent words at the Parliament.

The words of Dr. Story in the Parliament House.

This Merry bit at Dr. Story was Maisters Drury.

Although in this Parliament some diversity there was of judgment and opinion between parties, yet notwithstanding, through the merciful goodness of the Lord, the true cause of the Gospel had the upper hand, the Papists hope was frustrate, and their rage abated, the order and proceedings of King *Edward*s time concerning Religion was revived again, the Supremacy of the Pope abolished, the Articles and bloody Statutes of Queen Mary repealed; briefly, the furious Fire-brands of cruel Persecution, which had consumed so many poor mens bodies, were now extinct and quenched.

Finally, the old Bishops were deposed, for that they refused the Oath in renouncing the Pope, and not submitting to the Queens just and lawful Title. In whose rooms and places, first for Cardinal Poole succeeded Dr. Matthew Parker, Archbishop of Canterbury. In the place of Heath succeeded Dr. Tung. Instead of Boner, Edmund Grindall was Bishop of London. For Hopson, Tourelly, Tonstall, Pates, Christoperson, Peto, Coates, Morgan, Reasse, White, Oglethorpe, &c. were placed Dr. John Parkhurst in Norwich, Dr. Coxe in Ely, Jewel in Salisbury, Pilkenton in Durham, Dr. Sands in Worcester, Mr. Downam in Westchester, Bentam in Conventry and Lichfield, David in S. Davids, Ally in Exeter, Horne in Winchester, Story in Hereford, Beff in Carlisle, Bullingham in Lincoln, Schmley in Peterborough, Barlet in Bathes Gess in Rocheſter, Barlo in Chicheſter, &c.

The Appendix of such Notes and Matters, as either have been in this History omitted, or newly inserted.

IN the story of Sir Roger Aldon above mentioned, I find that with him were taken many other persons, that all the Prisons in and about London were replenished with People. The chief of them, which were twenty and nine, were condemned of Heresie, and attainted of High Treason, as movers of War against their King, by the temporal Law in the Guildhall, the twelfth day of December, and adjudged to be drawn and hanged for Treason, and for Heresie to be consumed with fire, Gallows and all, which Judgment was executed in January following on the said Sir Roger Aldon, and twenty eight other.

Some say that the occasion of their death was the conveyance of the Lord Cobham out of Prison. Other write that it was both for Treason (as the Adversaries termed it) and Heresie.

Certain affirm, that it was for feigned causes furnished by the Spirituality, more of displeasure than truth, as seemeth more near to the truth.

Concerning John Frith, of his Life and Story this followeth more to be added.

First, This John Frith was born in the Town of Westrams in Kent, who after by diligent Studies was taken in Essex flying beyond the Seas, and brought before the Council, Sir Thomas More then being Chancellor, and so from them committed unto the Tower, where he remained Prisoner the space of a quarter of a year, or thereabout. It chanced that Doctor Currein, ordinary Chaplain unto King Henry the Eighth, preached a Sermon in Lent before his Majesty. And there very sore inveighing against the Sacramentaries (as they them termed and named) which favoured not the gross opinion that Christs Body was carnally real in the Sacrament, he so far discoursed in that matter, that at the length he brake out thus far and said; It is no marvel though this abominable Heresie do much prevail amongst us; for there is one now in the Tower of London so bold as to write in the defence of that Heresie, and yet no man goeth about his Reformation, meaning John Frith, who then had answered Sir Thomas More in writing against a Constitution of that erroneous Opinion, which of late before the said Mr. More had written against John Friths Assertion in that behalf. This Sermon of purpose was devised and appointed by the Bishop of Winchester and others, to seek the destruction of Frith, by putting the King in remembrance that the said Frith was in the Tower there staid, rather for his safeguard than for his punishment, by such as favoured him, as the Lord Cromwell, who being Viceregent in Causes Ecclesiastical came then into suspicion therefore. For in such sort was the matter handled before the King, that all men might well understand what they meant. The King then being in no point resolved of the true and sincere understanding of the Doctrine of that Article, but rather a perverse stout Adversary to the contrary, called to him my Lord of Canterbury and my Lord Cromwell, and willed them forthwith to call Frith unto Examination, so that he might either be compelled to recant, or else by the Law to suffer condign punishment.

Friths long protract in the Tower without Examination was so heinously taken of the King, that now my Lord of Canterbury with other Bishops, as Stokesley then Bishop of London, and other learned men were undelayedly appointed to examine Frith. And for that there should be no concurrence of Citizens at the said Examination; my Lord of Canterbury removed to Croyden, unto whom resorted the rest of the Commissioners. Now before the day of Execution appointed, my Lord of Canterbury sent one of his Gentlemen and one of his Porters, whole name was Perlebeane, a Welchman born, to fetch John Frith from the Tower unto Croyden. This Gentleman had both my Lords Letters and the Kings Ring unto my Lord Fitzwilliams Constable of the Tower, then lying in Canon-Row at Westminster in extrem anguish and pain of the Strangulation, for the delivery of the Prisoner. Master Fitzwilliams more passionate than patient, understanding for what purpose my Lords Gentleman was come, banned and cursed Frith and all other Hereticks, saying, Take this my Ring unto the Lieutenant of the Tower, and receive your man your Heretick with you, and I am glad that I am rid of him. When Frith was delivered unto my Lord of Canterburys Gentleman, they twain, with Perlebeane, sitting in a Wherry, and rowing towards Lambeth: The said Gentleman much lamenting in his mind the infelicity of the said Frith, began in this wise to exhort him to consider in what estate he was, a man altogether cast away in the world, if he did not look wisely to himself. And yet though his Cause were never so dangerous, he might somewhat in relenting to Authority, and so giving place for a time, help both himself out of the trouble, and when opportunity and occasion should serve, prefer his Cause which he then went about to defend, declaring further, that he had many well-willers and friends, which would stand on his side so far forth as possibly they were able and durst do; adding hereunto, that it were great pity that he being of such singular knowledge, both in the Latin, Greek, and both ready and ripe in all kind of Learning, and that namely as well in the Scriptures, as in the ancient Doctors, should now suddenly suffer all those singular gifts to perish with him with little commodity or profit to the World, and less comfort to his Wife and Children, and other his Kinsfolks and Friends. And as for the verity of your Opinion in the Sacrament of the Body and Blood of our Saviour Christ, it is so untimely opened here among us in England, that you shall rather do harm than good: wherefore be wise, and be ruled by good counsel, until a better opportunity may serve.

This I am sure of (quoth the Gentleman) that my Lord Cromwell and my Lord of Canterbury much favouring you, and knowing you to be an eloquent learned young man, and now towards the felicity of your life, young in years, old in knowledge, and of great forwardness and likelihood to be a most profitable Member for this Realm, will never permit you to sustain any open shame, if you will somewhat be advised by their counsel: on the other side, if you stand stiff to your Opinion, it is not possible to save your life. For like as you have good Friends, so have you mortal Foes and Enemies.

I most heartily thank you, quoth Master Frith unto the Gentleman, both for your good will, and for your counsel: by the which I well perceive that you mind well unto me; howbeit my Cause and Conscience is such, that in no wise I either may or can for any worldly respect, without danger of damnation, start aside and flee from the true Knowledge and Doctrine which I have conceived of the Supper of the Lord, or the Communion, otherwise called the Sacrament of the Altar: For if it be my chance to be demanded what I think in that behalf, I must needs say my knowledge and my conscience, as partly I have written therein already, though I should presently lose twenty lives, if I had so many. And this you shall well understand that I am not unfurnished, either of Scriptures or ancient Doctors, Schoolmen, or other for my defence; so that if I may be indifferently heard, I am sure that mine Adversaries cannot justly condemn me or mine Assertion, but that they shall condemn with me both S. Augustine, and the most part of the old Writers: yea, the very Bishops of Rome of the oldest sort shall also say for me, and defend my Cause. Yea marry, quoth the Gentleman, you say well, if you might be indifferently heard. But I much doubt thereof, for that our Master Christ was not indifferently heard Anno 1558. heard, nor should be, as I think, if he were now present again in the World, specially in this your Opinion, the same being so odious unto the World, and we so far off from the true knowledge thereof.

Well, well (quoth Frith then unto the Gentleman) I know very well, that this Doctrine of the Sacrament of the Altar, which I hold, and have opened contrary to the opinion of this Realm, is very hard meat to be digested both of the Clergy and Laity. But this I will say to you, taking the Gentleman by the hand, that if you live but twenty years more, whatsoever become of me, you shall see this whole Realm of mine opinion concerning this Sacrament of the Altar: namely, the whole estate of the fame, though some sort of men particularly shall not be fully persuaded therein. And if it come not so to pass, then account me the vainest man that ever you heard speak with tongue: Besides this, you say that my death would be sorrowful and uncomfortable unto my Friends.

I grant (quoth he) that for a small time it would so be. But if I should so mollifie, qualifie, and temper my cause in such sort as to deserve only to be kept in Prison, that would not only be a much longer grief unto me, but also to my friends would breed no small disquietness both of body and mind. And therefore all things well and rightly pondered, my death in this cause shall be better unto me and all mine, than life in continual bondage and penuries. And Almighty God knoweth what he hath to do with his poor Servant, whose cause I know defend, and not mine own, from the which I assuredly do intend (God willing, never to flurt, or otherwise to give place, so long as God will give me life.

This communication, or like in effect, my Lord of Canterbury Gentleman and Frith had, coming in a Wherry upon the Tower from the Tower to Lambeth.

Now when they were landed, after some repast by them taken at Lambeth, the Gentleman, the Porter, and Frith, went forward towards Croydon on foot. This Gentleman still lamenting with himself the hard and cruel destiny towards the said Frith; namely, if he once came amongst the Bishops; and now also perceiving the exceeding constancy of Frith, devised with himself some way or means to convey him clean out of their hands; and thereupon considering that there were no more persons there to convey the Prisoner, but the Porter and himself, he took in hand to win the Porter to his purpose. Quoth the Gentleman unto Perlebeane the Porter (they twain privately walking by themselves without the hearing of Frith) you have heard this man I am sure, and noted his talk since he came from the Tower. — Yea, that I have right well marked him (quoth the Porter) and I never heard so constant a man, nor so eloquent a person. You have heard nothing, quoth the Gentleman, in respect both of his knowledge and eloquence: if he might liberally either in University or Pulpit declare his Learning, you would then much more marvel at his Knowledge. I take him to be such a one of his Age in all kind of learning, and knowledge of Tongues, as this Realm never yet in mine opinion brought forth; and yet those singular Gifts in him are no more considered of our Bishops, than if he were a very Dolt or an Idiot; yea, they abhor him as a Devil therefore, and cover utterly to extinguish him as a Member of the Devil, without any consideration of Gods special Gifts. Marry (quoth the Porter) if there were nothing else in him but the consideration of his personage both comely and amiable, and of natural disposition, gentle, meek, and humble; it were pity he should be cast away. Cast away (quoth the Gentleman?) He shall be sure cast away if we once bring him to Croydon, and surely (quoth the Gentleman) before God I speak it, if thou Perlebeane wert of my mind, we would never bring him thither. Say you so, quoth the Porter? I know that you be of a great deal more credit than I am in this matter; and therefore if you can devise honestly or find some reasonable excuse, whereby we may let him go and provide for himself, I will with all my heart condescend to your device. As for that (quoth the Gentleman) it is already invented in law and which ways he shall convey himself without any great danger or displeasure taken towards us, as the matter shall be handled: You see (quoth the Gentleman) yonder hill before us, named Bristow Cause, two miles from London, there are great Woods on both sides, when we come there we will permit Frith to go into the Woods on the left hand of the way, whereby he may convey himself into Kent among his Friends, for he is a Kentish man born, and when he is gone, we will linger an hour or twain about the Highway, until that it somewhat draw towards the night. Then in great haste we will approach unto Streatham, which is a mile and a half off, and make an out-cry in the Town that our Prisoner is broken from us into the Woods on the right hand towards Waynesworth, so that we will draw as many as we may of the Town to search the Country that way for our Prisoner, declaring that we followed above a mile or more, and at length lost him in the Woods, because we had no more company, and so we will rather than fail lye out one night in searching for him, and send word from Streatham to my L. of Canterbury at Croydon in the Evening of the Prisoners escape, and to what Coast he is fled. So that by the Morning, if he have any good luck at all, he will so provide for himself, that the Bishops shall fail of their purpose. I assure you (quoth Perlebeane) I like very well the device herein, and therefore go ye to Frith, and declare what we have devised for his delivery: for now we are almost at the place.

When my Lord of Canterbury Gentleman came nigh to the Hill, he joyined himself in Company with the said Frith, and calling him by his name, said, Now Master Frith, let us twain commune together another while: you must consider, that the Journey which I have now taken in hand thus in bringing you to Croydon, as a sheep to the slaughter, so grieveth me, and as it were overwhelmeth me in cares and sorrows, that I little pass what danger I fall in, so that I could find the means to deliver you out of the Lyons mouth. And yet yonder good Fellow and I have so devised a means, whereby you may both easily escape from this great and imminent danger at hand, and we also be rid from any vehement suspicion. And thereupon declared unto Frith the full process devised, how every thing in order should be handled.

When Frith had diligently heard all the matter concerning his delivery, he said to the Gentleman, Oh good Lord, with a smiling countenance, is this the effect of your secret consultation, thus long between you twain? Surely, surely, you have lost a great deal more labour in times past, and so are you like to do this; for if you should sooth leave me here, and go to Croydon, declaring to the Bishops, that you had lost Frith, I would surely follow after as fast as I might, and bring them news that I had found and brought Frith again. Do you think (quoth he) that I am afraid to declare my opinion unto the Bishops of England in a manifest Truth?

You are a fond man (quoth the Gentleman) thus to talk; as though your reasoning with them might do some good. But I do much marvel, that you were so willing to flee the Realm before you were taken, and now so unwilling to save your self. Marry, there was and is a great diversity of escaping between the one and the other, quoth Frith.

Before, I was indeed desirous to escape, because I was not attached, but at liberty, which liberty I would fain have enjoyed for the maintenance of my study beyond the Sea, where I was Reader in the Greek Tongue, according to S. Paul's counsel. Howbeit, now being taken by the higher Power, and as it were by Almighty Gods permission and providence delivered into the hands of the Bishops, only for Religion and Doctrines sake, namely, such as in conscience, and under pain of damnation, I am bound to maintain and defend, if I should now start aside and run away, I should run from my God, and from the testimony of his holy Word, worthy then of a thousand Hells. And therefore I most heartily thank you both for your good wills towards me, beseeching you to bring me where I was appointed to be brought; for else I will go thither all alone. And so with a cheerful and merry countenance he went with them, spending the time in pleasant and godly communication, until they came to Croydon, wherefore that night he was well entertained in the Porters Lodge. On the morrow he was called before certain Bishops and other learned men; sitting in Commission with the L. of Canterbury.

1558.

A Treatise of Mr. Nicholas Ridley, in the name, as it seemeth, of the whole Clergy, to King Edward the Sixth, concerning Images not to be set up, nor worshipped in Churches.

¶ Certain Reasons which move us that we cannot with safe Consciences give our assent, that the Images of Christ, &c. should be placed and erected in Churches.

First, the words of the Commandment, Exod. 20. Thou shalt not make to thy self any graven Image, &c. And the same is repeated more plainly, Deut. 27. Maledictus homo qui facit sculptile & confilatile, &c. ponitque illud in abscondito, &c. That is, Cursed is the man which maketh a graven or molten Image, &c. and setteth it in a secret place; and all the People shall say, Amen.

In the first place, these words are to be noted, Thou shalt not make to thy self; that is, to any use of Religion.

In the latter place, these words, And setteth it in a secret place; for no man durst then commit Idolatry openly. So that conferring the places, it doth evidently appear, That Images both for use of Religion, and in place of peril for Idolatry, are forbidden.

God, knowing the inclination of man to Idolatry, sheweth the reason why he made this general prohibition, Ne forte erroris deceptus adores ea & colas: That is to say, Lest peradventure thou being deceived, shouldst bow down to them and worship them.

This general Law is generally to be observed, notwithstanding that peradventure a great number cannot be hurt by them, which may appear by the example following.

God forbade the People to joyn their Children in marriage with strangers, adding the reason; Quia seducit filium tuum, ne sequatur me: That is, For he will seduce thy son, that he shall not follow me, Deut. 7.

Moses was not deceived or seduced by Jeroboam's daughter, nor Boaz by Ruth, being a woman of Moab. And yet for all that, the general Law was to be observed, Thou shalt joyn no marriage with them. And so likewise, Thou shalt not make to thy self any graven Image, &c.

Deut. 4. God giveth a special charge to avoid Images. Beware (saith he) that thou forget not the Covenant of the Lord thy God which he made with thee, and so make to thy self any graven Image of any thing which the Lord hath forbidden thee, for the Lord thy God is a consuming Fire, and a jealous God.

If thou have Children and Nephews, and do well in the Land, and being deceived, do make to your selves any graven Image, doing evil before the Lord your God, and provoke him to anger, I do this day call Heaven and Earth to witness, that you shall quickly perish out of the Land which ye shall possess, ye shall not dwell in it any longer time, but the Lord will destroy you, and scatter you amongst all Nations.

Note what solemn obtestation God useth, and what grievous punishments he threatneth to the breakers of the second Commandment.

In the Tabernacle and Temple of God no Image was by God appointed openly to be set, nor by practice afterwards used or permitted, so long as Religion was purely observed; so that the use and execution of the Law is a good Interpreter of the true meaning of the same.

If by virtue of the second Commandment Images were not lawful in the Temple of the Jews, then by the same Commandment they are not lawful in the Churches of Christians. For being a moral Commandment, and not ceremonial (for by consent of Writers, only a part of the Precept of observing the Sabbath is ceremonial) it is a perpetual Commandment, and bindeth us as well as the Jews.

The Jews by no means would consent to Herod, Pilate, or Petronius, that Images should be placed in the Temple at Jerusalem, but rather offered themselves to the death than to assent unto it. Who, besides that they are commended by Josephus for observing the meaning of the Law, would not have endangered themselves so far, if they had thought Images had been indifferent in the Temple of God. For as S. Paul saith, 2 Cor. 6. Quid Templo Dei cum simulacris, &c. Joseph. Antiq. lib. 17. cap. 8. li. 18. cap. 5. & 15.

Gods Scripture doth in no place continent the use of Images, but in a great number of places doth disallow and condemn them.

They are called in the Book of Wisdom, The Trap and Snare of the feet of the Ignorant.

It is said that the Invention of them was the beginning of Spiritual Fornication: And that they were not from the beginning, neither shall they continue to the end.

In the 15th Chapter of the same Book it is said, Umbra pictura, labor sine fructu, &c. And again, They are worthy of death both that put their trust in them, and that make them, and that love them, and that worship them.

The Psalms and Prophets are full of like Sentences, and how can we then praise the thing which Gods Spirit doth always dispraise?

Furthermore, an Image made by a Father (as appeareth in the same Book) for the memorial of his Son departed, was the first invention of Images, and occasion of Idolatry, Wisdom 14.

How much more then shall an Image made in the memory of Christ, and set up in the place of Religion, occasion the same offence? Ensch. Eccles. Hist. lib. 7. c. 18. Images have their beginning from the Heathen, and of no good ground; therefore they cannot be profitable for Christians. Whereunto Athanasius agreeth, writing of Images against the Gentiles: Athanasius cont. Gentiles 4. Et non edulcorantur in animo doli, sed animo rapinis rapunt, et de non arcentur ex eo, sed in animo rapinis rapunt, sed in animo. That is to say, The invention of Images came of no good, but of evil, and whatsoever hath an evil beginning, can never in any thing be judged good, seeing it is wholly naught.

S. John saith, My little Children, beware of Images: but to set them in the Churches, which are places dedicated to the Service and Invocation of God, and that over the Lords Table, being the highest and most honourable place where most danger of abuse both is, and ever hath been, is not to beware of them, nor to flee from them, but rather to embrace and receive them. Tertullian expounding the same words, writeth thus, Lit. de corona militis. Eviloli, custodite vos ab Idolis, non jam ab idolatria quasi ab officio, sed ab Idolis; i. ab ipso effigie eorum. That is to say, Little Children, keep your selves from the shape it self, or form of them.

Images in the Churches either serve to edifie or to destroy. If they edifie, then there is one kind of edification which the Scriptures neither teach nor command, but always disallow; if they destroy, they are not to be used; for in the Church of God all things ought to be done to edifie, 1 Cor. 14.

The Commandment of God is, Thou shalt not lay a stumbling block or a stone before the blind: and cursed is he that maketh the blind wander in his way.

The simple and unlearned People, who have been so long under blind Guides, are blind in matters of Religion, and inclined to Error and Idolatry. Therefore to set Images before them to stumble at (Nam laquei pedibus insipientium sunt; that is, They be Snares and Traps for the feet of the Ignorant) or to lead them out of the true way, is not only against the Commandment of God, but deserveth also the malediction and curse of God, Wisdom 14.

The use of Images is to the learned and confirmed in knowledge, neither necessary nor profitable. To the superstitious a confirmation in Error; To the simple and weak an occasion of fall, and very offensive and wounding of their Consciences; and therefore very dangerous. For S. Paul saith, 1 Cor. 9. offending the Brethren, and wounding their weak Consciences, they sin against Christ. And Matth. 18. We be to him by whom offence or occasion of falling cometh, it were better that a millstone were tied about his neck, and be cast into the Sea, than to offend one of the little ones that believe in Christ. And where objection may be made, that such offence may be taken away by sincere Doctrine and Preaching; it is to be answered, that that is not sufficient, as hereafter more at large shall appear.

And though it should be admitted as true, yet should it follow, that sincere Doctrine and Preaching should always and in all places continue as well as Images; and so wherefoever an Image to offend were erected, there should also of reason a godly and sincere Preacher be continually maintained: for it is reason that the remedy be as large as the offence, the medicine as general as the poyson, but that is not possible in the Realm of England that Images should be generally allowed, as reason and experience may teach.

Aaaa 3 where

As good Magistrates, which intend to banish all whoredom, do drive away all naughty persons, specially out of such places as be suspected; even so Images, being Meretrices, i. Whores, for that the worshipping of them is called in the Prophets Fornication and Adultery, ought to be banished, and especially out of Churches, which is the most suspected place, and where the spiritual Fornication hath been most committed.

It is not expedient to allow and admit the thing which is hurtful to the greatest number, but in all Churches and Commonwealths the ignorant and weak are the greatest number, to whom Images are hurtful, and not profitable.

And where it is commonly alledged, That Images in Churches do stir up the mind to devotion, it may be answered, that contrariwise they do rather distract the mind from Prayer, hearing of Gods Word, and other godly Meditations, as we read, that in the Council-Chamber of the Lacedemonians no Picture or Image was suffered, lest in consultation of weighty matters of the Commonwealth, their minds by the sight of the outward Image might be occasioned to be withdrawn, or to wander from the matter.

The experience of this present time doth declare that those parts of the Realm, which think and are persuaded that God is not offended by doing outward reverence to an Image, do most desire the restitution of Images, and have been most diligent to set them up again: Restitution therefore of them by common Authority shall confirm them more in their Error to the danger of their Souls, than ever they were before. For as one man writeth;

Nihil magis est certum, quam quod ex dubio factum est certum. That is to say, Nothing is more certain or sure, than that which of doubtful is made certain.

The profit of Images is uncertain, the peril, by experience of all Ages and states of the Church (as afore) is most certain.

The benefit to be taken of them (if there be any) is very small; the danger in seeing of them, which is the danger of Idolatry, is the greatest of all other. Now to allow a most certain peril for an uncertain profit, and the greatest danger for the smallest benefit, in matters of Faith and Religion, is a tempting to God, and a grievous offence.

Probations: out of the Fathers, Councils, and Histories.

First, It is manifest, that in the Primitive Church Images were not commonly used in Churches, Oratories, and places of Assembly for Religion; but they were generally detested and abhorred, inasmuch that the want of Imagery was objected to the Christians for a Crime.

Origen reporteth, that Celsus objected the lack of Images, lib. 4. contra Celsum.

Ambrosius saith also, That the Ethnicks accused the Christians that they had neither Altars nor Images.

Zephrus in his Commentary upon the Apology of Tertullian, gathereth thus of Tertullians words; Qui locum persuadendi frigeret penitus, nisi perpetuo aliud tenemus: Christianos tunc temporis odisse maximè statuas cum suis ornamentis, &c. That is to say, Which place of persuasion were very cold, and to no purpose at all, except we hold this always, That Christians in those days did hate most of all Images with their trim decking and ornaments.

Irenæus lib. 1. cap. 4. reproveth the Hereticks called Gnosticks, for that they carried about the Image of Christ made in Plasies time after his own proportion (which were much more to be esteemed than any that can be made now) using also for declaration of their affection towards it, to set Garlands upon the Head of it.

Lactantius affirmeth plainly: Non est dubium, quin religio nulla sit, ubiunque simulacrum est: lib. Divin. instit. 2. cap. 19. That is to say, It is not to be doubted, that there is no Religion wherefoever is any Image. If Christians then had used Images, he would not have made his Proposition so large.

S. Augustine De Civitate Dei, lib. 4. cap. 31. commendeth Varro the Roman in these words: Quam Varro existimaverit castius sine simulacris abseruari religionem, quam non videt, quantum appropinquaverit veritati? That is to say, When as Varro thought Religion might be kept more purely without Images, who doth not see how near he came to the Truth? So that not only by M. Varros judgment, but also by S. Augustines approbation, the most pure and chaste observation of Religion, and nearest the Truth, is to be without Images.

The same S. Augustine in Psalm. 113. hath these words: Plus valent simulacra ad curvandam infelicem animam, quam ad decendam: That is to say, Images have more force to bough down and crook the filly soul, than to teach it.

And upon the same Psalm he moveth this question; Quis quer, imo quævis bestia scit non esse Deum quod videt, cur ergo Spiritus Sanctus toties monet cavendum quod omnes sciunt? That is to say, Every Child, yea every Beast knoweth that it is not God which they see, why then doth the Holy Ghost so oft give warning to beware of that thing which all do know,

S. Augustines Answer.

Quoniam cum ponuntur in Templis, & semel incipiunt adorari à multitudine, statim nascitur sordidissimus affectus erroris. That is to say, For when they are set in Churches, and begin once to be worshipped of the Multitude or Common People, straightway springeth up a most filthy affection of Error.

This place of S. Augustine doth well open how weak a reason it is to say, Images are a thing indifferent in Chambers and in Churches. For the alteration of the place, manner, and other circumstances, doth alter oftentimes the nature of the thing. It is lawful to buy and sell in the Market, but not so in Churches. It is lawful to eat and drink, but not so in Churches. And therefore saith S. Paul, Annon habetis domos ad edendum ac bibendum? An Ecclesiam Dei contemnitis? That is to say, Have you not Houses to eat and drink in? Do you contemn the Church of God?

Many other actions there be which are lawful and honest in private places, which are neither comely nor honest, not only in Churches, but also in other Assemblies of honest People.

Tertullian saith, he used sometimes to burn Frankincense in his Chamber, which was then used of Idolaters, and is yet in the Romish Churches, but he joyneth withal; Sed non eodem ritu, nec eodem habitu, nec eodem apparatu, quo agitur apud Idola: That is to say, But not after such a Rite or Ceremony, nor after such a fashion, nor with such preparation or sumptuousness, as it is done before the Idols.

So that Images placed in Churches, and set in honorable sublimity, that is to say, in an honourable place of estimation, as S. Augustine saith, and especially over the Lords Table, which is done (using the words of Tertullian) eodem ritu, & eodem habitu, that is after the same manner and fashion which the Papists did use, especially after so long continuance of abuse of Images, and so many being blinded with superstitious opinion towards them, cannot be counted a thing indifferent, but a most certain ruin of many Souls.

Epiphanius in his Epistle to John Bishop of Jerusalem (which Epistle was translated out of the Greek by S. Jerom, being a likelihood that Jerom misliked not the Doctrine of the same) doth write a fact of his own, which doth most clearly declare the judgment of that notable learned Bishop concerning the use of Images, his words are these: Quam venissem ad villam quæ dicitur Anablatia, & visissemque ibi præteritis lucernam ardentem, & interrogassem quis locus esset, didicissemque esse Ecclesiam, & intrassem ut orarem: inveni ibi velum pendens in foribus ejusdem Ecclesiæ sinuam atque depictam, depictum, & habens imaginem quasi Christi vel sancti cuiusdam, non enim satis memini cuius fuit. Cum ergo hoc vidissem in Ecclesia Christi contra auctoritatem Scripturarum, hominis pendere imaginem, scidi illud, &c. Et paulo post. Excepi in Ecclesia Christi istiusmodi vela quæ contra religionem nostram veniunt non appendi, &c. That is to say, When I came to a Village called Anablaiba, and saw there, as I passed by, a Candle burning, and enquiring what place it was, and learning that it was a Church, and had entered into the same to pray, I found there a Vail or Cloth hanging at the door of the same Church, dyed and painted, having on it the Image of Christ as it were, or of some Saint (for I remember not well whose it was.) Then when I saw this, that in the Church of Christ, against the Authority of the Scriptures, the Image of a man did hang, I cut it in pieces, &c. And commanded that such manner of Vails or Clothes, which are contrary to our Religion, be not hanging in the Church of Christ.

Out of this place of Epiphanius divers notes are to be observed.

First, That by the Judgment of this ancient Father, to permit Images in Churches is against the Authority of the Scriptures, meaning against the second Commandment, Thou shalt not make to thy self any graven Image, &c.

Secondly, That Epiphanius doth reject not only graven and molten, but also painted Images: forasmuch as he cut in pieces the Image painted in a Vail hanging at the Church door; what would he have done, if he had found it over the Lords Table?

Thirdly, That he saith not the Image of Christ: for no doubt that Image is most perilous in the Church of all other.

Fourthly, That he did not only remove it, but with a vehemency of zeal cut it in pieces, following the example of the good King Ezechias, who brake the brasen Serpent, and burnt it to ashes.

Last of all, That Epiphanius thinketh it the duty of vigilant Bishops to be careful, that no such kind of painted Images be permitted in the Church.

Serenus Bishop of Majissa broke down Images, and destroyed them when he did see them begin to be worshipped, Greg. in regif. epist. 109.

Experience of the times since hath declared, whether of these two Sentences were better. For since Gregorius his time, the Images standing in the West-Church, it hath been overflowed with Idolatry, notwithstanding his or other mens doctrine: Whereas if Serenus's judgment had universally taken place, no such thing had happened. For if no Images had been suffered, none could have been worshipped: and consequently, no Idolatry committed by them.

¶ To recite the Process of Histories and Councils about the matter of Images, it would require a long Discourse, but it shall be sufficient here briefly to touch a few.

IT is manifest to them that read Histories, that not only Emperors, but also divers and sundry Councils in the East-Church have condemned and abolished Images both by Decrees and Examples.

Petrus Crinitus de bonæ disciplina, l. 9. c. 9. ex libris Augustinus hac verba transcripsit. Valens & Theodosius Augusti Imperatores præfecto prætorio ad hunc modum scripserunt. Quam sit nobis cura diligens in rebus omnibus superni nominis religionem tuere: Signum Salvatoris Christi nemini quidem concedimus coloribus, lapide aliave materia fingere, insculpere, aut pingere, sed quocunque reperitur loco tolli iubemus, gravissima pena eos multando qui contrarium decretis nostris, & imperio quicquam tentaverint. That is to say, Petrus Crinitus in his Book of honest Discipline, Book 9. Chap. 9. wrote out of the Emperors Books these words: Valens and Theodosius the Emperors wrote to the High Marshal or Lieutenant in this sort. Whereas we are very careful that the Religion of Almighty God should be in all things kept, We permit no man to cast grave, or paint the Image of our Saviour Christ, either in colours, stone, or other matter; but wheresoever it be found, we com- mand it to be taken away, punishing them most grievously that shall attempt any thing contrary to our Decrees and Empire.

Leo the Third, a man commended in Histories for his excellent virtues and godliness, who (as is judged of some men) was the Author of the Book De re militari, that is, Of the Feat of War; being translated out of the Greek by Sir John Cheeke, and dedicated to K. Henry the Eighth, your Highnesses Father; by Publick Authority commanded abolishing of Images; and in Constantinople caused all the Images to be gathered together on a heap, and burned them unto ashes.

Constantine the First his Son, assembled a Council of the Bishops of the East-Church; in which Council it was decreed as followeth. It is not lawful for them that believe in God throv Jesus Christ, to have any Images, either of the Creator, or of any Creatures set up in Temples to be worshipped, but rather that all Images by the Law of God, and for the avoiding of offences, ought to be taken out of Churches. Which Decree was executed in all places where any Images were, either in Greece or in Asia. But in all these times, the Bishops of Rome rather maintaining the Authority of Gregory, weighing like Christian Bishops the peril of the Church, always in their Assemblies allowed Images.

Not long after, the Bishop of Rome, practising with Tharastus Patriarch of Constantinople, obtained of Irene the Emperess, her Son Constantine being then young, that a Council was called at Nice, in the which the Popes Legates were Presidents, which appeared well by their fruits: for in that Council it was decreed; That Images should not only be permitted in Churches, but also worshipped: which Council was confuted by a Book written by Carolus Magnus the Emperour, calling it a foolish and an arrogant Council.

Soon after this Council, arose a sharp contention between Irene the Emperess, and her Son Constantine the Sixth, the Emperour, who destroyed Images. And in the end, as she had before wickedly burned the bones of her Father in Law, Constantine the Fifth, so afterward unnaturally the put out the eyes of her Son Constantine the Sixth.

About which time, as Eutropius writeth, the Sun was darkened most terribly for the space of seventeen days, God shewing, by that dreadful sign, how much he disliked those kinds of proceedings.

To be short, there was never thing that made more division, or brought more mischief into the Church, than the Controverſie of Images: by reason whereof, not only the East-Church was divided from the West; and never since perfectly reconciled, but also the Empire was cut asunder and divided, and the Gate opened to the Saracens and Turks to enter and overcome a great piece of Christendom. The fault whereof most justly is to be ascribed to the Patrons of Images, who could not be contented with the example of the Primitive Church, being most simple and sincere, and most agreeable to the Scripture: (For as Tersullian saith, Quod primum verum, quod posterius adulterinum; That is to say, What as is first, that is true, and that that is later is counterfeit.) But with all extremity maintained the use of Images in Churches; whereof no profit nor commodity did ever grow to the Church of God. For it is evidently that infinite millions of Souls have been cast into eternal damnation by the occasion of Images used in place of Religion, and no History can record, that ever any one soul was won unto Christ by having of Images. But lest it might appear that the West-Church had always generally retained and commended Images, it is to be noted, that in a Council holden in Spain, called Concilium Eliberinum, the use of Images in Churches was clearly prohibited in these form of words; Placuit in Ecclesiis picturæ esse non debere, ne quod colitur aut adoratur in parietibus depingatur. That is to say, We decree, that Pictures ought not to be in Churches, lest that be painted upon the walls which is worshipped or adored.

But this notwithstanding experience hath declared, that neither assembling in Councils, neither Writings, Preachings, Decrees, making of Laws, prescribing of Punishments, hath holpen against Images, to the which Idolatry hath been committed, nor against Idolatry whilst Images Images stood. For these blind Books and dumb School-masters, (which they call Lay-mens books) have more prevailed by their craved and painted preaching of Idolatry, than all other written Books and preachings in teaching the truth, and the horror of that vice.

Having thus declared unto your Highness a few causes of many which do move our Consciences in this matter; we beseech your Highness most humbly not to strain us any further, but to consider that Gods Word doth threaten a terrible judgment unto us, if we, being Pastors and Ministers in his Church, should assent unto the thing which in our Learning and Conscience we are persuaded doth tend to the confirmation of Error, Superstition and Idolatry: and finally, to the ruine of the Souls committed to our charge, for the which we must give an account to the Prince of Pastors at the last day, Hebrews 12. 1. Pet. 5. We pray your Majesty also not to be offended with this our plainness and liberty, which all good and Christian Princes have ever taken in good part at the hands of Godly Bishops.

Saint Ambrose writing to Theodosius the Emperor, useth these words; Sed neque Imperiale est libertatem dicendi negare, neque Sacerdotale quod sentiat non dicere. Item, in causa vero Dei quem audiet, si Sacerdotem non audiet, cuius majore peccatur periculo? quis tibi verum audebit dicere, si Sacerdos non audeat? Epist. lib. 5. Epist. 29. that is to say: But neither it is the part of an Emperor to deny free liberty of speaking, nor yet the duty of a Priest not to speak what he thinketh. And again; In Gods cause whom wilt thou hear, if thou wilt not hear the Priest, to whose great peril the fault should be committed? Who dare say the truth unto thee, if the Priest dare not? These and such like Speeches of S. Ambrose, Theodosius, and Valentinianus the Emperors did always take in good part, and we doubt not but your Grace will do the like, of whose not only clemency, but also beneficence, we have largely tasted.

We beseech your Majesty also, in these and such like controversies of Religion, to refer the discussion and deciding of them to a Synod of our Bishops and other Godly learned Men, according to the example of Constantinus Maximus, and other Christian Emperors, that the reasons of both parts being examined by them, the judgment may be given uprightly in all doubtful matters.

And to return to this present matter, we most humbly beseech your Majesty to consider, that besides weighty causes in policy, which we leave to the Wisdom of your Honourable Counsellors, the stablishment of Images by your Authority shall not only utterly discredit our Ministers, as builders up of the things which we have destroyed, but also blench the fame of your most Godly Father, and such notable Fathers as have given their Life for the Testimony of Gods Truth, who by publick Law removed all Images.

The Almighty and Everlasting God plentifully induce your Majesty with his Spirit and Heavenly Wisdom, and long preserve your most Gracious Reign and prosperous Government over us, to the advancement of his Glory, to the overthrow of Superstition, and to the benefit and comfort of all your Highness loving Subjects.

A Note of Mr. Ridley.

After D. Ridley sometime Bishop of London of whom mention is made, was a Man so revered for his Learning and Knowledge in the Scripture, that even his very enemies have reported him to have been an excellent Clerk, whose life it might have been redeemed with the sum of 10000. marks, yea, 10000. pounds, the Lord Daeres of the North, being his Kinsman, would have given it to Q. Mary, rather than he should have been burned. And yet was she so unmerciful, for all his gentleness in K. Edwards days, that it would not be granted for any sure that could be made. Oh, that he had remembered his labour for her to K. Edward the 6. with Cranmer before mentioned, in such fort that even he had yielded but the reward of a Publican, Mat. 5. then had the Earth not so been bereft of him as it was; but the Lord forgive us our sins which were the cause thereof, and grant that we never do provoke his anger again, if it be his blessed will, Amen.

Another Note of Mr. Ridley

After Ridley late Bishop of London, being Prisoner in the Tower, had there given him the liberty of the same, to prove belike whether he would go to Mass or no, which once he did. And M. Bradford being there Prisoner also the same time, and hearing thereof, took his pen and ink, and writeth to him an effectual Letter to persuade him from the same, and sheweth the occasion that thereby should ensue, which God be honored did M. Ridley no little good: for he repented his fact therein, as he himself maketh mention, writing again in the latter end of the Book of Marcus Antonius, which he lent to M. Bradford, and never after that polluted himself with that filthy dregs of Antichristian service.

A Note concerning Dr. Crammer in his Disputation.

That day wherein Doctor Crammer late Bishop of Canterbury answered in the Divinity School at Oxford, there was alledged unto him by Doctor Weston; that he the said Crammer in his Book of the Sacrament falsly falsified the saying of the Doctors, and specially the saying of Saint Hilary in these words, Vero for Vere, shewing a print or two thereof; to have defaced his doings therein: but Doctor Crammer with a grave and fatherly sobriety answered, that the print of S. Hilarys works, whereout he took his notes, was verbatim according to his Book, and that could his Books testify if they were there to be seen. Saying further, that he supposed D. Smith in that order rehearsed it in his Book of the Sacrament, to the which D. Smith there present (though he were demanded the answer thereof) stood in silence, As Canis mutus non valens latrare. But by and by D. Weston without shame, to shadow D. Smiths silence, spitefully said to Crammer; belike you took your learning out of Mr. D. Smiths Book.

All this already is testified before.

It chanced at that present to be in the School one William Holcot Gentleman then a journeyer in the University Colledge; he hearing the same untruth, and remembering that he had amongst his Books in his study the said Book of Doctor Smith, at his return to his said study desirous to see the truth therein, found it agreeable to the writing and affirmation of Doctor Crammer. And the said Holcot, then and there better remembering himself, found amongst his Books the Book of Stephen Gardiner, intitled the Devils Sophistry. In which Book was the said saying of Saint Hilary alledged by the said Stephen verbatim, both in Latin and English according to Doctor Crammers confirmation. Then the said William Holcot intending (for the manifest opening and trial of the truth therein) to have delivered the said Gardiners Book to Doctor Crammer, brought it to Bocardo the Prison of Oxford, where Doctor Crammer then remained, but there in the delivery thereof he was apprehended by the Bailiffs and by them brought before Doctor Weston and his Colleagues then at dinner at Corpus Christi Colledge, who straightways laid Treson to the charge of the said William Holcot, for the maintenance of Crammer in his naughtiness (as they called it) and so upon strait examination, to know who were privy to his doings in delivery of the said Gardiners Book, committed him to the said Prison of Bocardo, where he sojournd and slept in the straw that night.

And in the morrow in the morning, Doctor Cole yet alive, then Dean of Pauls, and Doctor Jeffery, two of them then Visitors, further examined the said Holcot of that his doings; threatening him to lay treson to his charge, and so to send him for the trial thereof to the then Lord Chancellor Stephen Gardiner, willing him presently to subscribe to the Articles then in question, but he refused, desiring respite until the Laws of the Realm had determined the same. And so was he again committed to the said Prison. And after three days Doctor Weston and the residue of the Visitors solemnly in Saint Maries Church pronouncing sentence against the late Bishops, Crammer, Ridley, and Latimer; amongst other called there before them the said Holcot, willing him to subscribe to their three Articles. He demanding them then these demands, first, whether they thought in their Consciences that the Articles, whereunto they willed him to subscribe, were according to the Scriptures, and that the Religion then they went about to plant were the true Religion of Christ: they answered all with one voice, Yea, yea. Then asked he them whether they thought themselves able to answer, and would answer before God for him if he subscribed thereunto as they willed him: And they likewise answered, Yea, yea. And so he the said Holcot through fear and frailty of the Flesh (as Noephtus) upon their threats subscribed. Then they with many fair and flattering words delivered him, but would not let him have again his Book brought to Bocardo, lest (as it seemed)

he

he should shew it to their shame. And they privily willed the Master and the fellows of the said University Colledge to see the said William Holec forth coming: And if they within a fortnight after did not hear from the then Lord Chancellor what should be done with him, that then they at the fortnights end should expel him out of the said Colledge, which they would have done, if the then Vicechancellor had not willed them to the contrary. Which Holec, though then an Apostata, is yet now a penitent Preacher.

An Epistle of Bishop Hooper in Latin, sent to the Convocation-House touching matters of Religion.

Episcopis, Decanis, Archidiaconis, & ceteris Cleri Ordinibus in Synodo Londinensi congregatis, gratiam & pacem a Domino.

Non vos latet (Viri doctissimi) in rebus arduis, ambiguis, & causis difficilioribus, iudicium apud veteres (juxta mandatum Dei) delatum fuisse semper ad Sacerdotes, Levitas, & ad Presidem, qui pro tempore iudicare fungebaturque omnes vi causas & lites difficiliores explicarent, ex prescripto Legis Dei. Ita qualescunque controversie fuerunt; ex sententia Sacerdotum & Presidis, ad normam & prescriptum Legis Dei late, componebantur. Et ob eo quod iudici partibus litigantibus statuissent, nullo modo erat declinandum. Quod si quis contumacious Sacerdos aut Presidis non parvisset, iuxta legem Dei sententiam pronuncianti, penas contumacie morte luctu, quo populi, hac ultione & contumacia vindicta admonitus, merneret; & denique in sole scire deberet. Quam difficulte, imo quam periculosa, inter vos & vos, de re Eucharistica lites aguntur, vestrae conitione, scripta, & libelli testantur: non vero qui meliorem, veritatem, & antiquissimam fidem sustinentes, consuetudine omnium bonorum nostrorum, dura & inhumana carceris servitute sentimus. Quare mei ipsius nomine, ac omnium fidei aurum qui mecum eandem Catholicae ac sanctae religionis veritatem profitentur, vos omnes in Christo Jesu obsecro, ut causam hanc, vel aliquam quancunque ob religionem ortam inter nos & vos, deferre dignemini ad supremam Curiam Parliamenti; ut ibi utraque pars coram sacro & excelso Senatu sese religiose, & animo submissio iudicio & auctoritati verbi Dei subiciat. Et si vestram religionem, quam sanctam, orthodoxam, ac catholicam esse contenditis, ex verbo Dei asserere potestis, illam & nos libenter amplexabimur, nostram, quam modo pro sacrosancta defendimus, repudiantes. Gratias item Deo & vobis agentes quam maximas, quod per vos ab erroribus liberati, ad veritatis cognitionem revocemur. Non solum autem hoc à vobis obsecramus, ut vos vestramque causam iudicio verbi Dei coram summo Parlamento deferatis; verum etiam ut nobis commolum detur tempus, quo veterum scripta & sacras literas evolvamur, à sancto Senatu imperare dignemini. Et si ibi iustas ac legitimas rationes fidei nostrae non reddiderimus, iudicio magistratus nos ipsos submittimus, ut à vobis ultionem nostri celeris & impietatis nobis inflat. Si hac facere non recusaveritis, religio quam causam, illoriam, et salvam, ac ob omnibus amplectendam esse conceditis, gloriosius de vestra fide & religione, ac de nobis ipsis (qui illam impiam esse & falsam contestamur) victoriam reportabimur. Nam si vestra Religio & cultus in causa Eucharistica sententiam & originem ducunt ex verbo Dei; procul dubio sanctam & sempiternam esse oportet. Et scitis quod res sancta & vera quo magis examinatur, & per verbum Dei exploratur, eo fit illustrior & purior. Et quanto purior et illustrior sit, tanto magis ab omnibus desideratur, & obvisis vultu excipitur. Quis enim non desideraret & amplecteretur religionem & cultum à Deo mandatum, & ab illius verbo sanctum ac confirmatum? Quare si vestra religio & cultus Dei res fide adeo vera, sancta, & à Deo mundo exhibit; non est quod ei metuat. Nam quod variis modis tentatur ac probatur, modo pium ac sanctum fuerit, iacturam ab hostibus nullam sentit, sed potius hostes conculcat ac interficit. Solis radii serquilinearum serdibus non coninguntur; veritasque divina verbi eternum tenetis & caligine non offunditur. Nec est quod vobis ipsis metuat; Anno modo res ipsa praesentis, quod ubique iactatis. Nam quotquot vestras partes non sequuntur, aliquo gravissimo ignominia genere nimis superbe afficitis: nos omnes omnino indoctos esse predicatis, aut plane dementatos affirmatis. Vobis autem pluraquam divinam vendicatis prudentiam; nobis vero pluraquam belluina soliditatem tribuitis. Jam quam facile erit doctis indoctos, hominibus sana mentis insaniam percitis, ingenio & prudentia flagrantibus stolidos & ignaros vincere; sacer Parliamenti conventus nullo negotio intelligit. Ideo, si omnino ob Christum & illius causae gloriam quam nos defendimus, cui ob salutem nostram, ut vestra prudentia nos scilicet arguamus, vestraque doctrina & eruditione nos ignorantia accusetur, hoc facere non vultis; tamen, ut publice impietatis convincamur coram summo Senatu, hoc praesentis. Et si istis rationibus nihil moveamini; tamen vestra ipsorum causa certe postulat, ut palam ea lites inter nos componantur, idque coram competentibus iudicem apud omnes pios male audiat, & fortassis hac suspitione laboret, quasi lucem & publicum examen fugiat, ne impietatis, & idololatriae per verbum Dei deprehendatur. Et vos qui malam causam, imo pessimam, ferro & igne defenditis, non tam docti nec pii, ut omnino vidiri & haberi vultis, invicemini: sed potius ignorantis & stultitiae, quas nobis impingitis, redegamini. Non vos fugit quomodo publice, palam, & in facie ac in praesentia omnium statum huius regni summa curia Parliamenti, veritas verbi Dei per fides, doctos, & pios ministros de vestra impia Missa gloriose victoriam reportavit: quamvis per trecentos annos non solum locum & templum Dei occupaverit, verum etiam corda hominum (tanquam Deus) inhabitaverit. Sed quocunque titulo, nomine, honore, reverentia, sanctitate, tempore, patronis, universitate splendens, vos per sanctissimum Regem Edwardum sextum sanctissima memoria ad revocum lapidem lydiu verbi Dei examinari per proceres, brotes, ac doctos huius regni erat mandatum; statim eorum, & nihil aliud apparuit, quam spursum & immundissimum idolum sub pallio & nomine Dei impie coniectum. Aqua & iusta petimus, ut palam & publice lites inter nos componantur. Si igitur vestrae causae & vobis ipsis non dissidat, una nobiscum apud sanctum Senatum agere dignemini, ut coram illo, auctoritate verbi Dei, quis nostrum veriorum partem defendere, dignoscatur. Nullis enim legibus sanctis & iustis unquam fuis permittimus, ut una pars litigans de altera parte iudex constitueretur. Nam in omnibus controversiis & causis difficilioribus (maxime in Religione) mediis aliquis, & neutra litigantium pars in iudicem eligenda est. Nec Christus ipse (quamvis ipsa veritas) aeterni Patris Filius, hanc potestatem & imperium iudicandi sibi vendicavit: quoadcunque lites de eius Doctrina, inter illum & Phariseos, vel quoscunque alios congererunt. Sed semper ad legem appellavit, adversariusque suos ut legi praescripto & sententiae starent, rogavit; scrutamini (inquit) Scripturas. Nos etiam à vobis nihil aliud in nomine Domini nostri Jesu Christi, suppliciter petimus & rogamus, nisi ut causa de qua inter nos litigatur, sententia & auctoritate verbi Dei decidatur ac finiatur. Et si per Verbum Dei fidem nostram parum candidam & piam offendere valeatis; porrigemus vobis herbam, daboque dexteras. Nec in impios Atrianos pui & sancti Patres, hanc iudicandi potestatem sibi assumserunt; sed adsum disputationi pui Principi Constantini Imperator qui rationes partium litigantium diligenter perpendit, & sententiam aique iudicium causae soli auctoritati verbi Dei devulsi. Quid hoc est igitur? quo iure contenditis? vultis & nostri et causae nostrae testes, accusatores, et iudices esse nos tantum Legem et Evangelium Dei, in causa religionis, iudicem competentem agnoscimus; illius iudicio seu vel cadat nostra causa. Tantum iterum atque iterum petimus, ut coram competentibus iudice detur nobis, qui vincula et carceres sustinemus, antiquum Christianissimumque auditorium: atque band dubitamus, quam nostras rationes, et argumenta auctoritate verbi divini sumus stabilituri, ac vestra plane subverturi. Hactenus praedictis iniuste gravamur; nec mirum, cum una pars litigantium iudex alterius partis constituitur. Quapropter ad Verbum Dei tanquam unicum et solum competentem, in causa religionis, ju-

Anno 1558 iudicem appellamus. Si præter & contra hanc Legem Dei, falsa & impia (ut capistis) v. & dolo promovere non desistitis; sed fratres vestros truculenter persequendo pergetis; nos in tantis periculis constituti ad misericordiam Dei confugimus, qui solus & possit & velit nos à vestris erroribus incolumes & salvos conservare. Præterea, ut olim aliqui ex nobis, pro salute & incolumitate aliquot vestrum, apud Magistratum civilem intercessimus; sic & nunc pro omnium vestrum salute in Christo Jesu apud Patrem celestem intercedere non desistemus, ut tandem ad meliorem & sinceriorem mentem reverteri unicum Christum Jesum quem præcinerunt Prophetæ, prædicaverunt Apostoli, quemque omnes pii agnoscunt jam (quoad humanitatem) sedentem ad dextram Patris in calis amplectamini, & exsulemini; repudiato conficio & ementito illo Christo, ex pane confecto, quem non solum juvenes virgines, & senes, verum etiam oves & boves, peccaque campi, volucres cali, & pisces maris panem agnoscunt ac sentiunt, & non Deum. Desistite, rogamus, igitur enixe ulterius oculos piorum perstringere. Verus enim Christus, quatenus homo, jam amplius sursum ac deorsum per manus Sacerdotum agitari & immolari non potest. Infernum vicit, peccata vestra in Cruce perivitavit, mortem destruxit, & jam astra tenet; quem olim videbitis venientem in nubibus cali cum potestate magna & gloria, spectentisque patris vos plangentis, nisi hic penitentiam sal & impiæ vestra doctrinæ egerit. Si Dexti autem, pro ira inexhausta bonitate & clementia, per Verbum suum literas inter nos componi dignetur, non dubito quin oculos vestros ita sit aperuit, ut quam horribiliter & impie Dei ac hominum testimonio & scriptis vos abuti videatis. Sed si furioso & excaeculenti spiritu vestras partes, circa auctoritatem Verbi Dei, defendere velitis; ædum est omnino de vestra æterna salute, quod Dominus propter filium suum unicum avertat. Cogitate etiam apud vos ipsos an hoc sit piorum Ministrorum Ecclesiæ officium, vis, metu, & pavore corde hominum in vestras partes compellere? Profecto Christus non ignem, non gladium, non carceres, non vincula, non violentiam, non confiscationem bonorum, non Regineæ Majestatis terrorem, necque organa consiliunt, quibus veritas sui veri mundo promulgaretur: sed mihi ac diligenti predicatione Evangelii sui mundum ab errore & Idololatriæ converti præcipit. Ipsi non Christi sed Antichristi armis utimur, quibus populum invicem ad vestra sacra compellimus; & non volentes & insinuatum Verbo Dei trahimus. Sed quam malus cufus perpetuatus sit timor, non ignoratis. Certe qui timet, nisi Dei Spiritus semper revocetur, odit. Triadite igitur suberrima præcepta Legis & Evangelii populo Dei, ut pro Christi Ministris per verbum Christi ab omnibus agnoscamini. Ideo enim Ministris Ecclesiæ Christi esset constituti, ut tantum Christi doctrinam populum Dei docerent, & non ut novum, & à Christo alienam obtruderent. Quæ jam vos in Ecclesia agitis, si coram æquo iudice amitam ac Christianam dispositionem non recoverseritis; ex Verbo Dei offendemus, vel à Lege Mofaica mutata, vel per Antichristum, & pseudoministros in Ecclesiam fuisse introducta, ut hoc brevi tractatu excellæ Parliamenti Curia facili constabit. Scio inter vos esse tam turgido & iniquo spiritu prædicatos, qui putant nos tantum inanem glorie, superbie, arrogantia, & famæ nostræ summo duci, & ideo velle potius semper male currere, quam admonitos de errore bene recurrere. Sed hoc Deus novit, quod tantum illius gloriam, nostramque salutem in Christo querimus, dicant adversarii quid velint. Meminerint autem nostri adversarii & cogitent, quamquam apud illos nec pro doctis nec piis hominibus habeamur (& haud dubie nos ipsos omnis impetatus & peccati apud Deum quotidie accusamus) tamen homines sumus ratione præditi. Et quis (nisi infans) jactura & amissione omnium bonorum suorum, æoris, liberorum, libertatis & vitæ redimet famæ aut inanem gloriæ titulum? Profecto tanti perire (ut dicitur) non emerimus. Igitur alius verbi veritatem nostris bonis omnibus ac vitæ ipsi præferimus: Et si centies (Deo nos adjuvante) moriendum nobis fuerit; ad idololatriam & impium cultum Dei, quæ Dei misericordia hactenus reliquimus, non revertemur. Domini sumus, siue vivamus, siue moriamur; ejus igitur voluntas in vobis & in nobis cum misericordia fiat, Amen.

Vestra salutis in Christo studiosissimus,

Job. Hooperus.

A Note of Bishop Farrer.

Doctor Leson, Doctor of Law, a Civilian, a Justice of Peace, the same who is mentioned before, would not suffer Bishop Farrer (when he was at the Stake to be burnt) to speak his mind, and about half a year after the said Doctor Leson died, and when he would have spoke himself he could not.

The Trouble and Examination of Thomas Hitton Martyr, with his Examinations, Answers, Condemnation and Martyrdom, Anno 1529. the 20th of February.

Thomas Hitton of Marham in the Diocese of Norwich, an honest poor man and religious, ever fearing God from his youth, and loving his Word; when persecution for the same Word in the days of King Henry the Eighth grew to be somewhat hot, took his Journey toward Rochester in Kent, intending to have gone to Dover, and so to have crossed the Seas into France and other Countries for a time, where repeating himself a while, he might be free from the heat of Persecution. As he was going on his intended Journey, one Thomas Swainsland, Bailly to William Warham Archbishop of Canterbury, meeting him by the way, and suspecting him to be (as they called them) an Heretic, caused him to be staied and brought before the said William Archbishop of Canterbury, his Master; who demanded of him from whence he came, and whether he intended to have gone, if he had not been intercepted? The said Thomas answered; that he came out of the Diocese of Norwich, and purposed to have gone beyond the Seas, if God had so permitted. Then the Bishop asked him, if he had ever been beyond the Seas before, and what Books he had brought over. He answered, that he had been once beyond the Seas before, and had brought certain Books with him from thence; namely, two New Testaments, and one Primer in English. The Bishop asked him to whom he gave the said Books. He answered, he would not declare. For (saith he) such is your bloody Cruelty, that you would never sleep quietly till you have sucked their Blood, as you mean to do mine. The Bishop seeing he could extort no more out of him, and perceiving his constant spirit and fervent zeal to the Truth, commanded him to Prison till further opportunity might serve for the shedding of his Blood.

The second Appearance of Thomas Hitton before the said Archbishop of Canterbury.

Within a while after the Bishop commanded the said Thomas to be brought before him again, who demanded of him how he judged and believed of the Religion then in force; and of the Authority of the Bishop of Rome. The said Thomas answered, that the Religion then used was most abominable Idolatry, and contrary to the holy Word of God. And as for the Pope (quoth he) he is Antichrist, the First-born of Satan, and hath no more power or authority; than any other Bishop hath in his own Diocese, nor so much neither. The Bishop hearing this, was in such a pelting chafe, that at that time he would talk no more with him; but returned him from whence he came, namely to Bocardo, with commandment to appear before him again upon the thirteenth day of the same Month following, at his Mannor of Knoll, to answer to such Articles and Interrogatories as should be objected ex officio against him.

The third appearance of Thomas Hitton before the said Archbishop of Canterbury.

The Hitton refuseth to swear against himself.

THe said Thomas Hitton at the day prefixed, made his personal appearance before the Bishop at the place appointed, to whom the Bishop ministred certain Articles and Interrogatories for him to answer unto, commanding him to swear, to answer truly and unfainedly unto them, and every part of them. The said Thomas Hitton refused to swear, saying, It is against Gods Laws and good Conscience for any man to swear to shed his own Blood, for so he should be a Murderer of himself, and become guilty of his own Death. But notwithstanding that he refused to swear to answer, yet he answered truly and directly to every particular Article and Interrogatory propounded unto him, but so as was finally to their contentation, yet no doubt to the great glory of God, and comfort of the godly. This done, the Bishop brake off his Session for that time, and commanded him to Prison again, and to appear before him in the place aforesaid upon the Friday next following, to answer further as should be demanded of him, granting him liberty withall to add to, or subtraçt from his former answers, or else utterly to deny and revoke the same.

The fourth appearance of Thomas Hitton before the said Archbishop of Canterbury.

THe day and time approaching, the said Thomas Hitton appeared again accordingly, and having heard his former answers and confessions distinctly by the Notary read unto him, hee reformed them in certain points, to some hee added, from other some hee substracted, but none hee denied. Then the Bishop perceiving his unmoveable constancie in the truth, setting learning and reason apart, being not able to convince him by arguments and truth, nor yet to reprove the Spirit which spake in him, fell to exhorting of him to have respect to his Soules health, and not so wilfully (as they termed it) to cast away himself for ever, but to repent, and abjure his errors, and in so doing, he would be good unto him, he said. When the Bishop with all his persuasions could do no good with him to withdraw him from the Truth of Gods Word, then the Doctors and other the assistants attempted the like: all which notwithstanding, the said Thomas Hitton would not desist nor shrink one jot from the truth, but both affirmed and confirmed his former Articles and confessions to the end; Inferring withal, that they sinned against the Holy Ghost, in as much as they knew that Gods Word was the Truth, and that the Mass and all Popish Religion is nothing but Idolatry, Lies, and open Blasphemy against the Majesty of God and his word, and contrary to Gods Word in every respect, and yet they would allow and maintain the same, contrary to their own Consciences: whereat all the Bench was greatly offended, and commanded him to Prison again, assigning him a day to come before them again.

The fifth appearance of Thomas Hitton before the said Archbishop of Canterbury.

*Another appearance of T. Hitton
Archbishop.*

AT the day appointed, the said Thomas Hitton appeared, to whom the Bishop said, Thomas, dost thou believe that any man either spiritual or temporal, is of sufficient Authority to set forth any law or fanchion of himself, the breach whereof is mortal or venial sin? To whom Thomas Hitton answered, that no man either spiritual or temporal might make any law or fanchion, the breach whereof is mortal or venial sin, except the same law or fanchion be drawn out of the Word of God, or else grounded upon the same with a good Conscience. And therefore the Church cannot set forth any law, the breach whereof is Mortal or Venial sin, unless it be grounded upon the Word of God also. But if any man, or the Church of God it self, do set forth any Law grounded upon the Word of God and good Conscience, the breach thereof to the violator is mortal and deadly sin. After all manner of ways and means attempted to draw this poor man from Christ and his Truth, the Bishop, seeing that he could not prevail, determined to send him to the Bishop of Rochester, and so did, who assayed by all means possible to remove him from his former professed truth. But seeing all his endeavors frustrate, and that he profited nothing, he signified the same to the Archbishop, and withal both went himself unto him, and carried the poor Prisoner with him thither also.

In the afternoon of the same day, the said Archbishop of Canterbury, the Bishop of Rochester, and divers other assistants, called the said poor man before them again, and caused all the former Articles, Interrogatories, and Demands to be read unto him in English, to the end he should either have revoked the same, or else, recanted them altogether, using both threats and fair promises to the performance thereof, but all in vain: for his Faith was built upon the Rock Christ Jesus, and therefore unable to be removed with any storms of persecution whatsoever.

In fine, the Archbishop (with mature judgment you must believe) consulting with the Bishop of Rochester, and other, proceeded to his condemnation, reading the Bloody Sentence of Death against him, and so was he, being condemned, delivered to the secular power, who carried him to the Prison, and soon after he was burned for the Testimony of Jesus Christ, as you may see more at large in his story, for whose constancy in the truth, the everlasting God be praised, Amen.

A Note of a certain good man troubled in Bulloyn the first year of King Edward the sixth, for the Gospel.

THe examination of mee William Hafflen Gunmer, in the Castle of high Bulloyn, in the year of our Lord, 1547. and the first year of the Reign of King Edward the sixth. As I was in the Church of Bulloyn, called the Stals, upon the 10. of April being Easter Tuesday, reading of a godly Book, called the lamentation of a Christian, against the Citizens of London, between the hours of three and four at afternoon, there came certain men to me as I stood at an Altar in the Church reading to my self, and asked me what good Book I had, and I said, they should hear if they pleased: then they desired me to read out that they might hear, and so did I very gladly; but I had not read long, but the Priests and Clerks were at their Latin Even-song, I reading mine English Book, there came a tipstaff for me, taking my two Books from me, and commanded me to go with him, for he said I must go before the Councel of the Town. Then went I forthwith with him, and a little without the Church door, Sir John Bridge met us, and bade the Tipstaff carry me to Sir Leonard Beckwith Knight, to be examined; and coming before his presence, he asked me what Books they where that I had at the Church, and was reading of one of them openly in the Church to the people: and I said so farr as I had read them they were good godly Books: and he said, they were Heresie, and with that he asked me how I did believe of the Sacrament of the Altar, whether I did not believe that to be the very Body of Christ, Flesh, Blood, and Bones: and I asked him whether he meant that, that was in the Pike or no? and he said, Ye, even that in the Pike: and I said, that since I had sure knowledge of Scriptures, I did not believe it to be the Body of Christ, but a bare piece of Bread, nor by Gods help will I ever believe it otherwise to be: then he said, I was an Heretick, and asked me what I made of the Sacrament: and I said, if it were duely ministred according to Christs institution, that then I did believe that the faithful Communicants, in receiving that blessed Sacrament, did receive into their inward man, or Soul, the very Body and Blood of our Saviour Jesus Christ. Then said he, dost thou not believe it to remain the very Body of Christ after the words of Consecration pronounced by the Priest? And I said, No. Then said he, What dost thou make of the Church? I said, as it is now used, it is a Den of Theeves, and the Synagogue of Sathan. Thou Heretick, said he, there remaineth the very Body of Christ. But I said, that Christ being God and man, dwelleth not in the Temples made with mens hands: much other communication had we at that time, but but this was the effect that day. Then he asked me whether I would be forth-coming till to Morrow. And I said, Sir, if you think that I will not, you may lay me where as I shall be so. Then he let me go for that night, and said, we shall talk further with thee to Morrow; so I departed home. And about the space of two hours after, Mr. Huntingdon the Preacher (which did much good with his Preaching in Bulloyn at that time) came to me, and said, that he heard me spoken of at my Lord Grayes, which was then Lord Deputy of the Town and Country of Bulloyn; and I perceive, said he, that you are in great danger of trouble; if you escape with your life: for there are some of the Council marvellously bent against you. I said, the Lords will be done: Well, said he, without you feel in your self a full purpose, by Gods help, to stand earnestly to the thing that ye have spoken, you shall do more hurt than good: Wherefore; said he, if you will go to Caices, I will send you where you shall be well used, and be out of this danger. Then I thanked Mr. Huntingdon, saying, I purpose by Gods assistance to abide the uttermost that they can do unto me. Well then (said he) I can tell you, you will be sent for to Morrow betimes before the whole Council: that is (said I) the thing that I look for. Then rose I betimes in the Morning and went into the Market-place, that I might spy which way the Officer should come for me; I had not tarried there long, but I spied a Tipstaff and went toward him, and asked him whom he sought; and he said, A Gunner of the great Ordnance in the Castle of Bulloyn: and I said, that I am he: Then said he, you you must go with me to my Lords: and I said, therefore I looked. When I came there, I saw my Lord and the whole Council were assembled together in a close ParLOUR. Doing my duty to them, my Lord said to me, It is informed me that thou hast seditiously congregate a Company together in the Church, and there in the time of Service thou didst read unto them an Heretical Book, and hast not reverently used silence in the time of the Divine Service, what sayst thou to this? I said, if it please your Honour, I was in the Church a good while before any Service began, and no Body with me, reading to my self alone, upon a Book that is agreeable to Gods Word, and no Heresie in it that I read, and when it drew toward Service time, there came Men to the Church, and some of them coming to me whom I knew not, asking me what good Book I had; I said it was a new Book that I had not yet read over: then they prayed me that I should read so that they might hear some part with me; and so I did, not calling, pointing, nor assembling any Company to me. And for the Service being in Latin, that for the strangeness of the Tongue, besides much Superstition joyned with it, was not understood of the most part of them that said or sung it, much less of them that stood by and did hear it, whereas by the Word of God all things in the Church or Congregation should be done to the edifying of the People: and seeing I could have no such thing by their Service, I did endeavour to edifie my self, and other that were desirous of reading godly Books. And because the Church is so abused contrary to the Word of God, being beset round about with a sort of abominable Idols, before whom no man ought to kneel, nor do any manner of reverence, because the Scriptures do curse both the Idol and the idol-maker, and all that do any Worship or Reverence unto them, or before them, for that cause I used no Reverence there. Well, said my Lord, I would thou couldst answer to the rest, as well as thou hast done to this; but I fear me thou canst not: for it is told me that thou hast spoken against the blessed Sacrament: And I said, if it please your Lordship that did I never in all my life, nor ever will do by the Grace of God. With that my chief Accuser, Sir Leonard Beckwith Knight, said to me, Didst thou not say to me yesterday, that thou didst not believe the Sacrament of the Altar, after the words of Consecration by the Priest, to be the very Body of Christ, flesh, blood and bones, as it was born of the Virgin Mary? It is true indeed that I said so; for neither do I believe it to remain Christs Body, nor ever will by the Grace of God believe it so to be: for I believe that Christ with that Body that was conceived and born of the Virgin Mary, did ascend up into Heaven, and there (according to our Belief) he sitteth on the Right hand of God the Father, and from thence that Body shall come at the Day of Judgment to judge the quick and the dead; and yet in the mean while I believe, that (the Sacrament duly ministered according to Christs Institution) all the faithful Receivers of this Sacrament, lifting up the eyes of their mind into Heaven where Christs Body is, they do receive in that Sacrament into their Soul or Inward man, the very Body of our Saviour Jesus Christ: yea, and I believe further, that Christ concerning his Divine Power, or the Power of his Godhead, is whosoever two or three be gathered together in his Name, that he is in the midst even amongst them; and that he is so with his faithful Flock even to the Worlds end. Tied they laid their heads together and had privy talk: after that two of them said to me, that it was rank Heresie that I did believe it to remain bare Bread after the Priest had consecrated it; and not believing it to be the very Body of Christ, I was worthy to be burned: then said I earnestly unto them, Think you not; though I be a vile Abject in your sight, and he that is most base among you to seek my Blood, but that my Blood shall be required at his or their hands? Then had they privy talk together again, after the which my Lord said unto me, Thou hearest that they here lay Heresie to thy charge, and I am a Man of War, and have no skill in such high Mysteries, wherefore thine Accusers say, that thou must suffer here as an Heretic, that all the rest of the Garrison may beware by thee that they fall not into the like Heresie, and so cast away themselves. Then said I, I appeal from this Council to the Council of England: then said my Lord, I am very glad that thou hast appealed to the Council of England, for there are Learned men and Divines that can skill of such matters, thither shalt thou be sent ere it be long. Then was I carried to Sir John Abridges House, and having Pen and Ink, I was bidden to write mine Articles, which were in effect those points of Religion which you have heard before in my Examination: then on the Morrow, being Thursday, and the 15th of April, I was brought to the Prison in the Town, called the Marshalsea, where I was very gently used: for a good Gentleman, one Mr. Wagham was the Keeper there at that time; but surely when I was apprehended, I had not so much as one penny to help my self with, for we had been long unpaid: furthermore I thought in that Town of War, that there were very few or none that favoured the Word of God, for I looked for no help there, but to be hated and despised of all Men there: for I knew not past two or three there that had any love to the Gospel till I was in Prison, and then there came very many Soldiers unto me that I never knew before, and gave me Money, so that I had as good as three Pound given me in a small time that I was in Prison. The 14 day of May toward night, I was sent into England, one Mr. Messinger and one other man brought me to London even the same day, being Sunday at Night and the 15th day of May. There was a great talk over all the City of one Doctor Smith that recanted that day, they brought me to the Marshalsea and there left me, I hearing no more of them that brought me thither: but Mr. Huntington as a faithful Minister of Jesus Christ, that gave me warning before of all this trouble, came from Bulloyn to London, causing my Articles to be sent, so that by his painful diligence to the Council for me, after that I had been there little more than one month, I was discharged out of Prison, and bid get me home to Bulloyn to my Living again.

But surely if I had not appealed to the Council of England, I had been burned in Bulloyn; for it was told me of them that knew much in that matter, that it was already determined shortly to have been accomplished, if I had not appealed: for the which deliverance I give praise to the Everliving God.

This was laid in Queen Maries Closet upon her Desk, against her coming unto her Prayers.

O Lovesom Rose most redolent,
Of fading Flowers most fresh;
In England pleasant is thy scent,
For now thou art Peeries.

1558.

This Rose which beareth such a smell,
Doth represent our Queen:
O listen, that I may you tell
Her colours fresh and green.

The Love of God within her heart,
Shall beautifie her Grace:
The fear of God on the other part,
Shall stablish her in place.

This Love and Fear her Colours are,
Whereby if she be known;
She may compare both nigh and far,
Unable to be overthrowen.

The Love of God it will her cause, Unfained if it be,
To have respect unto his Lawe,
And hate Idolatry.

If that she have the Fear of God,
And be thereto right bent:
She will do that he her bode,
And not her own intent.

O Noble Queen take heed, take heed,
Beware of your own intent:
Look ere you leap, then shall you speed,
Haste maketh many hent.

Remember Saul that Noble King,
What shame did him befall:
Because that unto the Lords bidding
He had no lust at all.

The Lord hath bid you shall love him,
And other gods desite:
Alas take heed, do not begin To place Idolatry.

What greater Disobedience
Against God may be wrought,
Than this; To move mens Conscience
To worship things of nought?

What greater folly can you invent
Than such men to obey?
How can you serve your own intent
Not foreseing your own decay?

And whereas first ye should maintain
Your Realm in perfect Unity:
To rent the Peoples hearts in twain
Through false Idolatry.

Is this the way to get you fame,
Is this to get you love?
Is this to purchase you a Name,
To fight with God above?

Is this your care to set up Mass,
Your Subjects Soules to stroy?
Is this your study no more to ease,
Gods People to annoy?

Is this to Reign, to serve your will,
Good Men in Bonds to keep;
And to exalt such as be evil,
And for your Grace unmet?

Such as made that fond Divorce,
Your Mother to deface;
Are nigbest you in power and force,
And most bounden unto your Grace.
Well, yet take heed of bad-Lawis,
Let Gods Word bear the Bell:
If you will reign, learn to know Christ,
As David doth you tell.

What great presumption doth appear,
Thus in a week or twain;
To work more shame than in seven years
Can be redrest again?

All is done without a Law,
For will doth work in place:
And thus all Men may see and know
The weakness of your cause.

That miserable marking Mass,
Which all good Men do hate;
Is now by you brought up again,
The root of all Debate.

Your Ministers that love Gods Word,
They feel this bitter Red;
Who are robbed from house and goods,
As though there were no God.

And yet you would seem merciful

In the midst of Tyranny,
And holy, whereas you maintain
Most vile Idolatry.

For fear that you should hear the Truth,
True Preachers may not speak;
But on good Prophets you make ruth,
And unkindly them intreat.

Him have you made Lord Chancellor,
Who did your Blood most stain:
That he may suck the Righteous blood,
As he was wont again.

Those whom our late King did love,
You do them most disdain:
These things do manifestly prove
Your colours to be but vaine.

Gods Word you cannot abide,
But as your Prophets tell:
In this you may be well compared To wicked Isebel.

Who had 400 Prophets false,
And fifty on a rout:
Through whose false preaching poor Ely
Was chased in and out.

Gods Prophets you do evil-intreat,
Balls Priests defend your Grace:
Thus did the Jews put Christ to death,
And let go Barrabas.

Hath God thus high exalted you,
And set you on a Throne:
That you should prison and deface
His flock that maketh moan?

The Lord which doth his flock defend,
As the Apple of an eye;
Of this fall quickly will make an end,
And bewitch Cruelty.

Therefore my counsel pray you take,
And think thereof no scorn:
You shall find it the best counsel,
It had since you were born.

Put away blind affection,
Let Gods Word be Umpire.
To try our true Religion,
From this evil-favoured gear.

The Instruction of King Edward the Sixth, given to Sir Anthony Seyntleger, Knight of his Privy-Chamber; being of a corrupt Judgment of the Eucharist. Upon this saying of an ancient Doctor of the Catholick Church.

Dicimus Eucharistiam Panem vocari in Scri-pturis, Panis in quo gratia actus sunt, &c.

IN Eucharist then there is Bread,
Whereunto I do consent:
Then with Bread are our Bodies fed,
And farther what is meant?

I say that Christ in Flesh and Blood
Is there continually,
Unto our Soul a special food,
Taking it spiritually.

And this Transubstantiation I Believe as I have read:
That Christ Sacramentally
Is there in form of Bread.

St. Austin saith, the Word doth come Unto the Element:
And there is made, be saith in sum,
A perfect Sacrament.

The Element doth then remain,
Or else must needs ensue:
St. Austins words be nothing plain,
Nor cannot be found true.

For if the Word, as he doth say,
Come to the Element:
Then is not the Element away,
But bides there everment.

Yet whose eateth that lively food,
And hath a perfect Faith,
Receiveth Christ: Flesh and Blood,
For Christ himself so saith.

Anno
1558.

Not with our Teeth his Flesh to tear,
Nor take Blood for our drink:
Too great an absurdity it were,
So grossly for to think.

For we must eat him spiritually,
If we be spiritual:
And who eats him carnally,
Thereby shall have a fall.

For he is now a Spiritual meat,
And spiritually we must
That Spiritual meat spiritually eat,
And leave our Carnal lust.

Thus by the Spirit, I spiritually
Believe, say what men list,
None other Transubstantiation I Believe of the Eucharist.

But that there is both Bread and Wine,
Which we see with our eye;
Yet Christ is there by power Divine
To those that spiritually

Do eat that Bread and drink that Cup, Effecting it but light;
As Judas did, which eat that Sop,
Not judging it aright.

For I was taught not long ago,
I should lean to the Spirit:
And let the Carnal flesh alone,
For it doth not profit.

God save him that teaching me taught,
For I thereby did win,
To put from me that Carnal thought,
That I before was in.

For I believe Christ Corporally
In Heaven doth keep his place:
And yet Christ Sacramentally
Is here with us by Grace.

So that in this high Mystery
We must eat Spiritual meat,
To keep his Death in Memory,
Lest we should it forget.

This do, I say, this have I said,
This Saying say will I:
This Saying though I once denaid,
I will no more to die.

This young Prince became a perfect School-Master unto old erroneous Men, so as no Divine could amend him, and therefore this piece is worthy of perpetual memory to his immortal fame and glory.

When Queen Mary came to her reign, a Friend of Mr. Sentiger, charged him with this his Pamphlet.
Well, quoth he, content your self. I perceive that a Man may have too much of Gods Blessing. And even here Peter began to deny Christ, such is mens frailty.

Christi Electis salutem, Etdr. A.

Hoc seculum fecit Alissimus propter multos; futurum autem propter paucos.

The Almighty Lord hath made this World for many, but the World or life to come but for a few.

Most certain it is, dearly Beloved, that Christs Elect be but few in comparison of that great number which go in the broad way into everlasting perdition, which live after the flesh, loving this present evil world, deny God in word and deed, whose eyes are blinded, and their hearts hardened.

Molt certain it is also, that our Saviour Jesus Christ hath and knoweth his own, whose Names are written in the Book of Life, redeemed with the most precious Blood of our Saviour Jesus Christ. So that the eternal Father knoweth them that be his.

The Almighty and Eternal God grant, that we may have the testimony of our Conscience, and the Spirit of God to bear record with our Spirits, that we be his elect Children, walking in the Spirit, not fulfilling the lusts of the flesh, but as Christs Members, having Christ Jesus fixed before our eyes, he being to us the true Way, the infallible Verity, and the eternal Life. Christ hath given us example, let us follow him as dear Children, for Gods delight is to behold his Saints which be in the Earth. Let us put on the whole Armour of God, and walk in the light in these evil days, in the which Satan in his Angels seeketh whom he may devour. The Almighty Lord deliver us from the mouths of those un-flamefast Dogs. They truly seek ours, and not us unto the Lord. Edras faith and writeth truly, The World is made for them, and they for the World. Dearly bought, let us remember Christ which faith, I have chosen you out of the world, you shall be hated of all worldly Men.
Did ever the Covetous, Idolaters, Oppressors, or Whoremongers love us? Nay, they love Masi-mongers, which say, Peace, peace, when there is no peace. Nay, either they flatter the ears, or else they say nothing, as dumb Dogs not able to bark, of whom be you ware; for though they come in Sheeps clothing, they be ravening Wolves, whose damnation sleepeth not, from whose captivity the holy will of God save and preserve you,
Amen.

Dearly Beloved, we having the record of our Confidence, that we be very Members in Christs Body, separate from that malignant Antichrists Church: Let us rejoyce in Conscience, and in the Lord, having heavenly hope in all his Promises, which be eternal and most sure to us in Christ our Saviour, who lovesth none of all them, whom the Eternal Father hath given him, but at his appearing to be our merciful Judge, shall raise us up at the last day; for the Trumpet of God shall blow, and be heard of all Adams Posterity, founding, Venite ad Judicium, Come unto Judgment, come and be judged.

Let us therefore be prepared, having the wedding Garment, yea, the whole Armour of God, the marriage Garment, clear Lamps, that is, pure hearts, and burning heavenly light in the same. Let us prepare our selves richly to restore to our Lord and Master our Talents, with the increase of heavenly living and occupying;
then without all doubt, we shall hear that most blessed with of our alone Saviour Jesus Christ, who shall then say, Rejoyce good Servants, I will make you Stewards over many things: Enter into the everlasting Rest and Kingdom, which hath been prepared for you from the beginning. This is the Kingdom of Jesus Christ, which at this present is in Babylon, and banished to the Desert, the troublefom Waters of Satan in the Antichrist and his Shavelings, spewed out of Christs mouth. The Lord be our aid, avenger and deliverer when his holy will is,
Amen.

Dearly bought with the most precious Blood of our Saviour Jesus Christ, that we be not deceived by the Antichrist; let us ponder, weigh, mark and study the heavenly Doctrine of our Saviour Christ in his last Supper: the Text is, Benedixit, dixit hunc, gratias egit;
he spake heavenly and well, he gave thanks, he took Bread, brake it and gave it to his Disciples, saying, Take, eat this Sacramental Bread, and me the Bread of Life which came down from Heaven, which giveth life to the World; take true Faith, heavenly Hope kindled with Christian Charity, thanksgiving for my death; Let these heavenly Vertues enter into your Souls, then enter I. This is my Body: This is the true eating of my Body, which is given to the death of the Cross, for the ransom and sins of Gods Elect. Likewise after Supper he took the Cup, he spake well, gave thanks, and gave it them, saying, Drink ye all of this: drink, I say, by this infallible Verity and everlasting Word joynd and annexed with this Cup, my Blood which is shed from before the beginning of the World, for many, in remission of sins: he or the that thus dwelleth in me, and I in him, eateth my flesh and drinketh my Blood. St. Augustine faith, Why preparest thou thy Tooth and Belly? believe and thou hast eaten. St. Bernard faith, When Faith, Hope, Christian Love, and thanksgiving for Christs death enter into a Christian, Christ entereth.

And again St. Augustine ſaith upon theſe words of Chriſt
You ſhall always have the poor with you, but me ſhall ye not have always with you: The Church had him but a few days touching his humanity, now they have him by Faith, with theſe eyes they do not ſee him. O Jeſus Chriſt thou Son of the living God, which art in the boſom of thy Father, God with God, the very image of God the Father Eternal, give us victory over this Antichriſt in thy moſt precious Blood. Be faithful to the end, and our Saviour ſhall crown us in glory; let us ſanctifie the Name of God in thought, word and deed.

*I ſay unto the Popiſh, and will not flatter,
Our God is in Heaven whom they will not ſee:
And is no ſuch little pretty matter,
As their god the Pope ſaith him to be.
Pray for all the Preachers of the Verity,
That God may give us grace and conſtancy.
They ſing and ſay, they have him in a ſtring:
Tye not the Dog ſo, for fear of hanging.
To all the Faithful, whoſe Names in general,
In the Book of Life, by Chriſt are written all.
The godly thought and patient mind,
Doth liberty in Priſon find.
Whoſe to patience can attain,
Shall find in Priſon is no pain.
Thralldom, trouble, bound or free,
As pleaſeth God, ſo ſhall all be.
Wherefore I never will forſake
What pleaſeth God lay on my back.*

John Melvin, Preacher and Priſoner in Newgate.

A Note concerning the Trouble of Julius Palmer, lately come to my hands.

To his aſſured Friend and Brother in Chriſt, Mr. Perry, Preacher at Beverſtone, greets theſe.

MAfter Perry, after my hearty Commendations in the Lord Jeſus Chriſt unto you and your Wife, &c.
whereas you have written unto me for my help in ſtopping the malicious and envious mouth of Thomas Thack-am, I would be as glad as any man to teſtifie the Truth, both for that I know of the ſhameleſs malice of the ſaid party againſt the Members of Chriſt, as alſo the godly and virtuous behaviour of Palmer both before he was in Priſon, and after in Priſon, with the credit of that good and godly work of that Hiſtory: but ſurely many things are out of my head, which I cannot as yet remember. And for thoſe things I know, I write unto you. And fiſt as touching the friendſhip ſhewed unto the Lady Vane, and his zeal therein uttered, truth it is that he received her into his houſe for Money for a ſmall ſpace, in the which time they two did not well agree, for that ſhe could not ſuffer his wickedneſs of words and geſtures unreproved, but that his Wife many times, being of more honeſty, made the matter well again: but to be ſhort, ſuch was his friendſhip in the end towards that good Lady, being out of his houſe, that he feared no man more for her life than him. And I being her Man, ſhe gave me great charge always to beware of him. As touching his friendſhip towards John Bolton in Priſon, I am ſure he never found any, as they that uſed to viſit him can ſomewhat ſay: Except you account this friendſhip, that he being bereft of his ſenſes, Thackam wrought him to yield unto the Popiſts, and as a right Member of them became his Surety that he ſhould be obedient unto them. And he being burdened in Conſcience therewith, fled away unto Geneva: for the which flying Thackam had nothing ſaid unto him, which ſheweth that he was their Inſtrument. And this friendſhip to John Bolton:
for Downer, I have heard no evil of him; for Gaſelyand Radley now Vicar of St. Lawrence, and Bowyer a Tanner, they three left no means unpractiſed to catch and perſecute the Members of Chriſt, as I my ſelf can well prove. As touching Palmer, for that I many times frequented his company in his Lodging, he would utter ſometimes unto me the grief of his mind. Among other things once he told me, that for that he heard he was ſomewhat ſuſpected with the Woman of the houſe, he was much grieved withal, the which he uttered with many tears, I then counſelling him to depart thence to avoid the occaſion of offence, he ſaid no, but the Lord ſhould try him ere it were long: for, ſaid he, Thackam hath let me his School, and now would have it again, and becauſe I will not let him have it this he hath brought upon me, but God forgive him. Afterward being in Priſon, I talking with him at the Grate, he ſhewed me his Judgment of the Scriptures, and delivered it unto me, what became of it I know not now. He praiſed God highly for his eſtate, and then he ſaid he truſted it would appear whether Thackam had ſaid of him well or not.

And further he ſaid, that now Thackam hath his will to have his School again: for if I would have yielded up the School, he would have ſent me away. I never truſted him ſo well, ſaid he, to communicate my mind unto him before witneſs, but ſometimes alone, and therefore he hath deſired a Letter in my Name, and brought it to light, to cauſe me to be examined of my Conſcience. This is as much as I can ſay at this time. Thus fare you well in the Lord, Amen. From Croſſy this 18. of May.

A Note of Julius Palmer.

ALſo being at Magdalen Colledge about a Month before he was burned, and reaſoning againſt one Barwick Maſter of Art, ſometime his familiar Friend and old Acquaintance in the ſaid Colledge; after much talk Barwick ſaid unto him, Well Palmer, now thou talkeſt boldly and ſtoutly at thy pleaſure; If thou wert brought to a Stake, thou wouldeſt tell me another tale. Take heed, it is an hard matter to burn. Hereunto Palmer answered, Indeed it is a hard matter for him to burn that hath his Soul linked to his Body, as a Thieft Foot is tied in a pair of Fetters. But if a man be once able, through Gods help, to ſeparate and divide the Soul from the Body, for him it is no harder thing to burn, than for me to eat this Crumb of Bread.

A true Copy of the Confession of Patrick Patingham, ſent out of Newgate to certain of his Friends.

I Patrick Patingham, being condemned for the Verity of Gods Truth, that is to ſay, in conſiſſing of one God, which was the Creator of all things viſible and inviſible, and alſo that he made thoſe by his Son, whom he hath made heir of all things. And alſo I confeſs, that he is the only begotten Son of God, in whom we have redemption, even the forgiveness of ſins. And alſo in confeſſing Gods moſt holy Church, being builded upon the foundation of the Apoſtles and Prophets, Chriſt Jeſus being the Head Corner ſtone. In whom, ſaith St. Paul, every building coupled together groweth to an holy Temple in the Lord, in whom I believe I am builded together as a Member, and made an habitation for God in the Spirit.
And alſo I confeſs, that Chriſt is the Head of the Holy Church, as St. Paul ſaith, and that God is Chriſts Head.

And alſo I had ten Articles, that is to ſay, againſt their wicked Traditions and Commandments which they uſe, which are againſt the Commandments of God, whereof they did condemn me, not ſuffering me to ſpeak in the Conſultory-houſe, but condemning me, my cauſe not heard. But yet I did proteſt unto them, that their Church or Synagogue is of Satan, that is to ſay, Satan being the Head thereof: Furthermore, my Friend or Friends unknown, I have received your Letter, and read it over, wherein you ſay that I am in a blaſphe-mous Error. Indeed Friends I confeſs, that it is an Error; If you will make my belief, that is to ſay, that Chriſt is the Son of the Living God to be an Error, and to believe that there is one God, as St. Paul ſaith, and one Mediator betwixt God and Man, even the Man Chriſt Jeſus. And although there be that are called Gods, whether in Heaven or in Earth, as there be Gods many, and Lords many, yet unto us there is but one God, which is the Father, of whom are all things, and we in him, and one Lord Jeſus Chriſt, by whom are all things,

1558.

Anno 1558. things, and we by him. I believe that there is but one Lord, one Faith, one Baptism, and one God in all, and above all, and through all, which only God, as Saint Paul faith, worketh in all Creatures that believe in him, and speaketh in them, as St. Paul faith; God in times past diversely and many ways spake unto the Fathers by Prophets, but in these last days he spake unto us by his Son, whom he hath made heir of all things. My Friend or friends, be it known unto you, that this is no error, as ye suppose, but it is the Truth of Gods will, that we should believe, as St. John faith; That Christ Jesus is the Son of the living God and in so believing we should have everlasting life. Thus with love I write unto you, praying God night and day to deliver you from evil which is in you, and to keep you from it. Wherefore my Friend or Friends, you are not crucified with Christ, you are not dead with him in Baptism, nor do you know God, or his Son whom he hath sent, or his commandments which he hath commanded and yet will ye reach other, with most hearty Prayer praying to God for you continually.

Patrick Patingham.

A note of a certain Letter of William Tyms.

Race, mercy, and peace from God the Father, through the mercies of his dear Son Jesus Christ, our Lord and only Saviour, with the comfort of his holy Spirit, that as you have full godly begun, even so you may continue to the end, to the Glory of God, and your everlasting comfort, which thing to do I pray God to give you grace, who is the giver of all good and perfect gifts to the glory of his holy name, Amen.

My dear Sisters, after most hearty commendations unto you, and also most hearty thanks-giving unto you for all the great kindness that you have always shewed unto me most unworthy of the same: I certify you that I am very glad to hear of your good health, which I pray God long to continue to his glory. And especially I do much rejoice in your most godly Constancy in the Gospel of Christ, which is the Power of God unto Salvation, unto so many as believe it. Therefore (my dear hearts) go forward as you have godly begun: for the time will come that these cruel Tyrants, which now so cruelly persecute the true Members of Christ, shall say for very anguish of mind; These are they whom we sometime had in derision, and jested upon. We foolish thought their life to have been very madness, and their end to have been without honour: But lo how they are counted among the Children of God, and their Portion is amongst the Saints. Therefore we have erred from the way of Truth. The light of righteousness hath not shined unto us, and the Sun of understanding rose not upon us. We have wearied our selves in the way of wickedness and destruction. Tedious ways have we gone, but as for the way of the Lord we have not known it. What good hath our pride done unto us? or what profit hath the Pomp of Riches brought us? All these things have passed away as a shadow, or as a messenger running before: As a Ship that passeth over the Waves of the Water, which when it is gone, by the Trace thereof cannot be found, neither the path it the floods, &c. For as soon as we were born, we began inordinately to draw to our end, and have shewed no token of virtue, but are consumed in our own wickedness. Such words shall they that thus have sinned speak in the hell, &c. But the righteous shall live for evermore, their reward is also with the Lord, and remembrance with the Highest: therefore shall they receive a glorious Kingdom, and a beautiful Crown at the Lords hands; for with his right hand shall he cover them, and with his holy Arm shall he defend them &c. The Souls of the righteous are in the hands of God, and the pains of death shall not touch them, but in the sight of the unwise they appear to die, and their end is taken for very destruction, but they are in rest. And though they suffer pain before men, yet is their hope full of immortality. They are punished but in few things, nevertheless in many things shall they be well rewarded: for God proveth them, and findeth them meet for himself:

yes, as the gold in the Furnace doth he trie them, and receiveth them as a burnt offering; and when the time cometh, they shall be looked upon, the righteous shall shine as the sparks that run through the red Bush, they shall judge the Nations, and have dominion over the Peoples, and their Lord shall Reign for ever. They that put their trust in him shall understand the Truth, and such as be faithful will agree unto him in love, and he shall be a Pillar in the Temple of God, and shall no more go out, and there shall be written upon him the name of God. And they shall lie under the Altar (which is Christ) crying with a loud voice, saying: How long tarriest thou Lord, holy and true to judge and avenge our Blood on them that dwell on the earth? and they shall have long white Garments given unto them, and it shall be said unto them, that they should rest yet for a little season, till the number of their fellows and Brethren of them, that should be killed as they were, were fulfilled. For as St. John faith, they are worthy that thus overcome, to be clothed in white Array, and their names shall not be put out of the Book of life, but shall be separated from the Goats and set on Christs right hand, hearing his sweet and comfortable voice, when he shall say; Come ye blessed of my Father, and possess the Kingdom prepared for you from the beginning of the World: And the very ready way to obtain the same, is, as our Master Christ faith, to forsake our selves, taking up our Cross, following our Master Christ, which for the joy that was set before him abode the Cross, and despised the shame, and is set down on the Throne at the right hand of God: therefore let us follow his example in suffering for his Word, seeing that he of his merciful goodness suffered so much for us when we were his enemies: for it was our sin that killed Christ, and he by his death hath made us alive. Therefore with joy (seeing all these his merciful benefits purchased for us only by his death and blood-shedding) let us with boldness confess his holy Word before this wicked generation, even to death, when we be called thereto, and to be well assured, that our lives be not in the hands of men, but in Gods hands. Therefore (my dear Sisters) as you have godly begun, so go forward even through many Tribulations, even into the everlasting Kingdom of Heaven. To the which, God the Father of all mercy, for his dear Son Christs sake, bring both you and all yours, Amen.

Towrs to command, to my poor Powers,
William Tyms.

Another Sermon of Master Latimer concerning his playing as Cards

Now you have heard what is meant by this first Card, and how you ought to play with it, I purpose again to deal unto you another Card, almost of the same sute; for they be of so nigh affinity, that one cannot be well played without the other. The first Card declared, that you should not kill, which might be divers ways, as being angry with your Neighbour, in mind, in countenance, in word, or deed. It declared also how you should subdue the passions of Ire, and so cleave more your selves from them: and where this Card doth kill in you these stubborn Turks of Ire; this second Card will not only they should be mortified in you, but that you your selves shall cause them to be likewise mortified in your Neighbour, if that your said Neighbour hath been through your occasion moved unto Ire, either in countenance, word, or deed. Now let us hear therefore the Tenour of this Card.

When thou makest thine oblation at mine Altar; and there dost remember that they Neighbour hath any thing against thee, lay down there thy oblation, and go first and reconcile thy Neighbour, and then come and offer thy oblation. This Card was spoken by Christ, as testifieth St. Mark in his fifth Chapter, against all such as do perfume to come unto the Church to make oblation oblation unto God either by Prayer, or any other deed of Charity, not having their Neighbours reconciled. Reconciling is as much to say, as to restore thy Neighbour unto Charity, which by thy words or deeds is moved against thee: when if so be it that thou hast spoken to, or by thy Neighbour, whereby he is moved to ire or wrath, thou must lay down thy Oblation. Oblations be prayers, alms-deeds, or any work of Charity; these be called oblations to God. Lay down therefore thine oblation, begin to do none of these foresaid works before thou goest unto thy Neighbour, and confess thy fault unto him, declaring thy mind, that if thou hast offended him, thou art glad and willing to make him amends, as farre forth as thy words and substance will extend, requiring him not to take it at the worst. Thou art sorry in thy mind, that thou shouldest be occasion of his offending. What manner of Card is this will some say? Why? What have I to do with my Neighbours or Brothers malice? As Cain said; Have I the keeping of my Brother, or shall I answer for him and for his faults? This were no reason: As for my self, I thank God I own no man malice nor displeasure, if other own me any, at their own peril be it. Let every man answer for himself. Nay Sir, not so, as you may understand by this Card: for it saith; If thy Neighbour hath any thing, any malice against thee, through thine occasion, lay even down, faith Christ, thine oblation; Pray not to me, do no good deeds for me, but go first unto thy Neighbour, and bring him again unto my flock, which hath forsaken the same through thy naughty words, mocks, scorns, or disdainous Countenance, and so forth: and then come and offer thine oblation, then do thy devotion, then do thy alms-deeds, then pray, if thou wilt have me hear thee. O good Lord, this is an hard reckoning, that I must go and seek him out that is offended with me, before I pray or do any good deed. I cannot go unto him. Peradventure he is an hundred miles from me, beyond the seas, or else I cannot tell where; if he were here nigh, I would with all my heart go unto him. This is a lawful excuse before God on this fashion, That thou wouldest in thy heart be glad to reconcile thy Neighbour, if he were present, and that thou thinkest in thy heart, whensoever thou shalt meet with him, to go unto him, and require him charitably to forgive thee, and so never intend to come from him, until the time that you both depart one from the other true Brethren in Christ. Yet peradventure there be some in the world that be so devilish and so hard-hearted, that they will not apply in any condition unto Charity. For all that, do that lieth in thee by all charitable means to bring him to unity: If he will in no wise apply thereunto, thou mayst be sorrowful in thy heart, that by thine occasion that man or woman continueth in such a damnable state: this notwithstanding, if thou do the best that lieth in thee to reconcile him, according to some Doctors mind, thou art discharged towards God. Nevertheless, St. Augustin doubteth in this case, whether thy oblations, prayers, or good deeds, shall avail thee before God, or no, until thy Neighbour come again to good state, whom thou hast brought out of the way. Doth this Noble Doctor doubt therein? what aileth us to be so bold and count it but a small fault or none, to bring another man out of patience for every trifle that standeth not with our mind? You may see what a grievous thing this is to bring another man out of patience, that peradventure you cannot bring in again with all the goods that you have: for surely after the opinion of great wise men, friendship once broken will be never well made whole again. Wherefore you shall hear what Christ saith unto such persons; Saith Christ, I came down into this world, and so took on mee bitter passion for mans sake, by the merits whereof I intended to make unity and peace in mankind, to make man Brother unto me, and so to expel the dominion of Satan the Devil, which worketh nothing else but dissention: and yet now there be a great number of you that have professed my name, and say you be Christian men, which do rebel against my purpose and mind. I go about to make my fold; you go about to break the same, and kill my flock. How darest thou (saith Christ) presume to come unto my Altar, unto my Church, or into my presence, to make oblation unto me, that takest on thee to spoil my Lambs? I go about like a good Shephard to gather them together: and thou dost the contrary, evermore ready to divide and lose them. Who made thee so bold to meddle with my silly beasts, which I bought so dearly with my precious Blood? I warn thee out of my sight, come not in my Presence, I refuse thee and all thy works, except thou go and bring home again my Lambs which thou hast lost: wherefore, if thou thy self intend to be one of mine, lay even down by and by thine Oblation, and come no further toward mine Altar, but go and seek them without any questions, as it becometh a true and faithful servant. A true and faithful servant, whensoever his Master commandeth him to do any thing, he maketh no stops nor questions, but goeth forth with a good mind: and it is not unlike he continuing in such a good mind and will, shall well overcome all dangers and stops whatsoever betides him in his journey, and bring to pass effectually his Masters will and pleasure. In the contrary, a foolish servant, when his Master commandeth him to do any thing, by and by he will ask questions, where, when, which way, and so forth, and he putteth every thing in doubt, that although both his errand and way be never so plain, yet by his untoward and foolish behaviour, his Masters commandment is either undone quite, or else so done, that it shall stand to no good purpose. Go now forth with the good servant, and ask no such questions, and put no doubts, be not ashamed to do thy Masters and Lords will and commandment. Go, as I said, unto thy Neighbour that is offended by thee, and reconcile him (as is aforesaid) whom thou hast lost by thy unkind words, by thy scorns, mocks, and other disdainous words and behaviours, and be not nice to ask of him the cause why he is displeased with thee, require of him Charitably to remit, and cease not till you both depart one from the other true Brethren in Christ. Do not like the foolish servant thy Masters message with cautions and doubts; come not to thy Neighbour whom thou hast offended, and give him a pennyworth of ale, or a banquet, and so make him a fair Countenance, thinking that by thy drink or dinner he will shew thee like Countenance. I grant you may both laugh and make good cheer, and yet there may remain a bag of rusty malice, twenty year old, in thy Neighbours Bosom; when he departeth from thee with a good Countenance, thou thinkest all is well then. But now I tell thee it is worse then it was, for by such cloaked Charity, where thou dost offend before Christ but once, thou hast offended twice herein: for now thou goest about to give Christ a mock, if he would take it of thee: Thou thinkest to blind thy Master Christs commandment. Beware, do not so, for at length he will overmatch thee, and take thee tardy whatsoever thou be, and so as I said, it should be better for thee not to do his message on this fashion, for it will stand thee in no purpose. What? some will say, I am sure he loveth me well enough. He speaketh fair to my face, yet for all that thou maiest be deceived. It proveth not true love in a man to speak fair. If he love thee with his mind and heart, he loveth thee with his eyes, with his tongue, with his feet, with his hands and his Body; for all these parts of a mans Body be obedient to the will and mind. He loveth thee with his eyes that looketh cheerfully on thee, when thou meetest with him, and is glad to see thee prosper and do well. He loveth thee with his tongue, that speaketh well by thee behind thy back, or giveth thee good Counsel. He loveth thee with his feet, that is willing to go to help thee out of trouble and busines. He loveth thee with his hands, that will help thee in time of necessity, by giving some alms-deeds, or with any other occupation of the hand. He loveth thee with his Body, that will labour with his Body, or put his Body in danger to do good for thee, or to deliver thee from adversity, and so forth, with the other members of his Body. And if thy Neighbour will do according to these sayings, then thou maiest think that he loveth thee well, and thou in like wise oughtest to declare and open thy love unto thy Neighbour in like fashion, or else you be bound one to reconcile the other, till this perfect love be ingendered amongst you. It may fortune thou wilt say, I am content to do the best for my Neighbour that I can saving my self harmless. I promise thee Christ will not hear this excuse; for he himself suffered harm for our

Anno 1558. our fakes, and for our Salvation was put to extreme death. I wis if it had pleased him, he might have saved us and never felt pain; but in suffering pains and death, he did give us example and teach us how we should do one for another, as he did for us all. For, as he saith himself, he that will be mine, let him deny himself, and follow me in bearing my Cross and suffering my pains. Wherefore we must needs suffer pain with Christ to do our Neighbour good, as well with the Body and all his members, as with heart and mind.

Now I trust you wot what your Card meaneth, let us see how that we can play with the same. Whensoever it shall happen you to go and make your Oblation unto God, ask of your selves this question, Who art thou? the answer as you know is, I am a Christian man. Then you must again ask unto your self, What Christ requirith of a Christian man? by and by cast down your trump, your hearty, and look first of one Card, then of another. The first Card telleth thee thou shalt not kill, thou shalt not be angry, thou shalt not be out of patience. This done, thou shalt look if there be any more Cards to take up, and if thou look well, thou shalt see another Card of the same fute, wherein thou shalt know that thou art bound to Reconcile thy Neighbour. Then cast thy trump upon them both, and gather them all three together, and do according to the vertue of thy Cards, and surely thou shalt not lose. Thou shalt first kill the great Turks, and discomfit and thrust them down. Thou shalt again fetch home Christs Sheep that thou hast lost, whereby thou maist go both patiently, and with a quiet mind unto the Church, and make thy Oblation unto God, and then without doubt he will hear thee. But yet Christ will not accept our Oblation (although we be in patience, and have reconciled our Neighbour) if that our Oblation be made of another mans substance, but it must be our own. See therefore that thou hast gotten thy goods according to the Laws of God and of thy Prince. For if thou givest thy goods by polling and extortion, or by any other unlawful ways, then if thou offer a thousand pound of it, it will stand thee in no good effect, for it is not thine. In this point a great number of executors do offend, for when they be made rich by other mens goods, then they will take upon them to build Churches, to give Ornaments to God and his Altar, to gild Saints, and to do many good works therewith; but it shall be all in their own name, and for their own glory. Wherefore (saith Christ) they have in this world their reward, and so their Oblations be not their own, nor bethey acceptable before God. Another way God will refuse thy voluntary Oblation, as thus: If so be it, that thou hast gotten never so truly thy goods, according both to the Laws of God and man, and hast with the same goods not relieved thy Poor Neighbour, when thou hast seen him hungry thirsty, and naked, he will not take thy Oblation when thou shalt offer the same, because he will say unto thee: When I was hungry, thou gavest me no meat; when I was thirsty, thou gavest me no drink; and when I was naked thou didst not cloath me. Wherefore I will not take thy Oblation, because it is none of thine. I left it thee to relieve thy Poor Neighbours, and thou hast not therein done according unto this my commandment; Misericordiam volo, & non sacrificium, I had rather have mercy done, than Sacrifice or Oblation. Wherefore until thou doest the one more than the other, I will not accept thine Oblation. Evermore bestow the greatest part of thy goods in works of mercy, and the less part in voluntary works. Voluntary works be called all manner of offering in the Church, except your four offering days, and your tithes; setting up candles, gilding and painting, building of Churches, giving of Ornaments, going on Pilgrimages, making of High-ways, and such other, be called voluntary works, which works be of themselves marvelous good, and convenient to be done. Necessary works, and works of mercy are called the commandments, the four offering days, your tithes, and such other that be long to the commandments; and works of mercy consist in relieving and visiting thy Poor Neighbours. Now then, if men be so foolish of themselves, that they will bestow the most part of their goods in voluntary works, which they be not bound to keep, but willingly and by their devotion; and leave the necessary works undone; which they are bound to do; they and all their voluntary works are like to go unto everlasting damnation. And I promise you, if you build an hundred Churches, give as much as you can make to gilding of Saints, and honouring of the Church, and if thou go as many Pilgrimages as thy Body can well suffer, and offer as great Candles as Oaks, if thou leavest the works of mercy and the commandments undone, these works shall nothing avail thee. No doubt the voluntary works be good, and ought to be done; but yet they must be so done, that by their occasion the necessary works, and the works of mercy be not decayed and forgotten: If you will build a glorious Church unto God, see first your selves to be in Charity with your Neighbours, and suffer not them to be offended by your works. Then when ye come into your Parish Church, you bring with you the Holy Temple of God; as St. Paul saith, you your selves be the very Holy Temples of God: And Christ saith by his Prophet; In you will I rest, and intend to make my mansion and abiding place: Again, if ye lift to gild and paint Christ in your Churches, and honour him in vestiments, see that before your eyes the poor people die not for lack of meat, drink, and clothing. Then do you deck the very true Temple of God, and honour him in rich vestures, that will never be worn, and so forth use your selves according unto the commandments; and then finally fit up your Candles, and they will report what a glorious light remaineth in your hearts, for it is not fitting to set a dead man light Candles. Then, I say, go your Pilgrimages, build your material Churches, do all your voluntary works, and they will then represent you unto God, and testify with you, that you have provided him a glorious place in your hearts. But beware I say again, that you do not run so far in your voluntary works, that ye do quite forget your necessary works of mercy, which you are bound to keep: you must have ever a good respect unto the best and worthiest works toward God, to be done first and with more efficacy, and the other to be done secondarily. Thus if you do with the other that I have spoken of before, ye may come according to the tenor of your Cards, and offer your Oblations and Prayers to our Lord Jesus Christ, who will both hear and accept them to your everlasting joy and glory, to the which he bring us, and all those whom hee suffered death for, Amen.

A Note of William Gie.

One William Gie, Servant with Master Revet Merchant, brought a Bible and Service Book of Richard Waterston, who then dwelt with Master Duxlie in Pauls Church-yard, and one Spilman bound the Book: and when the said Gie, had inquired for the said Richard to have his Book at Duxlies, answer was made that he was not within, and so the said Gie went his way to Spilman for the Book; and because he found it not done, he left it there, and immediately search was made in Spilmans house, and the said Bible and Service Book was found and carried to Bener then Bishop of London. He having the Books, commanded Spilman for the binding thereof to Lellard's Tower; and as Cluny went for the key thereof Spilman conveyed himself away. After that, Waterston and Gie being apprehended by Robin Calie, John Hills, and John Avaler, and being two days in the Counter, were brought before Bener and other Commissioners. Being examined, Doctor Story demanded Gie; Wherefore, he brought the Bible? He answered, to serve God withal. Then said Bener; Our Lady Mattins would serve a Christian man to serve God. The Bible, said Story, would breed Heresies; a Bible Bable were more fit for thee. So they concluded that either of them should have forty stripes lacking one, and Bener said it was the law. And they said to Waterston, if he would pay forty pound, he should be released of his stripes: at length they came to 10. pound, and when they saw he would not, they made a Warrant to Master Grafton, and sent Waterston and Gie to Bridewell to be beaten upon the Cross. And because the matter should not be slightly handled, Story was sent with them to see it done. Gie being whipped upon the Cross, intercession was made that he might be forgiven part of his penance.

A Note

A Note of Michaels Wife.

Michaels Wife aforementioned, being Prisoner in Ipswich for Religion, resorted daily from the Prison to her Husbands house, and returned again, keeping Faith and promise. And her Husband thereat being fearful, she would comfort him, saying, she came not to trouble him, neither should he sustain trouble by her. Wherefore she would will him to be of good cheer, for her coming was of good will to see him and her Children, and not to bring them into trouble, but to shew her duty therein while she might have liberty.

A Note of John Spicer.

IN Queen Marys time there was one John Spicer, of whom mention is made before, he being at the Stake, ready to give his life for the Truth, a Bag of Gunpowder was brought him by his Son. And another standing by (one named Master Beckingham) took the Gunpowder of his Son, and put it under the Girdle of the said Spicer, and exhorted him to be strong in the Lord; also divers of the Sheriffs Servants comforted him in like manner, and desired him not to faint. Unto whom Spicer answered? Doubt you not of me (saith he) my Soul is quiet; but be ye strong and stand fast in the Lord Jesus, and commit your selves to him in the confession of his holy name, and profession of his Truth.

A Note of Mandrel.

Mandrel standing at the Stake, as is mentioned before, Doctor Gessery the Chancellor spake to him, wishing him to yield to the Doctors, who many hundred years had taught otherwise then he doth believe, &c. To whom Mandrel answered; Master Chancellor (saith he) trouble me with none of your Doctors whatsoever they say; but bring me the Book of God, the old Testament and the New, and I will answer you. What sayest thou Mandrel (quoth he) by the Saints in the Church, the Image of our Lady, of the Crucifix, and other holy Saints? be they not necessary, &c. Yes, Mr. Chancellor (saith he) very necessary to roast a shoulder of Mutton. Then Doctor Billing a Friar once, stand in by, saith; Master Chancellor (quoth he) hear how these Hereticks speak against the Crucifix and the holy Crofs, and yet the holy Crofs is mentioned in all the Tongues, both Hebrew, Greek, and Latin. For in Latin it is called T in Greek Tau, &c. Whereupon one Thomas Gilsford, a Merchant of Pool, standing by, saith; Ah merciful Lord (saith he) is not this a marvellous matter for a poor man thus to be charged, and put to the pains of fire for T Tau?

When Mandrel and Spicer were examined before the Chancellor, the Chancellor called them, saying: Come on, come on, saith he, thou Spicer art too blame, for thou hast taught Mandrel these Heresies. Thou art by thy occupation a Bricklayer: Yea, that I am. And can sing in the Quire: Yea, that I can, saith he. And can play on the Organs. True, saith he. Well then, saith the Chancellor, and thou hast married this poor man, and hast taught him all these Heresies. No, Master Chancellor (quoth he) I have not taught him, but I have read him. He is able, thanks be to God, to teach both you and me.

A Note of Elizabeth Pepper.

Elizabeth Pepper before mentioned, when she was burned at Stratford, was eleven weeks gone with Child, as she then testified to one Bosmes Wife, who then unloosed her Neckcloth; and moreover, when she was asked, why she did not tell them, answered; Why (quoth she) they knew it well enough. Oh, such are the bloody hearts of this cruel generation, that no occasion can stay them from their mischievous murdering of the Saints of the Lord, that truly professed Christ crucified only and alone, for the satisfaction of their Sins.

A Note of one confessing Gods Truth at the Gallows.

A Notorious Felon, one Dick Adams, being upon the Gallows, making his confession, and ready to be cast down from the Ladder, was desired at that instant by one Mrs. Harris, the Grammar-Schoolmasters Wife, to remember the blessed Sacrament before he died, to whom the said Adams said; Marry Mistress never in better time, who went up to the Top of the Ladder, and said it was the most abominable Idol that ever was, and willed all men to take it so; for we have been greatly deceived thereby. Whereupon the Sheriff caused him to hold his peace, and to take his death patiently. He went down to his place, and was cast from the Ladder, speaking to his last word, that it was an abominable Idol: his Body therefore was buried out of the Churchyard by the High-way; who although he was a Thief in his life, yet he earnestly repented thereof, so that I doubt not but he died the Child of God, and not unworthy to be put in the Register of the Lords accepted Confessors.

A note of Gertrude Crockhay.

IN the late days of Queen Mary, among other strange dealings, of the Papists with the faithful, this is not with the rest to be forgotten, that a godly Marton named Gertrude Crockhay, the Wife of Master Robert Crockhay, dwelling then at St. Katherines by the Tower of London, obtained her self from the Popish Church. And the being in her Husbands house, it happened in Anno 1556. that the foolish Popish Saint Nicholas went about the Parish, which she understanding, shut her doors against him, and would not suffer him to come within her house. Then Doctor Mallet hearing thereof (and being then Master of the said St. Katherines next day came to her with twenty at his Tail, thinking belike to fray her, and asked why she would not the night before let in St. Nicholas, and receive his blessing, &c. To whom she answered thus; Sir, I know not Saint Nicholas, said she, that came hither. Yes (quoth Mallet) here was one that represented Saint Nicholas. Indeed Sir, (saith she) here was one that is my Neighbours Child, but not Saint Nicholas. For Saint Nicholas is in Heaven. I was afraid of them that came with him to have had my purse cut by them. For I have heard of men robbed by Saint Nicholas Clerks, &c. So Mallet perceiving that nothing could be gotten at her hands, went his way as he came, and the for that time so escaped.

Then in Anno 1557. a little before Whitsonide, it happened that the said Gertrude answered for a Child that was baptised of one Thomas Saunders, which Child was christened secretly in a house, after the order of the Service Book in King Edwards time, and that being shortly known to her Enemies, she was sought for, which understanding nothing thereof, went beyond the Sea into Gelderland, to see certain Lands that should have come to her Children in the right of her first Husband, who was a stranger born. And being there about a quarter of a year, at the length coming homeward, by Antwerp, she chanced to meet with one John Johnson a Dutchman, alias John de Wille of Antwerp Shipper, who seeing her there, went of malice to the Margrave, and accused her to be an Anabaptist, whereby she was taken and carried to Prison. The cause why this naughty man did thus, was for that he claimed of Master Crockhay her Husband a piece of money, which was not his due, for a Ship, that the said Master Crockhay bought of him; and for that he could not get it, he wrought this displeasure. Well, she being in Prison, lay there a fortnight; in which time she saw some that were Prisoners there, who privily were drowned in Rheinf Wime fats, and after secretly put in Sacks and cast into the River. Now the good Woman, thinking to be so served, took thereby such fear, that it brought the beginning of her sickness, of the which at length she died.

Then at the last she was called before the Margrave, and charged with Anabaptistry, which she there utterly denied, and detested the Errour, declaring before him in

So the Margrave hearing the same, in the end being well pleased with her profession, at the suite of some of her Friends delivered her out of Prison, but took away her Book, and so she came over into England again. And being at home in her Husbands house, he thinking to find means to get her to go abroad, made one Vicars a Yeoman of the Tower his Friend, who was great with Boner, to work that liberty for her. Now this Vicars making means to Boner for the same, Boner put the matter over to Darbshire his Chancellor who enjoyed her to give certain money to poor folks, and to go on the Wednesday and Sunday after to Church to Even-song, which she so did, and afterward had such trouble in her Conscience thereby, that she thought verily God had cast her off, and that she should be damned, and never be saved: so not long after this, it hapned that Mr. Rough, of whom mention is made before, came to her house, unto whom she made moan of her unquietness for going to Church, and desired his Counsel what she might do, that should best please God, and ease her troubled

Read before. Soul, &c. Unto whom Mr. Rough replied many comfortable Sentences of Scripture to comfort her, and in the end gave her Counsel to go to the Christian Congregation, which secretly the persecuted had, and confes her fault unto them, and so to be received into their fellowship again; who hearing that was glad, and intended so to do, and so would have done, if sore sickness had not immediately prevented the same. But when Doctor Mallet heard by one Robert Hemmings Woodmonger, that she lay very sick indeed, which Hemmings was her great Enemy, he came to her twice to persuade her to recant, and to receive (as the Papists term it) the Rites of the Church. Unto whom she answered, she could not, nor would, for that she was Subject to vomit; and therefore he would not (he was sure, she said) have her to cast up their God again, as the should do, if she did receive it. And so immediately vomited indeed? wherefore he seeing that, went from her into the Hall to her Daughter named Clare Sacke, and told her, if her Mother would not receive, she should not be buried in Christian burial, as he termed it. Then Clare went and told her sick Mother what he said unto her. Who hearing the same, spake these words following; Oh (said she) how happy am I, that I shall not rise with them, but against them. Well (quoth she) the earth is the Lords, and all that therein is; and therefore I commit the matter to him, &c.

Shortly hereupon, that is, the 27. day of March 1558. the said Doctor Mallet came again to her with one Doctor West, Queen Marias Chaplain. And coming in, he saluted her, and told her that he had brought her a good learned man to persuade her, who was one of the Queens Chaplains, &c. and therefore he desired her to hear and believe him in that he should say, &c. Then Doctor West exhorted her to receive their Sacrament, and to be aneled, for he said, she was strong enough for it, &c. Unto whom she answered, that she was able and strong enough to receive it indeed, but she would not, for that it was abominable, &c. Then said West, ye be in an ill mind: Do ye think to die a Christian Woman? Yea, said she, that I do. I pray you, said West, how came you first into that Opinion. Marry, said she, there is he that first taught it me (meaning Doctor Mallet) at the Marriage of my Brother and his Sister, where I heard him earnestly preach this Doctrine, which I now do hold. And if God shall lay our sins to our charge, if we repent not, much more damnable is his offence, being once a publick Preacher of the same, and now to turn from it. Then Mallet told her he was then deceived by little new-fangled two-penny Books, as you be now (said he) but now I am otherwise persuaded, as I would have you, and to receive the Sacrament, which if you would, you should, I warrant you, be saved, my Soul for yours. At whose words she earnestly desired them to be content: for (saith she) ye be come to rob and to draw me from my Christ, which I tell you Truth you shall not do, for I will never consent to you while I live. When West heard her say so, he drew his stool nigher to hear her speak, and being drunken, he fell down, whereby Mallet was faine to help him up again, and so immediately after they departed thence. And the thirteenth day of April next after that, she died constantly in the Lord, and yielded her Soul and life into his holy hands, with these words? Oh Lord, into thy hands receive my Soul, and so immediately gave up her life unto the Lord, to whom be praise for ever, Amen.

While she was beyond Sea, as it is said before, Master Crockbay her Husband, by the procurement of Doctor Mallet, was cited to come before Master Hussey the Com-missary who (had it not been for that he made means unto the said Hussey before) would have sent him to Prison, and bound him in Recognizance to seek her out. But he more easily escaped their hands by friendship, as before I have said.

Now when Dr. Mallet heard of her death, Master Crockbay, and one Robert Hemmings Bayliff of Saint Katherine, being before him for the burying of her, he said plainly, she should be buried nigh to some Highway, and a mark set up, in token that an Heretic was buried there. Then the said Hemmings told him, the Hogs would scrape her up, which were not decent, nor best? and Mr. Crockbay intreated he might be buried in his Garden, which at length he granted, and willed the said Hemmings to see it done, and that he should be sure he buried her there indeed.

After, when the Corps was brought to the said Garden, the said Robert Hemmings, the Bayliff would needs see it opened: which when the Cover was taken off, the Wife of the said Hemmings put her hand within the sheet, and felt the hair of the said dead Corps, saying; Now will I justify that she is here, and so she did, telling Mallet that those her hands did feel her; this is the effect of this Story.

Now since the coming in of Queen Elizabeth, the said Doctor Mallet came to the said Master Crockbays, and asked him forgiveness, alleging this Verse of the Poet.

Amantium ira amoris redintegratio est.

The Lord give him repentance and grace to seek perfect friendship with him, if it be his blessed will, Amen.

A Note of William Wood.

According as I have sent unto you the true record of my Examination before the Doctors above mentioned, so I thought it not inconvenient to send you likewise certain Notes of my other two deliverances in Queen Marias time, and this I do not (as God knoweth) to get any praise to my self, or to reproach any other, but that God may be glorified in his works, and that our Brethren may know, that though there be many times but little help on earth, yet that there is more in Heaven. About a month after my Examination, one Apleby and his Wife (that were persecuted from Maidstone in Kent) came to my house in Stroud, and desired me that he might have a place in my house for him and his Wife for a time, because Persecution was so hot, that he could no longer stay there; and I at his instance let him have a place with me: but within a fortnight after the Papists espied him, and complained of him to the Bishop of Rochester, and the Bishop sent his chief man, called Ralph Crouch, and he carried him to Rochester before the Bishop, and the said Apleby stood in the defence of the Truth boldly, and the Bishop sent both him and his Wife to the Jail of Maidstone, and there they were burned for the Testimony of the Gospel of God. And the Friday fortnight after I was in the Market at Rochester talking with another man, and the said Ralph Crouch was sent for me; and he coming within a Stones cast of me where I was talking with my Neighbour George Smally, one William Stanley a Papist, dwelling also in Stroud, met with the said Crouch, and they two talked together a while, and I doubted that they talked of me, because many times in their talk they looked on me, and then the said Ralph Crouch went over the street to another Officer or Constable which knew not me, and sent the said Constable for me, and coming for me, knowing my Neighbour George Smally, took him instead of me, and carried him to the Bishop, and when he came before him, the Bishop said to the Officers, this is not the Knaave, this is the Bishop checked the Major and his men, and said that they mocked him, because he was the other man for me, such was the mighty providence of God to defend me, and the Major the same night sent forty bills and men with other weapons to beset my house to take me; but the Lord kept me from them and delivered me out of their hands, to him be glory therefore, Amen.

The third time that the Lord delivered me was on Easter day next after. I had been at London all the Lent, and on Easter Even at night I came home to Sir and to my wife, and a Child of three years old told one of the Neighbours that her Father was come home. And on Easter day, after their Popish Even-song was done, came Master Reade, Thomas Crowch, Brother to the above-said Ralph Crowch, William Stanley, Thomas Bets, Lionell Newman, and Roger Braunch, with three score people or thereabouts, and searched my house very frantically for me: but as Gods Providence was there was Maule a drying upon the Kill, and they searched so narrowly for me, that I was glad to heave up a corner of the hair whereon the Maule lay, and went into the Kill-hole, and there stood till they were gone, and so I escaped from them; but within an hour after there came a Woman to my Wife to borrow a brush, and spied me thorow the key-hole of the door, and there the carrying rydings abroad, immediately came a great company of men and beset my house round about, and I said to my wife, You see that these four men seek for my life, that is, Master Reade, Thomas Crowch, William Stanley, and Thomas Bets: for I do think that none of the rest will lay hands on me; and therefore I pray these wife follow these four men, and talk loud to them that I may hear, and so escape, and if they search on the backside, I may avoid on the street side; and be of good comfort, for our lives are in Gods hand, and though there be little help here on Earth, yet there is help enough from Heaven, and when these men were searching on the backside, I went into the street, among (as I guess) an hundred people, and none of them laid hands on me, neither said they any thing to me, so I went out of the Town, and lay there at an honest mans house at the Parish of Cobham that night.

And at the same time also two of my Neighbours, honest men and of good wealth, the one called John Penman a Fisherman, the other named John Bailly a Glover, because they came not to their Popish Church to buy some of their Idolatrous wares, were complained of to the Justices, who did bind them to answer for their faith before the Judges at the Assizes which were holden at Midsummer after (as I remember) at Rochester in the Palace-yard; and there was at that time a Sail cloth of a ship tied to the top of the Bishops Palace wall, to keep away the Sun from the Judges, because it was hot, and the wind blew and shook the Sail, so that when these two men were called to be examined, and when they should have answered, there fell from the top of the wall three or four great stones upon the Judges necks, so that some of them which fate on the Bench were sore hurt and maimed, so that they arose suddenly all amazed, and departed, and the two men were delivered.

The Story of John Alcocke.

This John Alcocke or Aulcke, of whom mention is made before, was a very faithful honest man, by his occupation a Wood-fetter, singularly well learned in the Holy Scriptures, and in all his Conversation a just and righteous man that feared God, and studied to do indeed that thing that he had learned in the Scriptures. Now after that Sir Richard Teoman was driven away, and the people on Sundays and other days came to the Church, and had no man to teach them any thing (for as yet Parlon Newel was not come to Hadley to dwell, nor had gotten any Curate. Besides that, the Laws made by King Edward were in force, and the Latine numblings not received every where.) John Alcocke therefore took the English Book used by King Edward, exhorting the people to pray with him, and to read certain prayers in English before them: and moreover, he gave them godly lessons and exhortations out of Chapters that he read unto them. For this, the Bishop of Winchester Stephen Gardiner sent for him, and cast him into Newgate at London: where after many examinations and troubles, for that he would not submit himself to ask forgiveness of the Pope, and to be reconciled to the Romish Religion, he was cast into the lower Dungeon, where with evil keeping, and sickness of the house, he died in Prison. Thus died he a Martyr of Christs Verity, which he heartily loved and constantly confessed, and received the Garland of a well foughten battle at the hand of the Lord. His Body was cast out, and buried in a dunghill; for the Papists would in all things be like themselves; therefore would they not so much as suffer the dead Bodies to have honest and convenient Sepulture.

He wrote two Epistles to Hadley, which follow here.

The first Epistle of John Alcocke.

Grace be with you, and peace from the Father, and our Lord Jesus Christ, which gave himself for our sins, that he might deliver us from this present evil world, according to the will of God our Father, to whom be praise for ever and ever, Amen.

Oh my Brethren of Hadley, why are ye so soon turned from them which called you in the Grace of Christ, unto another Doctrine? which is nothing else but that there be some which trouble you, and intend to pervert the Gospel of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ. Nevertheless though these should come unto you that have been your true Preachers, and preach another way of Salvation, than by Jesus Christs death and passion, hold them accursed. Yea, if it were an Angel came from heaven, and would tell you that the sacrifice of Christs Body upon the Cross once for all even, for all the sins of all those which shall be saved, were not sufficient; accused be he. If he were an Angel, or whatsoever hee were, that would say that our Service in English were not right Gods Service, but will better allow the most wicked mumming that you now have: These, whatsoever they be, except they do repent and allow the Gospel of Jesus Christ, they shall never come into that Kingdom that Christ hath prepared for those that be his. Wherefore, my dearly beloved Brethren of Hadley, remember you well what you have been taught heretofore of the Lord Gods true and simple Prophets, that only did with your health and Consolation.

Do not (my good Brethren) I pray you, forget the comfortable word of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, Matthew 11. Come unto me all you that are troubled and laden, with the dangers that ye are in the stormy daies, and hear my words, and believe them, and you shall see the unspeakable comfort that you shall receive. The Lord is my Shephard, saith the Prophet David, so that I can want nothing, Psalm 23. He feedeth his Sheep in green pastures, and leadeth them unto clear and wholesome waters of comfort. I am that good Shephard, saith our Saviour Jesus Christ, John 10. for I give my life for my Sheep, and I know my Sheep, and my Sheep know me; but my Sheep will not know an hireling: for he careth not but only for his god the belly, and so seeketh the destruction of their Souls. Therefore beware of hirelings, you that count your selves the Sheep of Jesus Christ. Be sure that ye know his voyce and obey it, and be not deceived through strange voyces, but go from them, and earnestly abide by your profession that you have made in your Baptism, and think not from it. For if you do, you shall declare your selves to be a vain people, and without understanding. And for this cause doth God plague his People, and suffereth them to be deceived with false Prophets and wicked men. I pray you note what the Prophet Esay saith to the people of those days, Esay 1. because they were slipping from the Lord their God, which had done so Marvellous works for them, as you well do know in the Histories of the Bible. Hear O Heaven (saith he) and hearken thou Earth, for the Lord hath hath spoken, I have nourished and brought up Children, but they have done wickedly against me. The Ox hath known his Owner, and the Ass his Masters Crib; but Israel hath received no knowledge, my People hath no understanding: Alas for this sinful Nation, a People of great Iniquity, a froward Generation, unnatural Children.

They have forsaken the Lord, they have provoked his wrath, and are gone backward. Hearken also what the Prophet Jeremy saith, Jer. 2. Be astonied ye Heavens, be afraid, and ashamed at such a thing, saith the Lord, for my People hath done two evils. They have forsaken me, the Well of the waters of Life, and digged them broken Pits that can hold no Water. Is Israel a Bond-servant or one of the household of the Lord? Why then is he so spoiled? Why then do they roar and cry upon him as a Lion? Understand those things now in these days that the Prophet spake of them. Oh my Brethren of Hadley, why cometh this plague upon us, that we have now in these days and other times? Hearken what the Prophets say, Cometh not this upon thee because thou hast forsaken the Lord thy God? Thine own wickedness shall reprove thee, and thy turning away shall condemn thee, that thou maist know and understand how evil and hurtful a thing it is, that thou hast forsaken the Lord thy God, and not feared him, saith the Lord God of Hosts, the holy One of Israel; that is to say, he that maketh Israel holy. And understood by Israel the Children of God, and those things that were spoken to the carnal Israel, are spoken unto us, that are or should be the spiritual Israel. Grace be with you all, Amen.

Thurs, John Alcocke, Prisoner for Gods Word in Newgate at London.

The second Epistle of John Alcocke.

A Letter. MY Brethren of Hadley, note well what St. Paul said in the tenth Chapter to the first of the Corinthians; Brethren, I would you should not be ignorant of this, that our Fathers were all under the Cloud, and all passed through the Sea, and were baptized unto Moses in the Cloud and in the Sea, and did eat one spiritual meat and drank of one spiritual drink. They drank of that spiritual Rock that followed them, which Rock was Christ: Nevertheless in many of them had God no delight, for they were over-fittin in the Wilderness. These are examples unto us, that we should not lust after evil things as they lusted; that is to say, we should stand forth to defend the Verity of God, which we would do right well, alas, were it not for loss of goods: we do so much lust after them, that we will rather say there is no God, than we will profess his Word to be truth to the losing of our goods. And our Saviour Christ saith, Mark 10. He that is not content to forsake Father and Mother, Wife and Children, House and Land, Corn and Cattel, yea, and his own life for my Truths sake, is not meet for me. And if we be not for our Lord God, then we must needs be meet for the Devil, and we must needs be servants to one of them. If we be not ashamed of the Gospel of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, but earnestly confess it to the uttermost of our power, then are we sure to be confessed of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, and that before the Angels in Heaven, to be his Servants. But if we will so lust to keep our goods, and rather deny him than to lose our goods, then doth it follow whose Servants we are. Therefore (my dear Brethren of Hadley) beware that you do not consent to any thing against your Conscience. For if you do, beware of Gods great wrath: I exhort you therefore (my beloved Brethren in our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ) to stand fast in your Profession, and become not manifest Run-aways from the truth of our Lord God, but stick earnestly to it, and doubt not but our God will be unto you a strong defence and refuge in the needful time. Bow down thine ear, O Lord, (saith David, Psal. 86.) and hear me: for I am poor and in misery. Be merciful unto me, O Lord, for I will call daily upon thee: comfort the Soul of thy Servant; for unto thee, O Lord, do I lift up my Soul. For thou Lord art good and gracious, and of great mercy unto all them that call upon thee. Give ear Lord unto my prayer, and ponder the voice of my humble petition. All Nations whom thou hast made shall come and worship thee, O Lord, and shall glorify thy Name. For thou art great, and doest wonderful things: Thou art God alone. Teach me thy ways, O Lord, and I will walk in thy Truth: Oh knit my heart unto thee, that I may fear thy Name. I will thank thee, O my God, with all my heart, and will praise thy Name forever. O you Christian People of Hadley, comfort your selves one another in these notable Psalms of David, and the whole Bible. Embrace the noble Jewel of our Lord God the Bible, and endeavour your selves to walk the way that it doth teach you.

My good Brethren, we as helpers, saith St. Paul, 2 Cor. 6. do exhort you, that you receive not the grace of God in vain. For behold now is the accepted time, now is the day of Salvation. Let us beware that we take sure hold while we have time; for time will away. While ye have the light walk in it, lest when ye would desire it, ye cannot have it. Understand the Light to be the knowledge of Christ, and to obey, that is to have the light. For that cause came our Saviour Jesus Christ, to make himself known, John 12. Unto those that did receive him he gave power to be the Sons of God, and so to be made Inheritors of his Kingdom, which shall never end, John 1. who would not be glad to become the Kings Son, that he thereby might be partaker of the Kingdom that never shall have end? O pain man, what art thou that wilt refuse everlasting life for a day or two, or an hour? thou canst not tell how short. Open thine eyes, and see thine own comfort and refuge to Christ. O fly and refuse this worldly wisdom; for worldly wisdom doth shut out the wisdom of God. For the word of the Cross is foolishness unto them that perish; but unto us which are saved it is the power of God. For it is written, 1 Cor. 1. I will destroy the wisdom of the wise, and will cast away the understanding of the prudent. Where are the wise? where are the Scribes? where are the Disputers of this world? hath not God made the wisdom of this world foolishness? For inasmuch as the world by the wisdom thereof knew not God in his wisdom, it pleased God through foolishness of preaching to save them that believe. For the Jews require tokens, and the Greeks ask after wisdom; but we preach Christ crucified, saith St. Paul, to the Jews an occasion of falling, and unto the Greeks (a People that are wise in their own conceits) to them is the preaching of Christ crucified foolishness. But unto them that are called, both Jews and Greeks, we preach Christ, the power of God and the wisdom of God. For the foolishness of God is wiser than men, and the weakness of God is stronger than men.

Brethren, look upon your Calling, how that not many wise men after the flesh, not many mighty, not many of high degree are called. But that which is foolish before the world hath God chosen, that he might confound the wise; and that which is despised before the world hath he chosen, and that which is nothing, that he might destroy that which is ought, that no flesh should rejoice. Of the same are ye also in Christ Jesus, which is made of God unto us wisdom and righteousness, and sanctifying and redemption, according as it is written, that he that rejoiceth should rejoice in the Lord, that your Faith should not stand in the wisdom of men, but in the power of God. We speak of this wisdom among them that are perfect, not the wisdom of this world, nor the Rulers of this world, which go to nought; but we speak of the wisdom of God, which the carnal man doth not understand. The natural man perceiveth nothing of the Spirit of God. It is foolishness with him. But God hath opened it to us by his Spirit; for the Spirit searcheth out all things. Wherefore (my dear Brethren) try your selves Spirit of Christ, well, whether you have the Spirit of Christ, or no. If you have the Spirit of Christ, then are ye dead concerning sin; but ye are alive unto God through Jesus Christ. If this Spirit dwell in you, then will ye increase and go forward in your Profession, and not fear what flesh may do unto the Carcass. Therefore stand fast in the liberty wherewith Christ hath made you free, and be not wrapped up again in the yoke of bondage, that is to say, to go from God by wicked life, or serve God another way than he hath commanded in his holy Word.

Gale. 2.

I trust you go forward (my dear Brethren and Sisters) in your promise that you made to your Lord God in your Baptism: I pray God open unto you the knowledge of himself, and lighten the eyes of your understanding, that you may know what is the hope of your calling, and what the riches of his glorious Inheritance is upon the Saints. For ye are the chosen Generation, the kingly Priesthood, that holy nation, that peculiar people, that should shew the virtues of him which hath called you out of darkness into his marvellous light, that is to say, to fear God, and to work righteousness and so to receive the end of your Faith, the salvation of your Souls. This is a true saying; If we be dead with Christ, we shall live with him also. If we be patient, we shall also Reign with him. If we deny him, he also will deny us. If we believe not, yet he abideth faithful, he cannot deny himself. The very God of peace sanctify you throughout, and I pray God that your Spirit, Soul, and Bodies be kept blameless, unto the coming of our Lord Jesus. Faithful is he that hath called you, which will also do it. Brethren, pray for us, and greet all the Brethren among you.

Give glory to God.

God be merciful to thee (O England) and send thee a great number of such faithful Fathers and godly Pastors, as Doctor Taylor was, to guide thee, feed thee, and comfort thee after thy great miseries and troubles, that thou hast suffered under the Tyrannous captivity and rage of the Roman Antichrist, and such ravening Wolves, as have without all mercy murdered the godly and learned Preachers, and give all men grace to consider that such horrible Plagues and mutations have justly fallen upon this Realm for Sin, and with unfained hearts to turn to God, who as he hath scourged us with less Plagues then we deserved, so he calleth us again by his undeserved and unfeakable mercy unto repentance and amendment of our living. It is doubtless now high time to turn unfainedly to God, and to correct our sinful livings, and to remember what Saint John Baptist saith, Matth. 3. The Axe is now set to the Root of the Tree, and every Tree that bringeth not forth good fruit shall be hewen down and cast into the Fire. For this may all men assure themselves of, both rich and poor, high and low, old and young, that the Almighty, jealous, and Righteous God, will not suffer the sinful and wicked life of the ungodly unrepentant that contemn his mercy now profered unto them, to be unpunished, but as he hath from the beginning of the World shewed himself a Righteous Judge, and punisher of wickedness, even so will he do still now. God expelled our first Parents Adam and Eve from Paradise, and laid upon them and upon us all these miseries, sickness, calamities, and death, that we daily feel, and miserably are oppressed withal, Gen. 3. God in Noahs days drowned the whole World, onely eight persons were preserved, Genes. 8. 9. God burnt up Sodom and Gomorrah with Fire and Brimstone from Heaven, and destroyed those Cities and all the Country about, Genes. 18. God gave over Jerusalem called the holy City of God, and delivered his own people the Jews into perpetual Captivity, Luke 19. If we seek the cause of these punishments, was it not sinful living and unrepentant hearts? What should I recite the calamity of other lands, seeing Gods judgments have not been unexecuted upon this Realm of England for sinful living? The old Britains were with Cadwalader their King constrained to flee and leave this land, because of Pestilence and Famine: What miseries and destructions brought the Danes in with them? and what troubles sustained the Inhabitants of this Realm afore the same were again driven out? What bloodshed was here in King William Conquerors days? were not the Noble men slain, and Gentlemen brought into Bondage? were not their Matrons defiled, and their Daughters given to be Kitchen Drudges under the Normans proud Ladies? were not their lands, houses, and possessions divided by lot unto strangers? Their gold and silver wherein they trusted, was the bait that their enemies hunted after: What a plague was the Civil War between the King and Barons? what horrible bloodshed was in this Realm? till at the last Gods merciful providence ended those miseries by the happy joyning of the two Regal houses together in the Marriage of King Henry the Seventh. What miseries have chanced in our time, we have not onely seen and heard, but we have felt them; and God be praised, had our parts of them. Doubtless this all hath chanced for the sins of the people, as the Prophet Jeremy plainly teacheth, saying, Iere. 6. Who is a wife Man that understandeth this? And to whom shall the word of the Lords Mouth come, that he may Preach it forth? why hath the land perished, and is burnt like a Wilderness, so that no man may pass through it? And the Lord saith, because they have forsaken my Law which I have given them, and they have not heard my voice, and have not walked in them, and have gone after the vanity of their own hearts, and after Baalim the Images of Baal, which they have learned of their Fathers. We see here plainly the contempt of Gods Word, and of the Preachers of the same, walking after their covetous minds and lewdness of their Hearts, and following of their Idolatrous inventions, brought the Wrath of God upon the people, as witnessed also Jesus Syrach, saying, Eccles. 10. Because of unrighteous dealing, wrong, Blasphemies, and divers deceits, a Realm shall be translated from one people to another. And a little after he saith; The Lord hath brought the Congregation of the wicked to dishonour, and destroyed them unto the end. God hath destroyed the seats of proud Princes, and set up the meek in their stead. God hath withered the Root of proud Nations, and planted the lowly among them. God hath overthrown the Lands of the Heathen, and destroyed them unto the ground. He hath caused them to wither away: He hath brought them to nought, and made the memorial of them to cease from the Earth. But what availeth it to read such threats of God, if we believe them not? Or, if we believe them to be Gods threats, and despite them? Doubtless, the Lord is Righteous, a jealous God, a punisher of sins, as he himself saith, Exod. 20. 1. I punish the sins of the Fathers upon their Children unto the third and fourth generation of them that hate me. God give us grace to remember this, and with speedy and unfained repentance to turn unto God. I say (unfained repentance) and not (alas) as we have done in times past like Hypocrites to dissemble with God and Man, making Gods holy Word nothing else but a Cloak to cover our malice, covetousness, whoredom, pride, excess, gluttony, wrath, envy, hatred, murder, with all other wicked living most detestable in the sight of God. If men will well consider themselves, they have long enough dissembled, and heaped the wrath of God heavy enough upon their heads. It is now high time to become a new people, to amend indeed, and to follow the Counsel of the holy Ghost, saying unto us by the Prophet Jeremy, Iere. 3. Why do mortal men murmur against God? let them murmur against their own sins. Let us search our own ways, and let us seek and return unto the Lord. Let us lift up our Hearts and Hands unto the Lord in Heaven, for we have done wickedly, and provoked the Lord to wrath: and therefore wilt thou not be intreated. Doubtless, the Lord will not be intreated, except men very earnestly turn unto him. We have felt in our selves, and seen before our eyes, that when God striketh, no man can be able to abide the heavy stroke of his fist. He hath hitherto corrected us with mercy, as a Father, let us thank him, and return unfainedly, so will he not extend his wrath as a Judge. His will is, that we should return and live, and not perish with the wicked. I live (saith the Lord) and will not the death of a sinner, but that he be converted and live, Exech. 33. Here the godly Oath certifieth us of forgiveness, and requireth an unfained Conversion unto God, that is, that men acknowledge in heart their wicked living, and be sorry that ever they have with wicked living offered against that so good and loving a Father, and trust to have forgiveness through Christs Blood, and fully and firmly set their hearts to serve God, and to walk the ways of his commandments all the days of their life. Then shall we be true Christians, built upon the Corner-Stone Christ,

Certain Cautions of the Author to the Reader, of things to be considered in reading this story.

AMongst other escapes and oversights in the Edition of this story committed, part of them we leave to thine own gentle Cognition, gentle Reader: certain other specialities there be, whereof we thought it good and expedient to give thee warning, as hereafter followeth.

Cautions of the Author to the Reader.

First, when mention is made of Peters being at Rome, and suffering at Rome, following certain Authors; yet, so far as such as other Writers there be, and reasons to prove that he was not at Rome, I desire therefore that this my affirmation may not prejudice other mens judgments, if any see or can say further in that matter.

Touching the story of the Turks, whereas I in following our Christian Authors writing of the Turks, have noted Solimannus to be the 12. Turk after Ostmannus, as they do all record: I have found since by the computation of the Turks set forth in the Table of their own descent, the said Solimannus to be the sixth Emperor of the Turks; and this Solimannus his Son, which now Reigneth, to be but the twelfth. Which I thought here to signify unto thee, because of their own Turkish prophetic noted before, left in construing of that prophecy, being in the same place expounded, thou be deceived.

Item, where Master George Blag is named to be one of the privy Chamber; here is to be noted also, that although he were not admitted as one of the privy Chamber, yet his ordinary resort thither, and to the Kings presence there was such, as although he were not one of them, yet was he so commonly taken.

Item, in the story of the Duke of Somerset, where it is said, that at the return of the Earl of Warwick out of Norfolk, there was a consultation amongst the Lords assembling themselves together in the house of Mr. York, &c. against the Duke of Somerset, here is to be noted that the coming of the Lords to the said house of Mr. York was not immediately upon the Duke of Northumbreland return, but first he went to Warwick, and from thence after a space came to the house aforesaid.

Item, here is also to be noted touching the said Duke of Somerset, that albeit at his death relation is made of a sudden falling of the people, as was at the taking of Christ, this is not to be expounded, as though I compared in any part the Duke of Somerset with Christ.

And though I do something more attribute to the commendation of the said Duke of Somerset, which dyed so constantly in his Religion, yet I desire thee (gentle Reader) so to take it, not that I did ever mean to derogate or impair the Martial praise or facts of other men, which also are to be commended in such things where they well deserved.

Item, touching the same Duke of Somerset, where the story saith, he was attainted, read, indicted.

Item, where mention is made of one Nicholas Underwood to be the betrayer of the Duke of Devonshire, with the said Underwood also Nicholas Lawrence, alias Nicholas Eibel, Keeper of Aspley-Park; who taking upon him and promising to keep the Duke for two or three days, until he might find some means to escape, conveyed him into an hollow Tree, and after most traitorously betrayed him.

Item, in the story of Sir Thomas Wyat there is also to be corrected, that where the story saith, that he was taken by Sir Clement Parson, which was not so, and he no such Knight; amend it thus: that he first came to Chesham, being sent unto him, and afterward yielded him to Sir Morris Bartley. Briefly and in general, besides these castigations above noted, if thou find any other committed in the printing hereof, gently I desire thee (gentle Reader) to bestow a little pains with thine own hand to amend them.

Notes omitted of them that were burnt at Bristol.

THe eighth day of August was brought William Sartons, Weaver of Bristol, before one Dalby Chancellor of Bristol aforesaid, and by him committed to Prison, and also condemned, for holding that the Sacrament was a sign of an holy thing; also he denied, that the Flesh and Blood of Christ is there after their words of Consecration; he was burned the eighteenth of September, Anno 1556. and as he went to the fire, he sung Psalms. The Sheriff, John Griffith, had prepared Green-wood to burn him; but one Master John Pikes, pitying the man, caused divers to go with him to Ridland, half a mile off, who brought good store of Helme-sheaves, which made good dispatch with little pain, in comparison to that he should have suffered with the Green-wood. In the mean space, whilst they went for the sheaves, the said Sartons made many good exhortations to the People, and after died constantly and patiently with great joyfulness.

A Note of Prests Wife of Excceter.

IN Cornwall, not far from Lanceston, within the Diocess of Excceter, in Queen Maries days, dwelled a poor man, whose name was Prest, his Wife being an honest Woman, very simple, but of good zeal and upright life, being taught by God in hearing of his Word (albeit it was in those days very seldom preached any where) and feeling a sweet taste thereof, framed her life anew after the Rule of the same. And banished quite from her all the Popish dregs of Superstition and Hypocrisie, and gave her self wholly to Prayer, and invoking the name of God, both for the afflicted Church of Christ in those days very dangerously tossed and troubled; as also for her own inward contentation and spiritual consolation, which she not a little felt to her unspeakable joy and incomparable comfort. And when some, who before had known her, saw that marvellous change in her and (as the cruel Serpent) envied her felicity, they went upon the same immediately, and accused her to certain Justices of the Shire, being extreme enemies to the truth, and very persecutors of the same; who taking the matter in hand, as very glad of such occasion, sent for her to the place where she was, and began at the second, if not at the first dash, to demand her belief in their Popish Sacrament of the Altar.

The good poor woman, who had learned not to be ashamed to confide her Master Christ before men; and to render account of her Faith when it was asked; told freely and frankly her opinion therein, and hid back nothing that either she thought might profit them, if they had any Grace to receive it; or else might found to Gods glory and praise, though it were never so much by them threatened and rebuked. Whereupon she was forthwith committed to the Goal of Lanceston, where she remained a quarter of a year, or thereabouts, and afterwards was dispatched of that vile and filthy Prison, and delivered over to the hands of two Champions of the Popes, the one called Doctor Reynolds, Dean of Excceter, and the other named Master Blaxton, Treasurer of the same Church, men surely fervent hot in the furtherance of the

C c c 2 Romish

Romish Affairs, and in withstanding the truth of the pure Evangelical Gospel. So the time that this good poor Woman was under their hands, she had many fore conflicts by them. And the said Blaxton having a Concubine, which sundry times resorted to him with other of his Gossips, always when they came, this said good Woman was called forth to his house, and there to make his Misson with the rest of his company some mirth, he would examine her with such mocking manner, deriding the Truth, that it would have vexed any Christian Soul to have seen it. Then when he had long used his foolishness in this sort, and had sported himself enough in deriding this Christian Martyr; in the end he sent her to Prison again, and there kept her very miserably, saving sometimes he would fend for her, when his foresaid Guest came to him, to use with her his accustomed folly aforesaid. But in fine, the vile Wretches (after many combats and scoffing persuasions) when they had played the part of a Cat with a Mouse, at length they condemned her, and delivered her over to the Secular Power, who within short space after most cruelly brought her forth to the place where she should suffer, and there in great contempt of the Truth (which she most constantly confessed) they consumed her Carcass immediately with fire into Ashes; which she very patiently suffered and most joyfully received, yielding her Soul and Life unto the Lord and her Body to the Tormentors; for which the Lords Name therefore be praised, Amen.

The Martyrdom of one Snel, burned about Richmond in Queen Maries time, omitted in this History.

The Martyrdom of one Snel by Richmond.

AT Bedaile a Market Town in Yorkshire, were two Men in the later days of Queen Mary, the one named John Snel and the other Richard Snel. Who being suspected for Religion were sent unto Richmond, where Dr. Dakins had Commission from the Bishop of Chelster to have the Examination of them.

This Dr. Dakins many times conferred with them, sometimes threatening Fire and Fagot if they would not recant, and sometimes flattering them with fair Fables if they would return into the holy Catholick Church. But they stood constantly to the sure Rock Jesus Christ, in whom they put their whole trust and confidence, whilst at last being so sore imprisoned, that their Toes rotted off, and the one of them could not go without Crouches, they brought them to the Church by compulsion, where the one of them heard their abominable Mass, having a certain sum of money given him by the benevolence of the People, and so departed thence: but the first News that was heard of him within three or four days was, that he had drowned himself in a River running by Richmond, called Swaile.

Immediately after, Dr. Dakins giving Sentence that the other should be burnt, came home to his house and never joyed after, but died. The Commissary of Richmond, named Hillings, preached at his burning, exhorting him to return to the Church; but his labour was in vain, the constant Martyr standing strongly to the Faith which he professed.

Then being brought to the Stake, whereunto he was tied by a Girdle of Iron, there was given unto him Gunpowder, and a little Straw was laid under his feet and set round about with small Wood and Tarr-barrels; the fire was put in the Straw, which by and by flaming about his head, he cried thrice together, Christ help me: In somuch that one Robert Atkinson being present, said, Hold fast there, and we will all pray for thee. Thus this blessed Martyr ended his life.

A Story of one Laremouth, omitted in the body of this Story.

ALbeit I am loth to insert any thing in this Book which may seem incredible or strange to ordinary working for quarrelling Adversaries, which do nothing but spy what they may cavil: yet forsomuch as besides other Reporters, the person is yet alive, called Thorne, a godly Minister, which heard it of the mouth of the party himself, I thought therefore first for the incredible strangeness thereof, neither to place this Story in the body of these Acts and Monuments, and yet in some out-corner of the Book not utterly to pass it untouched, for the Reader to consider it, and to credit it as he seeth cause. The Story is this: There was one Laremouth, otherwise called Williamson, Chaplain to the Lady Anne of Cleve, a Scotishman, to whom being in Prison in Queen Maries days, it was said (as he thought) thus founding in his ears, Arise and go thy ways. Whereunto when he gave no great heed at the first, the second time it was said to him again in the same words. Upon this, as he fell to his Prayers, it was said the third time likewise to him, Arise and go thy ways, which was about half an hour after. So he arising upon the same, immediately a piece of the Prison-wall fell down, and as the Officers came in at the outward Gate of the Castle or Prison, he leaping over the Ditch escaped, and in the way meeting a certain Beggar changed his Coat with him, and coming to the Sea-shore, where he found a Vessel ready to go over, was taken in, and escaped the search, which was straitly laid for him in all the Country over.

A little short Letter of William Hunter sent out of Prison to his Mother a little before his Martyrdom, to be referred and placed in his Story.

Most reverend and loving Mother, after my most humble wife I have me most heartily commended unto you, desiring you to pray unto God most heartily for me, that I may have his blessing and yours, the which I esteem more worth unto me than any worldly Treasure. In this present Letter you shall understand the cause of my writing unto you at this time, that I am in good health and prosperity, as ever I was in this present life. Wherefore I tender thanks unto Almighty God for us, who alone is most worthy of all praise, trusting in God you be in health also. Furthermore, I certify you wherefore my Father continueth here, to the intent to bear some godly and joyful tidings both for Soul and Body, which I trust it shall be to your singular comfort and consolation, and to the great rejoicing of all other of my Friends. Therefore I desire you (gentle Mother) to admonish my Brother unto a godly life with diligent attendance, and to pray for me, considering his bounden duty, that God may by your faithful Prayer aid and strengthen me in this my prosperous journey and course which I run, trusting to obtain a Crown of everlasting Life, which doth ever endure.

No more unto you at this time, but God preserve you unto everlasting Life.
So be it.

IT is given to the Queens Majesty to understand, that certain of her Subjects by their evil dispositions do

Anno 1558.

The marvellous deliverance of one Laremouth.

Gods part upon the Doctor that condemned Snel.

ANNO 1558. do sow and spread abroad divers seditions, to the derogation and dishonour, first of Almighty God, in the estate of Religion established by the Laws of this Realm, and also to the dishonour of her Highness, in disproving her lawful right of Supremacy amongst her Subjects. And this that they do, is not done as in secrecy or by stealth, but openly avouched, and in all Companies disputed on. And thus by their bold attempts they seem not to obey or regard the Authority of Laws, nor the quiet of her Subjects. As for example, by bringing in and spreading abroad divers lewd Libels, and seditious Books from beyond the Seas, and in such boldness, that they do commend those writers in their Seditious Books, containing manifest matter against the estate established. Which boldness of men, so universally and every where seen and heard, cannot be thought to be done but by the comfort and aid, or at the least way winkt at by them whom the Queens Highness hath placed in Authority to repress these insolencies. And the Queens Highness cannot more justly charge any for this disorder, than such who be in Commissions chosen to repress these disorders. If it be answered me, that they cannot see such open boldness and Factious disorders, I must say that they have no eyes to see? and if they hear not of such contemptuous talk and speech, I may say that they have no ears. I would have those men judge what will come of these unbridled speeches in the end, if reformations be not had thereof. What cometh of Factions and Seditions, we have been taught of late years, and what the fruits thereof be, which I beseech God long to defend us from. If such disorders be not redressed by Law, then must force and violence reform. Which when they take place, may fortune to fall as soon on them that seem to have least consideration in this matter. If force and violence prevail, then ye know that Law is put to silence, and cannot be executed, which should only maintain good order. If it be replied against me, that to the suppressing of these open talks there is no Law, which by special Letter can charge any man offenser; I must say, that whatsoever the Letter of the Law be, the meaning of the Law was and is clean contrary to the liberty of these doings. If it be said, that no man can be charged by the Law, except it can be proved against him that his speech and deeds be done maliciously; what ye call malice I cannot tell. But if the bringing in of these Seditious Books make mens minds to be at variance one with another, distraction of minds maketh Seditions, Seditions bring in Tumults, Tumults work Insurrections and Rebellion, Insurrections make Depopulations and Desolations, and bring in utter ruine and destruction of mens Bodies, Goods, and Lands: And if any sow the Root whereof these men come, and yet it can be said that he hath no malice, or that he doth not maliciously labour to destroy both publick and private wealthe, I cannot tell what Act may be thought to be done maliciously. And further, if it be said to me, that the man which should be charged with offence, must be proved to have done his Act advisedly: To that I answer, If any bring in those Books, distribute them to others, commend and defend them, and yet cannot be charged to have done advisedly, I have no skill of their advisedness. If it be said, that the Law entreateth of such Acts as be directly derogatory and of none other, what is direct overthrowing the Law, when the contrary thereof is plainly treated, holden, and defended, and the Truth by Arguments condemned? It may be said again, that the world doth not now like extremity in Laws Penal, and calleth them bloody Laws. As for extrem and bloody Laws, I have never liked of them; But where the execution of such Laws toucheth half a dozen offenders, and the not execution may bring in danger half a 100, I think this Law not the execution thereof may justly be called extreme and bloody. In such like comparison I may utter my meaning, as to make a difference between whipping and hanging. Indeed, though whipping may be thought extreme, yet if by whipping a man may escape hanging, in this respect, not whipping bringeth in this bloodiness and extremity, and not the execution of the Law; and better it were, a man to be twice whipped, then once hanged: The pains do differ, but wise men will soon consider the diversity. The Truth is, to suffer disobedient Subjects to take boldness against the Laws of God and their Prince, to wink at the obflinate minds of such as be unbridled in their affections; to maintain a forain power of the Bishop of Rome, directly against the Princes Prerogative established by Laws, is not this to hatch Diffention, and to cherish Sedition? To extol the writings of such, who by all their wits devise to supplant the Princes lawful Authority? If these doings be not means to the disturbance and utter ruine of this Realm, I know not what is good governance. If these be not the sparks of Rebellion, what be they? Thus much having spoken to your Wisdoms, I doubt not of your assenting with me; the rather also because I utter them unto you as from the Queens Majesty by commandment, who doth require of us all a more diligence in execution of Laws, than is spied commonly abroad: Whereby we shall do our duties to Almighty God the better, declare our allegiance to our Sovereign, regard the Majesty of the Laws, love the quiet of our Country, and procure the safety of our selves.

God save the Queen.

And here I trust, we are now come to an end of all our English Martyrs which hitherto have been burnt for the verity of the Gospel, if we add besides to the same a godly Countreiman of ours, one named Richard Atkins an Hartfordshire man, who of late about two years past in the Reign of this our gracious Queen, Anno 1581 most miserably was tormented at Babylon, that is, in the City of Rome. The cause and manner of whose suffering and Martyrdom here ensteth, taken out of a certain late printed Story, and testified by such as were present witnesses and beholders of the same most tragical execution. The purport of which Story in words, as it is put down by the said Reporter, here under followeth.

A true report of the horrible and merciles Martyrdom of one Richard Atkins, an English-man, with extreme Torments, and most cruel rage of furious Tyrants, Persecutors, put to death at Rome.

ABout the month of July, Anno 1581. one Richard Atkins born in Hartfordshire, an Englishman, came to Rome, and having found the English Colledge, knocked at the door, To whom divers of the Students there came out, to welcom him, understanding that he was an English-man. Among other talk had with him they willed him to go to the Hospital, and there to receive his meat and Lodging, according as the order was appointed: whereunto he answered, I come not (my Countreimen) to any such intent, as you judge, but I come lovingly to rebuke the great misorder of your lives, which I grieve to hear, and pity to behold: I come likewise to let your proud Antichrist understand, that he doth offend the heavenly Majesty, rob God of his honour, and poysoneth the whole world with his abominable blasphemies, making them do homage to Stocks and Stones, and that filthy Sacrament, which is nothing else but a foolish Idol. When they heard these words, one Hugh Griffin, a Welchman, and Student in the Colledge, caused him to be put in the Inquisition? where, how they examined him, and how he answered them I know not, but after certain days he was set at liberty again. And one day going in the street, he met a Priest carrying the Sacrament; which offending his Conscience, to see the People so crouch and bow down to it, he caught at it to have thrown it down, but missing of his purpose, and it being judged by the People, that he did catch at the holiness that (they say) cometh from the Sacrament, upon meer devotion, he was let pass, and nothing said to him: few days after he came to St. Peters Church, where divers Gentlemen and other were learning Mass, and the Priest at the elevation; he using no reverence, stepped among the People to the Altar, and threw down the Chalice with the Wine, striving likewise to have pulled the Cake out of the Priests hands; for which divers rose up and beat him with their fists, and one drew his Rapier, and would have slain him: so that in brief he was carried to Prison, where he was examined, wherefore he had committed such a haynous offence; whereunto he answered, that he came purposely for that intent, to rebuke the Popes wickedness and their Idolatry. Upon this he was condemned to be burned; which Sentence (he said) he was right willing to suffer, and the rather, because the sum of his offence pertained to the glory of God. During the time he remained in Prison, sundry English men came unto him, willing him to be sorry for that he had done, and to repent from his damnable Opinion; but all the means they used were in vain, he confuted their dealings by divers places of Scripture, and willed them to be sorry for their wickedness, while God did permit them time, else they were in danger of everlasting damnation; these words made the Englishmen depart: for they could not abide to hear them. Within a while after, he was set upon an Ass without any Saddle, he being from the middle upward naked, having some English Priests with him to talk with him, but he regarded them not, but spake to the People in so good Language as he could, and told them they were in a wrong way, and therefore willed them for Christs sake, to have regard to the saving of their Souls. All the way as he went, there were four that did nothing else but thrust at his Body with burning Torches, whereat he never moved, nor shrunk one jot, but with a cheerful countenance laboured to persuade the People, often bending his body to meet the Torches as they were thrust at him, and would take them in his own hand, and hold them burning still upon his Body, whereat the People not a little wondered. Thus he continued almost the space of half a mile, till he came before St. Peters, where the place of Execution was. When he was come to the place of execution, there they had made a device, not to make the fire about him, but to burn his Legs first, which they did, he not dismayed any whit, but suffered all marvellous cheerfully; which moved the People to such a quandary as was not in Rome many a day. Then they offered him a Cross, and willed him to embrace it, in token that he died a Christian; but he put it away with his hand, telling them that they were evil men to trouble him with such paltry, when he was preparing himself to God, whom he beheld in Majesty and mercy, ready to receive him into eternal rest. They seeing him in this mind, departed, saying, Let us go and leave him to the Devil, whom he serves. Thus ended this faithful Souldier and Martyr of Christ, who is, no doubt, in glory with his Master: whereunto God grant us all to come, Amen.

This is faithfully avouched by John Young, who was at that time, and a good while after in Rome, in Service with Master Doctor Morton; who seeing the Martyrdom of this man, when he came home to his house, in presence of Master Smith his Son, Mr. Creed, and the said John Young, spake as followeth. Surely this Fellow was marvellous obstinate, he nothing regarded the good counsel which was used to him, nor shrunk all the way when the Torches were thrust at his naked Body. Beside, in the place of execution he did not faint nor cry one jot in the fire, albeit they tormented him very cruelly, and burned him by degrees, as his Legs first: put him to the greater pain; yet all this he did but smile at. Doubtless, but that the Word of God cannot be but true, else we might judge this Fellow to be of God; for who could have suffered so much pain as he did? but truly I believe the Devil was in him.

The cursed Life and bloody End of Dr. Story, a cruel Persecutor of Christ in his Members.

I Had thought (Christian Reader) here to have made an end, and to have concluded the Volume of this Book, had not the remembrance of Dr. Story, an Arch-enemy to Christs Gospel, and bloody Persecutor of Gods People, come into my mind. The discourse of whole life and doings, I thought good here briefly to lay open to the view of the world, as followeth. This Dr. Story being an English man by birth, and from his infancy not only nursed in Papistry, but also even as it were by nature earnestly affected to the same, and growing somewhat to riper years, in the days of Queen Mary became a bloody Tyrant, and cruel Persecutor of Christ in his Members (as all the Stories in this Book almost do declare.) Thus he raging all the Reign of the foresaid Queen Mary against the infallible Truth of Christs Gospel, and the true professors thereof, never ceased till he had consumed to Ashes two or three hundred blessed Martyrs, who willingly gave their lives for the Testimony of his Truth; and thinking their punishment in the fire not cruel enough, he went about to invent new Torments for the holy Martyrs of Christ, such was his hatred to the Truth of Christs Gospel: but in the end the Lord God looking upon the affliction and cruel blood-shedding of his Servants, took away Queen Mary the great Pillar of Papistry. After whom succeeded Lady Elizabeth now Queen of England, who staying the bloody Sword of Persecution from raging any further, caused the same Doctor Story to be apprehended, and committed to ward, with many other his complices, sworn enemies to Christs glorious Gospel. The said Story having been a while detained in Prison, at the last, by what means I know not, brake forth of hold, and conveyed himself over the Seas, where he continued a most bloody Persecutor, still raging against Gods Saints with fire and Sword. Insomuch as he growing to be familiar and right dear to Duke Doria in Antwerp, received special Commission from him to search the Ships for goods forfeited, and for English Books, and such like.

And in this favour and authority he continued there for a space, by the which means he did much hurt, and brought many a good Man and Woman to trouble and extreme Peril of life through his blood-thirsty cruelty: but at the last the Lord (when the measure of his iniquity was full) proceeded in judgment against him, and cut him off from the face of the earth, according to the prayers of many a good man; which came to pass in order as followeth. It being certainly known (for the bruit thereof was gone forth into all Lands) that he not only intended the subversion and overthrow of his native Country of England, by bringing in forin Hostility, if by any means he might compass it; but also daily and hourly murdered Gods People, there was this Platform laid (by Gods providence no doubt) that one Master Parker a Merchant should saile unto Antwerp and by some means convey Story into England.

This Parker arriving at Antwerp, tuborned certain to repair to Dr. Story, and to signify unto him, that there was an English Ship came, fraught with Marchandise, and that if he would make search thereof himself, he should find store of English Books, and other things for his purpose. Story hearing this, and suspecting nothing, made haste towards the Ship, thinking to make the lame his Prey; and coming aboard, searched for English Heretical Books (as he called them) and going down under the Hatches, because he would be sure to have their Blood if he could, they clapped down the Hatches, hoisted up their Sails, having (as God would) a good gale, and sailed away into England: where they arriving presented this bloody Butcher, and Traitorous Rebel Story to the no little rejoicing of many an English heart. He being now committed to Prison, continued there a good space: during all which time he was laboured and solicited daily by wife and learned Fathers to recant his devilish and erroneous opinions, to conform himself to the Truth, and to acknowledge the Queens Supremacy. All which he utterly denied to the death, saying, that he was sworn Subject to the King of Spain, and was no subject to the Queen of England, nor the his Sovereign Queen; and therefore (as he well deserved) he was condemned (as a Traitor to God, the Queens Majesty, and the Realm) to be drawn, hanged, and quartered; which was performed accordingly, he being laid upon a Hurdle, and drawn from the Tower along the streets to Tiborn where he being hanged till he was half dead, was cut down and stripped; and (which is not to be forgot) when the executioner had cut off his privy Members, he rushing up upon a sudden, gave him a blow upon the ear, to the great wonder of all that stood by: and thus ended this bloody Nimrod his wretched life, whose judgment I leave to the Lord.

Here, before the closing up of this Book, in no case I would be unremembered the tragical and furious Massacre in France, wherein were Murthered so many hundreds and thousands of Gods good Martyrs. But because the true narration of this lamentable story is set forth in English at large, in a Book by it self, and extant in print already, it shall the less need now to discourse that matter with any new repetition; only a brief touch of summary notes for remembrance may suffice. And first for brevity sake to overpass the bloody butchery of the Romish Catholics in Orange against the Protestants, most fiercely and unawares breaking into their houses, and there, without mercy, killing Man; Woman, and Child; of whom some being spoiled and naked, they threw out of their lofts into the streets; some they smothered in their houses with smother, with sword and weapon sparing none, the Carkasses of some they threw to dogs, with was An. 1570 in the Reign of Charles 9. Likewise to pass over the cruel slaughter at Roane, where the Protestants being at a Sermon without the City Walls upon the Kings Edict, the Catholics in fury ran upon them coming home, and slew of them above 40. at least, many more they wounded. This example at Roane, stirred up the Papists in Diepe to practise the like rage also against the Christians there returning from the Sermon; whok slaughter had been the greater, had they not more wisely before been provided of weapons for their own defence at need. All which happened about the same year aforesaid Anno 1570. But these with such like I briefly overslip, to enter now into the matter above promised, that is, briefly to entreat of the horrible and most barbarous Massacre wrought in Paris, such as I suppose was never heard of before in any Civil dissension amongst the very Heathen. In few words to touch the substance of the matter.

After long troubles in France, the Catholick side, foreseeing no good to be done against the Protestants by open force, began to devise how by crafty means to entrap them, And that by two manner of ways: The one by pretending a power to be sent into the lower Countrey, whereof the Admiral to be the Captain; not that the King he meant indeed, but only to understand thereby what power and force the Admiral had under him, who they were, and what were their names. The second was by a certain marriage suborned, between the Prince of Navarre, and the Kings Sister. To this pretended marriage, it was devised that all the chiefest Protestants of France should be invited, and meet in Paris. Among whom first they began with the Queen of Navarre, Mother to the Prince, that should marry the Kings Sister, attempting by all means possible to obtain her consent therunto. She being then at Rochel, and allured by many fair words to repair unto the King, consented at length to come, and was received at Paris; where she after much ado, at length being won to the Kings mind, and providing for the marriage, shortly upon the same fell sick, and within five days departed, not without suspicion, as some said, of poison. But her Body being opened, no sign of poison could there be found, save only that a certain Apothecary made his brag, that he had killed the Queen by certain venomous odours, and smells by him consorted.

After this notwithstanding the marriage still going forward, the Admiral, Prince of Navarre, Comde, with divers other chief States of the Protestants, induced by the Kings Letters and many fair promises, at last were brought to Paris. Whose with great solemnity they were received, but especially the Admiral. To make the matter short, The day of the marriage came, which was the eighteenth of August. Anno 1572. Which marriage being celebrate and solemnized by the Cardinal of Borbone, upon an high stage set up of purpose without the Church Walls, the Prince of Navarre and Comde came down, waiting for the Kings Sister being then at Mass. This done, they resorted all together to the Bishops Palace to dinner. At evening they where had to a Palace in the middle of Paris to supper. Not long after this, being the two and twentieth of August, the Admiral coming from the Council Table, by the way was stricken with a Pistolet, charged with three Pellets, in both his Arms. He being thus wounded, and yet still remaining in Paris, although the Vidam gave him Counsel to flee away, it so fell out that certain Soldiers were appointed in divers places of the City to be ready at a Watch-word at the commandment of the Prince, Upon which Watch-word given, they burst out to the slaughter of the Protestants, first beginning with the Admiral himself, who being wounded with many fore wounds, was cast out of the Window into the street, where his Head being first stricken off, and embalmed with spices to be sent to the Pope, the savage people raging against him, cut off his Arms and Privy Members, and so drawing him three days thorow the streets of Paris, they dragged him unto the place of execution out of the City, and there hanged him up by his heels to the greater shew and scorn of him.

After the Martyrdom of this good Man, the armed Soldiers with rage and violence ran upon all other of the same profession, slaying and killing all the Protestants they knew or could find within the City gates inclosed. This Bloody slaughter continued the space of many days, but especially the greatest slaughter was in the three first days, in which were numbred to be slain, as the story writeth, above ten thousand, Men, Women, old and young, of all sorts and conditions. The Bodies of the dead were carried in Carts to be thrown in the River: so that not only the River was all stained therewith, but also whole streams in certain places of the City did run with gore Blood of the slain Bodies. So great was the outrage of that Heathenish Persecution, that not only the Protestants, but also certain, whom they thought indifferent Papists, they put to the sword in stead of Protestants. In the number of them that were slain of the more learned sort, was Petrus Ramus, also Lambinus, another notorious learned man; Platanus, Lomenius, Chapsius, with others.

And not only within the Walls of Paris this uproar was contained, but it extended further into other Cities and quarters of the Realm, especially Lyons, Orleans, Tholous, and Roane. In which Cities it is almost incredible, nor scarce ever heard of in any nation, what cruelty was shewed, what numbers of good men were destroyed; inasmuch that within the space of one Month thirty thousand at least of Religious Protestants are numbred to be slain, as is credibly reported and storied in the Commentaries of them which testifie purposely of the matter.

Furthermore here is to be noted, that when the Pope first heard of this Bloody stir, he with his Cardinals made such joy at Rome, with their Procession, with their gunshot, and singing of Te Deum, that in honour of that festival act, a jubile was commanded by the Pope with great indulgence, and much solemnity. Whereby thou hast here to discern and judge, with what Spirit and Charity these Catholics are moved to maintain their Religion, which otherwise would fall to the ground without all hope of recovery. Likewise in France no less rejoicing there was upon the 28. day of the said Month, the King commanding publick Processions thorow the whole City to be made, with bonfires, ringing, and singing; bloody day, where the King himself, with the Queen his Mother, and his whole Court resorting together to the Church, gave thanks and laud to God, for that so worthy victory achieved upon St. Bartholomews day against the Protestants, whom they thought to be utterly overthrown and vanquished in all the Realm for ever.

The siege of Rochel during seven Months.

7. A. D. 1573. A. D. 1573. A. D. 1573.

And in very deed to mans thinking it might appear no less after such a great destruction of the Protestants, having lost so many worthy and Noble Captains as then were cut off, whereupon many, for fear revoking their Religion, returned to the Pope, divers fled out of the Realm, such as would not turn, keeping themselves secret, durst not be known nor seen, so that it was past all hope of man, that the Gospel should ever have any more place in France: but such is the admirable working of the Lord, where mans help and hope most faileth, there he most sheweth his strength and helpeth, as here is to be seen and noted. For whereas the little small remnant of the Gospel side, being now brought to utter desperation, were now ready to give over unto the King, and many were gone already against Conscience, yielding to time, yet the Lord of his goodness so wrought, that many were staid and reclaimed again through the occasion first of them in Rochel: Who hearing of the cruel Massacre in Paris, and slaughter at Tholous, most constantly with valiant hearts (the Lord so working) thought to stand to their defence against the Kings power by whose example certain other Cities hearing thereof took no little courage to do the like: as namely Montauban, the City called Nemanium, Sanjer in Occitania, Millialdum, Mirebellum, Fudussa, with other Towns and Cities more: who being confederate together, exhorted one another to be Circumspect, and take good heed of the false dissembling practices not to be trusted of the merciles Papists, intending nothing but Blood and destruction.

These things thus passing at Rochel, the King hearing thereof, giveth in commandment to Captain Sirocassius and Guardius to see to Rochel. After this he sendeth a Noble man, one Birominus, requiring of the Rochel men to receive him for their Governour under the King. Of this great Consultation being had, at length the Rochel men began to confend upon certain conditions; which being not easily granted unto, and especially they hearing in the mean time what was done to others of their fellows, which had submitted themselves, thought it so better to stand to the defence of their lives and Consciences, and to adventure the worst. Whereupon began great siege and battery to be laid against Rochel both by land and sea, which was Anno 1572. about the fourth day of December. It would require another Volume to describe all things, during the time of this siege, that passed on either side, between the Kings part, and the Town of Rochel; briefly to run over some parts of the matter: In the beginning of the next year following, which was Anno 1573. in the Month of January, commandment was given out by the King to all and sundry Nobles and Peers of France, upon great punishment, to address themselves in most forcible wise to the assailing of Rochel. Whereupon a great concourse of all the Nobility, with the whole Power of France, was there assembled, amongst whom was also the Prince of Anjou, the Kings Brother (who there not long after was proclaimed King of Polonia) accompanied with his other Brother Duke Alanson, Navarre, Conde, and other a great number of States besides. Thus the whole power of France being gathered against one Poor Town, had not the mighty hand of the Lord stood on their side, it had been impossible for them to escape. During the time of this siege, which lasted about seven Months, what Skirmishes and Conflicts were on both sides, it would require a long tractation. To make short, seven principal assaults were given to the poor Town of Rochel, with all the power that France could make. In all which assaults ever the Popes Catholick side had the worst. Concerning the first assault this I find written, that within the space of 26. days were charged against the walls and houses of Rochel, to the number of thirty thousand shot of Iron bullets and Globes, whereby a great breach was made for the Adversary to invade the City: but such was the courage of them within, not men onely, but also of Women, Matrons, and Maidens, with spits, fire, and such other weapon as came to hand, that the Adversary was driven back, with no small slaughter of their Soldiers; onely of the Townsmen were slain and wounded to the number of sixty persons. Likewise in the second assault 2000. great Field-pieces were laid against the Town; whereupon the Adversary attempted the next day to invade the Town, but through the industry of the Soldiers and Citizens, and also of the Women and Maids, the Invaders were forced at length to flee away faster then they came. No better succels had all the assaults that followed: whereby consider (gentle Reader) with thy self, in what great distress these good men were, not of Rochel onely, but of other Cities also, during these seven Months above mentioned, had not the mighty hand of the Lord almighty sustained them. Concerning whose wondrous operation for his Servants in these hard distresses, three memorable things I find in History to be noted.

The one concerning the siege of Sanjer; which City being terribly battered and razed with Gunshot of great Canons, and Field-pieces, having at one siege no less then three thousand Bullets and Gunstones flying upon them, wherewith the crests of their helmets were pierced, their sleeves, their hose, their hats pierced, their weapons in their hands broken, their wals shaken, their houses rent down; yet not one person slain nor wounded with all this, save onely at the first a certain Maiden, with the blast of the shot flying by her, was stricken down, and died.

The second thing to be noted is this, that in the same City during all the time of the siege, which lasted seven Months and a half, for all the Ordinance and Battering-pieces discharged against them, which are numbered to six thousand, not so much as 25. persons in all were slain.

The third example, no less memorable, was at Rochel: Whereas the poorer sort began to lack corn and victual, there was sent to them every day in the river (by the hand of the Lord no doubt) a great multitude of fish (called Swindones) which the poorer people did use in stead of bread. Which fish, the same day as the siege brake up, departed and came no more. Testified by them which were present there in Rochel all the time.

What number was lost on both sides during all this seven Months Warr, it is not certainly known. Of the Kings camp what number was slain, by this it may be conjectured, that 120. of their Captains were killed and slain, of whom the chiefest was Duke Dersmoale.

To close up this Tragical Story, concerning the breaking up of this seven Months Siege: thus it fell out, that shortly after the seventh assault given against Rochel, which was Anno 1573. about the Month of June, word came to the Camp, that Duke Anjou the Kings Brother was proclaimed King of Polonia. Whereat great joy was in the Camp. By occasion whereof the New King, more willing to have peace, entred talk with them of Rochel: who, as he shewed himself to them not ungente, so found he them again to him not uncomfortable. Whereupon a certain agreement pacificatory was concluded between them upon conditions. Which agreement the new Polonic King effusions preferred to the French King his Brother, not without some fute and intercession to have it ratified. The King also himself, partly being weary of these chargeable Wars, was the more willing to assent thereunto. And thus at length through the Lords great work, the Kings Royal consent under form of an Edict was set down in writing, and confirmed by the King, containing 25. Articles. In which also were included certain other Cities of the Protestants, granting to them benefit of Peace and liberty of Religion. This Edict or Mandate sent down from the King by his Herald at Arms, Birominus in the Kings name caused to be solemnly proclaimed at Rochel. An. 1573. Junii 20. the tenth day of June.

The year next following, 1574. for two things seemeth fatal and famous; for the death first of Charles the ninth th French King, also most of all for the death of Charles, Cardinal of Lorraine, Brother to Guise. Of the manner of the Cardinals death, I find little mention in stories. Touching the Kings death, although Ric. Dinsith saith nothing, for fear belike, because he being a French-man, his name is expressed and known: but another story (whom the said Dinsith doth follow) bearing no name, saith thus: That he died the 25. day of May, upon Whitsun even, being of the age of 25. years: and addeh more; Pro fluxivo sanguinis illum laborasse certum est.

Which story, if it be true, as is recorded and testified, may be a Spectacle and Example to all persecuting Kings and Princes polluted with the Blood of Christian Martyrs. And thus much briefly touching the late terrible Persecution in France.

The Conclusion of the Work.

And thus to conclude (good Christian Reader) this present Translation, not for lack of matter, but to shorten rather the matter for largeness of the Volume, I here stay for this present time, without further addition of more discourses, either to over-weary thee with longer tediousness, or to overcharge the Book with longer prolixity, having hitherto set forth the Acts and Proceedings of the whole Church of Christ, namely of the Church of England, although not in such particular perfection, that nothing hath overpassed us; yet in such general sufficiency, that I trust not very much hath escaped us, necessary to be known, touching the principal affairs, doings and proceedings of the Church and Churchmen. Wherein may be seen the whole state, order, descent, course and continuance of the same, the increase and decrease of true Religion, the creeping in of Superstition, the horrible troubles of Persecution, the wonderful assistance of the Almighty in maintaining his Truth, the glorious constancy of Christs Martyrs, the rage of the Enemies, the alteration of Times, the travels and troubles of the Church, from the first Primitive age of Christs Gospel, to the end of Queen Mary and the beginning of this our gracious Queen Elizabeth. During the time of her happy Reign, which hath hitherto continued (through the gracious protection of the Lord) the space now of 24 years, as my wish is, so I would be glad the good will of the Lord were so, that no more matter of such lamentable Stories may ever be offered hereafter to write upon. But so it is, I cannot tell how, the elder the World waxeth, the longer it continueth, the nearer it hasteneth to its end, the more Satan rageeth, giveth still new matter of writing Books and Volumes: inasmuch that if all were recorded and committed to History, that within the said compass of this Queens Reign hitherto hath happened, in Scotland, Flanders, France, Spain, Germany, besides this our own Country of England and Ireland, with other Countries more, I verily suppose one Eusebius or Polyhistor, which Pliny writeth of, would not suffice thereunto. But of these incidents and occurrences hereafter more, as it shall please the Lord to give grace and space. In the mean time the Grace of the Lord Jesus work with thee (gentle Reader) in all thy studious Readings. And while thou hast space, so imply thy self to read, that by reading thou mayst learn daily to know that which may profit thy Soul, may reach thee experience, may arm thee with patience, and instruct thee in all Spiritual knowledge more and more to thy perpetual comfort and salvation in Christ Jesus our Lord; to whom be all glory in Secula Seculorum, Amen.

Edward Bulkeley to the Christian Reader.

Whereas that excellent Man, both for learning and godliness, Mr. John Foxe of blessed memory, ended this worthy Work with this short declaration of that horrible Massacre and Murder of Gods Saints and Servants in France; I have thought good to set down the same more particularly and largely, and afterward to add thereto a Declaration of other outrageous Cruelties, committed in France by the Favourers and Followers of the Church of Rome upon faithful Christians, both before and after the said Massacre: All faithfully collected and taken out of the History of that honourable man James August Thuanus, President of the Parliament of Paris, and Counsellor of State to the late French King Henry the Fourth. And thus I have done, that we may thereby be the more moved to hate and abhor that bloody Babylon of Rome, and to take the better heed, that by our sins and contempt of Gods holy Word, by his great mercy committed unto us, we do not again fall into the cruel clays thereof, and into the bloody hands of her Followers; as most certainly we had done, if God in great mercy had not prevented that savage, barbarous, and monstrous Powder-Treason: of which great and merciful Deliverance God make us mindful and truly thankful in glorifying his Name, and serving him in true holiness and righteousness all the days of our life, Amen.

When the Admiral was wounded in both his Arms, he immediately thereupon said to Maure, Preacher to the Queen of Navarre deceased; O my Brother, I do now perceive that I am beloved of my God, seeing that for his most holy Names sake I do suffer these wounds. Then he whispered in the ear of one of them that bare up his Arm, that he should deliver an hundred Crowns to Martin his Preacher, to be given to the Poor of the Church of Paris.

The Admiral was slain by Bemius, of whom Alineus (one of them that came to kill him) did afterwards report, that he never saw man in so present peril, so constantly and confidently suffer death.

Many honourable Men and great Persons were then murdered, as Count Rochefcauld, Telineus the Admirals Son-in-Law, Antonius Clavomontus Marquis of Ravely, Lewes Bullius, Bandineus, Pluvialius, Bernius, &c. Francis Nompas Caumontius, being in Bed with his two Sons, was slain with one of them: the other was strangely preserved, who after came to great honour and dignity.

Stephen Cavalerie Prime, chief Treasurer to the King in Paysters, a very good man, and careful of the Common-wealth, after he had paid for his life a good sum of Money, was cruelly murdered by some Cut-throats, whom Stephen Fargen Patandery, that gaped for his Office, had sent for that purpose.

Magdalen Briffonet, an excellent Woman and learned, the Widow of Ieremus, Master of Requests to the King, flying out of the City in poor apparel, was taken, cruelly murdered, and cast into the River.

Two thousand were murdered in one day; and the same liberty of killing and spoiling continued certain days after.

Peter Placie was stabbed in with Daggers, and killed. At Meldis two hundred were cast into Prison, and being brought out as Sheep to the slaughter, were cruelly murdered. There also 25 Women were slain.

At Orleans a thousand of Men, Women and Children were murdered.

The Citizens of Augustobona, when they heard of the Massacre at Paris, shut the Gates of their Town that no Protestant might escape, and cast all that they suspected into Prison, which afterward were brought forth and murdered.

At Avaricum in like manner the suspected for Religion were cast into Prison, and afterward murdered.

At the Town of Charite, a Troop of Lewes Gonzaga's Horsemen killed 18 Persons.

At Lions there were 800 most miserably and cruelly murdered; the Children hanging at their Fathers necks, and the Fathers embracing their Children, &c. Three hundred were slain in the Archbishops house. The Monks would not suffer their Bodies to be buried.

At Romanium seven were killed.

At Tholossa 200 were murdered.

At Roan 500 were put to death. At the last Thuanus writeth thus; This example passed unto other Cities, and from Cities to Towns and Villages, so that it is by many published, that in all the Kingdom above 30000 were in these tumults divers ways destroyed; although I think the number was somewhat less.

A little before this Massacre, a Man, Nurse, and Infant carried to be baptized, were all three murdered.

There was wonderful great joy in Rome for this Massacre, and the Pope with his Cardinals went in solemn Procession to the Church of Saint Mark, to give thanks unto God for this great benefit bestowed upon the See of Rome and the Christian world. And the Monday following there was solemn Service in the Church of Minerva, at which the Pope and the Cardinals were present.

A Jubile also was published, and in the evening the great Ordinance was flung off in the Castle of St. Angelo. The Cardinal of Loren gave a thousand Crowns to him that brought News of it.

Bricamotus an old Man of seventy years, and Carogamus, were laid upon Hurdles and drawn unto Execution: and being in the way reviled, and defiled with dirt cast upon them, they were hanged. Bricamotus might have been pardoned, if he would publicly confess, that the Admiral had conspired against the King; which he refused to do.

After a City in the County of the Albigenis, held by the Protestants, being upon the Kings great promises of their safety, delivered up into the hands of Cruce a Noble man, was notwithstanding with murders and spoil cruelly wasted.

At Burdeaux, by the instigation of a Monk, called Esmond Angerius, were 264. cruelly murdered, of whom some were Senators. This Monk continually provoked them in his Sermons to this slaughter.

There was great rejoicing in the Camp of the Duke Albis, for the murder in Paris.

I have thought good to add herewith the like Cruelty, committed at sundry other times before this Massacre, by the followers of the Church of Rome, against the true Professors of Christ his Gospel; taken also out of the Histories of the said honourable man James August Thuanus, who in the first part of his second Tome, lib. 29. writeth thus.

AT Agendicum in Main, a cruel slaughter of the Protestants was committed by the instigation of Amatus, inquisitor of Criminal causes, Cardinal Guisse (as was thought) not being ignorant thereof, being Archbishop of that City, who, to the stirring up of more hatred against him, was accused to have been at the stir and slaughter at Vassy. A rumour being spread abroad, that the Protestants had taken secret Counsel to invade and spoil the Churches, above an hundred of every estate and sex were by the enraged People killed or drowned in the River Isanna, which runneth by the City, the houses of many were spoiled; the Church without the City where the Protestants assembled, was pulled down and made equal to the ground, and their Vines pulled up by the Roots.

The Duke of Guisse entred into Blaise; which although he got without any fight, yet all furious liberty was permitted to the Souldiers, houses were spoiled, many Protestants which had remained were slain, or drowned in the River; neither were Women spared, of whom some were defiled, and more murdered: Amongst whom one Matron of good birth, having escaped drowning in Water, could not escape from the hands of the murderers. From thence he went to Mere, a Town two Leagues from Blaise, where Protestants had frequent assembly at Sermons; which for many days together was spoiled, and many killed, and Cassibonius the Pastor was drowned in the next River.

At Lagolun certain men were strangled, the Preachers eyes pulled out, and he burned by a loft and flow fire.

At Anjou, Alitons the Pastor was murdered, certain Women slain, and some defiled; amongst which two Sisters were abused in the sight of their Father, who was bound to a Well to behold that sight.

John Timry a Preacher, above 70. years old, being taken was drowned in the River Clavum.

An hundred and twenty being put into the Church at Celadum, were cruelly murdered and drowned in the River Liger. Many more Men and Women, which would not go to Mats, were slain by the procurement of one Antus Phylax Rulul, who had been a Monk, and was then a leader of footmen. Children that had been baptized by the Protestants, were by them re-baptized.

John Burgeon, President of Turen, an old man, being suspected to be a Protestant, having bought with a great sum of money his life and safety, was notwithstanding taken and beaten cruelly with Clubs and Staves, and being stripped of his Cloaths, was brought to the Bank of the River Liger, and was hanged his feet upward, and head downward in the Water up to his breast; then (he yet alive) they opened his Belly, pulled out his Guts, and threw them into the River, and taking his heart, put it upon a spear, carrying it with contumelious words about the City.

Renatus Campanus did throw above fifty whom either for Religion he suspected, or otherwise hated, into his great Water Pond, which in jest he used to call his great Cup. In the Water Pools of one Bojordanus were found above fifty Bodies of men that had been cruelly slain.

At Samararobridge certain were slain, Bibles in the French Tongue and other Books were burned, and the Pulpit overthrown.

At Abbat-villa, Robert Sanderisus Allocarius was slain, and his Son Francis, who first was wounded and left in the way for dead, and after being alive, and carried into an Inn, was taken out and killed. Francis Cantalape Seconvilla, and Antony Cancellarius Altamrius Kinman flying away, were taken and killed.

At Valonia a Tumult of purpose was raised, Huswill, and Cocavill dwelling thereby were slain with certain men of the Town, of whom was one John Gifford, who being overwhelmed with Stones, and being supposed to be dead, yet after lifting up his head, and calling for help, was with Spits and Spears thrust thorow and killed; the hatred of the furious People being fearfully fatished with his double death.

In Andomaribridge the Pastor or Prescherling sick, was taken, and having his eyes put out, and his ears cut off, was slain, and his Body was drawn thorow the Town unto the Gallows.

Three Women were drawn thorow the streets and cast into the River, and drowned.

The Town of Barre being taken by the Papists, all kind of cruelty was there used, Children were cut up, and the Guts of some of them and hearts pulled out, which in rage they gnawed with their Teeth. They that were in the Castle, when they had yielded themselves to the will of the Conquerors, were almost all hanged. One Ralet spared not his own Son, but suffered him in that Tumult to be hanged.

The Italians which served the King did for hatred of Religion break forth into such fury, that they did rip up a living Child, did take his Liver, being as yet red hot, and eat it as meat.

A young Maid of 16. years old was murdered.

When the City Maisson was taken by corrupting the Keeper of the Keys, whom yet they killed, great cruelty was shewed, so that they counted it a sport to cut off mens Legs and Arms.

Sampontius inviting Gentlemen to Supper, would walk with them, and having his Souldiers about him used to cast some of his Prisoners (of which he had many) from the Bridge into the River, and with that Spectacle did satisfy the eyes of his guests; of whom he would often ask, whether they did ever see men leap betwixt.

When Gensrimus a follower of the Duke of Guisse was slain, there were found amongst his Papers Letters of the said Duke; wherein he gave commandment for slaying of the Protestants in every City of his Government.

Samarivins having taken without bloodshed the Town of Cisterion, yet obtained not from shedding of Blood; but having killed above 200. of them that did not resist him spoiled the Town.

At Albia of Cabars upon the Lords day the 16. kal. of December, the Papists at the ringing of a Bell did break open the doors, where the Protestants were assembled, and killed without difference, some in the place, some as they were fleeing away; were here and their slain, among whom was one Guaceries a Rich Merchant;

At Galliacum, which is a Town by the River Tarvois, a great slaughter of Protestants was committed by the means of Lawrence Strossius Cardinal, Bishop of Albiens, in which, above 150. were murdered: of which, some were drawn thorow the streets, and after death cast into the fields, to be eaten of Kites; other were drowned in the River, or cast head-long from an high place. Protestants houses were marked with Chalk to be murdered.

The Town of Nonne being yielded to the Papists, upon condition, that the forain Souldiers should depart safe with horse and Armour, leaving their Ensigns, and that the Enemies Souldiers that were foot-men should not enter into the Town, and that no harm should be done to the Townsmen; but that they might (if they would) go into the Castle: after the yielding of it, the Gates were set open, and straight they came to murdering and spoiling without any regard of the forsaide conditions. Men and Women without difference were killed; the streets founded with miserable mourning, Blood flowing in the ways, and the lascivious Souldiers Swords shining in the flames of the fire, which they had cast upon the houses. Many were cruelly killed, being thrown down headlong from on high. Among others, this example of inordinate filthiness and cruelty is reported. A certain Woman being drawn out of a privy place, into the which to avoid the rage of the Souldiers she had fled with her Husband, was in his sight shamefully defiled: and then being commanded to draw a Sword, not knowing to what end, was forced by others, who ordered her hand, to give her Husband a deadly wound, whereof he died; the Souldiers not being content to defile her Body, but also to make her to defile her hands with the slaughter of her Husband.

Hitherto out of the history of Jacobus Augustus Thuanus (who is reported to be a Catholic) which endeth in the year 1578. wherein I have for shortness sake omitted sundry particular outrages and murders committed by that bloody Babylonical Generation; from whose boody hands God in mercy defend and preserve us.

Hereunto I will only ad the murdering of Henry the third, and Henry the fourth, late French Kings, by Papists: the former murdered by Clement a Monk; the other by Francis Ravelliac a Franciscan Friar: and to make up the full measure of impiety and cruelty, the Barbarous and monstrous Powder Plot shall follow; whereby it was intended and purposed to have blown up the Parliament house, when our gracious King James, Prince Henry, all the Nobility, Bishops, Knights and Burgesses should be assembled therein. To the effecting of which devilish device, about thirty four Barrels of Gunpowder were laid under the said Parliament house, and there found. This bloody conspiracy was practised by precise Papists, whose Consciences would not permit them to come to our Churches; but did easily suffer and allow them to attempt this savage and horrible practice: Viz. Francis Tresham two Winters, Sir Everard Digby, Percy, &c. Hereunto also three Jesuits (or rather Jesuites) Henry Garner (who suffered death for it) Oswald Tesmond, and John Gerrard were privy and consenting. Tesmond encouraged Bates unto it, absolved him; and ministered the Sacrament to him. Gerrard ministered the Oath of secrecy to Catesby, Percy, John Wright, Thomas Winter, and Fawkes; absolved them, and ministered the Sacrament unto them, as it is more largely declared in the Book intituled, The Relation of the proceedings against the barbarous Traitors, Garner a Jesuit, and his confederates, Page 50. & 62. & 133. This bloody device should have been executed the fifth of November, 1605. but was by Gods great mercy discovered and defeated, to the just destruction of those detestable Traitors, who fell into the Pit that they digged for others, and to the eternal shame and confusion of that bloody Babylon of Rome, and her favourers and followers.

AFFLICTIONS and PERSECUTIONS of the FAITHFUL, preparing them with Patience to suffer Martyrdom.

C H A P. I.

Shewing, That such as will live godly in Christ Jesus, must needs suffer Afflictions.

WE are all prone by Nature to decline Afflictions, each one supposing to find out some back way to escape them. First, Some are of opinion, that they can quit themselves by playing the Temporizers: Secondly, Others, by hiding and concealing themselves: Thirdly, Another sort, by flying from those places where Tyrants vex and domineer: Fourthly, A fourth, thinking to bear off blows by their greatness and credit they have gotten in the World: Fifthly and lastly, A fifth sort imagining to find some evasion, either by reason of their Allies, or good Services which they have done; dreaming forsooth, that either these or the like projects should yield them good respect, and preserve them from being called into question by those that hate them. In a word, which of us hath not some fetch or other to break loose, if he should be either examined or pursued?

This is the true cause that so few are prepared, and careful timely to foresee what belongs to suffering shame and disgrace for the truth, as the discommodities of long imprisonment, or what appertains to the constant and patient bearing of hideous torments and death for the Cause of the Gospel. But alas, all these are but as fig-leaves, and vain hopes, which being somewhat pleasing to the flesh do only dull and deceive us; causing us to grow secure and careless; and so unprovided to suffer till we be surprised, and in safe custody in our enemies hands. So that when we should be able to give a reason of the hope that is in us, we have not a word to say.

To prevent these so great inconveniences, let us hold this for a sure Principle, That it is impossible to live godly, and not suffer persecution. For God hath so decreed, That if we will partake of the glory of his Son, we must first be conform'd to him in his Sufferings. Yea, this is that strait gate and narrow way which leadeth unto life. Through much tribulation we must enter into the Kingdom of God, Acts 14. 22. and whosoever bears not the Cross of Christ, following him, cannot be his Disciple. The Apostle in the Epistle to the Hebrews plainly tells us, That if we be Children, we must taste of that Discipline which God nurtures his withal in his Family. It is, and must be the portion of God's beloved ones, to live in this World as sheep among Wolves.

Indeed, if we could live without sin, we might then conceive some hope of freedom from the Cross. But whilst corrupt Nature lives in us, and brings forth such bitter fruits, God hath, and will in all Ages raise up some Tyrant or cruel, as means to mortifie and tame the pride and rebellion thereof. Devils may as soon cease to be, as that enmity should cease between the Seed of the Woman and the Seed of the Serpent. As long as the Church continues to be Christ's poor Barque in the Salt Sea of this World, she must make her account to be tossed with storms and tempests of Persecutions.

What should I say, no Crown is to be expected in Heaven, if we will not fight the good fight of faith here on earth; nor to reap in joy, if in this world we refuse to sow in tears: The life of our Lord Jesus Christ cannot be manifest in us, except we bear about in our body the dying of the Lord Jesus.

Let every Christian then hold this for certain, That when the World ceaseth to hate the Children of God, and the Devil to envy them, then may they look, and not before, to live in the World without Persecutions.

the Crofs of Chrift becomes; learn we of the silly Ant in Summer, to store up food against the cold and Stormy Winter of Affliction: Imitating those, who dwelling in the defended Cities, are careful to provide themselves of munition before they be besieged.

CHAP. II.

Shewing, How the Faithful ought to bear Persecutions patiently.

Forasmuch as Afflictions are thus necessary and inevitable to Believers, that whether they will or no, they must pass this strait way: they ought to betlink them how to make hard things easie. And herein to follow the dealing of the Physician with his Patient, who, intending to give him some bitter Potion or Pill, is wont to sweeten the one with Syrrup, and to wrap up the other in Gold, lest he should abhor to take in, or swallow down, either the one or the other. Even so are we, by committing to memory some elect and choice Sentences of Holy Scriptures concerning the Crofs, to cover over the same therewith, that it may not appear so dreadful unto us, as we apprehend it to be. For that which causeth us to fly and fear Persecution, is a prejudicate opinion we have conceived in our minds, that some deadly Poison lurks under it. And therefore we shun so much as to taste a little sup thereof, in regard we imagine it to be the only bitter drug in the World.

Now, that which makes us fall into, and breeds in us this Error, is because (as therein so almost in all things else) we are led rather by sense, than by the word, by which we ought to ballance and regulate all our persuasions and resolutions. For could we believe what the Prophets and Apostles (inspired of God) have preached and written for the use of Posterity, as touching Persecutions, we would not only have them in a more honourable esteem, but thankfully and patiently bear them.

To which end, let us endeavour firmly to imprint in our minds these and the like Sentences. S. Paul tells us, That if we be reproached for the Name of Chrift, we may think our selves happy; for the Spirit of Glory and of God (saith he) resteth upon you. And S. Paul speaking of himself and his Associates, saith thus, And not only so, but we glory in tribulation also, knowing that tribulation worketh patience, and patience experience, &c. And in another place, God forbid that I should glory save in the Crofs of our Lord Jesus Chrift. These places, with sundry others to the same purpose, do sufficiently manifest how much the true Christian ought to think himself honoured of God, when he pleaseth him to call such an one forth to suffer for his name in the defence of his Truth.

What other thing else, I pray you, was the cause of S. Pauls glorying, and that glory in a higher degree, which Chrift hath obtained for us by his death; with which glory he is now crowned in the Kingdom of his Father? What else is it which is promised to the Elect, as a recompence of their Faith in Gods promises and all their loyal services, but glory to the righteous? What is the principal glory which we attribute to the Martyrs? Is it not in regard of their invincible patience and constancy of faith, by which they overcame the world and their own flesh, which is not to be esteemed a small or mean victory?

If Alexander obtained so great renown by conquering Darius; and Scipio for discomfiting Hannibal, &c. who slew but a few mortal men like themselves; how much are we, in comparison of them, to admire their valour, who have not only warred against men, but against their threats, gibbets, fires, yea against death it self, and in the end triumphed over it? We worthily magnifie the prowess of Sampson and Shamgar; the one for killing a thousand men with the Jaw-bone of an Ass; the other for killing six hundred men with an Ox goad. Yet did the force of the Martyrs far excel theirs, who with the Sword of the Spirit, which is the Word of God, were enabled to overcome the Devil with all his Retinue.

Judg. 11. 19. Chap. 3. 11.

Eph. 6. 17.

Tertullian tells us, That there is no better Order of Knighthood, nor Chains of greater price, than those to which the Martyrs of Jesus Chrift are fastened, nor richer Bracelets than the Manacles wherewith their hands are bound. In the Ecclesiastical History it is reported of a good Bishop, who by the Emperor Decius being cast into a filthy stinking Prison or Hole for the Name of Chrift, with as many Irons as he could bear, intreated his Friends (who sometime came to visit him) That after his death they would bury with him the signs and tokens of his Valour; meaning his Bolts and fetters which were put upon his legs and hands; reaching us, That when we see it is the will of God to impose them upon us, and thereby to dub us Knights of his Order, we should esteem our selves no less honoured, than if a King, by way of gratifying a valiant Champion for some great Services done for him, should reward the same with some of his own precious Jewels, and then no less to brave it out in these our Ornaments, than a woman when she see her self decked with all costly array from top to toe.

If that which Cicero writes be true, That no vertue gives to man greater lustre than Magnanimity: we may thence safely conclude, That none ought in this kind to be preferred before a Christian Martyr, who neither loves, desires, or admires ought, save that which is honest and praise-worthy, nor gathers any riches to himself but what he knows to be lasting, and hopes to possess for ever in the Kingdom of Heaven: and therefore sleighting either mens favours or displeasures, as those that are High-born contemn the one, when they seem to smile, and are not much daunted with the frowns of the other, knowing right-well that all things under the Sun are but vanity, and subject to change with their Ages and Seasons.

We read in the Ecclesiastical Story of one Phamutius Bishop of Thebaid, who under the tyranny of Maximinus, having one of his eyes put out, never presented himself before Constantine the Great, but that good Emperor embracing of him would kiss that eye, which being lost, we know how unseemly it causeth that part to be. But thus the Emperor would shew, That nothing ought to be in higher esteem with us, than the Crofs of Chrift; and the marks thereof when we bear or wear them on any part of our Bodies.

If the good and holy life of a Christian be so much set by of us, then must the death of such a one be much more glorious, when for the Name of Chrift, he takes the same joyfully. Who could be more dear in the eye of God the Father, than his Son Jesus Chrift? Yet gave he him to suffer death for our sins; and by suffering the same, according to the will and appointment of his heavenly Father, hath he not obtained a name which is above every name, That at the name of Jesus every knee should bow, &c?

If Gods glory ought to be preferred before all things, yea, our own salvation; and that Chrift by dying to save us, hath obtained the greatest glory that ever was; what may we judge of that death we endure for his Honour, his Word, and for the maintenance of his pure Worship and Service?

Abraham never performed a more honourable act, than in offering up his Son Isaac at Gods command, nor for which he is more praised. I demand then, that seeing our own life is more dear and precious to us than the life of another, whether the Martyrs, who according to the will of God, and for his honour, have been so prodigal of their blood, have not deserved greater, or at least an equal praise and commendation with Abraham?

The Bishops of old had such an honourable esteem of Martyrdom, that they preferred it before their Episcopal Dignities; so as both themselves, and their Disciples and Followers whom they had taught, were so ambitious thereof, that when they wanted opportunity to suffer, being excluded therefrom by the interceding of Friends, were not the first that suffered, they took it so to heart, that some of them carried the grief thereof to their Graves.

Think, I pray you, what a shame it were for a Gentleman, who being called by his Prince to fight in his wars, should buse himself only about combing, curling, and perfuning his hair, tooting all day long in a Looking-glass, to deck and attire himself: and then judge by that, what valiant Soldiers we are, and what a goodly reputation of his Epistle to the Martyrs of his time. It was Tertullian Bishop of Autun in the year 150 A.D. Chapt. 5. c. 16.

In his Book of Offices.

Matth. 1. 17.

tation we shall reap either at the hands of God, or of good men, if in our spiritual warfare, wherein we are to be employed during our whole life, whilst the alarm is struck up, and every one mounted to give the onset in the face of the enemy, we in the mean time will play least in sight, hiding our selves behind every bush, as Scholars that are loth to go to School for fear of the Rod.

Good God! That men of noble spirits should so much affect the renown of being valiant, fearing nothing more than to be reputed for base Fellows and Cowards; yea some are so jealous thereof, that they cannot endure to hear so much as a suspicion of flying, and yet all this their valour tends only to cover a fame which consists in skill how to kill and destroy mens lives.

Now we being Kings; then and the adopted Children of God, if either greatness of our Courage, or nobleness of our House or Birth whence we are descended, may prevail any thing with us: then who, I pray you, ought to shew forth more valour than the faithful, or more dread the staining of their honour by playing the Dastards? This being yet one Argument more to put Spirits in them; namely, that their prowess tends not to kill and slay mens bodies, as that of worldlings doth, but to save, heal, support and succour, as the Arm and Power of God, which is far more honourable than the other.

CHAP. III.

Manifesting the great profit and benefit which the Faithful reap by Persecution.

HAVING shewed in the former Chapter that a more honourable Condition cannot befall a Christian than to suffer Affliction for the Name of Christ; we are here to shew how nothing is more beneficial and profitable, which will the better appear if we reckon up some few particulars thereof. To begin with the first then. In affliction God manifests his readiness to comfort us, and his power in sustaining and upholding us, that we sink not under the weight of them. Examples whereof we have in Joseph and David, and sundry others; who by the afflictions they suffered for righteousness sake, were prepared (in that which God had appointed) the one to be Governour over the Land of Egypt, the other over the Kingdom of Israel. For as in the time of war, a Captain or a General of an Army, takes occasion there to let his Soldiers see his fidelity, vigilancy, fortitude and skill he hath in leading them out and in; and as a Physician among the sick and diseased, is accustomed to exercise the profundity of his Art and Experience he hath attained; Or as Friends, when we are in distress, do give us to understand what love they bear towards us, and how mindful they are of us; Even so, or much more, doth God declare how greatly he loveth us, and how faithful he is in performing his promises; in the time of our distresses, which is no mean benefit.

For the Experience which we get from his bounty, love, power, and care of our welfare, causeth us with greater confidence to stay and rest our selves wholly upon him; and the trial also of his fidelity doth more and more confirm us in waiting for the performance of his promises, which consequently occasions him to accomplish the same in us.

Again, had we no other good for which we ought to rejoice in afflictions, and accustom our selves to bear them both patiently and thankfully, but this, that they serve to set forth Gods glory, which after a sort shines in us, while during our troubles he upholds us in them, and in due time delivers us out of them; what can we desire more? For his glory ought to be so dear unto us, that if our damnation itself might be a means to advance it, we should not refuse to undergo it, but freely and willingly offer our selves to be cast into Hell. Subjects and Servants joy in nothing more than in seeing their Lords and Masters highly honoured, as on the contrary nothing vexeth them more, than when they see them disesteemed, or ought to be braced tending to the impeaching or dis-favouring their estimation or honour. Shall we then, who are not only Subjects and Servants, but have obtained the Privilege to be accounted Sons and Friends in our Fathers House and Family, shall not we, I say, rejoice? The second fruit which we reap from afflictions, is, that hereby God multiplies his gifts and graces upon us, as it is written, My grace is sufficient for thee: for my power is made perfect in weakness, 2 Cor. 12. 9. Humility, Faith, Patience, Prudence, and Repentance, are augmented and increased in us by suffering percutious. For look as bodily exercise is an help to increase health, strength, and heat in the outward man; and catechising or passing of children (to which we often call them) is the way whereby they grow in knowledge; even so the several trials and troubles, through which God exerciseth, and makes proof of our Faith, cause it to go from a less measure and degree thereof unto a greater.

A Captain, who hath once or twice besieged a City or Castle, becomes much more expert, hardy, and wary than a fresh-water Souldier; so also is the prudence, counsel, courage, fortitude, and zeal much greater, and resolution stronger, in such as have often passed through the pikes of tribulations, than theirs who never knew what such trials meant. Yet I affirm not that Persecutions have always this effect in all, who have but once burnt their fingers in this fire of afflictions; as if they should not cause them sometimes to grow cold, and forsake their Handing: for as concerning such, their Faith was never truly grounded in them, they have only had the outside and shadow of Faith. Even as the Seed sowed upon the stones easily drieth away for lack of good moisture, and rooting, by the excessive beating of the Sun; so this formal Professor, with his painted shew of Religion, and outward appearance of Faith, when the heat of Persecution approacheth, vanisheth away and comes to nothing.

But where Faith is lively rooted in the heart of the Believer, and always watered by the Holy Ghost, although through storms and tempests it may come to be shaken, yet do the roots therefore grow more strong and settled; as the Root of a Tree planted in a high place, which hath the winds still beating upon it, is fortified, and grows daily by the sap, which the other wants that is sated in a low and shady place. In a word, Persecution may be compared to fire, which hardeneth the clay, and melts the wax, and consumes the stubble: so it works divers effects, according as it meets with sundry Subjects; for either it adds courage to one strong in Faith, or else softens such as are yet weak, or in the end ruins such as are Backsliders and Apostates. So did the red Sea save the people of God, who believed in him and his promises, and drowned Pharaoh and his Host (being infidels) in the bottom thereof as a stone.

Now whereas I said, That Persecutions do cause unto us the multiplying of Gods spiritual gifts and graces, my meaning is not only concerning the spiritual, but even of temporal good things also: for howsoever the latter of these happens not so usual to the faithful as the first, because the Lord according to his wise dispensation (knowing mans Nature to be altogether corrupted) would not occasion such, by enriching them, to forget him, and fixing their minds on things earthly, to make them their Treasure; yet it oft comes to pass, that the Faithful have been greatly enriched even by Persecutions.

Among others, Abraham prospered more in power and worldly substance amongst heathens and strangers, than ever he had like to have done in his own Country. Also Joseph, in his Fathers house but a silly Sepherd, being banished thence by the hatred and persecutions of his Brethren, became the Governour of a whole Kingdom, Gen. 42. 6. Did not Daniel also obtain such honours and dignities in Babylon among Idolaters, as he could never have expected to be raised to the like in Judea? But to say no more of ancient examples, I could alledge many like the like, and that of late years. But these formerly mentioned may suffice; but only this I think, that of all such as have been persecuted for the Truths sake, there is not one (if he would speak uprightly) but must acknowledge, that he was never unprovided for in his afflictions, nor left altogether without necessities; God thereby teaching him by experience,

experience, what care be had over him.

Let not Persecution therefore too much daunt us, lest we or our Posterity should by means thereof fall into Poverty. For as we read in the History of Job, after the Sabaeans and Chaldeans had stripped him of all that ever he had, yet God in the end restored to him more than he had lost. Say then that our Goods be confiscated by Tyrants; let us not fear we shall be utterly impoverished thereby; for it is the course which God takes in providing as of food and raiment, by way of rendering us a reward when we have lost our livelihood in his service.

Simile.

King: are usually wont to recompence such as have ventured the loss of their Lives and Livings: in their quarrel. And do we not see many Italians banished out of Naples, and other parts, who have obtained great Pensions in France? Shall we think then, that God hath left love or respect of his, who shew themselves forward to defend his Kingdom and Honour? We may therefore assure our selves, that if we walk with a right foot in the way of Gods Commandments, it is in a manner impossible for us to escape Persecution; but yet on the other side, we ought much more to believe, that his blessings shall never cease to accompany us, and to restore unto us an hundred fold back again that which Tyrants either can or would snatch away from us, be it food or raiment.

Afflictions

serve in the Church, as rods hang'd up here and there in Schools.

The third fruit which we may reap out of our Afflictions, is, That God useth them as his Fatherly rods to correct the offences which we his Children have and daily do commit against him: So as they are no less needful for a Church than rods in a School, or household Discipline in a well governed Family. For we cannot long persist in the right way without them, our Nature being so corrupt as it is; we should grow to be disorder'd, if we were not held in by Persecutions and Afflictions. What should become of a Commonwealth, if every one were left to do as him list? So if God should forbear to correct his Children, the City of God would in time come to be a Sodom, and the Sheepfold of Christ an Hogstie or a Colledge of Devils.

Simile.

A loving Father, that puts forth a Son to be a Scholar, treats his Master now and then to correct him: And if through indulgency be negligent to do it, the Father will complain of him that he marries his Child. Would we be Scholars in Christs School, and not suffer him to do that to us, which we would a Schoolmaster should do to our Children? So indeed, if we shall refuse to bear the yoke in your youth, we may worthily be condemn'd with the world when we are old. It is good for a man, saith the holy Prophet, That he bear the yoke in his youth; for such as the untamedness of our simple Nature, that if it be not betimes curbed, and continually kept short, it will hardly be reclaimed or brought within compass. But if God once take the rod into his hands, we begin then to have some fear of offending him; and if we do, we are ready to confess it. The rod awakens the dead and drowsie Conscience: It makes us mourn and weep, as also to accuse and condemn our selves for our ingratitude towards so good and gracious a Father; we begin to tols and rouse our selves this way and that way to find ease, waiting from whence it will spring forth unto us.

Lam 3.27.

In the perturbation and anxiety of Conscience the holy Spirit of God, seeing us cast down and humbled, sets before our eyes Gods mercy in Christ: Whose blood applied by faith, purgeth and heals the wound which is made therein. This done, he will carry such an hand over us, as shall withhold us from vice, and draw us on to the love of vertue. And thus we see how the Lord doth by little and little correct our sinful disposition, by exercising us with manifold Afflictions; whereby the whilst he provides for his own glory. Let us therewith consider his admirable bounty, seeing thus he covers our shame: for whereat we might justly cause us to suffer for our sins which we have committed against his Majesty, he instead thereof turneth it to suffering for his Truth and holy Names sake; putting this honourable Title as a veil over us, to shadow our nakedness.

For first he alters the nature of the punishment, which is due unto us for our misdeeds, into an assured hope of recompencing all our labour and travail we undergo for righteous causes. And in the second place, he turns the dishonour which we ought to receive, as a token of the vengeance which he might to our ignominy execute upon us, into an immortal Troopie of Honour, wherewith we are crown'd in the presence of God and of his Angels. Thirdly, hereby he graciously provides for the peace of our Consciences, which, in stead of sorrow and grief wherewith they might be wounded for guilt of sin, on the contrary do sensibly rejoyce and glory in these sufferings for the Name of Christ. And fourthly, in the midst of all these joyes, and most singular consolations, yet the Conscience (for all that) ceaseth not to retain a scruple or dram of Rubard mingled herewith, to purge out now and then some corrupt humours, and by Persecutions to put us in mind of our sins committed against the Lord in times past.

But yet he so tempers and moderates these his Druggs, and that in so exquisite and artificial manner, that while he humbleth us with his left hand, he supporteth us with his right hand; if he causeth grief, by and by he comforts us; in smiting he heals us; in which mixture and tempering of things, so much differing in nature and quality, consisteth the salvation of our souls: Even as the skilful and expert Physician, by measuring out an equal and just proportion of contrary Druggs, meeting with our corrupt humours, provides for the safety of our Bodies.

We see that an hot or dry Summer, or a fast Spring Simile, time, brings many Diseases therewith; and how fast Weeds sprout forth among the good Herbs; besides siling our Houses with flies, fleas, and like annoyances; the air and streets with unsavoury and infectious smells: all which in Winter in cold and frosty weather, do take their leave, and are gone: So whilst outward joy and prosperity, with other contentments last, the Body of the Church is pestered with sondry and divers spiritual bad humours and dangerous diseases; which on the contrary it is preserved and freed from by the variety of Gods fatherly rods and chastisements.

Now to proceed to the fourth benefit of Afflictions, (4) which is to kill the pride of the rebellious Nature: The Hebrews use these two words, so abject and humble for one and the same thing; as if the later were the fruit of the former. Nor do we want examples which may sufficiently admonish us, that as worldly prosperity usually causeth our hearts to swell, and to be puffed up; so on the contrary, adversities and afflictions deject and humble us. Whilst Nebuchadnezzar abounded in all his delights, his heart was swollen so far with pride, that he began not only to oppress his Subjects, but to justify even against God himself by his Blasphemies. But when God had once cast him into the Furnace of Affliction, he then became as meek and humble a person as was in all his Kingdom.

Manasse reigning in peace and liberty over the people of Judah, grew so insolent, that there was no impiety or injustice wherein he oversteered not; but being surprised by his enemies, and laid in iron bands and fetters, he was changed in an instant, and became as low in his own esteem as ever he thought himself high: which appeareth in his Prayer made to God in his Affliction, wherein he prostrates himself before him, confessing his offence with great compunction of heart and humility.

S. Paul bare himself like a fierce and cruel Lion all the while he enjoyed favour from the High Priests, raging hither and thither, breaking forcibly into houses, and apprehending such as he found to be Professors of the Gospel; but the same man, being touched by Gods hand in the way as he was journeying towards Damascus (intending there to exercise his Commission upon the Saints and Servants of Christ) suddenly became also as meek as a Lamb, and was ready to prefer his service in whatsoever the Lord would enjoy him to do.

Eusebius, in his Prologue to the eighth Book of his Ecclesiastical History, relates, how God seeing the pride which began to bud and spring forth in the Church, and principally among the Pastors thereof (who out of their ambition strove about Dignities and Preferments therein) was moved for that very thing to raise up that great Persecution which befell the Church under the reign of Diocletian and Maximian, to crack their pride, and to provoke them to prayer, yea rather to watch over their flocks, than to contend who should be the greatest.

Wherein we may see, that by the blessing of God there is a kind of virtue in affliction, to humble and bring those home who through prosperity have forgotten themselves, and strayed out of the right way. Nay, so forcible are they to abate and take down the pride of such who otherwise are hardened and grown obstinate, that even Pharaoh, as rebellious and stiff-necked as he was, seemed sometimes to bend and bow under the mighty hand of God. Whilst God gave him some respite, it is true, he still hardened his heart; but when the next judgment fell upon him and his people, he by and by became as pliable as a glove for ones hand.

Seeing then all of us naturally are thus inclined to wax proud by prosperity, a vice which God sets and opposeth himself against above other, as most abominable in his sight, we ought not methinks so much to be terrified at the approach of Persecutions, forasmuch as they withhold from, and correct in us the same our pride, sooner than all the instructions which are taught us by word of mouth.

The next benefit Afflictions bring us, is to quicken us up to the prayer of faith, which is never better discerned than when Afflictions lye heaviest upon us. In my distress (saith David) I cried unto the Lord. For as our desires to obtain mercy grow stronger, so are our requests more or less fervent; our desire always being according to our necessity. Let a man be sick, poor, or lye under any other great trial, the prayers of such do beyond comparison exceed in earnestness and fervour theirs, who are well and at their hearts ease. David in many of his Psalms pressed the Lord in such wise by prayer, when troubles lay heavy upon him, as if he meant to take no denial.

With what vehemency prayed the Apostles to God for strength, being persecuted by the Rulers, Elders, and Scribes of Jerusalem, inasmuch as the place was shaken where they were assembled? He that shall duly weigh with what prayers and tears our Lord Jesus Christ solicited his Father in his passion, being nigh unto his death, will confess that fire is not more apt to be kindled by the wind which blow upon it, than the prayer of Faith is fired and augmented by Affliction. Would any man have imagined that ever such voices of prayers and praises should have been made in the belly of a Whale, as Jonas made, being there as it were in the bottom of Hell?

receive exceeding contentments therefrom: So Persecutions, albeit in and of themselves naturally abhorred, proceeding partly (as we have said) from Gods displeasure, and partly from Satan and his Instruments; yet do they fit and prepare us for the enjoying of those great Consolations which God hath promised to his Elect. Afflictions cause us to seek first, That God is the Father of Mercies, and of all Comfort: Secondly, That the Office of Christ his Son is, to revive the desolate and broken in heart; Thirdly, That the Holy Ghost is the Comforter of his Church: Fourthly, That the Word of God is it that ministers comfort to us in all our tribulations and adversities which for the most part befall us for adhering thereto.

For as he who would taste meat savoury to his palate, useth salt therewith; so if we would (to purpose) find the Word of God tasteful to us, commonly it is when we are in affliction. When did the Apostles rejoice more, than after they had tasted of the whip for the Name of Christ? When did S. Stephens face appear as if it had been the face of an Angel, but when he stood before the Council at Jerusalem to answer for his life? He that looked upon the three young men in the hot fiery furnace, saw them walking up and down there, as in some pleasant and delightful Meadow or Garden. Behold that ancient Father Ignatius, who (as himself records) being led from Syria to Rome, there to be devoured, accompanied by Sea and Land with a Band of Souldiers (which he terms ten Leopards) wished by the way as he went that he were in the midst of those Beasts which were ready to rent him in pieces, and that their appetites might be whetted to digest him quickly; fearing lest it should happen to him as to some other Martyr, that the Beasts out of a kind of reverence and humanity would not dare to approach unto him; being ready, he said, rather to provoke them to the fight, than that they should suffer him so to escape: Pardon me, I pray you, saith he, for I know what is profitable for me: I now begin to be a Disciple of Christ, I affect nothing this world affords: What is dear to me as Christ? If it be not sufficient for me to be torn with Beasts, let Fires and all the Tortures of Men and Devils be prepared for me; let all my Body be dissembred, my Bones bruised to pieces, so that I may enjoy communion with my God, and come into the presence of my Saviour. And when he heard the Lions roaring, he said, I am the Lords wheat, I must be ground with the teeth of wild Beasts, that I may be found pure bread.

May we not now conjecture by the wishes of this holy Bishop, what sweet delight he found in himself in approaching nigh unto his Martyrdom? As a Queen then, or great Lady takes no greater content than when she perceives in her Husband some apparent signs of his favour, especially then when she hath conceived some suspicion of alienating his affection from her; so it seems to be any way cooled or abated: So the faithful souls who loves the Lord entirely, desires nothing more, nor taketh at any time more delight, than when she feels from her Husband Christ, love for love, but chiefly in the hour of temptation and tribulation, which oft times causeth our heads and hearts to be possessed with jealousies and suspicions that we are out of his favour. Let us conclude then, that seeing (in regard of the reasons heretofore alleged) Persecutions are so honourable, every way profitable and delectable to the true Christian; What cause hath he either to be grieved or terrified when they befall him? Nay, he ought with the Apostles and Martyrs to triumph and rejoice.

To which purpose may fitly be applied that saying of Themistocles to his Children, when he saw the great honours that the King of Persia had conferred upon him by their Exile, finding kinder entertainment among Strangers than in their own Country; We had perished, said he, if we had not perished. So may we say, That did not our natural life perish here by Persecutions, we had never been saved in the Kingdom of Heaven.

Run we then (my Brethren) with patience the race that is set before us; let us not be ashamed, with Simon the Cyrenian, to carry the reproachful Cross of Christ; and seeing we must dye once, let us desire rather to dye gloriously for righteousness sake, than ignominiously by humming it. If Princes had rather dye in a breach than in their bed; and to lose their life in the field, than an Wherein is shewed that Afflictions are not only profitable, but pleasant also.

I Grant that Afflictions considered in themselves are no way joyous but grievous, as the Apostle declareth, Heb. 12. 11. because they are rather Messengers of Gods displeasure; the root also from whence they spring being indeed our sins. But as we see how our Apothecaries in their Shops have the skill to mix poisons with good and healthful Medicines: So our God, being infinitely more wise, knoweth so to temper our afflictions for our good, that out of things, bitter and distasteful to us in their own nature, he can compose not only a profitable, but a most pleasant potion.

Yea, even as Bees out of the bitterest Herbs draw the most sweet honey, so the Lord out of the rarest troubles extracteth such sweets, that at length we shall with Sampson be forced to say, Out of the Exater came forth meat, and out of the Strong came forth sweetness. Hunger in itself is sharp, and hard to be endured; yet our taste is greatly delighted, when we can eat with an appetite. Could any man judge how beneficial a fire were, if he were not some times pinched with cold? Or with what delight could we accept of drink in the heat of Summer, if we were not almost dried up with thirst? Or how acceptable is it, if we were not tired out with travel and labour? As we see then, that these accidents (how grievous or incommensurable soever, now incident unto our nature corrupted by sin) do notwithstanding dispose us to eye at Tilt or Tourney; let us imitate them in this our spiritual Conflict, earnestly entreating the Lord, if it be his blessed will, that we may fight and dye valiantly in the defence of his Truth, and for the honour of his Son. If worldly minded men can and will suffer many hard adventures, some for their honour, others for their profits and pleasures, though but vain and temporary; with what longing should we aspire to that certain and eternal happiness, rest, and glory, wherewith all those shall be crowned who fight manfully and constantly for the cause of Christ?

But the world and worldlings smile at this wisdom, counting it foolishness; the flesh also joyning therewith, thinks all we have said to be either idle phantasies, or meer paradoxes; and no marvel, for both of them being from the earth, can savour nothing but what is earthly, as Christ saith. Between the judgment of the Church, and that of the World, there is a broad difference, when the question is of determining what is true honour, profit, or pleasure; whence it is that in a manner the one scorns that which the other admires and adores. So as they never consent in approving or condemning with one voice that which is questioned; for the belly hath no ears. If therefore we mean to be ruled aright either in the matter of faith or outward manners, let us not be guided therein either by the world's judgment, or yet that of the flesh; for the world is poreblind, and the belly, as we have said, hath no ears.

Ponder we then these things, that so we may be prepared to obey the will of God: let us not wilfully rush into danger; only if God shall call us forth to suffer, purposing thereby to conform us to our Head, and so to accompany that great cloud of Witnesses through the narrow way that leads to his Kingdom, yield we our necks to bear the sweet and easie yoke of Christ. Be it that Satan and his Confederates do persecute the Church of Christ, yet hath she an assured hiding place. The faithful may be imprisoned, but in the mean while they leave the world in a worse Prison, viz. shut up under the wrath of God. They may be in bonds, yet is not that so bad as to lye bound in the bonds of iniquity; they are left shut up in dark and unsavoury places, but how can darkness be grievous to them who are the children of light, especially when God shines upon them with the light of his countenance? Stinking holes and odious smells cannot so offend and annoy them, but that the sweet savour of a good conscience, purified by faith, surmounts all. They may be put into dungeons in the world, yet being chosen of God out of the world, they have their conversation in heaven. Be it that they lose a few commodities here, it is but as if they forsook counters to receive gold, things terrestrial for celestial. A Christian may suffer, but he cannot dye; he may lose his life, but he cannot lose Christ; when he leaves the world he goes to God.

Wherefore let us then put on the whole armour of God, Eph. 6. 11. and as good souldiers of Jesus Christ, enure our selves to 2 Tim. 2. 21. endure hardness. So shall it come to pass, that continuing faithful in this spiritual warfare unto the death, we shall at length receive the Crown of Eternal Life. Rev. 2. 10.

THE HISTORY OF

Four MARTYRS Burnt at Lisle in Flanders, in the Year 1556. whose Names are Robert Oguier, and his Wife, Baudicon and Martin, their two Sons:

THe example which is set before us in this so Godly a Family may well serve for an entrance to the Continuation of the History of forein Martyrs, in that we may thence learn, what those true Ornaments are wherewith both Parents and their Children ought to be decked and adorned, namely with such a light shining forth from the sound knowledge of the Gospel, as whereby the Church of God may be edified and confirmed in seeing them to hold the profession of their Faith constantly even unto the death.

THe City of Lisle may well be placed in the first rank of those Cities of Merchandize in the Low Country of Flanders, Artois and Haynault, upon which the Lord hath multiplied his blessings, not so much of Worldly good things, as of his Spiritual Graces; yea; in so abundant measure, that even under the Tyranny of Antichrist in the Countries aforementioned, few places can be named where the Gospel in that time was more freely published and preached, or with greater zeal received than there.

For, for three years together the Gospel was secretly taught among them, sometime in Houses, then in woods, in Fields, and in Caves of the Earth, not without the hazarding of their dearest life, if they had been discovered: yet could not these apparent dangers under such tyranny cool or abate the burning zeal which almost consumed the heart of this people, hungering and thirsting after the spiritual food of their Souls.

What was among them preached, was accordingly practised: works of mercy and charity were there exercised, not only towards those of the household of Faith, but even towards them which were without; so as many by means hereof were drawn and brought on to the knowledge of Christ. They obtained in their assembly certain Deacons to receive the Alms which were given, men fearing God, being well approved of, who went weekly from House to House to collect the Alms of such as they knew to be Faithful: admonishing every one how to carry themselves in their vocations, and of their duty in contributing towards the relief of the poor Saints.

And thus each one according to his place endeavoured to express and manifest his Faith by the fruits thereof, namely good works.

In a very short space of time, the Lord by the Ministry of his Word (though preached in secret) erected here a flourishing Church, so as the Congregation consisted of a competent number of Men, Women and Children, not only of the City, but out of four or five Villages besides bordering nigh unto it, who came also with an eager appetite to be instructed.

In the mean while, you may conceive that Satan and his adherents ceased not to storm and rage hereat, not being able long to endure these their holy meetings; but when the time was now come, that God had given them power to prove and try his Church, they forefollowed not to exercise their cruelty upon it, which long before they had plotted and contrived.

Upon Saturday then the sixth of March, Ann. 1556. between nine and ten of the Clock in the Night, the Provost of the City with his Sergeants Armed themselves to make search, if they could find any met together in Houses; but as then there was no assembly. Therefore they came to the House of one whose Name was Robert Oguier, which was a little Church, for all both great and small, men-servants and maids were familiarly instructed there in the knowledge of God, as the issue well manifested.

Being violently entred into the said House, and seeking here and there for their prey, they found certain Books which they carried away. But he whom they principally aimed at was not then in the House; viz. Baudicon the Son of the said Robert Oguier, who at that time was gone abroad to commune and talk of the Word of God with some of the Brethren, as he oft used to do. Returning home, he knocked at the door: Martin his younger Brother, watching his coming, bad him be gone, willing him not to come in. But Baudicon, thinking his Brother mistook him for some other, said, it is I, open the door: with that, the Sergeants approaching nigh unto it, opened the same, and calling him to enter in, said, Ah Sir, you are well met, to whom he answered, I thank you my friends, you also are welcome hither.

Then said the Provost, I arrest you all in the Emperors Name, and with that commanded each of them to be bound, to wit, the Husband and his Wife with their two Sons, leaving their two Daughters to look to the House. Now as they conveyed them along through the Streets, Baudicon with a Voice somewhat extended (which might easily be heard at that time of the night) said, O Lord, assist us by thy Grace not only to be Prisoners for thy Name sake, but to confess thy holy truth in all purity before Men, so far as to Seal the same with our Bloods for the edification of thy poor Church.

Thus were they brought into several Prisons, where they were severally handled; yet ceased they not to praise and bless the Lord with one consent; within a few days after, the Prisoners were presented before the Magistrates of the City, and examined as touching their course of life, who directed their Speech first to Robert Oguier in these words: It is told us that you never come to Mass, yea, and also dissuade others from coming thereto; we are further informed that you maintain Conventicles in your House, causing erroneous Doctrines to be preached there contrary to the ordinance of our Holy Mother the Church, where-whereby you have transgressed the Laws of Imperial Majesty.

Robert Ogner answered, whereas first of all you lay to my charge that I go not to Mass; I refuse so to do, indeed, because the death and precious Blood of the Son of God, and his Sacrifice is utterly abolished there, and trodden under foot. For Christ by one Sacrifice hath perfected for ever them that are sanctified. The Apostle saith, by one offering. For do we read in all the Scriptures, that either the Prophets, Christ, or any of his Apostles ever said Mass? for they knew not what it meant. Christ indeed instituted the holy Supper, in which all Christian people do communicate together, but they Sacrificed not. If you please to read the Bible over, you shall never find the Mass once mentioned therein. And therefore it is the meer invention of Men. You know then what Christ saith,

In vain do they worship me, teaching for Doctrines the commandments of Men. If either my self, or any of mine had been at Mass, which is ordained by the commandment of Men, Christ would have told us, we had worshipped him in vain.

As for the second accusation, I cannot nor will deny, but there have met together in my House honest people fearing God; I assure you not with intention to wrong or harm any, but rather for the advancement of Gods Glory, and the good of many. I knew indeed that the Emperor had forbidden it, but what then? I knew also that Christ in his Gospel had commanded it. Where two or three, saith he, are gathered together in my Name, there am I in the midst of them. Thus you see I could not well obey the Emperor, but I must disobey Christ. In this case then, I choose rather to obey my God, than Man.

One of the Magistrates demanded what they did when they met together.

To which Baudicon the eldest Son of Robert Ogner answered; if it please you my Masters to give me leave, I will open the business at large unto you.

The Sheriffs seeing his promptness, looking one upon another said, well, let us hear it then. Baudicon, lifting up his eyes to Heaven, began thus: when we meet together in the Name of our Lord Jesus Christ to hear the Word of God, we first of all prostrate upon our knees before God, and in the humility of our Spirits do make a confession of our Sins before his divine Majesty. Then we pray that the Word of God may be rightly divided, and purely preached: we also pray for our Sovereign Lord the Emperor, and for all his honourable Counsellors, that the Common-Wealth may be peaceably governed to the Glory of God; yea we forget not you whom we acknowledge our superiours; intreating our good God for you, and for this whole City, that you may maintain it in all tranquillity. Thus I have summarily related unto you what we do: think you now, whether we have offended so highly in this matter of our assemblies. Moreover if you will not be offended to hear the tenour of the Prayers we make there, I am ready to recite the same unto you.

One of the Magistrates gave him a sign by which he might understand that they desired to hear it. Baudicon then kneeling down before them, prayed with such fervency of affection, that the like ardency of zeal never appeared in him in so admirable a manner as at that time; in so much that the Magistrates were forced to burst forth into tears; beholding what a gracious Spirit the young man was endued withal. Then standing up, he said, now your Masterhips may take a scantling by this, how we are employed in our meetings.

Whilst they were thus examined, each of them made an open confession of the Faith which they held. After this being returned again into Prison, they not long after were put to the torture, to make them confess who they were that frequented their House, but they would discover none, unless such as were well known to the Judges, or else were at that time absent. About four or five days after, they were conveyed again before their Judges, namely, the Father and his two Sons; and after many words passed, they asked them whether they would submit themselves to the will of the Magistrates. Robert Ogner and Baudicon his Son, with some deliberation, said, yes, we will.

Then demanding the name of Mari, the younger brother, he answered, that he would not submit himself thereto, but would accompany his Mother; so he was sent back again to Prison, whilst the Father and the Son were adjudged to be burnt alive to ashes. Now as they went to receive the Sentence, one of the Judges sitting in his place, after sentence pronounced, said, to day you shall go to dwell with all the Devils in Hell fire (which he spake as one transported with fury in beholding the great patience of these two Servants of Christ) for they took all things quietly, vanquishing their enemies cruelly by patient bearing the Cross, and in praying God for the same. Having received the sentence of death, they were returned to the Prison whence they came, being joyful that the Lord did them that honor to be enrolled in the number of his Martyrs. No sooner entered they the Prison, but a band of fryers came in thither: one amongst the rest told them, the hour was come in which they must finish their days. Robert Ogner and his Son answered, we know it well. But blessed be the Lord our God, who now delivering our Bodies out of this vile Prison, will receive our Souls into his glorious and Heavenly Kingdom.

One of the Fryers whose Name was Lazarus, a notable limb of Antichrist, endeavored to turn them from their Faith, saying, Father Robert, thou art an old Man, let me intreat thee in this thy last hour to think of saving thine own Soul: And if thou wilt give ear unto me, I warrant thee thou shalt do well.

The old Man answered, poor Man, how darest thou attribute that to thy self which belongs to the Eternal God, and so rob him of his honour? for it seems by thy speech, that if I will harken to thee, thou wilt become my Saviour. No, no, I have one only Saviour Jesus Christ, who by and by will deliver me from this miserable World. I have one Doctor, whom the Heavenly Father hath commanded me to hear, and I purpose to hearken to none other.

A Fryer, called the Father of Saint Clare, exhorting him to take pity of his Soul which Christ hath redeemed: Thou wiltst me, said Robert, to pity mine own Soul, dost thou not see what pity I have on it, when for the Name of Christ I willingly abandon this Body of mine to the Fire, hoping to day to be with him in Paradise? I have put all my confidence in God, and my hope wholly is fixed upon the merits of Christ his Death and Passion, he will direct me the right way to his Kingdom. I believe whatsoever the holy Prophets and Apostles have written, and in that Faith will I live and dye.

The Fryer hearing this, said, Out Dog, thou art not worthy the Name of a Christian; thou and thy Son with thee are both resolved to damn your Bodies and Souls with all the Devils in the bottom of Hell.

As they were about to sever Baudicon from his Father, he said, Let my Father alone, and trouble him not thus, he is an old Man, and hath an infirm Body, hinder him not I pray you, from receiving the Crown of Martyrdom.

Another of the Fryers said, Away varlet, thou art the cause of thy Fathers perdition. The Fryers then returning themselves towards the Executioner, said, On, on, Officer, do thine Office, for we will be gone, we lose but our labour, seeing the Devil hath betwixted them.

Baudicon was then conveyed into a Chamber apart, and there being stripped of his Clothes was fitted to be sacrificed; now as one brought him Gunpowder to put to his Breasts an odd fellow standing by said, Wert thou my Brother, I would sell all that I am worth to buy Fagots to burn thee, thou findest but too much favour. The young Man answered, Well Sir, the Lord shew you more mercy. Some that were present, saying, Good God, is it not a pitiful sight to behold these poor Men? A Doctor being by answered, And what pity would you have shewed towards them? I would in stead of allowing them this powder have them fried on Gridirons, as S. Lawrence was.

Whilst they spake thus to Baudicon, some of the Fryers closed in with the old Man, perswading him at least to take a Crucifix into his hands, lest the people (said they) should murmur against you; adding further, that he might for all that lift up his heart to God, because you know, said they, it is but a piece of Wood.

Thus they fastened it between his hands, but as soon as Baudicon was come down, and espied what they had done done to his Father, he said, Alas Father, what do you now, will you play the Idolater even at our last hour. And then pulling the Idol out of his hands which they had fastned therein, he threw it away, saying, What cause hath the people to be offended at us, for not receiving a Jesus Christ, of Wood? We bear upon our hearts the Cross of Christ the Son of the everliving God, feeling his holy Word written therein in Letters of Gold.

As they were led to execution, a band of Souldiers were attendant upon them, no less then if a Prince had been conducted into his Kingdom. Being come to the place where they were to suffer, they ascended up the Scaffold which was there prepared for them. Then Baudicon asked leave of the Sheriffs to make a Confession of his Faith before the people. Answer was made, That he was to look unto his Ghostly Father and Confessor; confess your self (said they) to him. He was then hailed rudely to the Stake, where he began to sing the sixteenth Psalm. The Fryer cried out, Do you not hear my Masters, what wicked errors these Hereticks sing, to beguile the people withal. Baudicon hearing what he said, replied thus; Now simple Idiot, callest thou the Psalms of the Prophet David, errors? But no marvel, for thus you are wont to Blaspheme against the Spirit of God.

Then turning his eyes towards his Father, who was about to be chained to the Stake, he said, Be of good courage Father, the worst will be past by and by. As the Executioner was fastening him to the Post, he chanced to hit him with his hammer on the foot, to make him stand nearer to the flame. The old Man being sensible of the blow, said, Friend, thou hurtest my foot, why dost thou abuse me thus? The Fryer hearing this, said, Ah these Hereticks; They would be counted Martyrs forsooth; but if they be but touched a little, they cry out as they were killed. To which Baudicon thus replied: Think you then that we fear the Tormentors? No such matter, for had we feared the fame, we had never exposed our Bodies to this so shameful and painful a kind of death.

Then he often reiterated these short breathings, O God, Father everlasting, accept the Sacrifice of our Bodies, for thy well beloved Son Jesus Christs sake. One of the Fryers cried, Heretick, thou lyest, he is none of thy Father, the Devil is thy Father. And thus, during these conflicts, he bent his eyes to Heaven, and speaking to his Father, said; Behold, for I see the Heavens open, and millions of Angels ready prest to receive us, rejoicing to see us thus witnessing the truth in the view of the World. Father let us be glad and rejoyce, for the joys of Heaven are set open to us.

Then said one of the Fryers, I see Hell open, and millions of Devils present to carry you thither. But the Lord, who never forsakes any that put their trust in him, stirred up the heart and opened the mouth of a poor Man who stood among the multitude, beholding this spectacle, who being moved with compassion, cried aloud, Be of good comfort Baudicon, stand thou to it, thou fightest in a good quarrell, I am on thy side; after which words he departed thence; and a way being made for him, saved himself from danger.

Fire was forthwith put to the Straw and Wood which burnt beneath, whilst they (not thinking for the pains) spake one to another; Baudicon often repeating this in his Fathers ears, Faint not Father, nor be afraid, Tet a very little while and we shall enter into the Heavenly Mansions.

In the end the Fire growing hot upon them, the last words they were heard to pronounce, were Jesus Christ thou Son of God, into thy hands we commend our Spirits. And thus these two slept sweetly in the Lord.

Within eight days after, Jane the Mother, and Martin her Son, were executed in the same City of Lisle; but of this more hereafter.

Jane the Wife of Robert Ogquier, and Martin her Son, Martyrs.

THe Wife here follows her Husband, and accompanies her Son: her Conversion is admirable; for being severed from him, the Fryers having seduced her, laboured with her to turn her Son still out of the right way; but he understanding thereof recovers his Mother again, and so they both gave their lives for the truth, to the great confusion of their enemies.

But before we come to describe their happy ends; we will, as briefly as may be, note by the way the great conflicts of Spirit which both of them sustained.

There were sent unto them many of the Popish rabble, to turn them from their Faith. Now that this their devilish enterprise might the rather be effected, they furnished one of them from the other; so as by the politick device of a Monk, the poor Woman began to waver, and let go her first Faith. At this their enemies rejoiced not a little, whilst the poor little flock of Christ, hearing such sad news, were in continual perplexity, but the Lord left them not in their mournful condition.

For on a day one of the Monks resorted to her in the Prison, counselling her to win her Son Martin, and to draw him from his errors: which she promised to do. But when he was come to his Mother, and perceived that she was not only fallen, but also quite turned out of the right way, he began with tears to bewail her miserable estate.

O Mother, saith he, what have you done? Have you denied him who hath redeemed you? Alas, what evil hath he done you, that you should requite him with this so great an injury and dishonour. Now I am plunged into that woe, which I have most feared. Ah good God, that I should live to see this, which pierceth me to the very heart.

His Mother hearing these his pitiful complaints, and seeing the tears which her Son shed for her, began again to renew her strength in the Lord, and with tears cried out, O Father of mercies, be merciful unto me miserable Sinner, and cover my transgression under the righteousness of thy blessed Son; Lord enable me with strength from above, to stand to my first Confession, and make me to abide stedfast therein even unto my last breath.

It was not long after this her change, but the false Instruments of Satan, who had seduced her, came in, supposing to find her in the same mind wherein they left her: whom the no sooner espied, but with detestation said, Woe to Satan, get thee behind me: for henceforth thou hast neither part nor portion in me. I will by the help of God stand to my first Confession; And if I may not sign it with Ink, I will Seal it with my Blood. And so from that time this frail Vessel, who for a while relented, after her recovery grew stronger and stronger.

The Judges seeing their constancy, delayed not to dispatch them out of the way, condemning them to be burnt alive, and their Bodies being reduced to ashes, the same to be scattered and dispersed in the air. The Mother and the Son having heard their Sentence read, in the way as they were going back again to Prison, said, now blessed be our God, who causeth us thus to triumph over our enemies: This is the wished hour, our glad some day is come. Let us not then, said Martin, forget to be thankful for the honour he doth us, in thus conforming us unto the Image of his Son. Let us remember those who have traced this path before us: for this is the High-way to the Kingdom of Heaven. Let us then, good Mother, go on boldly out of the Camp with the Son of God, bearing his reproach, with all his holy Martyrs; for so we shall find passage into the Glorious Kingdom of the everliving God.

Some of the company hearing, but not being able to brook these words, said, We see now thou Heretick that thou art wholly possessed, Body and Soul, with a Devil, as was thy Father and Brother, who are both in Hell. Martin said, Sirs, as for your railings and curplings, our God will this day turn them into blessings in the light of himself and of all his holy Angels.

A certain temporizer said to Martin, Thou silly youth, thou sayest thou knowest not what; thou art too well conceited of thy self and of thy cause. Seest thou not all this people here about thee? what thinkest thou of them? they believe not as thou dost, and yet I doubt not but they shall be saved. But you imagine to do that which will never come to pass, though you pretend never to much that you are in the Faith, and have the Scriptures for you.

The good Woman hearing this, answered, Sir, Christ Jesus our Lord saith, That it is the wide gate and broad way way which leads to destruction, and therefore many go in the heat: but the gate, faith he, is narrow that leads to life, and few there be that find it. Do ye then doubt whether we are in the straight way or no, when ye behold our sufferings? would you have a better sign than this, to know whether we are in the right way or no? Compare our Doctrine with that of your Priests and Monks: we for our parts are determined to have but one Christ and him crucified; we only embrace the Scriptures of the old and new Testament. Are we deceived in believing that which the holy Prophets and Apostles have taught?

Job. 5. 12.

One of the Friars turning towards Martin, said, Young Man, be well advised; for thy Father and thy Brother have acknowledged the seven Sacraments of the Church together with us and thou poor silly youth hast heard some wicked Heretick who hath deluded thee: thinkst thou thy self wiser than so many learned Drs. as have lived in so many Ages? Martin answered, I pray you Sir, doth not Christ our Lord tell us, that his Father hath hid the secrets of his Kingdom from the wise and prudent, and revealed them to Babes? And doth not the Lord of times carch the wife in their own craftiness?

And whereas you say my Father and Brother have confessed seven Sacraments, I well perceive by this that I ought not to give credit to ought you say; know ye not that the Devil is the Father of lies, and all liers? Is it not sufficient that I acknowledge so many Sacraments as God himself hath instituted and ordained, to wit, Baptism and the Supper of the Lord?

Then came there into the Prison two Men of great Authority in the City of Lisle; the one called Monsieur Barras, the other Beaufremes, who promised Martin great matters, if he would recant and return to the Roman Church. Beaufremes among other speeches said thus unto him, Young Man, I have compassion on thy tender years, if thou wilt be ruled by us, I will promise thee thou shalt not dye this shameful death: moreover, I will give thee one hundred pounds Sterling.

Martin gave him this answer. Sir, you present before me many temporal commodities: but alas, do you think me so simple, as to forsake an eternal Kingdom for enjoying of a short transitory life? No Sir, it is too late to speak to me now of worldly commodities, but of those spiritual, which God hath prepared for me to day in his Kingdom: nor do I purpose to hearken after any other: only, I pray you let me crave one hours respite to give my self to prayer, and calling upon the Name of my God: for you know now it is eight days since my Father departed this World, and hitherto I have scarce enjoyed an hours rest; That which I have had, hath rather been to slumber in, than have any quiet sleep, having continually had eight or nine persons environing me about, and talking unto me.

After these great Men were forced to go even as they came, Martin declared the effect of this his combat to certain Brethren who were there detained with him in Prison; saying moreover. Let us lift up our heads, Brethren, the brunt is over, this I hope is their last assault; forget not, I pray you, the holy Doctrine of the Gospel, nor those good lessons which you have learned from our Brother Guy. Manifest it now to all, that you have received them not only into your Ears, but also into your Hearts; follow me, we lead you the way; fear not, God will never leave nor forsake you: farewell Brethren, said he, and so departed from them.

Soon after Martin and his Mother were bound and brought to the place of their Martyrdom: His Mother having ascended the Scaffold, cried to Martin, Come up, Come up my Son. And as he was speaking to the people, she said, speak out Martin, faith she, that it may appear to all, that we dye not Hereticks. Martin would have made a Confession of his Faith, but could not be suffered. His Mother being bound to the Stake, spake in the hearing of the Spectators, We are Christians, and that which we now suffer is not for Murther or Theft, but because we will believe no more than that which the Word of God teacheth us: Both rejoicing that they were counted worthy to suffer for the same.

The Fire being kindled, the vehemency thereof did nothing cool or abate the fervency of their zeal, but they continued constant in the Faith, and with lifting up their hands to Heaven, in an holy accord said, Lord Jesus into thy hands we commend our Spirits. And thus they blessedly slept in the Lord. These were the fruits which these holy assemblies in the City of Lisle brought forth. None need to enquire whether the rest were suffered to live in peace; for what other spectacles were to be espied in the High-ways and Fields, but poor fugitives flying hither and thither, for safeguard of their lives. So great was the cruelty which was then and there exercised among them: and yet, when all is done, God will be glorified in his Saints and Children.

John Rabec, Martyr, burned at Aniers in France, the 24. of April, 1556.

This Robert had his Tongue cut out because he would not pronounce Jesus, Maria, to join them both in one Prayer; for being urged thereunto with great threats, he boldly answered, that if his Tongue should but offer to utter those words at his bidding, himself would bite it aunder with his teeth.

Bartholomew Hector, Martyr, was burned according to the Sentence of the Parliament of Turin in Piedmont, in the year 1556. June the 19.

Being called before Authority to be examined he would answer them to nothing before he had made his prayer to God. Whereupon falling down there on his knees, he besought him to open his Mouth, and to direct his Speech only to utter that which might tend to his honor and glory, and to the edification of his Church. Afterwards when he was bound to the Stake, Gunpowder and Brimstone was brought to be placed about him, he lifting up his Eyes to Heaven, and saying, Lord how sweet and welcom is this to me?

Charles Covinck, or le Roy de Gand, once a Frier Carmelite at Gand in Flanders was apprehended and executed at Bruges in the same Countrey, Anno 1557. April 27.

Being perswaded by his Brother to return again to Covent his Order, and take upon him his Friars habit; he made him this direct answer, what needs that, faith he? now I have cast off that Popish weed, I will never resume it again. Christ hath now let me free, I will be no longer of the Order of the Slaves of Satan.

One of the Magistrates of Bruges conferring with him, promised to procure his deliverance if he would yield but a little; and if his Friars Coat displeased him, he would get him a dispensation from the Pope to forbeare the wearing of it, and provide him a Canonship. Sir, said Charles, I give you many thanks for your good will and these your kind offers: would to God I could accept of them without offending his Majesty you offer me a Canonship, that I might live quietly and in security; but know you Sir, That rest is no true rest and quietness which is obtained against the peace of a good Conscience?

A few days after his execution, one of them, who had his hand deepe in procuring his cruel death, died himself in such terror and horror of Conscience, that it gave sufficient testimony to those of Bruges, that they had put to death an Innocent, and that God was highly offended with those that had persecuted him.

Philibert Hamelin of Tournay, Minister and Martyr, was there executed in the year 1557.

While he remained Prisoner some of his friends dealt with him to break Prison, and offered him means tending thereto. But he on the contrary, having resolved to give his Life for so just a quarrel as he maintained, refused, saying, I esteem it altogether unbecoming for a Man that is called to preach Gods Word to others, to run away and break Prison for fear of danger, but rather to maintain the Truth taught even in the midst of the flaming Fire.

That none might hear what he said at the place of Execution, the Trumpets were caused to be sounded continually; yet might it be seen, both by his gestures and cheerfulness of his countenance, that they could not, let him from speaking to God.

Archambant Seraphon Martyr, in the year 1557.

A praefice of the Psalms.
 The Martyrs ready to seal the truth with their blood.

Being demanded what he thought of the Pope and his Authority, he answered, I think verily the same is he of whom S. Paul speaks in his second Epistle to the Thefaloniens, Chap. 2. Which words he being willed to sign with his hand; Yea, yea Sir, said he, I am now ready to sign it with my Blood rather than with ink.

A Taylor of a Lamb.
 An exhortation to get the Psalms without Book.

He reports in a Letter written to his Wife and Friends, that whereas this Jaylor was wont to carry himself as sternly towards him as a Lion, roaring always in such wife upon him, that all the Prisoners were amazed at it, the Lord had now so mollified his heart, that he became as meek as a Lamb, declaring how he would come and visit him himself in his Prison, and as well as he was able, comforted him, saying, Take no care, God will assist you; nor shall it be so ill with you as you think for. For what do your Enemies say? Alas! he is but a silly Pedlar, who, passing along this way, broached his Opinions none: that also which he holds concerning the same, he keeps to himself; therefore be of good cheer. Sir, said he, I praise God I am of good comfort, being ready to receive whatever it shall please him to appoint; If life, life; if death, death be it.

One thing I had like to have omitted concerning him, which yet is worth the noting, namely, this:

This Archambant, in a Letter to his Wife, puts his Brethren in mind to learn David's Psalms; My Brethren, faith he, I exhort you in the Name of God, that you would learn, yea, learn the Psalms without Book whilst you have time and leisure; for when you shall be cast into dark Prisons (I say, when God shall call you to suffer for his sake) you shall then have no Book with you, whether of a small or great print, to see what part succeeds another, which I now utter to your great grief and shame; for if I should tell you I lacked forewarning long ago, you can bear witness to the contrary: Nor do I know now what to do, but even to humble my self before the Lord, crying unto him, Mercy, mercy, Lord have mercy upon me. Blessed and happy are they who are careful to get knowledge and faith, as Oyl into their Vessels, before the Bridegroom come.

When he looked on his hands, he was wont to say, O Flesh, thou must suffer and be turned into ashes, until the last day.

Jeffery Vergale Martyr, in the year 1557. he was burned at Turin the last of December.

Standing upon a stool at the Stake, the Executioner, according to the custom, prayed him to forgive him his death.

The death of the Martyrs is not without fruit.

Jeffery answered him, I not only forgive thee, but those also who first imprisoned me at Burges, yea, those that brought me to this City, and have condemned me to this death. Be not afraid, do thine office, my death shall not be unprofitable.

Nicholas Jewville Martyr, in the year 1557. who with two others mentioned hereafter, were burned in the place called Mawbert without Paris in France.

This godly Martyr being condemned to be burned alive, and his Tongue to be cut out, the Tormentor being there present offered to put the Halter about his neck; but he repulled him twice, appealing from the Sentence. But because he was pressed upon to receive it the third time, and thinking his appeal would not take place, he took it, saying; Praised be God! for I am now counted worthy to be one of the heavenly Order:

Two Innocents condemned to suffer death, the one of them being called Henry the Taylor.

His Henry rejoiced at the hearing of the Sentence read, saying, This is the day we have long expected, and therefore give our selves willingly to dye, but as for the punishment, my Masters, that we leave to you: yet we pray that God would pardon you this injustice.

At which speeches the Magistrates turned away their faces, not willing to hear it; but Adrian, who was the other Martyr, told them boldly, That God would require the Blood of the Just at their hands, whom they daily put to death.

The next day being appointed for their Execution, a great multitude were assembled into the Market place, to behold the behaviour of these godly men, who, as they were led to death, protested, That the cause why they died, was only for bearing witness to the truth of the Gospel, which words they uttered with such courage, that the Officers, who in ironed them round about, strove to damp the same by a great noise; which they made, left their voice should be understood. Whilst the Executioner fastened them to the Stake, there was on an instant such an hurly burly amongst the people, that with one voice they cried, Kill, kill, rushing one in upon another. By and by the Shops and doors of Houses were shut up. The Hangman let fall all his preparations, leaving the two Patients standing at the Stake. The Margrave being on Horseback, could by no means get away, being compassed in on each side. The Officers trembling for fear, threw down their Halberds. The Spy who attended there to hearken, not knowing where to bestow himself, forsook his Horse, and ran into a Church for fear.

And though one told him that a Cutpurse had cauled all this ado, he would not be drawn to believe him, but said, I know we are but dead men; it is not the Thief, but the seditious People who now begin to work their revenge. Thus God confounded these blood-thirsty, shewing how he could have brought all their preparations to nothing, if it had pleased him.

As soon as this Hubbub was quieted, the Servant of the Executioner ran and strangled the two Martyrs, who had now a good space been fastened to the Stake, still calling upon the Name of the Lord. The Fire being afterward kindled, the Bodies were consumed to ashes the 19. of January, 1559.

A Recantation fathered upon a Martyr called Cornelius Hallevin, which he never consented to, and how he took the same, in the year 1559.

The Father of this Cornelius, soliciting the Margrave and his Wife (who as it was thought was Godmother to Cornelius) to get his Son out of Prison; it was so agreed among them, that a Libel should be framed under the name of Cornelius, wherein he should now acknowledge his Error, be confessed to a Priest, would also receive his Maker, and come again into the state of Grace, as a good Child of his holy Mother the Church. And further should say, That Sermons were of no worth, because they were not made upon holy ground. Also requiring that if he had failed in ought else, the same should be attributed to his young years, and therefore craved pardon. Howbeit the said Cornelius wrote Letters daily in the mean while to the Brethren, shewing forth an admirable constancy in defending the Faith; gladdening the hearts of many, who gave God thanks for the Graces of his good Spirit wherewith he had indued him.

The Minister of the Flemish Church hearing of this Libel, by the means of some friends, got a Copy thereof, and having read it, considering how the tenor thereof tended to a great scandal, made the Elders and Deacons of the Church acquainted therewith, who were not a little grieved for the infirmity of their weak Brother. Whereupon, the Minister wrote a sharp Letter unto him, willing him to turn and repent him of his backsliding, by making a true Confession thereof before the Council. When Cornelius had received this Letter, and read it, he was so vexed and perplexed in his spirit, that he knew not how to demean himself, so as all the godly his Prison-fellows had much ado to stay and comfort him. The blood gushed out of his nose, he spread abroad his arms, and made pitiful outcries. What, to deny the truth (said he) God forbid? Oh that the faithful should conceive so hardly of me! Good God, thou knowest that I am guiltless, nor have I this way offended. Then the residue of the Brethren advised him to get a sight of his Indictment, which if it contained no such thing, then to send it to the Church, and so manifest to them his innocency touching that whereof he was accused: besides, making a plain confession of his Faith, to impart the same to the Council, and therewithal to shew how he was abused by the Margrave and his Parents, which he accordingly did.

The said Cornelius being condemned to dye, the Margrave offered him so much more favour as to dye a more easy kind of death, if he would but give ear to the Priests whom he had brought with him into the Prison. Cornelius replied, No Sir, God forbid I should do such a thing: do ye with my body what ye will. As they bound him and Herman Janssen (who both suffered together) Herman willed the Margrave to take heed what he did: forsaith he, this will not go for payment in Gods sight in bereaving us thus of our lives. With you to repent therefore before it be too late, you cannot long continue this tyrannous course, for the Lord will shortly avenge it. The Margrave commanded they should have a Cross or Crucifix put into their hands, promising Cornelius that if he would so do, he should only be beheaded, and not burned: but they both rejected the Cross, saying, They would not give the least sign that might be of betraying the Truth, and that it was all one to them what death they put them to, so they died in and for the Lord. The punishment, they said, could last but for a while, but the glory to come was eternal.

Then were they led towards the Market place, and Herman rejoicing in the Lord, sung the hundred and thirtieth Psalm. Cornelius followed him, and gave the people godly Exhortations. Being come to the place of Execution, the Sword was laid there ready to behead them, if they would take the Cross into their hands, and admit the Priests into their Company: But because they would not yield one whit unto them, wood was made ready to burn them. Then Cornelius fell on his knees, praying God to forgive his Enemies, who had sinned through ignorance. After which they were put into a little Lodge made of Fagots, and strangled at the Stake. But whilst this was a doing, there fell out such a tumult amongst the People, that they were not a little afraid of an uprore; the Hangman, he caught hold of his Sword to defend himself, thinking they would kill him first; but the business was as suddenly quieted as raised. The fire being kindled, flamed forth upon the Bodies of these holy Martyrs. The Margrave thought, according to the usual course, to have quenched the fire, that so conveying the Bodies away half burnt, they might be laid upon the Wheels nigh unto the City, in the accustomed places where they were to lye, as Spectacles to be gazed on. But the peoples wrath being stirred, crossed him in his purpose, so as his Serjeants and Halberdiers leaving him, he stood as one astonished, causing the Executioner to finish out the rest of this Tragedy.

Notes upon the occasion of a Sedition at Paris, the fifth of March, 1559.

The fifth day of March, there was a great uprore raised in the Church of S. Innocents in Paris. The Preachers all the Lent never ceased to move the people to kill all the Lutherans they could meet withal, and not leave the execution thereof to the Magistrates. Amongst the rest a Minister, who preached in the said Church, spent all his Sermons upon that Subject. The same day taking his Text out of the eighth of S. Johns Gospel, concerning the Woman taken in Adultery being brought to Jesus Christ; he uttered execrable things against the Magistrate: shewing that it was no wonder if the Judges did not cast the first stone at the Lutherans, because they themselves were also Lutherans: and therefore the people were not to attend them any longer, but to rise and make open war against them, yea, upon the chieftest of them, which were but suspected to hold that Doctrine. In this garbail a poor Priest (with a brother of his, a Captain, passing by, and thinking by fair Language to pacifie the disordered Tumult) had his foot no sooner out of the Church door, but he was set upon by this Blood-thirsty Crue, who although he asked forgiveness in the name of the Saints, desiring to be confessed, and shewed all outward signs of being one of their own by the providence of God, it tell an end of their own side, yet could he of this headless Beast, the Multitude, obtain no favour, but was stabbed into the belly with a Dagger, and fell down dead. And yet they were not satisfied so, but the very meanest among them had a blow at him, raking with their hands in his wounds, and then in triumph lifting him up, bragged that they had bathed their hands in the blood of a Lutheran.

The Captain with much ado getting into the Vicars House, they beset the House left he should escape their fingers. And hearing that the Magistrate was coming to deliver him, they feared not with one voice to say, That they would spare none, no not the King himself, though he came in his own Person. If any more pitiful than the rest uttered but so much as the least word tending to compassion, they were cruelly handled on all sides, so as many met with hard usage even for that.

Not fully a year before this, there fell out the like, if not a worse Spectacle of Cruelty in the Church of Saint Eustace,

For a Doctor of the Sorbonists, commonly called the Soul of Picardy, who in his Sermons preached out nothing but Fire and Fagots, encouraged the Parisians to slaughter the Lutherans, making many goodly promises to all such as would undertake such a bloody design: which was not so soon propounded, as accepted of by the people. For a poor Scholar, who out of devotion was present at the Sermon, happening (upon some accident) to laugh at his Fellow Pupil; an old Turncoat sitting by and observing it, cried out forthwith, That a Lutheran mocked the Preacher. The people at the sound of this voice began to stir, not knowing upon what ground: and haling him out of the Church, miserably massacred him, till they had forced both his eyes out of his head, buffeting him with their fists; and one among the rest, caused his Horse to trample upon him thrice.

John Barbeville of Normandy, being questioned by three of the Council about the Sacrament, answered, That in the holy Supper, being administered according to Christs Institution, he received by Faith the Body and Blood of the Lord, but not after any carnal manner: so farasmuch as being now ascended into Heaven, he shall not return thence, till he come to judge the quick and the dead. Upon which Article one of the Council added this scoff, Which ascended into Heaven, and drew the Ladder up after him.

Upon some occasion they laid unto him, That he was but a silly Ass, and therefore could not understand the Scriptures. Well, saith he, be it that I am an Ass, yet did you never read, that God opened the mouth of the Prophet Balaams's Ass to reprove him, for loading him with stripes when he was going to utter his lies against the Children of God? If God opened the Asses mouth, do ye now wonder if he opens mine, to cause me to speak against the fallhood and lies which you spread abroad against the people of God? For as the Ass spake being overcharged with blows, which the false Prophet gave him, so now in regard of the heavy burden where-with in times past you have oppressed me by your Traditions, I am constrained to speak as I do.

Another Inquisitor, a Monk called Benedict, told him, That he was come to comfort and instruct him in the Truth. How can you, said Barbeville, say, you come to instruct me in the Truth, when your self doth wear the habit of a Liar? I cannot expect it from you; for no man can gather Figs of Thistles, or Grapes of Thorns.

Anno

1559.

God so wrought here, and the Truth so prevailed, that though it was plainly confessed, yet the Prisoners were delivered Anno 1559.

The Court of the Parliament of Paris, willing to moderate the Cruelties used against those of the Reformed Religion, solicited them what they could, to dissemble and to yield in some points; wherein the well-minded of that side were not yet rightly informed: but to this their advice they would by no means consent. Then they took another course, and that was simply to examine them touching the manner of eating Christs Body in the Sacrament, without mentioning Transubstantiation, or any Carnal Presence; hoping this way to free them from the Crime of Sacramentaries, upon which point for the most part the Sentence of Death was pronounced: seeing they had heard formerly from the Prisoners, that the Churches of France held, how the Body of Christ was received by the Faithful, not in imagination, but truly and indeed, and that the signs were neither naked nor empty Elements, but exhibited that whereof they were signs.

This was propounded to four young men who were in the flower of their Age, and lying Prisoners in the Confeigery of the Palace, it might be, to flatter them. Now when this Confession was presented in the Court, all that were well affected were glad of it in regard it was drawn so favourably; some being of opinion that it would work their deliverance. Others there were which opposed this Project, and requested they might be examined what they thought of the Mass, it being necessary an Article; provided, that there might be some moderation in the ordinary course of such Interrogations. Notwithstanding it was thought, that this would rather hinder than further their deliverance; yet did the better part persist in their purpose of freeing them.

Being therefore asked again what they thought of the Mass; they answered, That they would stand to their first Confession. It was replied, That the Court would rest satisfied with that Answer, if so be they would now only go to Mass. But with one voice they affirmed, That they would never yield to come there where God was so dishonoured. The Court, to make it appear that no advantage should be taken against them for this their Answer, gave them leave severally to shew their Reasons. This pleased the Prisoners well, and therefore they spared not to paint forth the Mass in its lively colours; that all might perceive there was cause sufficient why they should detest it.

The Mass despised in its colours.

First, one of them by way of opposition shewed how contrary the Mass was to the Lords Supper. The second declared, it was Blasphemy to affirm, that there was any other Propitiatory Sacrifice for sins than the Blood of Christ. The third avouched, That if the Article of Transubstantiation (whereon the Mass depends) were allowed, Christ his Deity and his Humanity should be abolished, and therefore it must be flat Idolatry to worship Almighty God in a corruptible piece of Paste. The fourth told them, That the fruits of the Sacrament could not be received where the Word was not joined with the sign, where one of the signs were withheld, or where there was no Communion.

Thus was the Mass anatomized, with the abominations thereof, with all boldness; so as some of the Judges were constrained to aver openly, That there was a great abuse in it indeed, being a manifest wrong done to the Institution of Christ; as also that the Laitie were there deprived of the Cup, and the Bread only given, the whole being performed in a Language which the poor people understood not.

It was beyond the expectation of all men, that so free a Confession would have passed for current in that place, in which whosoever came before them formerly, and made the like, was condemned to dye. But now the Truth so prevailed, that against all hope and ordinary proceedings in times past, yea, contrary to the minds of those which were Gods chiefest enemies, the order was this, That howsoever Sentence of Death had been pronounced against three others of this Company, by the inferior Judges, yet these four should have their lives saved; provided, that they departed the Country within fifteen days. Which exception, though it favoured of some Injustice, yet was it nothing in comparison of the former Cruelties; and this banishment turned rather for a benefit to them, than an hurt, for by this means they had liberty to go to such places where God was purely served.

The Story of Peter Chevet, Martyr.

Being asked whether he durst affirm that he had the Spirit of God? Yea, said he, for I am one of Gods Children, and therefore have the Spirit of God given unto me, as the earnest of my Adoption.

It is to be feared, said some, that you will bring yourself in danger of the Law, and so be burned. Truly, said he, I do not think to escape better cheap; and though you scorch and roast me alive, yet will I never renounce Jesus Christ. Is it not written, He that shall confess me before men, him will I confess before my Father which is in Heaven, &c. Being asked whether he desired not to be absolved, confessed, and to receive Pardon, having stood excommunicate now three years? He answered, I confess my faults every day to my God; but where is that goodly Absolver that will take upon him to pardon me? The Official answering, said, That is even I. Now poor man, said Peter, it is a question whether thou canst save thyself, and wilt thou take upon thee then to save others? The Official finding himself galled with this Answer, threatened him with longer Imprisonment. Alas, said he, though I should rot in Prison, yet shall you still find me the same man.

Being come to the place where he was to suffer, the Executioner would not take the pains to help him from off the Cart, but tumbled him down with his head forward. Notwithstanding all this and other Cruelties, he manfully overcame the same with invincible Contancy. And when they pulled off his Clothes, he was heard to say intelligibly, How happy, how happy, O how happy am I with his eyes still lifted up to Heaven.

He was burned in the place called Maubert, nigh to the City of Paris, the 11. of March, 1559.

A notable Speech uttered by Anne du Burg, Counsellor for the King in Parliament, in the Month of June, Anno 1559.

Among the rest there was a Counsellor called Anne du Burg, a man of singular understanding and knowledge, bred and nursed up in the bosom of the Church of Christ. This man having rendered thanks to God, for moving the Kings heart to be present at the decision of so weighty a cause as that of Religion is, and having exhorted himself well to consider thereof, being the Cause of Christ himself, which of good right ought to be maintained by Princes, spake boldly thereto, as God gave him utterance: It is not, said he, a matter of small consequence, to condemn such as in the midst of the fiery flames call upon the Name of Jesus Christ. This I do but note here by the way, because the consequence is touched before by Master John Foxe, where he mentions the terrible end of such as were Persecutors of the Truth.

Only one thing more touching the said Anne du Burg I could not here omit, and it is this; A certain woman being Prisoner (for the same Cause) right over against him, had a little window in her Chamber which opened towards that where Mr. du Burg lay; from whence either by words or signs (when she was not otherwise letted) she encouraged him to persevere constantly in the Truth; by whom he was so comforted, that the same du Burg, being importuned by some of his Friends to recant, used these words: Nay, I trow not, said he, for a woman hath taught me my Lesson, how I ought to carry my self in this business to which God hath called me: feeling in himself, as it seemed, the force and power of the godly admonitions of this poor woman.

Whose godly zeal was such, as that her story may not (as I think) be well omitted, but fully set down as I find it recorded in the Volume of the French Martyrs. Her name was Margaret Rich, who suffered the nineteenth of August in the place called Maubert, not far from the City of Paris in France.

Four witnesses of the Truth gently concerned by their Judges.

He was in outward appearance a silly poor man, a Vine-dresser, of the age of 80 years and upwards.

Mat 10. 35.

He could say sheweth refinement by heart, and was so prompt therein in all his answer, that the people who heard him, said if he were suffered to speak, he would convert all the City of Paris.

In the History of the Martyrs mention is made of one Peter Chevet, whose confancy was so admirable in suffering the extremity of death, that it was the more bold in the Company of the godly admonitions of this poor woman.

Christian women, saith the Heretic, behold here the courage and zeal of this Margaret your Sister, who is set before you for a pattern to imitate: she encouraged both great and small, who at the same time were Prisoners with her.

Margaret Rub was born in Paris, the wife of Anthony Ricant Bookseller, dwelling in Paris, in the place called the Mans of Saint Hillary, at the sign of the great Quad. This woman was as virtuously disposed as could be; she had gotten some small insight into the mystery of iniquity, by means of her husband, who yet suffered her to observe the Superstitions of Popery, without urging her any farther; for he was a man indifferent in the matter of Gods Service: but yet her Conscience gave her, that knowing her course to be evil, it was not sufficient to her that, unless she did cleave to the contrary good which leads to life and salvation, namely to true God according to his Word. Understanding then, that there were godly meetings of good Christians, which assembled together in the City, she found the means to come in amongst them, and profited so well thereby, that she resolved in her self never to go again to Mass, but to dye rather.

At length, being hardly used by her husband because of this her sudden change, he threatened her so far as to carry her himself to the Mass, (the next day which was Easter Sunday) rather than that she should not go. After she had endured much from this man, who would have her to play the dissembler, she to preserve her self therefrom, being also afraid of her husbands fury, upon Easter-day withdrew her self to a friends house of hers: thinking it safer to displease her husband, than God, to whom she had dedicated her self.

This day being past, because she would not over-long absent her self from her own home, she determined to return back again to him, whom God had bound and conjoined her with, though she could not but foresee the great evils and inconveniences which would follow thereupon, in regard of her said husbands crooked disposition. She came no sooner home, but she was discovered by the Curate of S. Hillary, committed Prisoner, and brought into the Conciergerie. They asked her where she had kept her Easter: she without feigning told them, she had kept her self from home, that she might abide a while with some of her loving Friends, lest she should be urged to prophane the Supper of the Lord, as others usually did; and therefore had kept the same according to Gods Ordinance, in the Assembly of faithful and devout Christians. Being asked whether indeed she had been present at those secret Meetings: she answered, Yea, and esteemed her self happy that ever she came among them. And thus being questioned by the Council, with other Prisoners about the Mass, Purgatory, Auricular Confession, and such other points, she freely told them what she had learned concerning the same out of Gods Word; so as the fifth of May she was ordered to be reclaimed by his Official, to see if by any means she might be reclaimed. But the Official prevailing nothing with her, because she persisted constant in the profession of the Truth, he pronounced Sentence against her, declaring her to be a pertinacious and obstinate Heretic; yea, such a one as was to be redelivered over to the Secular Power, and thence to be sent back to the Conciergerie.

Being brought back into the Court, certain Doctors and others were sent to reason with her: yet her faith for all that staggered not, but remained victorious, notwithstanding all their batteries laid against it.

Then by the Sentence of the Court she was condemned to be carried in a Dung-cart to the place called Maubert, a gag to be put into her mouth, and there to be burned and consumed to ashes. But before she should suffer death, she was sentenced to be put to the extraordinary Torture, to make her confess whom she knew, and was conversant withal, and to name the House where she received the Communion: yet did this woman undergo all these her afflictions, with incredible joy, singing Psalms, and praising God continually: she was never seen to shrink at her imprisonment, she daily exhorted the women who were Prisoners with her, and comforted them. Such of the Martyrs as went from the Conciergerie to suffer death, passed by the Chamber where she lay, yet was she not disheartened to see them in the hands of their Executioners, but cried to them, exhorting them to rejoice, and with patience to bear the reproach of Christ.

But to return to the manner of her death; after Sentence she was led to the Chappel, as the manner is; yet she ceased not all the way to exhort the people, and to sing Psalms, till she was put into a Dung-cart to be conveyed to the place of Execution. The renown of her constancy was so famous from the beginning of her troubles, that no small multitude of people were gathered together in the streets, for the desire they had to behold her: God so appointing that the great and more than ordinary graces of his Spirit (which were in this woman) might be manifested before so great a confluence of Spectators; and Eye-witnesses. She passed on then, as it were triumphing, through the midst of this Assembly, not shewing any sign of the fear of death, but with a fresh colour and cheerful countenance passed on with her eyes lifted up to Heaven, nor did her Gag to disfigure her, but that she shewed an amiable aspect upon all that viewed her. So as even the rude and obstinate Multitude admired her, laying one to another, Do you not see how this Heretic smiles and laughs?

Coming to the place of her Martyrdom, they told her, if she would relent, she should be strangled. She answered, That her Resolution was so rightly founded upon the Word of God, that she never meant to change. And to let them see that Death terrified her not, she began to disrobe her self without troubling the Hangman at all. Being hoisted up in the air, they asked her again, if she would not accept of the grace which the Court offered her, to be strangled. She gave them a sign, that she would not. Then was the fire kindled, and so she yielded up her Soul into the hands of God.

How one that was naturally deaf helped himself.

It is recorded of John Bessy a Lock-smith, dwelling in Paris, that he had a long time behaved himself very religiously, never denying his House for Christian Meetings, what danger soever might ensue thereupon. He had an incredible desire to profit by the preaching of the Gospel. And therefore being hindered by a natural infirmity of deafness to understand what was spoken, he used this help, commanding a Lad which he kept to hearken to the Sermon attentively, and at his return home made the said Boy to tell him in his ear all that he had heard. Inasmuch that he became exceedingly expert in the knowledge of the Truth, wherein he persisted constantly to the death, and was (after he had received the extraordinary Torture) burned for the same in the place called the Grave, in the Month of September, Anno 1549.

Another Relation of Anne du Burg.

Du Burg being asked if he had conferred with any about certain Articles formerly mentioned, answered, That he had conferred with his Books, but especially the holy Scriptures.

Having framed a Confession of his Faith which he intended to have presented to the Court of Parliament, certain Counsellors which were Advocates in the said Court, pretending Friendship towards him, being yet but time-servers, shewing themselves also discontented therewith, laboured with him to make another Confession, not directly contrary to the Truth, but somewhat ambiguous and doubtful, so as it might give satisfaction to his Judges. Du Burg having of a long time resisted, was in a manner overcome (by their intreaties) to consent to their counsel; telling him, it sufficed that himself understood his own true meaning, though ambiguously expressed; as also that his Judges would not stand strictly to examine such a Confession as had only an outward appearance of consenting to their Doctrine. Now this disguised Confession was no sooner come into the hands of his Judges, but great hopes were conceived of his enlargement. But when the Assembly had got a true Copy thereof, they were greatly grieved, being more careful of the saving his soul, of Gods glory, and the edification of his Church, than of such a deliverance, which could not be obtained without great dishonour to God.

And therefore they gave order to M. Augustin * Martyr to write a large discourse concerning the duty of such as were called of God to bear witness to his eternal truth before the Magistrate; wherein were also set down Gods threatnings and judgments against such as either directly or indirectly in what kind soever did dilavow the same. Exhorting him more highly to prize the Glory of God, than his own liberty; the truth of the Gospel, than a short and transitory life. That it befel him not now to give over, having already made so happy a beginning, and to good a progress in his Christian course. That the report of his constancy was spread not only through the Kingdom of France, but throughout all Christendom. That he had been a means to confirm many weak ones, and caused others to enquire after the means of salvation. That the eyes of all were fixed on him, to expect the manner of his coming out of Prison. So as it now through fear, or faint heartedness he should enterprise ought that might contrarie his first confession, he would thus, become an occasion of much scandal and offence. And there exhorted him to give glory to God, and his Church, assuring him that God would never leave nor forsake him. These Letters wrought in the Conscience of Du Burga sense of his sin, so that he being pardon'd of God, without any farther delay, he was committed to his Judges, in which remanding this his course, he professed to stand unto his suit.

Slaves were called by the Sorbonists against the Protestants of Rome in France, and what was the issue thereof.

Three Doctors of the Sorbonists, whose Names were Secard, Colomaz, and Francon, their Collators to their Parish, were accused (wile of the Religion with their wonted ill designs, that they committed Whoredom one with another, after the candles were put out, and were taught to rebel against their King and Governors; which Governors also these Sorbonists accused to connive and hold with them, inciting the people to run upon those of the Religion, since the Magistrates forbore to do their duty. But he God caught the wife in their own craftiness; for by means hereof many began to look into these matters whereof the Godly were accused; Namely, to enquire both what they did and spake in their Assemblies. Where seeing and finding the clean contrary to these accusations before mentioned, they were drawn to abhor these lying Spirits, and by little and little came to cleave unto the said Assemblies themselves; yea many who were lawfully given, and came in among them to another end.

But these accusers, not content herewith, went in the night into Churches, not sparing to deface the Images that stood therein, and then charged the Protestants to be the only actors thereof. Whereupon the Cardinal of Bourbon Archbishop of Roan was often fain to repair them with many Ceremonies. But at last a Monk of Magdalens Hospital was taken with the manner of breaking down these Images in the Churchyard of Saint Mark. For which he received no correction, excusing the matter, by saying, that whatsoever he had done therein proceeded from a good meaning. Yet among all these disorders the Church of Roan still subsisted, though not without great peril and danger.

The Story of a Locksmith, Martyr, who being dry had holy Water given him to drink.

About this time was a Locksmith burnt in the City of Agen, upon the clamorous and Seditious Sermons of a Frier called Melchior Flavin, who denounced this Locksmith to be an Heretic, because he had made a Christian and good confession, and therefore pursued him unto the death. A little before he was to dye, Redon the Lieutenant of Agen asked him if he would drink. Sir, saith the Prisoner, if you please to give me drink, I will. Then the Lieutenant brought him a glass of Water, of which he drank a little. Now, said the other unto him, what hast thou drunk? The Prisoner answered, Water. Saith the other, Thou hast drunk holy-water, which I gave thee to drink; the Devil work of thee. I know, saith the poor Man, that every Creature of God is good in its own nature; but had you told me it had been such as now you say it is, I would not have drunk it, for it is detest with Idollatry. At this answer the Lieutenant hurled the glass of Water at the poor Mans face with such force, that the glass breaking to pieces hurt him. For which inhumane act he was approved by his fellows, and answered to my ten prison. But the Locksmith took his death patiently, and ended it constantly.

The miserable death of a Consul who was both an Accuser and a Judge.

Josias Simler, a learned Divine of our time, in the Life of Master Henry Bullinger, a worthy servant of God, and a Faithful Minister of the Church of Zurich, recordeth an History which he saith happened in a City of Switzerland among the papist, An. 1559. He expreth it neither the Cities Name, nor the City, the thing being sufficiently known to the Inhabitants thereof. Thus Consul, being a rich and potent Man, intending to build a brave and magnificent House, sent far and near for the rarest and most exquisite Workmen he could hear tell of. Amongst the rest he sent to the City of Trent (so much renowned among Papists in regard of the last Council the Pope held there) for an excellent carver and Master Builder called John, a Man very Religious, and a lover of the Truth: for which cause the said John refused at the first to go thither, alleging for himself that he was of a contrary Religion to that which the Consul professed, and therefore could not safely inhabit among such as would observe his contempt of the Mass and their other Ceremonies. The Consul promised him liberty in respect of his person, and that he should be need to nothing against his Conscience. Upon this his promise John came and wrought a long time with the Consul: but when he came to demand his wages they entered into some terms of discontent. In the end at the command of this Consul, John was committed to Prison, and by the same Consul accused for a sleigher of the Romish Religion, yea, to have spoken unreverently thereof; wherefore he was Condemned to be beheaded.

As they led him to Execution he went towards it with undaunted courage, and dyed very constantly; protesting in the presence of all the Spectators, that he most gladly laid down this life present, for the maintenance of that Religion whereof he had made profession, believing undoubtedly that it was the Truth; but added, that the Consul who was the Author of his Death should himself dye within three days, and appear before Gods Judgment Seat to render an account of his Sentence. Which came to pass according as this pious Man foretold: for the Consul being then in the prime of his youth, and of an healthy disposition of Body, from that day began to be afflicted first with an exceeding heat, and then with an extraordinary cold; and thus was he smitten with a new kind of sickness, so as within three days he followed him of whom he had bin both the most unjust Accuser and Judge.

The speech of a poor Porter called Chevilon, whipped for the Truth, and after confined to the Gallies.

Being whipped thorow the Streets of Roan, he said to him that lashed him, Lay on my friend, lay on and spare not, chastise this Flesh which hath so often rebelled against his God: thinking himself happy that he suffered in so good a quarrel.

The miserable end of one called Aubespine, a Counsellor of Grenolle, and a persecutor.

After these Bloody Persecutions, this Aubespine fell in love with a Gentlewoman, and therein gave such way to his passion, that he forsook his calling, casting off all care of his own welfare, to follow her whithersoever she went. But the disregarding him, he took it so to heart, that he neglected his own person: by reason whereof swarming full of lice, he could by no means be rid of them; for they increased upon him, and came out at all the parts of his Body, as they are seen to issue out of a dead carcase. It was not long before his death, but feeling himself smitten with Gods hand, he began to despair of his mercy, and to shorten his days he concluded to famish himself: in the mean while the lice gathered so thick about his throat, as if they would strangle him. Some beholding this so lamentable aspect, being much moved therewith in commiserating his estate, agreed to make him eat whether he would or no, forcing him to take some broth, or a Callis, which he refuting with all his might, they bound his Arms, gagging his Mouth with a stick to keep it open, whilst they put somewhat thereinto. Being thus gagged he died like an enraged Beast, with the abundance of lice which crept towards his Throat. And thus it was spoken even by some of the Romish Religion, that look what torment he had devised for the Ministers of Valence, sending them gagged to their Execution, he was by the just Judgment of God punished after a sort in the same kind.

John Ponce of Leon a Gentleman of Sevil in Spain.

AMong those that with a firm faith sealed the truth of the Gospel with their Blood in the Spanih Inquisition at Sevil the four and twentieth of September 1559. Don John Ponce of Leon, the Son of Roderic Ponce of Leon Count of Baylen, may of good right deserve to be placed in the first rank. For besides the Noble Race from whence he sprang, the Lord had indued him with singular vertues well becoming so worthy and Christian a Gentleman. Those who were of his familiar acquaintance, and did well observe his conversation, gave this testimony of his sincerity, that his like was not known in Spain of a long time, in that a Man of his Estate was so forward to exercise his charity towards such in whom he saw but any good inclination to Religion: Yea, his yearly revenues, which were also great, were not only employed that way, but he seemed to exceed the chiefest of his Rank, in yielding his help and aid towards the relief of the poor. All which the World taking knowledge of, attributed (as it is wont) that which proceeded from his so Christian bounty, rather unto wastefulness and prodigality.

The Inquisitors of Sevil envying the sweet favour of such a Life and conversation as he led before them, flowing from an inward taste of true Religion, spared him no more than those of meaner condition. For having gotten him into their hands, they left no means untried, but used the utmost of their devices to weaken his Faith. The truth is, that at the first this noble personage was much perplexed, but at the last the Lord fortified him so with his Grace, that he was set in the first round of the guilty. Concerning his Sentence (howsoever this holy Tribunal mixed the same with many untruths to bear the eyes of the ignorant withal) yet may it easily be collected out of the tenor of his Sentence, what he confessed and professed.

For in the said Sentence were read his Articles for which he was principally condemned to the Fire, Namely, That he abhorred the Idolatry which is committed in adoring the Sacrament, calling it a breaden God. Also, that when he met it as it was carried through the Streets, either in solemnity or to some sick Body, he passed into another Street going apace before it, that he might give no reverence unto it. That coming often into the Cathedral Church where Mass was said, he turned his back towards the Priest, because he would not see him elevate his God. That he used much to walk to and fro about the Scaffold where the Faithful were executed, with a kind of delight, coveting to stand near unto them, that by accustomed himself in beholding the place and torments he saw others endure, he might be the better emboldened to suffer the like when God should call him thereunto.

These were in effect the Articles which were inserted in his Sentence, a part whereof also was drawn out of the Confession of his Faith, the sum being this: First. That a Man is justified and accepted of God only for the merit of Jesus Christ apprehended by Faith. That the Popes Pardons and Indulgences sent from Rome are meer delusions, and that the Pope is Antichrist, &c. That it was the desire of his heart to be burned, or to suffer some other extremity for the maintenance of the Faith which he professed. That he endeavoured to employ the goods and riches wherewith God had blessed him, only for the defence and further enlarging of the Doctrine of the Gospel; Yea, to forsake life, Wife, Children, and all, for the same: to which end he had daily sent up many hearty Prayers to God.

In all this business, the holy Tribunal laboured by cunning devices to obscure this Confession, causing it to be bruited that he held not out to the end, with many other like inventions to make the people believe they had turned him to their Law: but herein they shewed themselves not well advised, in that they belied both in him and themselves. For in publishing his crimes and offences with the manner of his death, what did they else but declare and manifest the truth of the fact, which plainly appeareth in these words of the Sentence, John Ponce of Leon, burned for an Heretick and obnoxious Lutheran, &c. Which words made their fraudulent dealing apparent to such as doubted any way of the constancy and perseverance of this pious Christian Knight.

John Gonzalve a Preacher in Sevil, Martyr: with whom were executed two of his Sisters, their Mother remaining in Prison, reserved to act her parts in another Tragedy.

Gonzalve a renowned Preacher throughout the Country of Andalusie, was also led in this Inquisitorial triumph: who forsaking his School Divinity, in which learning he excelled all his fellows, gave himself wholly to the study of the holy Scriptures, according to the purity whereof his whole conversation was ordered, both inwardly and outwardly. He was often observed in all his Sermons to aim at this mark, namely to deliver Mens minds from that blind conceit of meriting by works; that so way might be made for justification only by Faith in Christ Jesus, and deeply to ingraft into them the knowledge of the sole merit of his plenary satisfaction. For which his labour he expected to receive from Man the same reward which all the true Servants of God have had in their times.

Being then seized upon by those of this Spanih Inquisition, he yielded a reason of his Faith in that Purity and sincerity, as did the afore said John Ponce, who as they had been friends and of familiar acquaintance, so were they joyned together in the same confession, and led to the same execution together. The night before he suffered he had a fore conflict with an old Sect of Priests, who were of the Inquisition, but in the end he caused them to return vanquished and ashamed. He was led from the Castle and Prison of Trion with his two Sisters unto the place appointed for his end, that they with him might drink of the same Cup, leaving his Mother and one of his Brethren behind him in Prison, reserved to be executed when their turn came about. He never shewed the least sign of being dismayed; but contrariwise with great constancy and courage of heart standing above all the people, to whom he had formerly preached and delivered the pattern of sound Doctrine; He began with a loud voice to recite the Psalm which begins thus, O Lord my Rock be not thou silent to me, &c. not changing his countenance at all upon the Scaffold, though they had gagged him there, because he comforted and freely exhorted one of his Sisters to be constant: whose spirit he feared might otherwise faint. Harkening very attentively to his Sentence which was there again recited, he was not any thing at all abashed or troubled thereat, but took his solemn degrading patiently, receiving the marks and garments of his confession, to wit, his yellow Robe and Haltar, and a painted Miter, with a joyful and a cheerful heart; knowing that howsoever they were disgraceful in the eyes of the World, yet he esteemed of them as ornaments of honour in the sight of God and his Angels, abhorring his Masling attire, whereof they had disrobed him.

When the time was come that those which should be burned were brought to the place of Execution, they were every one commanded to recite the Articles of their belief, which they willingly did: but when they came to the Article, I believe the holy Catholick Church, they were bidden to add this word Romane, whereupon they were silent: then did the Monks and Friars importune Gonzalves Sisters, and other Christian Women who were to be burned with them, to repeat the said

Anno 1559. said word Romane; who answered they would, if they might hear John Gouzalvee pronounce it (not that they intended so to do, but being confident of his renouncing the same) hoping, by this means to free him of his gagge, and so to obtain the liberty of speech, by which he might render a reason of his Faith, and so of this Article among the rest. Being ungagged, the first word he spake was, that they should be of good courage, and not to add one word more than what they had recited. Upon this their last confession they were forthwith strangled, as the Fire was kindled upon them, to burn and consume them.

Isabel of Vaenia, Mary of Viroes, Cornella Mary of Bohorques, and Jane her Sister burnt at Sevil in Spain.

Among all the most ancient professors of true Religion that had their abode in the Church of God at Sevil (who in a manner were all waited by the Tyranny of the Inquisition) the power of faith appeared in these four women above specified. Now howsoever they were all endued with singular piety and godliness, yet the younger of them named Bohorques, being under the age of one and twenty, was instructed above the rest in holy Letters, and by daily reading and conference with good and Godly Men, wherewith Sevil at that time was well furnished, she had obtained such promptness in the knowledge of the Texts of the old and new Testament, that many who were esteemed learned in that City, have confessed they were often put to a non-plus by such reasons as she alledged out of the Scriptures.

As touching the first of these, Vaenia; her House was a School or Colledge of piety, being the place also where all the meetings were, to publish the praises of God. No evil example was to be seen there, nor ought that favoured of feigned holiness, but such as proceeded from uprightness of Heart and Sincerity. But the Inquisitors, who always live in wait to take hold, though but with the least thread of their net, caught these four Women with other their Neighbours, in the same, when God knew they were fitted for the confession of his holy truth. Now as the Latin Tongue did much aid the said Mary Bohorques to retain her in reading of the Holy Bible, whilst the Popes Tyranny forbade the same to be read in the vulgar Tongue; so she came quickly to be invironed with the more adversaries during her captivity. Doctor Egidius (whose memory was renowned throughout Spain among all such as truly worshipped God) had been her Instructor, and was wont to say of this Maid, that he always went from her more learned by conferring with her, then when he came to her.

During her Captivity there came many Monks to dispute and reason with her, above all, those of the order of Saint Dominick, who were enforced to admire the Spirit of Wisdom, wherewith this Damsel was inspired, as also at the pregnant answers which she gave to their demands. She suffered so many kinds of torments, that by the violence thereof they forced her to nominate her Sister Jane Bohorques, and to confess that she had often been present at the Preaching of the Gospel. This Jane was the Wife of one called Frances Varquis, Lord of Higuera, a Man of excellent Note. She was six Months gone with Child when she was committed to Prison, and therefore was not so straightly used, nor hardly dealt with all as other of the Prisoners were. But within eight days after her delivery, her Child was taken from her, and then giving her no longer time of breathing, they began to deal with her after the guise of the Spanish Inquisition, forming her Inditement agreeable to the rigour and severity thereof. It which her extremity she had comfort of none, but of a virtuous young Maiden, who afterwards was burned for the profession of the truth; which maid being one day brought by the Inquisitors to the torture, was in a manner dismembered, and then laid upon a Bed of Straw, whence both were laid in the Prison, serving rather to vex than any way to ease them, yet did the other yield her all the relief which her self or the place could possibly afford. Scarce had this poor Damsel recovered some ease after these intolerable bruises, but this aforesaid Jane Bohorques tasted of the same bitter Cup, where she was so cruelly tormented on the Barro, as they call it, which is a bench or form whereon they give the Towel or Napkin, that the cords pierced through the Flesh into the Bones, both of her Arms and Leggs, and in this pitiful plight the Blood gushing out, she was returned to her Prison, where within eight days after it pleased God to free her out of the clutches of these bloodthirsty, into his eternal happiness and Glory. Now they were very loth it should be bruited abroad that this Gentle, so well born and delicately bred, should dye under so cruel Torments: but they who were the beholders of such inhumanity could not be silent. Yet these good Fathers, being under no controule, take their liberty thus to imbrue their hands in the Blood of Gods Saints.

Her Sister Mary being led with the rest of her fellows to the place where they were to suffer, she went thereto with such joy and gladness, as one triumphing over her enemies: which the whole tribunal observing, and fearing lest others would be imboulded by her constant defence of the truth and singing of Psalms as she went, gagged her. And when she came to the place of Execution, that they might obscure the glory of this Heavenly constancy they presently strangled her.

Julian Hernaudes burned in Sevil in Spain, Anno 1559

This Julian, who for his small stature was called, le petit, was Servant to John Piers a Spaniard, and Minister of the Gospel in Geneva, where, through much resort of many learned Men thither, Religion flourished. At which time being moved with Godly zeal, rather then being counselled thereto, he undertook a business, which as it was of great importance, so of no small peril and imminent danger; for he brought with him thence and caused a great number of Books of the holy Scriptures in Spanish to be conveyed into Spain, earnestly thirsting after the increase and growth of the light of the Gospel in his Native Country; which Godly enterprise of his the Lord so guided, that he brought the same to a prosperous issue; Yea, which is yet the more admirable, even within the Walls of Sevil, notwithstanding all the watch and ward the Officers of the Inquisition used.

These Books to the poor Christians there were welcomed with no less joyfulness, then the rain when it showers down upon the parched ground. For the Gospel by means hereof grew, and was enlarged; so as the Lord thereby reaped a very great Harvest. But the news hereof coming to the ears of the holy Fathers, first, by the indiscretion and fool-hardiness of one more zealous then wife, and then by the treachery of wily spies of the Inquisition, who counterfeited a profession of the Gospel, merely to ensnare and betray the sincere professors thereof, by their disloyal practices: no sooner had these venerable Fathers, or hunters rather, gotten a scent of this game where it lay, but coming violently upon them, took the Dam with her young ones. By which great surprisal the whole flock was scattered; but so many was the number of them even at their first apprehension, that it amazed the huntmen themselves.

For the Prisoners were so replenished, that they were fain to borrow private Houses to shut up the Prisoners in. At once they burned twenty and upwards of them together, whilst in Sevil they detained in bonds 8000. Amongst whom this Julian was one of the first which they met withal, whom they kept in Prison above three years laden with Irons: during which time, every day afforded new spectacles of catching their prey. But such was his wonderfull constancy, that he wearied his Tormentors from vexing him any more; so as new forces never failed this little lean Body, to suffer any torture the Inquisition could devise. He was naturally of a cheerful Spirit, and God so increased the same in him, that he came from the torture with no less courage then when he was wont to come unto it as neither pain of the rack, nor the threats of the Officers, nor yet the cruelties they exercised upon him could withhold him from manifesting to his Prison-fellows, as he went along by them in his conquest and victory, to the shame and reproach of his adversaries, using to say in Spanish; These Hypocrites are gone away confounded, no less then Wolves which have been long hunted.

man, since encounters in sharp disputes with others of the Popish crew, being the Prisoner in the Court, there to receive the sentence of Christ the Son of God, with the rest of the Prisoners, it was reported, that he with a bold courage and staid countenance thus spake unto them, Courage my valiant and constant Brethren, upon the hour come in which our true Champion of Jesus Christ, we must engage, to be either Men, or for a short while for his Glory, to be vanquish'd him for ever and ever. But the Officers, who had before put him in chains, by putting a gag in his Mouth, with which he continued until he should be dyed. Murthering then upon the Scaffold, where he was to stand, by manifold torments, he thus shew'd the constancy of his Faith, which by words he could not show, by doing up the steps of the Scaffold, kneeling down he kiss'd down; and using salutes to the Sould, murthered and compell'd coun-about with Tapers, the sundry times brought his head with in the point of Wood, as if he desired to tie by his head.
 he turned up his Soul into the hands of God, to the great admiration of the Spectators, and the animating of his fellow Martyrs who were to suffer with him. When he was brought to the Scaffold called Redmundo R. d. g., considering his intention, made the Faith of his wife little Julian much more glorious, for he thought, in terrifying him with the apprehension of the punishment he was to receive, to much favour of the Sheriff, as some infirmities of his recantation, which is the utmost triumph that the holy Fathers of the Inquisition thirst after, but it proved clean contrary, for Julian recovering liberty of speech, did with a more clear evidence con-demonstration of his Faith than formerly he had done, and to confute this Doctor Rodriguez, calling him a Seducer, and one that spake against his Country, that by and by in an outrage, to cover his shame, he cryed out like a Bedam, Multa pain, which committeth silence to his many, thus troubled now with this so contemptible a wretch, but almost hatched him, etc. At which words, the Tormentors being tuck at a black, forthwith kindled the Fire upon him.

¶ Now having thus formerly mentioned what torments were exercised upon the Bodies of Gods Saints by the merciless Instructors of Spain: and that also upon those of their own Nation: it shall not be much from the purpose, if now thence we take occasion more particularly here to relate unto thee, Christian Reader, with what inhumanity such are used who for the cause of Religion fall into the hands of these carnal Tyrants, according as I find the same set forth at large by my Author, with footsteps in the whole Work I undertake to follow.

When they purpose to torture any one, the Jayners are commanded to bring forth his Prisoner in to the accustomed place where it is to be given, which place is under the earth, and very obscure. Hanging the rowning, turnings, and throw sundry doors, so as the howling cries of those who are there tortured, can in no way be heard, there is a seat prepared for the Inquisitor;
 on high, with a Register also to behold that tragical act.
 The touches being lighted, those who are to cast their parts in the woful Tragedy are brought in the Tormentor who attend their coming, is covered over with a black Garment, close to his Body, covers his Head with a black Hood, which hides his face from being seen; having only two or three holes made the entrance himself to see and breath at, and all this is the way to terrify the poor Patient, who beheld, as it were a grim Devil ready to torment him.
 These Fathers being let upon their seat begin again to charge the Prisoner voluntarily to confess the truth:
 which if he refuse to do, and if it then happen that an Arm or any other Member of his Body be broken, or that they dye on the torture (for that is all the favour he hath shewed him) they make it his own fault and none of theirs.
 After they have used all the terrible threats that can be, they cause him to be stripped stark naked, whether Man, Woman, or Maid, though they be never so modest and bashful. Many having fallen into their Bloody fingers, thus to have their shame discovered to the sight of others, was more grievous than all their torments besides which they endured. Laying aside than all Humanity in un-clothing them, they put upon them, a shame it is to speak of, linnen breeches, as if their secrets parts were better and more honestly covered with breeches than with a shirt or smock, or as if the torments they meant to put them to would not pierce deep enough as well in the one as in the other: with such shameful spectacles the chaff Inquisitors fed their Ayes, and with such a cruel lust satisfied their infamous and detestable virginity.

The Man or Woman standing naked then, and their nakedness covered only with linnen breeches, as was said, they beckon to the Tormentor, signifying thereby what kind of torture he is to put them to. For he is also in many things of a like nature, they have some secret watchword or sign among themselves; and the Officers being well acquainted therewith, can readily discern what torments the holy Fathers would have Men put unto, to teach them the Faith of the Roman Church. The most usual are the cords with the pulleys, sinews, fire, and water, All which we will speak in place convenient. Whist they thus stand naked, they exhort them once again to tell the truth. If the Patient be to endure the Cold, they tie his hands behind his back, pulling him up eight or ten times, according to the number of twitches limited by the Inquisitor to the Tormentors, that so nothing may be done there without order. At the last Inquisitor then, looking up to him all his Articles; and then, beside, the binding of his hands, they tie his thumbs very hard together with a small Cord, then they tie his hands and thumbs unto a greater Cord, holding him up by a pulley very high, which done, they put upon his legs heavy loads, if he have them not on before: to which are yet added, the first pullan from weight of five and twenty pound, which is hang'd to these bolts between his feet. Being thus arrayed the Tormentor draws him up on to the Register, and the Inquisitor mixing therewith their former exhortations to confess. When he comes to touch the pulley with his head, they will him yet then to confess: if he obey, they presently let him down, if not, then they let him hang in this condition, until he have answered their demands. Now, after he hath hung thus without making any confession, they let him down, to redouble on his feet the former weight. And then pulling him up again, threaten him to hang till he there dye, if he declare not to them that which they ask of him;
 commanding the Tormentor to let him hang a long while in the air, that through the heaviness of the weight which hangs at his feet, all his members and joynts be stretched out beyond measure. When the Patient through extremity of torment, which he endures, cries out, they in like sort cry as loud as they can, that he should now confess what he knows: if not, then they let him fall. For when they perceive he continues constant, then they command the Officer to let go the Cord, which is as soon done as spoken, yet not wholly and altogether to the mid way, but to a certain stop, which hinders his falling to the ground, by reason whereof he receives such a sudden check, that there is neither nerve, muscle, sinew, nor joynt in the Arms or Legs, nor in the whole Body, which are not with extrem torture disjoynted and displaced; so as being thus stopp'd in his fall, in the mid way, his Body is pitifully and miserably stretched out.

But yet this sufficeth not. For if then through their im-portunity he will confess nothing, they augment the weight the third time, and thus in a manner being as good as dead cause him to be pulled up: to which cruelty they add railing and reviling speeches, calling him Dog and Heretick, who being obstinate conceals the truth from them, and therefore deserves to be left dying there. If the poor creature in regard of his intolerable agony cryeth unto Jesus Christ to help him, and to have mercy upon him, as all such do suffer for the truth, when they scoff and mock him, saying, Jesus Christ, Jesus Christ, let this Jesus ^{Impious} Christ alone a while, and tell us what it is ^{highly} as thou callest upon Confess to us that which we demand of thee, the which testifies to their Faces how odious and hateful a thing it is unto them to hear such as suffer in the quarrel of Christ to call upon his name. If the sorrowful wretch desire to be let down, promising to confess and to tell them somewhat, they will for all that

Anno 1560. that torment him again. For having paused a little, then they tell him that is not all, and so continue threatening him with the Strappado as before.

This hellish Torture beginneth at nine of the Clock, and lasts till noon, or one of the Clock; and when they please to make an end, then they ask of the Tormentor if he have his other Engines ready, which they do to strike the greater terror into the bruised and Martyred Patient, whom they now have in their hands. He answers he hath them not there, then they command him to sit and prepare them against the next day, and not to fail: we will see, say they, whether we can fetch the whole truth out of this fellow or no. And at their going out, they comfort the desolate Soul thus: This shall suffice for this time, but look between this and tomorrow thou advise thyself well, what thou oughtest to confess, otherwise thou art like to dye on the Torture; nor think to escape by what thou hast endured, for that is but as a Bed of Roses in regard of the torment which is to come. Being gone, the Hangman endeavours to set together the joyns of the Patients Leggs and Arms, as well as he can. Then his Clothes being put on, he is brought again into his Prison, and if he be not able to go, then he is carried thither; and sometimes this help proves a vexation unto him, in that they churchlyly hale him by his Arms and Leggs. The Taylor also in scorn asks of him, if he need a Chirurgion now if they mean to torture him no more, then he is called for two or three days after, and as he passeth from the Prison, they make him come nigh the door where he was tortured, where the Tormentor presents himself before him in all points as hath formerly been related, that at this very sight the Prisoner in his passage might be put in mind of what he had but a while since suffered. When he is come before them, there he finds the Inquisitor, the Register with others set in their Seats attending for him, where according to the guits, they adjure him to speak the truth. If at that time they can draw nothing out of him, they send him to Prison again. But if he happen to disclose ought serving their turn, then they ply him hard to utter all: and thereupon make him turn thence to the Torture, hoping thereby to get something more out of him.

If they purpose to exercise this their cruelty with all extremity upon the same Patient, they send for him the third day, whilst his sinews and joyns are in the prime of their pain, and to renew their horrible threats unto him, to reveal his Heresies, and those which he had formerly mentioned, and who they be that are of his opinion; otherwise he must prepare himself for the Torture, wherein if he any way miscarry in his Body, or if death it self do follow, the fault shall be his, and not theirs. If he continue unmovable in his mind, they cause the Taylor to bring him to the place of Torture, and there they sitting in their Tribunal, command him to be stripped naked, and then tormented as you have formerly heard. Besides, as an addition thereto, they tie his thighs and hamstrings together with a small cord, forcing the same so with pieces of wood, that the said cords do eat into his very Flesh, in which extremity they leave him for some three or four hours, or as they please, plying him the while with infinite threats and derisions, which is all the comfort they minister to him in this his miserable condition.

They have yet another kind of torment, which Justices in other places exercise upon such as are the most notorious offenders, whereof this holy Tribunal make use, as fitting well to their cruel humour. They call it the Burne, which is a plank of timber made hollow in form of a gutter or trough, wherein a man may lye on his back; Now just where the Back-bone should repose it self, there is a round piece of Wood lying overthwart, keeping up the back from resting in the bottom of the hollow place, so as it giveth no rest to him that is tormented thereon. Now this Trough is so framed, that the heels of him who is put therein lye much higher than his Head. Being put into his Calf or Coffin, his Leggs, Arms, and Thighs are bound hard with small cords, which by little and little are so strained with certain ticks, that they eat into the Flesh, yea pierce to the bare Bone. Then they lay a linnen cloth on his face, to hinder his breathing at the nostrils, whilst they pour water into his Mouth, which is distilled from above by this cloth to a certain quantity, (as it seems good to his Judge) not by drops, but streaming down, to cause the said cloth to go down into his throat. The poor patient the whilst lies in this torment as one in a manner dead, not being able either to stir or breathe. Now when this wet Cloth is pulled out of the depth of his throat, to make him to answer unto their demands; If you should behold how Blood and Water comes out together, you would imagine they had plucked the very Bowels out of his Belly: in which woful plight he is held as long as they think good, even until with horrible threats and torments he be returned back again to Prison.

If they please to proceed further in adding more torments, within a Month or two after the said cruelties are renewed, either in more terrible or moderate manner, to some once, to others to the sixth time.

This is yet another torment which is peculiar to this holy seat of the Inquisitors. They cause a great fire of hot burning Coals to be brought, which they apply nigh unto the Soles of his Feet whom they intend to torment, which are first thoroughly anointed with grease or suet, that the heat of the fire may pierce more deeply.

Thus much be said as touching these Torments used by those cruel Tormentors of the Bloody Inquisition of Spain upon the Bodies of poor Christians.

A Note of Francis Oliver Chancellor of France.

This Chancellor, who in the former Persecutions not behaving himself according to a good Conscience, (being in times past so far enlightened as to make profession of the truth) was visited with a mortal disease, in which sickness he was observed to cast forth hideous sighs without ceasing. In which perplexity the Cardinal of Lorraine came to visit him, standing aloof off from him. To whom the Chancellor uttered these words; Ab Cardinal, thou wilt damn us all. It is also reported, that he much and often bewailed the death of Anne du Burg, of whom mention was made heretofore. And thus living a while in this miserable condition he ended his days.

A Papist defined by Jacques de Lo.

Having called the vows of Papists papistical vows, he was asked what a Papist was. He is a Papist, said De Lo, who squares his actions and conversation according to the Popes Laws. Anno 1560.

Being pressed by the Papists to confess whom he knew of the Reformed Religion, he would name none but such as had suffered; and withal further added, I entreat you my Brethren in the name of God, that you conceive no sinister opinion as touching me in this behalf: for I am resolved, by the help of my God (without whose assistance I can do nothing, and with which I can do all things) to suffer my Flesh rather to be rent in pieces, than to reveal any whole persons might thereby be endangered.

Note his admirable constancy.

The notable conversion of a notorious evil liver, by Name John Herwin, of Houtkerk in Flanders, Martyr; who by degrees was so far brought into Christs Fold, that he was called forth to bear witness of the Truth, from which he was once as far remote as the Heavens are from the Earth, in the year 1560.

This John Herwin, born in Geeserveen, &c. in the West side of Flanders, was of a dissolute life, such as Souldiers for the most part are of; but God having a purpose to shew forth in him the admirable work of conversion, to draw him to Christ, put it into his heart to leave his own Country, and come to the City of London. Being arrived there about Easter, the Lord going on with his work brought him by his providence into a Brew-house, being a Brewer by his calling, where he met with a Master and fellow Servants fearing God; a thing seldom seen in Men of that Profession, seeing ordinarily they are excessive drinkers. His Master caused him oft to resort to the Dutch Church in the said City of London, where by ordinary hearing of the Word Preached he began first to tast, and after to increase more and more in the saving knowledge of Christ. News coming over, that Wars were likely to be in Flanders, caused him to leave England, and to return again into his own Country. He came thither at the same time that three other Martyrs were there apprehended, but he was not taken with them.

The Bayliff of Furne when he saw he could not meet with him, understanding that he was at Houfot, advertised the Bayliff of the said place, that he might take him at his Sisters House. As soon as he heard thereof he delayed no time, but in the night time came with his Sergeants and apprehended him. Now leading him to Prison, the Bayliff meeting certain drunkards in the Streets, said, They say, We have many Gospellers in Houfot, but it little appears by these disorders.

John Herwin hearing him say so, and not willing to balk it, replied, Is drunkenness a sin, Master Bayliff? Then said the Bayliff, What of that? Herwin made this conclusion; Why then commit you not these fellows to Prison, seeing it is your Office to punish vice, and to protect such as fear God. The Bayliff was mute: yet for all that Herwin was fain to take up his lodging in Prison, where he behaved himself so vertuously, that every one admired it. But because he was not called forth before the Magistrates of Houfot so soon as he desired and expected, he grew heavy and sad, asking of some whom he knew well, if they could tell why they so delayed the matter? For his heart was fixed with an holy zeal to confess Jesus Christ before his Judges. Many feared him much, who knew what he had been in times past; he being as yet but a Novice, and a new comer on in the profession of the Gospel; in which case men for the most part have but some glimmering of the light, and are unsettled in their Judgments.

At length he was brought before the Sheriffs of the Town, who commanded a Priest to dispute with him. At the first Encounter he asked Herwin how long it was since he was confessed? also what he thought of confession, asking him sundry other trivial questions, to which Herwin answered no less modestly than Christianly, in so much as they who were of sound Judgment easily discerned how he was not the Man he had been in times past, but that his Prison had been to him a good School where he had well comend his lesson. The Priest demanded further whether he believed there were seven Sacraments or not? The Bayliff helping the Priest, said, what's that to the purpose, whether there be seven or two, he will acknowledge no more then he list (for he had confessed there were but two). The chief Sheriff demanded of him in these terms, whether he believed that the Lord remained upon the Altar, Flesh, Body, and Bone. I answer (saith Herwin) with Saint Steven, that the highest dwelleth not in Temples made with hands. Heaven, saith the Lord, is my throne, and the Earth is my footstool; what house will ye then make unto me, and where is the place of my rest? Hath not my hand made all these? And then took occasion to admonish the Judges which sat there, to examine the Doctrine of the Roman Church, by the true touchstone which is the holy Scripture, that so they might discern how opposite and contrary the one is to the other. Consider also, saith he, what the words of Saint Peter import, where he affirms that we ought to obey God rather than Man. Yea it is high time for you to think upon what I say, and that seriously also, for at the last day it is neither your Priests, nor your placards (which you think to stop our Mouths withal) that shall any way excuse you then. And as for the Title of the Roman Catholic Church, which you hold out against us, I deny not but in the Apostles time and afterwards there was a true Church in Rome, as well as in Corinth, Galatia, among the Philippians, and in other Churches; but after that she fell from the pure Word of God, and falsified the Sacraments thereof, turning Ecclesiastical Discipline into Auricular Confession, God hath also forsaken her, and she ought now no more to be called a Church of God, but rather the Synagogue of Satan. As soon as the chief Sheriff (who is called the first speaker) heard this, he commanded him away.

Having then given sufficient Testimony of his Faith, before those of Houfot, he craved for Justice either one way or another. But they on the contrary urged him to desist from his opinion. To which he answered, that his faith was not built of an opinion, but said he, the Lord hath taught me to eschew evil and do good. Yea, said they, but seek thou not how these opinions have troubled the World? And also how many of the learned sort do contradict them? Answer So far is it off that the Doctrine of the Gospel should be the cause of troubles, that it only is the means of quieting the debates, and strikes which Reign in the World. These troubles arise indeed from the malice of Men. And as touching your learned Men you speak of, it is impossible for humane wisdom to comprehend the Doctrine of God: for which cause Christ saith, Father I thank thee, that thou hast hid these secrets from the wise Men of the World, and hast revealed them to Babes. Now as the Sergeants conveyed him to Prison, they counselled him to speak more mildly, and then he might do well enough.

Before his death he was sorely set upon by certain Sophisters, who alledged to him the sayings of many of the ancient Fathers upon the point of the Lords Supper, but he overcame them, by holding close the true sense of Christs Words. In Prison he comforted himself in singing of Psalms and spiritual Songs, some of which he indited himself. The Canons and Priests seeing the people flock together to the Prison door to hear him, especially upon the Sundays and holy days, strove by all means to put him by his singing. They coupled him with two malefactors, to be a grief unto him: who obtaining certain Instruments by the help of their comforts, brake Prison and fled. Herwin might thus have escaped if he would; but fearing his flight might be imputed to the Godly Christians in the City, he resolved rather to remain there, than to flee. His Sentence in the mean while coming from the Court, he was no sooner advertised of it, but he thanked God for advancing him to so high an honour as to be counted worthy to suffer for his Name: Testifying the joy he inwardly had, by a Letter which he sent to the Brethren; praying and exhorting them to be constant and to persevere in that Doctrine which they had received from God.

The fourth day of November between four and five of the Clock in the morning Herwin was sent for by the Magistrates from Prison into the place of Judgment, where by intreating and goodly promises they urged him to recant and receive their breaden God, which was then to be offered up; or at least to confess that Jesus Christ was there corporally present, upon which he should by and by be delivered out of all dangers. Now Herwin refusing their offer was bound and brought by force into the Chappel: but he in sign of his detestation, turned his back always upon it, shutting his eyes, and stopping his ears. At the elevation of their Host, one who was kneeling to it, asked him if Jesus Christ was not now between the Priests hands, No, no, said Herwin, he is in Heaven at the right hand of his Father.

Soon after the Sentence of death was read against him, and so was he delivered into the hands of the Tormentor. As he passed out of the Townhouse, standing upon the first step, and viewing the people who waited to see him, See here (saith he) how this wicked World rewards the poor Servants of Jesus Christ. Whilst I gave my self to drunkenness, to playing at Cards and Dice, living in all dissolusion and ungodly behaviour, I was never in danger of these bands (lifting up his hands which were bound) I was then counted a good fellow, and at that time who but I? But no sooner began I by conversion to ask after a Godly life, but the World made war upon me, and became my enemy, persecuting and imprisoning me, and now last of all sending me to the place where I must pay my last debt. But the Servant is not better than his Lord: For seeing they persecuted him, no question they will persecute us.

Being come to the place where he was to suffer, one of the assembly reaching him forth his hand drew nigh unto him, comforting him, never leaving him till he entered into the Cabbins of Wood in which he was to be burnt. He then began to sing the thirtieth Psalm, of which having sung only the first staff, a Fryer hearing the same halloed towards him (not without much difficulty) through the throng, that he might come near to interrupt him, who kneeling on his knees said, Oh John, there is yet time and space. The Martyr, deighting his glowing words, turned Anno 1561. turned his back upon him. And many there present cried to the Fryer, Turn thou, thou Hypocrite: and thus was he suffered quietly to finish the Psalm. The Fryer seeing himself disappointed this way of his purpose, continuing still in his impudency, said to the people, be ye not offended good people in hearing this Heretick sing of God. They cried again to him, Hold thy peace thou Balamite, here is no Body offended. Many sung with a soft voice with the Martyr, and some again sung aloud without fairing.

There were more than four hundred which encouraged him to continue to the end, as he had well begun. Then he said unto them, Brethren, I fight under the Standard and in the quarrel of my great Lord and Captain Christ.

Having ended the Psalm he made his Prayer to God upon his Knees. Then rising up, and being about to enter into his Lodge made with an heap of fagots, he said to the people, I am now going to be sacrificed; follow you me when God of his goodness shall call you to it. When he was gone in, the Fryer put him in mind again, that yet there was time to repent: but he, as one little minding what this deceiver said, commended his Spirit into the hands of God. He that reached him forth his hand stood in the midst of the Sergeants, and not far off from the Tormentor, still encouraging the Patient, and yet none laid hold on him; they were stricken with such astonishment, partly with the Martyrs courage, and partly with their own shame in putting to death an Innocent. The Executioner not being his craftmaster strangled and burnt him most cruelly, so as the people were heard to bewail the manner of it, whilst the Martyr yielded up the ghost the said fourth day of November, Anno. 1560. His Body was consumed to ashes, which were buried in the Market-place of Houscos.

Here it shall not be amiss to insert a Godly Prayer which a like notorious wretch (before his conversion) made at his death after he was converted, and suffered for the same cause. His name was Lievin Blekere, by his Trade a Painter who dwelt in a little Village in the Low Countreies, called Pamelles, Anno 1566.

O Heavenly Father, I give thee thanks that thou hast pulled me out of darkness, and hast revealed the light of thy Gospel unto me, for else I had perished everlastingly. O Father, thou dost ordain me to be one of thy Winepresses, even from my Mothers Womb, yea, before the Foundation of the World was laid. Now therefore Lord let this Sacrifice be acceptable unto thee, receive me thy poor Servant unto thy Grace and favour, and pardon the Sin of my Persecutors.

To one that stood by he said, Brother, fight the good fight of Faith with me, and pray for me so long as you see life to be in me. And while he was yet speaking the Tormentor strangled him. The dead Body, being a little scorched with the Fire was taken thence and hanged on a gibbet by Pamelles, whence he was taken down in the night and buried.

John de Boschane drowned in a tub in Prison, the twenty eighth day of February in the City of Antwerp, Anno 1561.

The evening before he suffered many of the Faithful expected what should be done unto him. But the Magistrates of the Town fearing an uprore, knowing that he was a Man free of Speech, and beloved of the people, took Counsel to drown him secretly in the Prison, which could not be executed without Murder, and cruel Torment. For the Tub (in which he should be drowned) being neither large nor deep enough, the Martyr himself being tall of stature, and the Executioner having provided so little Water that he could not possibly be drowned therein; therefore he was constrained, for the shortning of this so cruel a torment, to wound him in the Body with divers stabs of a Dagger, which were to be seen thereon after he was dead. Thus finished this Boschane Martyr his life, being twenty six years of Age, in the City of Antwerp, in the year of our Lord 1560.

The Story of one John de Builons, who was beheaded in the Prison, as John the Baptist was in the night.

His holy Servant of Christ having valiantly stood to the profession of the Gospel, was soon after condemned to dye. Now fearing lest any Tumult or Sedition should be raised in the City of Antwerp, he was beheaded in the Prison about one or two, of the Clock in the night, to the Glory of God, and the Confusion of his Adversaries, Anno 1561.

Simon Harm Martyr, who had Sentence of death pronounced two several times upon him in the City of Lille in Flanders.

His Simon was accused to have uttered some speeches long since against the Church of Rome. Witness being produced against him in the Town-houses, the Magistrate condemned him to be beheaded. Now according to their custom in that place, his Hat being taken from him after Sentence pronounced, he was returned back again to Prison, expecting the hour of his Execution. Then were sent unto him certain Friars to confesse, or rather to vex and torment him. But this godly man being thoroughly fenced with the Sword of the Spirit, which is the Word of God, made them know to their shame that they were greatly mistaken: for the Friars returning back to those who had employed them in this business, reported that this Simon was a most notorious Heretick; which the Magistrates of the City hearing, caused him by and by to be called to judgment, sending him his Hat again which they took from him, in token that they had revoked the Sentence first pronounced, to enter a new Process against him. Thus got Simon some leisure the better to dispose of his affairs, also to comfort and counsel his Friends by Letters, not weighing the torments of death which he was to endure. Three days before he suffered, Sentence was pronounced touching another kind of death, namely to be burned, and his Body to be consumed to Ashes. which kind of Martyrdom did manifest to all the People of the said City the admirable power of the Lord, by how much more the pains were exceeding great, beholding how this his Servant sweetly gave up the Ghost in peace in the midst of the fiery Flames.

A Note of one John Martin, who bragged he would cut off a Ministers Nose.

The Church of God increasing so far in the Valleys of Angromgne in France, that they were fain to build a Church wherein to preach the Word publicly, in regard of concourse of People resorting thither, it happened that the forenamed John Martin, boasting every where that he would cut off the Ministers Nose of Angromgne, was soon after set upon by a mad Wolf who did indeed eat his Nose from his face, dying mad thereof himself, and yet it was never observed that this Wolf had ever hurt any before. Which terrible Judgment was so manifest, that it was noyed among all the Neighbour Villages thereabouts, Anno 1561.

God.

A mischief mercifully prevented by the means of Prayer and calling upon the name of God.

A Certain President being come into the City of Pigneroll, sent for one of Saint Johns (very near unto Angromgne) who at that time dwelt there, asking him if he had not caused a Child of his to be baptized at Angromgne, and why he had done so? The poor silly man answered, he had done it because Baptism was there administered according to Christs Institution. The President hearing him say so, in great fury, commanded him in the Kings name, upon pain of being burned, to get it re-baptized. The Father of the Child besought him that he would permit him to pray unto God before he gave him his answer. Which being done in the Hall before all the Company, he further intreated him under his hand and Seal to cause it to be set down, how he could discharge him of committing so great a sin; and that if he would take the guilt thereof upon himself and his, then he would answer him. The president hearing how he came about him, was so confounded in himself for a while, that he could not speak. But by and by he had take away the Villain, and so he was never called before him again.

he

Papists committed their Children to Protestants, to be preserved from being deflowed.

AMong other things (saith my Author) this is to be observed, that during these troubles in the Valleys of Angroune from the year 1555. unto the year 1561. The Papists which dwelt in the Country conveyed their daughters away into the Mountains, and committed the custody of them to these poor persecuted Christians of Vandois, for fear lest their chastities should be violated by the common Souldiers, according as they had been threatened by them, who were given over to all villany & cruelty.

An Assembly of the Faithful, descried nigh to Antwerp, was by the enemies of the Gospel put to flight, of which three being apprehended, two escaped, and one named Barthelmei de Hoy was executed, Anno 1561.

The third day of the Month of August in the year 1561. when great triumphs were usually made in the City of Antwerp about the plays and prizes of Rhetorick (as they call them) to the sight and hearing whereof there commonly came great multitudes from many places: those of the Religion being willing to take all opportunities to meet together in the fear of God, whilst others were busied in seeing and beholding those vanities: a great number withdrew themselves out of the City, and entered into a Wood, nigh unto Marksem, that there they might hear the Word of God preached with lively voice by the Preachers thereof.

The Dorpart of Marksem, being advertised thereof, resorted thither with his Officers, being conducted to the place by certain poor youths, being Nether-lands, whom he promised to apparel, if they could bring him to any place of the wood where the Assembly was; whilst himself staying without, with two or three other on Horseback, sent the rest of his Officers with the Boys into the Wood. At the appearing of these Wolves the poor Sheep of Christ began to be affrighted, and to flee. The Ministers and others seeing this disorder admonished the Assembly not to stir, shewing how great inconveniences would follow upon such an inconsiderate flight. The Persecutors were not above five or six, but the persecuted were about four or five hundred persons; so as without any great difficulty they might have had the better hand of them. The principal aim which the Officers had, was to apprehend the Minister. For having caught one of the Assembly, thinking he had been the Man, they cryed one to another, Hold the Priest fast, striking him with their Pistols and slaves, and so brought him out of the wood. The Dorpart, perceiving that this was not the Minister, kept him notwithstanding as his prey, and left not pursuing this scattered flock until night. After this he took two other in the Lordship of Akeram.

Thus having apprehended these three Prisoners, and withal having taken up many Cloaks, Hats, and Vails, Forpards, and other Accoutrements, which the poor dispersed had left and let fall, these he took away as a spoil, and returned to Marksem. This Dorpart lay hold on two others by the way, whom he supposed to be of that number, one of which was Barthelemi de Hoye, a Joyner of the age of twenty four years. These five were committed to Prison one from another, some at Marksem, and others at Damme. Soon after the first three which had been taken in the Jurisdiction of Akeram had the means to escape without any danger or detriment, by the assistance of their friends. Barthelemi only remained in the custody of the Dorpart, before whom he endured many beatings through the Parson of that place, being set on by him: Besides many others who daily by way of scorn questioned with him; asking, Why such a young Man as he could not content himself with their Religion and glorious Church, adorned with Silver, Gold, and precious Stones, in which there was such melodious musick, both of Voices and Instruments, but must needs joyne himself to that Church which was hated, despised, and exposed to all inconveniences whatsoever. But Barthelemi overcame all these temptations by the grace and power of the Almighty, manifesting it to all, that that which is greatly esteemed amongst Men is altogether an abomination in the sight of God. Having then often justified the cause of God, and reproved the Roman Church of false Doctrine, known by the fruits thereof, viz. the hateful lives of the Priests, &c. he was after a few days brought out of Prison, and at last beheaded the nine and twentieth of August, between four and five of the Clock, in the morning, Anno 1561.

A relation touching the Massacre at Vassy in the Country of Champagne in France.

The Duke of Guise being arrived at Fainville, asked of such as he was familiar withal, whether those of Vassy used to have Sermons preached constantly by their Minister. It was answered they had, and that they increased daily more and more. At the hearing of which report falling into a grievous chafe, upon Saturday the last of February 1562. that he might the more covertly execute his conceived wrath against the Religious fort in Vassy, he departed from Fainville, accompanied with the Cardinal of Guise his Brother, and those of their train, and lodged in the village of Dammartin the free, which is distant from Fainville about two French miles and a half.

The next day being Sundays, which was the first of March, after he had heard Mass very early in the morning, being attended with about two hundred Men armed with Harquebuses, Pistols, and Couteaxes, he left Dammartin, passing along to Vassy. As he went by the Village of Bronzeval, which is distant from Vassy but a small quarter of a mile, the Bell (after the usual manner) rang to the Sermon. The Duke hearing it, asked such as he met with by the way, why the Bell rang so loud at Vassy. They told him it was to give the people warning of the Sermon which was to be made there. Then one called La Montague said, it is for the assembling of the Huguenots: adding moreover, that there were many in the said Bronzeval who frequented the Sermons preached at Vassy; and therefore that the Duke should do well to begin there, and offer them violence. But the Duke answered, March on, march on, we shall take them among the rest of the Assembly. Many who followed the Duke, to wit, Pages and Footmen, rejoiced not a little concerning this bloody enterprise; not sticking to say, that the booty and pillage would fall to their shares; swearing by Blood and Wounds, that there would be good store of Huguenots there.

Now there were certain Souldiers and Archers accompanying the Duke, who compassed about Vassy, for having been mustered at Montbierender, in stead of returning home, as they were wont to do after the muster was ended, they took their way thence to Vassy, most of them being lodged in the Houses of Papists. The Saturday before the slaughter they were seen to make ready their Weapons, Harquebuses, and Pistols: but the Faithful not dreaming of such a conspiracy, thought the Duke would offer them no hard measure, being the Kings Subjects; also, that not above two Months before the Duke and his Brethren passing by night unto the said Vassy, gave no sign of their displeasure.

The Duke of Guise being arrived at Vassy with all his Troops, a young Man a Shoemaker stepping out of his House not far from the door where the Assembly was, Montague pointing to him with his finger said he was one of the Ministers. Whereupon the Duke called this Shoemaker to him, and asked of him whether he were a Minister, and of what University he was. He answered, that he was not of that Calling, neither was he a Scholar. Notwithstanding he hardly escaped from this Troop, which had invaded him round about: only one of the company told him, That if he had been a Minister he had taken upon him a very base Calling.

From thence the Duke, La Brosse, and La Montague passed on in the said City with their Souldiers, as if they minded to take their way towards the Village of Eclairon, where it was given out he meant to dine. But passing by the Market-house of Vassy, which is right over against and nigh unto the Monastery in the way leading to Eclairon, he turned and went directly toward the Common Hall or Market-house, and then entered into the Monastery; where having called to him one named Desfaller, the Prior of Vassy, and another whose name was Claude le Sain, being the Provost of the said Vassy, he talked awhile with them, and issuing hastily out of the Monastery was attended by many of his Followers. Then commandment was given to such as were Papists, to retire into the Monastery, and not to be seen in the streets, unless they would venture the loss of their lives. The Duke perceiving others of his Retinue to be walking to and fro under the Town Hall and about the Church-yard commanded them to march on towards the place where the Sermon was, being in a Barn distant from the Monastery, about some hundred paces, quite opposite to that way which the Duke should take to Eclairon. This command was by and by put in execution by such of the company as went on foot, going directly thither. Hee that marched foremost of this Rabbie was La-Bros, and on the side of these marched the Horsemen, after whom followed the Duke with another company, as of his own followers, so likewise of those of the Cardinal of Guise his Brother.

By this time Master Leonard Morel the Minister, after the first prayer ended, and having begun his Sermon before his Auditors, which might amount to about 1200 persons, consisting of Men, Women, and Children: The Horsemen first approaching to the Barn within a matter of twenty five paces, shot off two Harquebuses right upon those who were placed in the Galleries joyning to the Windows. The people within perceiving that, they who were nigh to the Dore used means to shut it, but were disappointed, because this disordered company pressed in upon them: who forthwith unsheathing their swords, cried furiously out, Death of God, kill, kill these Huguenots.

The first they seized on was a poor Cryer of Wine, who stood next the door, asking him, if he were not a Huguenot, and in whom he believed? Having answered that he believed in Jesus Christ, they smote him twice with a sword upon his Body, which felled him to the ground. Being got up again thinking to recover himself, they struck him the third time, whereby being overcharged with wounds he fell down and dyed instantly. Two other men at the same time were slain at the entry of the said Dore as they were pressing out to escape.

Then did the Guise with his company violently enter in among them, striking down main blows upon the poor people with Swords, Daggers, and Cutlaxes, not sparing any Age or Sex. Besides, they within were so astonished that they knew not which way to turn them, but running hither and thither fell one upon another, flying as poor sheep before a company of ravening Wolves entering in among the flock.

Some of the Murderers shot off their Pieces against them that were in the Galleries; others cut in pieces such as they lighted upon; others had their heads cleft in twain, their Arms and Hands cut off, and did what they could to hew them all to pieces; so as many of them gave up the ghost even in the place. The Walls and Galleries of the said Barn were Dyed with the Blood of those who were every where Murdered: yea, so great was the fury of the Murderers, that part of the people within were forced to break open the Roof of the House, if peradventure that way they might save themselves upon the top thereof.

Being got thither, and then fearing to fall again into the hands of these cruel Tygers, some of them leaped over the Walls of the City, which were very high, flying into the Woods and amongst the Vines, which with most expedition they could soonest attain unto; some hurt in their Arms, others in their Heads and other parts of their Bodies. The Duke presented himself in the house with his sword drawn in his hand, charging his men to kill, especially the young men. Onely in the end Women with Child were spared. But pursuing those who pressed to get upon the house top, they cried, Come down ye dogs, come down, using many cruel threatening speeches unto them.

The cause why Women with Child escaped, was, as the report went, for the Dutches fake his Wife, who passing along by the Walls of the City, hearing so hideous out-cries which were made amongst these poor creatures with the noyse of the pieces and pistols continually discharged, sent in all haste to the Duke her Husband with much intreaties to cease this persecution, for frightening Women with Child.

During this slaughter the Cardinal of Guise remained before the Church of the said City of Vassy, leaning upon the Walls of the Church-yard, looking towards the place where his followers were buied in killing and slaying whom they could. Many of this assembly being thus hotly pursued, did in the first brunt save themselves upon the roof of the house, not being discerned of those which stood without: but at length some of this bloody crew epying where they lay hid, shot at them with long pieces, wherewith many of them were hurt and slain. The Household Servants of Desfaller Prior of Vassy, shooting at the roof people, caused them to fall down from the roof like pigeons: one of that wretched company was not ashamed to boast after the Massacre was ended, That he for his part had caused six at the least to tumble down in that pitiful plight, saying, that if others had done the like, not many of them could possibly have escaped.

The Minister in the beginning of the Massacre ceased not to preach still, till one discharged his piece against the Pulpit where he stood, after which falling down upon his knees, he entreated the Lord not only to have mercy upon himself, but also upon his poor persecuted flock. Having ended his prayer, he left his gown behind him, thinking thereby to keep himself, as unknown: but whilst he approached towards the Dore, in his fear he stumbled upon a dead Body, where he received a blow with a sword upon his right Shoulder. Getting up again, and then thinking to get forth, he was immediately laid hold on and grievously hurt on the head with a sword, whereupon being felled to the ground, and feeling himself mortally wounded, Psalm 121. 5.

he cried, Lord into thy hand I commend my Spirit; for thou hast redeemed me, thou God of Truth.

Whilst he thus prayed, one of this Bloody crew ran up on him to have houghed him, but it pleased God his sword brake in the hilts. Now to let you understand by what means he was delivered from so imminent a death; two Gentlemen taking knowledge of him, as the rest were about to kill him, said, it is the Minister, let him be conveyed to my Lord Duke. These leading him away by both the Arms, brought him before the gate of the Monastery, from whence the Duke and the Cardinal his Brother coming forth said, come hither, and asked him, saying, Art thou the Minister of this place? who made thee so bold to seduce this people thus? Sir, said the Minister, I am no Seducer, for I have preached to them the Gospel of Jesus Christ. The Duke perceiving that this short and pithy answer condemned his cruel fact, began to curse and swear, saying, Death of God, doth the Gospel preach Sedition? Provolt, go and let a Gibbet be set up, and hang this Bougrer.

At which words the Minister was delivered into the hands of two Pages, who misused him viley. The Women of the City being ignorant Papists caught up dirt to throw in his face, and with extended outcries said, Kill him, kill this varlet, who hath been the cause of the slaughter of so many. Much ado there was to hold off the Women from being revenged upon the poor Minister.

Whilst the Pages had him thus in their handling, the Duke went into the Barn, to whom they presented a great Bible, which they used for the service of God. The Duke taking it into his hands, calling his Brother the Cardinal said, Lo here the Title of the Huguenots Books. The Cardinal viewing it, said, There is nothing but good in this Book, for it is the Bible, to wit, the holy Scriptures. The Duke being offended for that his answer suited not to his humor, grew into a greater rage than before, saying, Blood of God how now? what? the holy Scripture. It is a thousand and 500 year ago since Jesus Christ suffered his Death and passion, and it is but a year since these Books were imprinted, how then say you that this is the Gospel? by the death of God you say you know not what. This unbridled fury of the Duke displeased the Cardinal, so as he was heard secretly to mutter; An unworthy Brother.

This Massacre continued a full hour, the Dukes Trumpeters sounding the whilst two several times. When any of these desired to have mercy shewed them for the love of Jesus Christ, the Murderers in scorn would say unto them, you use the Name of Christ, but where is your Christ now become? And when they said Lord God, they blasphemingly would say, Lord Devil.

A grievous
sawge.

There died in this Massacre within a few days fifty or threecore persons; besides these, there were about two hundred and fifty others, as well Men as Women, who were wounded and spoiled, whereof some died, some were maimed, losing some a Leg, some an Arm; some their Fingers cut off from their Hands and carried away. The Poores Box, which was fastened to the Door of the Church with two Iron-hooks, was wrested thence, with twelve pounds therein, and never restored again. Nothing was to be seen in the Streets but Women with their hair hanging about their ears, faces besmeared with blood, being wounded in many places with Swords and Daggers, with weepings and lamentations. Barbers and Chirurgeons were set on work, that he that had least had threecore under his hand to be dressed, and many perished for want thereof.

The Minister was kept close Prisoner, so as for four and twenty hours none were permitted to supply him with any necessaries at all, nor any suffered to see him or speak with him, and was oft threatened by his Keepers to be sowed up in a Sack and drowned. Fain would they have drawn him to have kept his Easter after the Popish guise, under fair promises of his enlargement; but he would by no means consent thereto. Thus continued he Prisoner until the eighth day of May 1563, at which time he was let free by the suit of the most illustrious Prince of Portien.

Whilst the Duke was at Eclairon, the Lackeys and other of their sort put to sale, unto such as would give most, Cloaks, Hats, Girdles, Coifs, Kerchiefs, with other things which they had spoiled the massacred of; Crying them with a loud voice, as if a common Crier had cried Household-stuff to be sold.

A memorable Deliverance.

One called John of the Gardens, having lived a long time with his Wife and Child (in regard of the present Troubles) abroad in the fields nigh to a City called Seulsi in France, at length determining to go back again into the City, cutting himself and his upon the Providence of God, were met in the Suburbs by two of the City, who willed the Souldiers to put them to the Sword. The Mother of the Child kneeling down asked not her own life, but requested that if they must needs die, they would first kill her Child, because seeing it die before her, the night die with the less sorrow, fearing lest the poor Babe should otherwise (in such a time of trouble) be left to shift for it self; which speech of hers so wrought upon the Souldiers, that they saved all their lives.

The strange deliverances of a godly Minister of the Church of Chaalons in Champaign called J. Fournier, after he had endured many hard usages.

First, being apprehended and spoiled of all that he had, they stripped him of his good Apparel, and then put an old three-bare Cloak upon him, and carried him away in a Cart, in regard of a hurt which he had formerly gotten in one of his feet; by reason whereof he was disabled to go, and so was conducted with infinite Jest broken upon him, and at every moment in danger of his life for six miles together, till he came to Manchon, where he had like to have been pulled in pieces by the rude multitude, but was preserved notwithstanding even by those who had already determined to be his death; the Prison also being nigh unto the Gate of the City.

The 13th of September, a Captain called Frasne came to the Prison where he was detained, accompanied with many Souldiers, who with mocks and threats mingled together swore that within three hours he should be hacked and hewed to pieces, and so should be made a Maygame to all the City, with which words he left him. came in after him, demanding wherefore he was brought to S. Manchon, and forthwith commanded the Gaoler to load him with Irons, telling him in scorn; you are no better than St. Peter I am sure, whom they laid in Iron. But if you have as much faith as he, God will then deliver you, as he did him, by sending an Angel unto you. I will not, said the Prisoner, compare my self with St. Peter: yet it is not 12 years ago since (for preaching the same Doctrine that St. Peter did) I was imprisoned at Taylouse, and yet admirably delivered: and though St. Peter was delivered out of Prison, yet to the end he glorified God by his death. And if I should be counted worthy to suffer with him for the Truth, may it not be said that I have the like precious Faith as St. Peter had? but for that time he escaped those bolts, having hurt his foot and leg very sore at his apprehension; his Shackles at that time were turned into a far more straight Prison.

The Duke of Nevers was a good Friend unto this Fournier, by whose mediation he was the rather spared. But the said Duke receiving an hurt at Dreux whereof he died, and the Duke of Guise succeeding him in the government of Champaigne, his Enemies began to renew their former grudge against him, who brought him to be examined by torture.

Where first they strained both his Thumbs so hard with a small Cord, that the blood came forth. Then, turning his Arms behind his Back, they hoisted him with a Rope put between his Thumbs to tied; twisting him up five or six times thereby, sometimes letting him down, and then letting him hang again till his spirits and speech failed him. But not content therewith they tied a great Stone to both the great Toes of his Feet, and then examined him; first if he had not a purpose to preach at Verdun, if the Company who conducted him thither came together; his answer was, That he could not determine to do that which he had no hope to perform, nor came it into his thought.

Then they asked him where he had those Cloaths he wore, seeing he was but barely clothed when he came into Prison? He answered, That the Marquess d'Ule when he sent from Chaalons, sent them unto him by her Taylor. Being further asked who taught him to refuse his Judge; his answer was, That his own reason counselled him so to do, and none else. This was the effect of that for which he was so miserably tortured, and so in conclusion they let him fall with such violence on his face, that he was grievously hurt thereon.

Being from thence removed to another Prison according to their custom for two or three hours, and then returned to that he was in before, he could not be permitted to have so much as a Chirurgeon to cure him of the gashes the Cords had made in his Flesh, even to the bare Bones: by reason whereof he continued in exceeding torment and anguish, not being able to bring his hands to his mouth, which were also so wrung, that he thought if God should grant him life, yet he should yet be deprived of the use of his Limbs.

His Indictment being framed, and his condemnation subscribed by sundry Judges thereunto appointed, some other being of another opinion disappointed that determination. The News also of the Duke of Guise's death coming in the neck of it, changed these Foxes into another shape. The Names of the principal whereof were Cocot and Buffi. Some that had been his Judges coming into the Prison, demanded of him if he bare them not vermouth of ill-will: He answered that men of his Profession and Religion ought not to malice any, no not their Enemies, being rather enjoyed by God to love and pray for those that persecuted them; shewing furthermore, that whatsoever troubles had befallen him were none other but such as God had before ordained for the setting forth of his own glory; for which he esteemed himself most happy: only he warned them to bethink themselves well what wrong they had offered him, lest the vengeance of God might sometime or other overtake them.

The next day, being the twelfth of April, Buffi, having received Letters from the Constable for the enlargement of Fournier, being solicited thereto by the Captain of la Tourneille; instead of obeying the Constables command, swore that he should be delivered indeed, that is to say, into the hands of the Multitude: and thus stiffly

ADDD 1562. stiffly refusing either the publication of the Letters, or to observe the Edict, caused three of his Prisoners of the Religion to be put into the Dungeon, because he heard them sing Psalms.

In the mean while the Prince of Portien bringing back the German Souldiers, and passing by Chaalons, the chief men of that City, fearing to be over-run, met him; whom he threatened to leave neither Village nor house standing, unless they restored him the said Fournier in safety. Which they promising to do at their return they so far prevailed with Bussi, that he consented to what they had so promised. And thus on the last of April (which was eight Months since Fournier was first imprisoned) the Lieutenant Gode, and the Abbot of All-Saints, with some others resorted to him, declaring that they were willing now to set him at liberty: entreating him now to forgive and forget that which was past; that the Prince might see how forward they were to gratifie him herein. Fournier was brought into a Cathedral Church not far from the Prison, where he found the Captain of the City with a great Company of armed men ready to conduct him out of the Town. But the place was forthwith beset with People whom Bussi to that purpose had stirred up, so that had it not been for those who defended him within, and an extraordinary shower of Rain coming between of long continuance, which caused the greater part of the Seditious to depart, Fournier had hardly escaped their hands, if a means had not been found to let him out by a back door.

It is here to be noted, that upon the eighth day of October the Bishop of Chaalons calling Fournier into his Garden, endeavoring to turn him from the faith, said, I marvel how you, being an ancient Doctor in Divinity, of the age of fifty eight years, and so well learned in the Tongues, should thus be led aside with these Opinions, giving credit so suddenly to the writings of Calvin and others. To Calvin? said Fournier, you should rather have said, by believing and giving credit to the Word of God.

Gode beslurring him, and being now far more willing to save the said Fournier's life, than he had been formerly to deprive him of it, in the evening bringing him to his own house, and Lodging him in his own Bed, did what he could the next day very early to send for the Keys of the City Gates. Which when he could not obtain of Bussi, who kept the Gates fast shut for fear of the Suave Rulers, he then endeavored to bring the said Fournier secretly by a back way, to an house near to the Gate of the said City; so as at eleven of the Clock, certain Coaches going out, he was shuffled out amidst them, and himself brought him on the way about a quarter of a mile; where he was by and by received by those who attended there for him, with a charge to bring him to their Prince, who at that time was in the Castle of Songz; Where he was kindly welcomed of the said Lord, and of all his Friends besides, having compassion on him, in regard that now being fifty eight years old, he had suffered so many hard encounters. And within two days after he preached before the Prince and all his Followers, and the day following, at the instant request of those of Vivri, went thither to preach and baptize Children, the Prince being present there in his own Person. At length Fournier, gathering a Church together at a place called Ver, spent some small portion of time among his Flock there, with wonderful fruit: being sore weakened when he was in Prison (what with strait dyet, and the extremity of the torture) he soon after finished his course, leaving to Posterity a rare memory of his constancy and piety.

Savage cruelties committed upon the Persons of the godly at Bat upon Seine.

Such was the cruelty of the Executioners after they had slain those of the Religion, that cleaving their bodies in twain, they stuck not to pluck their hearts thence, as they lay upon the ground, gnawing them between their Teeth, and so reaching them from one to another, saying, now they knew they had eaten the heart of an Huguenot before they died.

The violent rage of the Souldiers at Mondon, who proceeded so far as to re-baptize the young Children of Protestants after the Popish manner.

The Souldiers in this City of Mondon took little Children who had been baptized by the Ministers of the Church there, and caused them to be re-baptized by their Priests, imposing upon them other names; yea, they re-baptized a Girl of thirteen years old, whom they presented stark naked to the Font. Yet the young Infants which began only to speak declared both by evident signs and words that they would not be re-baptized, so as a Girl of two years old, being brought near to the Font, with much struggling cryed with a loud voice, that their doings were too shameful; saying that she would not be baptized again, and therewithal strook the Priest with all the Power he had. Also the Son of Jean Haies, of the same age, took the Priest by the Beard, and defended it self as well as it could. But not all this the Priests would not give over.

Another barbarous cruelty committed by the Peasants of Fresnay in the County of Maine.

In the Village of Fresnay, distant about some ten miles from the City of Manu, a little after that those of the Religion had forsaken the City, a certain Weaver called Hagannot, who was wont to read the prayers in the Assembly among some few of the godly in that place, was haled in the night out of his house by the Peasants there, who having cut his throat afterward filled his mouth with the Leaves of a New Testament which they found about him.

Execrable blasphemies and outrages committed in the City of Angiers.

A Company of Rake-hells breaking into a Merchants house, found there many Bibles, which they burned in the City; but choosing out a great Bible amongst the rest, gilt and fair ruled, they fastned it upon the Point of an Halberd, and going thence, went in Procession therewith through the High streets of the City, with a great cry, saying, Lo, here the Truth hangeth, the verity of the Huguenots, the Truth of all the Devils; lo, here the God, the mighty God hath spoken. And in this manner they passed along until they came to the Bridge, where they threw it into the River, saying, Behold the Truth of all the Devils drowned.

A strange course to make Viduals Cheap.

In the City of Blays, whilst those of the Religion were cruelly handled, it so fell out, that in such a disorder even the Roman Catholics themselves drank with them of the same Cup; in regard whereof complaint was made on both parts, to the Duke of Guisse, in hope of some redress. His answer was, that the Kingdom was but too much replenished with People, and therefore his purpose was to cut off as many as he could, that so all kind of Viduals might be sold better cheap.

An outrage done to poor Women, who met together to comfort one another.

There was an honest Woman of the City of Blais, whose name was Nichole, the Wife of one John le Manchet, a maker of Sun-Dials, in whose house certain Neighbours meeting together to comfort and edifie one another, and to pray one with and for another, to the number of 9 or thereabouts, with their Daughters, these Murderers hearing of it ran violently in among them, thinking to have found a Minister preaching to them; but when they saw how they were mistaken, they dragged them out by the hair of the head into the midst of the street; where loading them with abundance of stripes they cast them into the River: in which calamity God endued them with such strength and skill, being unbound, that endeavouring to swim, at length they arrived at an Isle: where being seized upon again by certain

Ferrinen,

Ferrimen they were stripped naked, and then thrown again into the River: and thinking yet to save themselves, they were in the end knocked down by the Seditious in the Suburbs of Vienna.

A pitiful and Tragical Spectacle.

A Certain poor Woman of Tours, whose Husband they had not long before drowned, having an Infant about six or seven weeks old sucking at her breasts, and holding by the hand a Daughter of hers, very beautiful to look upon, of the Age of 15. or 16. years, was by many infolencies haled to the River side, where having made her Prayer upon her knees, the Child sucking at her breast, she shifted it there in the Sun, and after laid it upon the grass, then kneeling down again, commended it to God. Meant while this hellish-rabble used many words to turn the young Maiden from her Religion, some using fore threats, others making her many fair promises. One of the Souldiers, being a braver gallant than the rest, promised her marriage, so as the poor wench stood in a mammering, not knowing what to do. Her Mother seeing her wavering, earnestly exhorted her to persist in the Truth, her self being at that instant ready to be plunged into the Water. The Daughter beholding such an outrage, crying out used these words (all which was afterwards testified by those who were consenting to this murder, being also converted themselves by such a rare example of constancy) I will, said she, live and die with my Mother, whom I know to be a virtuous Woman: as for your threats and promises I regard them not, do with me as you please. The Mother was not yet dead when these merciles wretches threw in the Daughter after her, who making towards her Mother and they both embracing each other, yielded up their Souls into the hands of God. The poor Infant was taken up by a Souldier, who, having kept it a day and a night from the Breast, laid it the next day in a Church-porch, whence being taken up, and given to a Nurse to keep, it would never take the Breast after, but within two days it died.

An History containing the singular constancy of a Christian Woman, together with her gracious Answers to her adversaries.

IN the same City of Tours, the death of an honest Matron called Glee is very remarkable. This Woman having much profited in the knowledge of Gods Word, was presented before Chavigny, before whom she gave a reason of her Faith, confirmed by Testimonies of Scripture, with such constancy in the presence of certain Priests and Priests, that in the end they gave her no other answer but this, that she was in a damnable estate. It seems so indeed, said she, being now in your hands; but I have a God that will neither leave nor forsake me for all that. Thou hast, said they, renounced the Faith. It is true said she, I have renounced your Faith; which I am able to shew is rejected and accursed of God, and therefore deserves not so much as to be called Faith. Upon this they committed her to Prison, where she was again solicited to recant; to which purpose they sent certain Women unto her into the Prison; but all in vain: for on the contrary she spake her mind freely, and comforted the Prisoners which were in the same Prison with her for Religion.

Now it happened one morning, as she was about to take some bodily refreshing, News was brought her that she was condemned to be hanged with three men also. Which News she received with such joy and rejoicing, that the Officer had no sooner ended his message, but forthwith she kneeling on her knees began to praise and magnifie the name of God, in that he had shewed her so much mercy, as to deliver her by such a kind of death out of the troubles of this wretched world; as also for that it pleased the Lord to honour her so far as to die for his Truth, and to wear his Livery, meaning the Halter which the Hangman had now put about her neck. Then sitting down at Table to break her fast with the rest of the Company, giving thanks to God, she exhorted them to be of good courage, and to trust unto the end in his free and only mercy. Lastly, having sent her Children some such small trifles as she then had about her, she called for a clean Linnen Wastecote, making her self ready, as if she had been going to a Wedding.

Being conducted thus with the rest of the Prisoners about two of the Clock in the afternoon, and passing by St. Martins Church, she was commanded to receive a Torch into her hand, and to acknowledge she had offended God and the King. Away, away said she, with it; I have neither offended God nor the King, according to your meaning, nor in respect of the cause for which I suffer. I am, I confess, a sinful Woman; but I need no such light, for helping me to ask forgiveness of God for my sins past or present; use such things your selves, who sit and walk in the darkness of ignorance and error.

Then one of her kinsfolks met her in the way, and presented unto her view her little Children, praying her to have compassion on them, seeing that by renouncing her Religion she might yet preserve her life, and see them provided for. Upon this meeting her motherly affection caused her to shed plenty of Tears: but by and by taking unto her new courage, I must needs tell you, said she, that I love my Children dearly: but yet neither for love I bear to them or any thing else in this world, will I renounce the Truth, or my God, who is and will be a Father unto them, to provide better for them than I could have done; and therefore to his providence and protection I commend and leave them; and so passed on cheerfully without being any further daunted.

Drawing nigh to the place of execution, the called upon God without ceasing, lifting her hands up to Heaven. Now the men which came with her being ready to suffer, when she saw them about to die silent, and not to call on God, she exhorted them thereto, and began aloud to rehearse the Confession of sins, which begins thus, Lord God Almighty and everlasting Father, &c. and so continuing forth the ordinary prayers, reciting also the Lords Prayer, and the Articles of the Creed, the with much peace and joy in the holy Ghost finished her life.

A Note touching the King of Navarre that then was.

DURING the siege of Rovan, Anthony so Bourbon King of Navarre, being forsaken of his faithful Friends and Servants for conniving with the Camp of Trum-Zivat, was shot into the right shoulder with an Harquebus, the fifteenth day of October, whereof he died the seventeenth day following. Not many hours before his death, with Tears in his eyes, he asked pardon of God, making confession of his Faith, according to the form then used amongst those of the Religion; protesting that if he might be cured of his wound he would cause the Gospel to be preached throughout all the Kingdom of France. He was a Prince endowed with many good gifts of God, naturally of a gentle disposition, and yet a valorous and courageous Warriour, but so addicted to follow his pleasures and delights, that to enjoy them, he easily abandoned the care of his more weighty affairs, and so was subject to no small inconvenience, namely to be ill served and obeyed; in the mean while neglecting the Services of such as had been his loyal and affectionate Subjects: An imperfection which hath cost France a million of menslives, with innumerable ruines besides; an end whereof is not suddenly to be expected.

The death and Martyrdom of Augustine Marlorat, one of the Ministers of the reformed Church in Rovane as also of three other Personages, who suffered with him at the same time, Anno, 1562.

AMONGST the garboyls which by the Seditious were moved at Rovan, Captain Saint Esteve kized upon the bodies of Augustine Marlorat, of Du-Besick, Sieur de Mandreville, Cruchet, Sieur de Sequance, and Noel Cotton. Mandreville perceiving this Captain to be no well willer of theirs, yet promised him a thousand Crowns, if he would save his life and the life of Marlorat, one of their Ministers: weich he having promised to do, by and by he shewed him the place where into Marlorat, was retired, namely a Tower into which himself, his Wife and Children were put, with some others. Thus being both brought together, the door was presently fast shut upon them.

1562. The seven and twentieth of October the Constable (accompanied with the Duke of Guise) coming to view the place, desired to see Marlorat, to whom he said, you are he who have seduced the People. To which he replied, That if he had seduced them, it was God that had been the doer of it rather than he; for, said he, I have preached nothing unto them but his Divine Truth. The Constable told him, that he was a Seditious person, and the cause of the ruine of that City. To which he answered, As for that imputation, I refer my self to all that have heard me preach, be they Papists or Protestants, whether I ever medled with matters of Politick State or no: but contrariwise have according to my ability, labored to instruct them out of the holy Scriptures. The Constable with an Oath replied, That he and his abettors plotted together to make the Prince of Conde, King, the Admiral Duke of Normandy, and Andelot Duke of Britain. To which Marlorat answering and testifying the innocency of those Noble Personages, gave only this for his labour, the Constable told him (confirming it with a solemn Oath, that within a few days he should see whether his God could deliver him out of his hands or no; and so departed in great rage.

Not long after, these four, to wit, Marlorat, Mandreville, Seigneur and Cotton, and other chief men of the Church were brought into the Palace. But the names of the four above specified were only taken, and forthwith their Indictment drawn; whence presently succeeded the Sentence at the instance of Bigot Advocate for the King: which Sentence here followeth.

The Court having been informed by the Interrogatories and confessions of the Seditious in the City of Rouen, and other parts of the Country, namely by Mr. J. B. de Mandreville, President of the Court of Requests in Rouen, Vincent Gruchet Seigneur of Seigneur, an ancient Counsellor in the said City, Noel Cotton Seigneur of Barbouvillie, the Kings Notary and Secretary, and Counsellor also of the said City with Augustine Marlorat Preacher and Minister in the said City, Monk and Priest, having a wife, being all Prisoners in the * Conseil of the said Court; conclusions against them being taken by the Kings Attorney General, all and every thing and circumstance considered, the Court hath and doth declare the four Persons aforesaid guilty and convicted of high Treason in every particular: for the punishment and satisfaction whereof the Court hath adjudged and doth adjudge the said Bote to be drawn naked, only a shirt upon him, on a Sled or Hurdle, into the old Market place; and there to be beheaded upon the Scaffold of the City; which done, his head to be set upon a Pole and placed upon the Bridge of the said City; and his Body divided into four parts to be set upon four Gibbets, for a Spectacle to the beholders.

And as touching Gruchet and Cotton it is decreed, that they shall also be drawn in like manner upon a Sled before the Town-house of the City, there to be hanged upon a Gibbet, and afterwards their heads, being separated from their bodies, to be affixed and set upon the Bridge of the said City, and afterwards to be carried to the Gibbet.

And as touching the said Marlorat, the Court testifies that he is attained and guilty of being one of the Authors of the great assemblies, which have been the cause of Rebellion and Civil Wars. And therefore as a punishment, to satisfy the Law for these Crimes, the Court hath condemned and doth condemn the said Marlorat otherwise called Pasquier, to be drawn upon a Sled, and to be hanged upon a Gibbet before our Ladies Church in Rouen: this done, his head to be stricken off from his Body, and set upon a Pole upon a Bridge of the said City. All their Goods and heritages to be confiscate to the Kings use, &c.

And underneath it was written;

This present Sentence was pronounced and executed in the presence of the Lords and Commissioners, Alexander Moyll, Morterule, and Sirend Messengers, the last of October, Anno 1562.

M Andreuville at his death shewed a wonderful constancy, expecting the stroke without being bound, calling earnestly upon God, speaking in the just defence of the reformed Churches, in the Faith of which Doctrine he protested he was now prest to yield up his Soul into the hands of God.

As touching Augustine Marlorat, a man excellently learned, and of an unblamable life, who had the Testimony even of the Papists themselves, that in his Sermons he never uttered ought that tended to Sedition or Rebellion: they were not content to see him drawn upon a Hurdle with shame and contempt, but also the Constable loaded him with a thousand disgraceful and outrages; as also a Son of his called Nauier in a soon after in the Battle of Dreux. Beteis, Villebon gave him a twich with a Wand, not without reproachful speeches also. But he notwithstanding bare all indignities very meekly and patiently.

When he was come to the place where he should suffer, he made an excellent speech, according as the time there permitted him; exhorting Gruchet and Cotton, who were to suffer with him, to stand fast in the Faith unto the end: which they also did. And yet the rage of the People not being herewith satisfied, a Soldier with his Sword strook at Marlorats Legs, being already dead. Upon which insolencies God within a while after executed his just vengeance; for the Captain who surpris'd Marlorat was slain within the space of three weeks by one of the basest Soldiers in all the band. And as concerning his Judges, two of them died soon after strangely; namely one of them, to wit the President, by a flux of Blood, which they could by no means stanch: the other (which was a Councillor) making Water at his Fundament, with such stinch, that none could endure to come nigh him.

As for Villebon, he escaped at no better rate; for the 16th day of February the Marshall Vieille of Ville, coming to Rouen to take order about the affairs of Diaps, having invited him to Dinner, among other talk between them, sitting together after they had dined, the Marshall lamenting the miserable estate of that City, exhorted Villebon to use some means for the redress of such disorders, being the Kings Lieutenant there. Which words Villebon took very harshly, saying, That if any would dare to tax him for not carrying himself as he ought in his place, he would again tell him to his face he lyed. Which words (with often repetitions) he used after such a manner, as the Marshall being therewith very much urged, was forced for saving of his honour to draw his Sword, wherewith he let drive with such violence at Villebon, that if he had not received the blow with his hand, he had cleft his head down to his Teeth. So Villebon escaped at that time with the loss of his hand, wherewith he had dishonorably smitten Marlorat at the place of execution. Which hand he caused to be buried with greater solemnity than himself could attain unto afterwards.

A relation of such troubles and persecutions as happened to those of the Religion in the City of Caen and other Cities of France, as hereafter follow in the year 1562.

Caen.

Such and so long continued the Troubles in the City of Rouen, that many were driven to escape for their lives into this City of Caen; For albeit the King had commanded, that the pillaging and sacking of Rouen should not last above twenty four hours, the Seditious there continued it above twenty four weeks; and albeit they were forbidden to carry any goods out of that City, yet the Merchants of Paris, of Amiens, Beauvais, and others besides, ceased not to load Carts by Land, and Vessels by Water: which some of them notwithstanding enjoyed not long; for such as were the receivers of these spoils were spoiled thereof by Thieves which met them upon the way.

The death of Mandreville.

Marlorat used disgracefully as he went to be executed.

his behavior at his death.

Strange judgment of God in killing him, in that he had a hand in his own death.

* The name of a secret Prison.

Valongnes.

THe Body of Coqueville being stripped naked, was dragged by the Murtherers (of this Town, being in Low Normandy) up and down his house with all derision into a Chamber of his, where the Exhortations were wont to be made; and there spurning the dead Body with their feet, they bade him now pray to his God, and preach if he could; Yea, the Priests who were then present stuck not with the points of their Halberds to stuff the mouths and wounds of the Dead with the Leaves of Bibles, saying to the poor dead Corps, Preach the truth of your God, and call upon him now to help you.

Thalaise.

A Trumpeter and the Common Cryer in the City called Nicholas Bofche, being commanded by the Seditious to say Ave Maria, answered with a stedfast countenance, Ab, the blessed Virgin: where is she that I might salute her? Then looking about him this way and that way, he said, I see she is not here, she is in Heaven, and thither will I go to find her; and so being brought to the place of Execution, he died constantly.

Gaillac.

THe Murthers which were committed in this place were cruel and horrible; inasmuch as some were forced to go up to the top of an high and great Rock, whereon the Abbey of St. Michael was built, having underneath it the River of Tar very deep, into which they were thrown down headlong, meeting in the passage with another Rock, on which some were burit and dashed all to pieces; and if any fell into the River escaping with life, he was knocked down immediately by the Murtherers, who attended waiting in Boats upon such occasions.

Among the rest Peter Dome, the Servant of an Apothecary, requested he might have leave to cast himself from a place higher than that from which others were thrown down; on condition that if God should in the fall preserve him from being hurt he might then escape with life. He was carried up upon the top of the Abbey, where having made his Prayers unto God, fetching his leap, he flew so right forth, that missing the Rock, he fell safely into the River, whence endeavouring to swim out he also was knocked down, notwithstanding their Promise made to him as touching the contrary.

Souraze.

A Poor Woman called Castille Raquet being a Widow, aged about sixty years, being in her poor Cottage in the City of Souraze, was set upon by Captain Durre, having at his command three hundred men. He caused this Widow to be fast bound with Cords, with another fastened about her neck all right. The next day having half strangled her here and there, he asked how oft she had played the Whore with those of her Religion: to whom she boldly answered, That in their Christian meeting no such Villanies were committed. Durrs, fretting and fuming at this her answer, took her by both the Cheeks, forcing her Head against a Wall with such violence, and so often therewithal, that he had almost beaten out her Brains, and then willed her to give him seven hundred pieces of Gold, which she said she had hidden: to which the replying told him, she was a poor Woman, and had only a French Penny; he chafing thereat drew her again by the Neck with the Cord, and then applied roasted Eggs even as they came hot out of the fire under her Arm-holes, so as they were much blistered therewith, and afterwards in derision bade her cry to her Father which is in Heaven. She answered, I will not cry aloud for thee, and yet he can hear me well enough, and when his will is, he will also deliver me out of thy hands; being more afflicted with the Blasphemies which this Varlet uttered, than with all the torments which she endured on her Body. He having bemauled her Shins with the Pattens she wore upon her Feet, she told him his cruelty far exceeded that of the Turks and Infidels.

Un Torto-
rois.

Whereupon he calling her Huguenot Whore, told her, That these were but the beginnings of her torrows, so as if she did not disclose unto him seven hundred pieces of Gold, he would draw her Cheeks and Breasts with Lard, and then fasten her to a Form and burn her quick, and after mount her up to the highest Steeple in the City, and cast her thence down headlong. Well, said she, though my Body fall never so low, that shall not let my Soul from being carried up into Heaven. This Captain being herewith more inflamed with ire than before, seeing that none of these Cruelties could shake the faith and constancy of this poor Woman, he said unto her, Eat this Sugar, taking Loam or Mortar from off the Wall, causing her to open her mouth with his Dagger, and to swallow it down. But not contenting himself therewith, the Villain forced her to drink a glass of Urine, which himself had made in her presence, and then threw the Glass, with what remained therein, in her face. Lastly, he caused her to pass along through the Troops of Souldiers, with intention to have had her slain among them: yet compassion moving them to spare her, he brought her into his Lodging, where this enraged Wolf by strange Cruelties would have caused her to lose her life, had not some of the Inhabitants by giving him ten Crowns redeemed her, and so conveyed her to her own house, where within a short time after she finished her days.

One buried alive.

Peter Robt, Servant to the Lieutenant of Dignes, being met withal in the Country, was buried alive; they constrained him to dig his own Grave himself, and so tried whether it were large enough or no; unto which he was compelled by Bartholomew Chancel-grosse and his Complices.

Provence.

Two Women Crowned with Thorns.

THe Wife of Andrew Renaud being brought through St. Martins of Casillon was stripped stark naked; and resisting such as would have violated her Chastity, she was whipped outrageously, then wounded with Swords, crowned with Thorns, then cast into the River, and lastly shot to death with Harquebusses.

Jannetta Calvin, of the place of Cella, being of the age of Eighty years, brought into the City of Brignole with a crown of Thorns platted upon her head, being whipped till the blood came exceedingly, was first stoned and then burned alive.

Macon.

THe Murtherers in this City having seized upon the Body of Bonnet Bor in Macon, one of the most noble Houses of the same, a man of great Learning and of an unblameable life, who in other places had served in the Ministry 20 years, having been ranomed three several times, was carried along with a thousand Scoffs and frumps, smitten with fists through the Corners of the Streets, with crying, That whosoever would bear this devout and holy man preach, should come to the Slaughter-house. Whither having brought him, they buffeted him and mocked him two full hours.

He only requested before he died, that they would permit him to make his Prayers to God. Whereupon cutting off the one half of his Nose, and one of his Ears, they said, Now pray as long as thou wilt, and then we will send thee to all the Devils. Then he kneeled down, and lifting up his eyes to heaven prayed with such fervency of Spirit, that he caused some of his Murtherers to sigh within themselves.

Then directing his Speech to him who had cut off his Nose, he said, Friend, I am here ready to suffer what thou hast yet further to inflict upon me. But thus I intreat of thee and thy Companions, to betink you well of the outrages committed by you against this poor City; for know there is a God before whose Tribunal you must give an account of these your Cruelties. At these words the blood issued so fast out of his Nose, that it hindered him from proceeding on in that he was about to have said.

Anno

Anno 1566. A Captain passing by cryed to the Souldiers, Send this wretched man to the Devil. Which one of them hearing, took him by the hand, and brought him to the brim of the River Saone, somewhat above the Slaughter house, pretending to wash and cleanse him from the Blood wherewith his visage was besmeared, conducting him to a Boat for this purpose; into which he was no sooner entred, but he there presently turned him over into the River; wherein he striving for life, and crying to God for mercy, these Tyrants battered him with stones till he sunk under the water and so died.

See here in part (saith the Historiographer) the lamentable estate of the Poor Churches of France, during the first troubles, which ended with the end of the Duke of Guise, the principal actor therein; who was slain at the Siege of Orleans, not without the immediate Hand of God, in the year 1562. by a poor gentleman whose name was John Polrot, a man very desperate, but of final stature, and therefore commonly called the little Spaniard; who shooting the Duke into the Shoulder with a Pistol, as he was riding to his Tent in an evening upon a little Nagg, was for the same fact adjudged to be drawn in pieces by four horses, his head to be cut off, and his torn Body to be burnt to ashes.

A very comfortable Letter written by Wouter Oom Prisoner and Martyr in the City of Antwerp, and full of Consolation against the fear of persecution: directed to a Brother and Sister of his.

Grace and Peace from God the Father, and from his Son Jesus Christ our Lord: Amen.

W Elbeloved Brother and Sister, whom I love dearly for the truths sake and for your Faith in Christ Jesus. These are to certify you that I am in Bodily health, and enjoy the comfort of a good Conscience, I praise my Lord God therefore, who is able to increase the same more and more, by the powerful operation of his holy Spirit. Whosoever they be that will forsake this present evil world, and become followers of their Captain Christ, must make account to meet with many persecutions and afflictions: for Christ hath told us aforehand, that we should be hated, persecuted, and banished out of the world; for his names sake. And this they will do, faith he, because they have neither known the Father, nor me. But be not afraid, faith he, for I have overcome the world. St. Paul also witnesseth the same thing, saying, all that will live godly in Christ Jesus must suffer persecution. And again: to you it is given for Jesus Christ not only to believe in him; but also to suffer for his sake. And doth not our Lord Jesus Christ say, blessed are you when men persecute you and speak all manner of evil falsely against you for my name sake? Rejoyce therefore and be glad, for great is your reward in Heaven: Now where-to serveth all this, my beloved, but to bring us into a conformity with our Lord and Master Jesus Christ? For Christ hath suffered for us, faith the Apostle Saint Peter, leaving us an example, that we should walk in his steps: who also endured the Cross, and despised the shame; for the obtaining of that joy which was set before him, and became poor to make us rich, 1 Cor. 8.9.

By him also are we brought by Faith into that state of Grace wherein we stand, rejoicing in the hope of the glory of God, knowing that tribulation worketh patience, &c. Wherefore dear Brother and Sister, be not afraid of the fiery trial which is now sent amongst us to prove us. For what Father loving his Child doth not correct it? Even so doth the Lord chastise those whom he loveth: for if we should be without correction, whereof all True Christians are partakers, then were we Bastards and not Sons. And therefore Salomon saith, my Son, despise not the chastening of the Lord, neither faint when thou are corrected of him; for whom the Lord loveth, the same he correcteth, even as a Father the Son in whom he delighteth. Fear not then to follow the footsteps of Christ; for he is the head and we are his members. Even as Christ then hath obtained full joy and glory by suffering of anguish and sorrows; so we also according to his example must through many tribulations enter into the heavenly places, even into the new Jerusalem. Let us then say with Saint Paul, Christ unto me is in life and in death advantage. Let us cry out with him, O wretched creatures that we are, who shall deliver us from this Body of death? See here how the faithful have desired to be with Christ: for with Abraham they had an eye to that holy City, which hath foundations, whose builder and maker is God. Let us then, my beloved, cheerfully and willingly follow the Lord, possessing our Souls by patience. For it is a good thing, as saith the Prophet Jeremiah, both to hope and quietly to wait for the Salvation of the Lord; and good also it is for a man to bear the yoke in his youth, for such the Lord will comfort in the end, and restore unto them the joy of his Salvation.

Loe here dear Brother and Sister, what Consolations our God hath treasured up for us in his holy word; for us I say, whose desire it is to fear the Lord, and to trust in his grace and mercy. For the Salvation of the Righteous is of the Lord: he is their strength in the time of trouble. Wherefore (q) giving all diligence, let us add to Faith virtue, and to virtue knowledge, and to knowledge temperance, and to temperance patience, and to patience godliness, and to godliness Brotherly kindness, and to Brotherly kindness love; for if these things be in us and abound, they will cause us neither to be idle nor unfruitful in the knowledge of our Lord Jesus Christ: The which God our Father grant us for his Sons sake our Lord, Amen.

Out of my hole, December the eleventh, 1562.

Wouter Oom Prisoner for the Truth.

Now because ye may see that this Letter was not without its effect, hearken to the Relation of the History following.

There was one John Wolfe of the City of Audenard, who because he could no longer inhabit there, without either the danger of his life, or wounding of Conscience, his Wife being great with Child, and as yet but weak in the knowledge of the Gospel, he was forced for these respects to joyn himself to the assembly of the Church in Antwerp, where thinking himself in safety, a Neighbour of his owing him ill will accused him to the Margrave about the Baptizing of his Child. Whereupon being then committed, and examined where and in whose presence his Child was Baptized, he without staggering answered, that he had it Baptized according to the institution of Christ, by a Minister far apart to that Office. The Margrave, not content with this answer, often pressed him with sundry threats of the Torture to accuse such as he knew. But the sharpest combat he endured was from his own Flesh, Counselling him during his Imprisonment, for the safeguard of his life, to dissemble and halt between two opinions. The cause was from the inward affection he bore towards his Wife and Child, being yet but young and of singular beauty; in regard whereof many of the Congregation expected no other but that he would sink under this Tryal.

But in the midst of these Assaults hee was heard, with Prayers and sighs, to cry mightily to God to be delivered from the temptation. Which Prayers of his were heard in due season, even then when in the judgment of man he was supposed to be overcome thereof, means ought to fly in time of temptation; was made of bringing to his hands consolatory Letters: as also the said Wouter Oom then Prisoner with him, comforted him not a little by his Letters. Whereby in the end he continued so strong in the Lord, as also constant in the Confession of the truth, that in conclusion he received the sentence of Death with the aforesaid Wouter. After which his Wife came unto him, and they were permitted to talk together, bursting out each of them in such abundance of tears, that it would have moved the most stony heart that ever was. At parting, with a bitter cry hee commended her to Gods mighty protection, and his Child to be trained up in the True Religion. Soon after; hee was drowned in the Tub or Vat of the Prison; and

A Relation of the troubles and Martyrdom of Christian Qackere, Jacques Dionfart, and Jean de Salomez of Steenwerk in Flanders.

To whom God gave such ability to answer their enemies demands, as if they had come from persons much more learned. Which shewes, that God measures out to all the gifts and Graces of his Holy Spirit, according to his good will and pleasure.

Where the persecution continued at this time in sundry places of Flanders, under Philip King of Spain, and that many fled into England under the protection of Queen Elizabeth; these three above mentioned were of the same number, who joynd themselves to the Dutch Church in London, having given publique Testimony of their Faith before all the Congregation. In which place they continued not long, but they were constrained upon some special occasions to return into their own Country again taking boat about the end of June, Anno 1560.

They were no sooner arrived at Neuport, but two of them, to wit, James and Jean, endeavored to pass on to Honscet, leaving Christian to come at his leisure, because he was not well at ease, having also a fardel of small Books of Religion.

The Bailif with some others meeting him upon the way, asked him whence he came and whither he was going, as also what he was. Christian framed them such an answer that they could take no advantage against him (travelling as he did upon the way) only they spied about him that fardel of Books, by occasion whereof they brought him back into the City: and having learned that he came over with two others, the Bailif forthwith sent his lieutenant towards Honscet; who so wilyly handled the matter, that in the end he caught them, and brought them bound to the City of Furn. Where for a few days they were Prisoners together with the foresaid Christian; in which condition they mutually comforted and encouraged one another: but their Adversaries soon separated them, thinking thereby to weaken their strength, constancy, and fortitude.

Upon the first of their interrogatories (which was about the third and fourth of July) they asked James why he separated from the Church of Rome.

Ans. Because it is not the Church of Christ.

Quest. How know you that?

Ans. Because it hath neither the Word of God soundly preached, the Sacraments duly administered, nor the Ecclesiastical Discipline after a right manner executed. James gave good and solid reasons hereof; shewing, that in their Church was taught, that Souls must be saved by saying of Mass, long prayers, Invocation of Saints, Pilgrimages, with other such vain and deceivable hopes; yea, said the Priests, do you thus judge of those who give to Jesus Christ Bread when he is hungry, and drink when he is thirsty, and cloath him being naked, &c. And so went on with multiplying many words, not suffering the said James to finish what he was about to have said. Others asked him if he could prove that they had not the true administration of Baptism.

Ans. You have so obscured it with your own additions, that a man can scarce discern it to be Baptism.

Quest. What think you then of your own Baptism.

Ans. Were I now to be Baptized, I would not receive it from your Church, so well it likes me that I have received it from you. Being demanded what he said to the Sacrament of the Altar, he proved evidently how far off it was from the first institution of the Lords Supper. And as concerning the Ecclesiastical discipline, he uttered more of their corrupting of it, then they were willing to hear.

After this, they were examined by two Friars, who were chosen out for the purpose; one of them was John Campo, superintendent of the Gray Friars of Dixmude, the other was called Peter Pennet Prior of the Carmelites in Ypre. These two examined the three Prisoners first upon the Articles of the Faith; and then, if they believed that Christ was made of the seed of the Woman? James answered, we are all persuaded that Jesus Christ was made of the seed of the Woman, according as God hath promised, Gen. 3. 15. Moreover, of the seed of Abraham, and of David; and that he was in all things made like unto his Brethren, Sin only excepted.

After many other questions upon divers points, they were asked, whether in the Consecration of the Mass the Body of Christ was present there or no? No, said James. It is nothing like the Lords Supper which Christ gave to them that sat at Table with him: According to which institution the faithful being assembled together, Abra. 4. 2. brake Bread, &c. Nor shall ye find in the Scriptures, that one alone receiveth, and that the rest stood and looked on. And if Saint Paul justly challenged the Corinthians, because every one was forward to eat his own supper apart; much more are ye worthy of their Reprehension. I do therefore rank you amongst those false Prophets which our Lord Jesus Christ hath warned us of, who will say thus unto us, Lo, here is Christ, and there he is.

Hercunto the Adversaries replied, Doth not Christ in express words say, This is my Body, This is my Blood?

Ans. The words must not be taken as they found in a literal sense, for so they shall have no agreement with other like places of Scripture. You know the words belonging to the ancient Sacraments were expounded by the Holy Ghost himself; Circumcision is called the Covenant, and the Lamb is called the Paschever, albeit they were but the signs thereof.

They asked if God were not omnipotent.

Yes, said James, but yet he will do nothing against his Word.

Quest. If the Bread be not changed, why doth Saint Paul affirm, That whosoever eats of this Bread unworthily, eats judgment to himself, not discerning the Lords Body.

We acknowledge all this, said they, because a man ought to examin himself, before he presume to come to that Holy Banquet; for in the Supper we receive not only Bread and Wine, but do also truly partake of the Body and Blood of Christ, as Saint Paul teacheth us.

In the fourth place, they were asked if marriage were not a Sacrament? No, said James, for Sacraments are not things indifferent to Christians, as marriage is; for Saint Paul saith, he that gives his Virgin in marriage doth well, but he that gives her not in marriage doth better. We hold wedlock to be an holy Ordinance of God, instituted in Paradise from the beginning of the world, honoured by Jesus Christ with his first miracle, yea we add further, that as marriage is honourable among all, and the bed undefiled, so Whoremongers and Adulterers God will judge.

Quest. But Saint Paul saith, it is a great Sacrament.

Ans. Why do you forbid it then? But that place of Paul by you alledged is not to be understood of marriage, but is meant of that special mystical union and Communion which is between Christ and his Church.

Quest. They asked him if confession were a Sacrament.

Ans. I find but two Sacraments mentioned in the New Testament. If you can find out any more, you shall do well to shew them. But as touching Confession, it is to God, to whom we must confess our sins, according to Davids example, and of the Prodigal Son, and sundry other, who with true repentance acknowledged their offences to God, who is faithful and just to pardon and forgive them. But to confess them to a Priest, it is so far off from being necessary, that I hold it altogether unlawful. These Fathers had their refuge to their wonted place of Saint James, Confess your faults one to another.

Ans. The Apostle would have us to confess our faults to such as we have wronged by word or deed. Also God enjoins us to reconcile our selves one with another by such a confession, if we would obtain pardon of him.

Ann 1566. Then they alledged that place of Saint Matthew, That whatsoever they bound on earth was bound in heaven.

Answer. Christ speaks there of Ecclesiastical discipline, which ought to be observed amongst Christians, by admonitions, and then by applying the Censures, according to the Doctrine of the Gospel, that so obstinate Sinners may be cast out of the Church. But all the world may see that you know not what this true discipline of Christ meaneth, nor what a right Ministry is in your Churches.

Quest. At least you acknowledge Extreme Unction to be a Sacrament, seeing Saint James speaks so clearly of it.

Answer. The anointing that Saint James speaks of is nothing like to your anointings. For that was a miraculous anointing for healing of the Body, and that, whilst the gift of healing was usual in the Church. But you anoint such as lye drawing on, and do it for the Salvation of their Souls. It is needful, I grant, to fend for the Minister, to comfort the sick, and to pray with them and for them, but not to besinear and grieve them.

Quest. Well, what say you to Confirmation? is not that a Sacrament?

Answer. In all the Scripture (said James) do I not find such a thing as your confirmation, as you now use it, and therefore I know not what it is. Here they cauled the Register to write, Non credit.

Then came they to the order of Priesthood, and asked if that were not a Sacrament.

Answer. No, no more than the rest. I am not ignorant that St. Peter calls the faithful a chosen Generation, a Royal Priesthood, an holy nation, a peculiar people; nor yet where Saint John saith, that Christ hath made us Kings and Priests; but what is all this to your Bishops and Priests?

Quest. What thinkest thou of the Pope.

Answer. I think him to be the same that Daniel and St. Paul foretold he should be. For he shews himself such a one as they have described him to be, coming with false signs, and lying wonders, sitting in the Temple of God, and exalting himself above all that is called God forbidding marriage, which God hath ordained, and meat which God hath commanded to be received with giving of thanks.

Question. What say you then unto Purgatory?

Answer. We acknowledge none other Purgatory, but the Blood of Christ, which only cleanseth us from all our sins.

Quest. Do not the Saints pray for us, and ought we not to pray to them?

Answer. God alone is to be worshipped, and prayed unto. Whilst the Saints were on earth they would not endure to be adored. Acts. 10. 25. 26. Which they then would rather have permitted (being clothed with corruption, and with natural desires of being honoured) then now when they have put off all carnal and human affections. The Angels themselves would not accept of Divine worship, Revelat. 19. 10. and 22. 9. They had many other disputes, which James could not write for want of paper, as he intimated to them of the Church.

The fourteenth of August they were examined the third time by Peter Tiselman Dean of Renay, Inquisitor general of Flanders, whose cruelties and extortions were exercised upon all the faithful, in all the persecutions and deaths which they suffered in the said Country. This morning was brought before him Jane Solomez, of whom he diligently enquired of those of the City of Steenwerke where she was born; but especially if she knew one Charles Vanderkaw, a man renowned amongst the faithful there. She answered she knew him, but he was now dead. After he had asked her name, he questioned with her, especially about the Sacraments, yea somewhat concerning the Lords Supper, holding her in these discourses about two hours before him.

To James Dienhart he propounded no questions, but came about him with these flattering speeches; My Son, you are young and in the prime of your youth; My Son, before the Magistrate of this City is very desirous you should be withdrawn from holding this new Doctrine, that so you might be brought again into the right way; but as I understand, you so persist therein, that there is no removing of you. James answered that it could not be called a new Doctrine, which was built upon the Prophets and Apostles.

To whom the Inquisitor replied; That Martin Luther was the first that broached it.

Answer. And what say you then to so many learned men which lived before him, as John Wickliffe, John Hus, &c. and some after him, as Calvin, John Alasco, Martin Mucron, and others in England, France, and Friesland? And though neither you nor I knew them, God knows them as well as he did the seven thousand of the godly, whom Lillas in his days was ignorant of. The Inquisitor, persisting in his old long, pressed him with the succession of his Prelates and Bishops. James put him in mind of another mark of the True Church; namely that it was always under persecution; and thence inferred that himself was a true member thereof.

The Inquisitor said, we are now persecuted in England: for now they begin to imprison some of our Priests there.

Answer. It is true that Boner late Bishop of London was committed to Prison, but not for his good deeds. The rest of them have their liberty.

Now this Inquisitor among other matters willing him to shew what service was due to the Virgin Mary, said, Is it not written, Honour all men? And what honour owe we then to the Mother of our Lord Jesus Christ?

You give her (said James) a goodly honour in bowing the knee before an Image of wood or stone, praying thereto as to your God. You may be ashamed of such abominable practices and Blasphemies. Much other reasonings they had, which the said James, for lack of paper and leisure, could not commit to writing.

The same day in the afternoon Christian Luckere, who was put into Prison apart, was also presented before this Inquisitor, and examined upon many Articles. In all his answers he shewed much courage; and when the other went about to prove that Jesus Christ was corporally present in the Sacraments, Christian used six or seven strong reasons to the contrary drawn out of the holy Scriptures, That it could by no means be granted, being repugnant to the truth. The Adversary perceiving the constancy of these three Prisoners, fought by all means to vex and weaken them. First they severed them one from another to deprive them of mutual comfort and Consolation. Secondly, gave charge, that in visiting them none should be so bold as to bring them ought to eat or drink. Thirdly, They were solicited by wicked ones to yield, and not wilfully to hazard their lives. Moreover, they had many other great provocations, and therefore by their Letters instantly requested the continual prayers of the Churches to God for them.

When the godly strangers in England were advertised of these their assaults, they solicited their Superintendent Edmund Bishop of London, at the request of the Archbishop of Canterbury, and others, to send Letters to the Magistrates of Furne, intreating that they would release these three Prisoners, whom they had apprehended as they passed along by the high ways side, without any misbehaving of themselves, or holding any dispute with any, and were innocent in regard of committing ought against the Laws of the Countrey. As touching their Faith which some called into question, they should not for that be molested; because in like manner her Majesty hath given free power and leave in case of Religion hitherto, that none of the Subjects of the Low-Countries, coming into England, and carrying themselves modestly, should be meddled withal. But if they shall deal so hardly with those of the Religion, who have submitted themselves as her Majestys subjects under her protection, then shall she be constrained, though to her great sorrow, to mete out the same measure to those of other Nations; but she hoped and expected the Contrary, both from the wisdom and equity of the Magistrates of Furne.

These Letters were dated the 26. of July 1568. and subscribed.

THe Magistrates of Furne having received these Letters sent them to Bruxels, where they were read before the Kings privy Council. But to extenuate the Authority thereof, it was noised that they were forged by some Lutherans; so as in the end they resolved (notwithstanding) to proceed against the said Prisoners, according to extremity of the Laws established by the King. Now these of Furne having in vain by all means assayed to turn the Prisoners from their Faith, they resolved to execute them. Many of the City, and others not dwelling far off, hearing the report of their purposed dispatch, prepared to come to the sight thereof, thinking it would have been on Wednesday which was Market-day. But the Magistrates taking notice of the multitude were somewhat amazed, and caused him that was to do execution to ride through the midst of the Market at high noon, as if he had been taking his journey out of the City, and so to make the people believe that they intended not their execution as yet. But on Wednesday towards the evening, the chief Bailiff accompanied with some of the Magistrates, came secretly into the Prison, soliciting each of the said Prisoners with many intrigues and enticing persuasions to recant; promising to set them free forthwith, if they would speak but one word to that purpose. But the Lord strengthened them so, that they overcame this dangerous assault. The Adversaries, seeing their expectations frustrated, caused all things the same night to be made ready for their execution the next day; to wit, chains, stakes, fagots, &c. Now the Lord, who hath the disposing of the Moments of time in his own hands, did appointed this project by a vehement shower of rain, which he sent, continuing all the forenoon.

The two Priests formerly mentioned were called for; each of them accompanied with one of their own coat. These began to assail the Prisoners from morning till eight of the clock, either to weaken, or else to turn them from their Faith. Which because they could effect neither upon James nor Christian, they dealt with Jane, thinking to have prevailed with her; but to as little purpose as with the two others. Being thus disappointed of their hopes, then they fled to their accustomed lies, which they term Fraudes pieuses, pious beguillings, saying thus unto her; Will you only shew your self singular in cleaving to this opinion, whereas your prison-fellows have renounced it?

The holy Virgin was nothing abashed thereat, but gave them this answer, That she could not believe it; and albeit it were so, yet would shee never go back from so certain a truth, grounded not upon man, but upon Jesus Christ?

These lying Priests, nothing prevailing with her, neither, went their way. Then the Prisoners encouraging one another, and preparing themselves for death, sang the seventy fourth Psalm. The Magistrates of Furne, that they might with the more security execute their sentence, caused the Gates of the City to be shut; and yet many got in, leaving their swords and staves at the gate. Now as they brought the Prisoners along to the Town-house. Every one as they went reached forth their hand to them, and bad them that they should be of good courage.

Appearing before the Magistrates they were denounced Hereticks. To which Christian, in the name of the rest, said, Not one of your Doctors can prove us Hereticks, nor can they convince us by Scripture. It was replied that they slighted the Sacraments. To which they freely answered, We hold and allow those Sacraments, instituted by God, in much more reverence than you. Upon this the Magistrates consulted together apart, and after a while came to their seats again, pronouncing sentence against these three, viz. to be strangled, and then burned or scorched, and the remainder of the Bodies to be hanged on the gibbet. They thanked the Judges for their sentence; yet advertising them well to bethink themselves of what they had done. As they were passing forth of the houle to be led to the slaughter, many of the godly bad them farewell, comforting, encouraging, and exhorting them to continue constant. Whereat the head Bailiff being much vexed pushed Jane so violently with his foot, that she fell down the stairs, at which the people were much moved. Christian went foremost, Jane next, and James followed. In beholding of which spectacle few there were which brake not forth into sighings, cryings, and tears, whilst they gave the people to holy and godly exhortations. One of the Monks called John Bels, being by, gave to Jane (many of good credit hearing it) his counsel in his Language, Fight valiantly, the Crown of immortality is ready for you. Whilst the executioner began to fasten their neck and feet with chains to the Stake, they sung the hundred and thirteenth Psalm, Out of the deep.

Frier John Compone, being impatient of such an harmony, yelled out like a mad man, saying, This shews you are not Christians; for Christ went to his death weeping. One in the middle of the assembly cried as fast on the other side, Thou liest thou false Prophet. Having finished the two first staves of the Psalm, the hangman being about to strangle Christian, the other two ceased, crying to their Brother; Be of good cheer and play the man. And Christian, lifting up his eyes to Heaven, said twice or thrice, Lord God heavenly Father into thy hands I commend my Spirit. Add then again, Lord forgive their Sin who have put us to death. James and the Maid made the like prayer. But because James was last strangled, and the people moved with compassion began to stir, the Hangman kindled the fire upon James being but half strangled. The people seeing him to die in the midst of the fire, were yet more moved, so as the Tormentor being in a maze got a staff out of a Boat headed with Iron, and smote the Martyr twice or thrice on the right side, to make an end of him. These three having a while lien in the fire, they were carried thence in a Cart to the gibbet, where being put apart upon 3 poles they were afterward taken down and buried.

Nicaise of Tombe born in Tournay, Martyr.
 Whose constancy is to be imitated and followed of every good Christian, in suffering for the Truth of the Gospel.

Nicaise dwelling in Tournay, and following the trade of Say-making, towards the end of his life, was then by the mercy of God brought to the knowledge of True Religion. Now that he might be the more thoroughly instructed therein, he went with his wife and family into the City of Wesell in base Almaine. In which City there was at that time an assembly of strangers, and especially of those who are called Wallons, exercising themselves in hearing the Word of God purely preached, and in receiving the holy Sacraments. But Satan the mortal enemy of Gods Children, envying their happiness, soon after troubled this Assembly in such wise with sundry questions, that some retired to Frankfort, others to Straussburg, and some to other places. Nicaise returned to Tournay whence he came, not to communicate there with the superstitious and abominations in which he had formerly been inwrapped, but to joyn himself to the Christian Assembly which met together in that place; to manifest the truth of that heavenly knowledge, which he had received out of the word of God.

Where notice being taken of him, they received him into their society, amongst whom he carried himself in so Christian a sort, as they well perceived him to be a man of an holy conversation, joynd with an earnest desire to advance the glory of God, and the Kingdom of Christ, in the edification of his Church. Now forasmuch as affliction is the true touchstone whereby the faithful are discerned from Hypocrites; Nicaise then shewed outwardly what he was within. For being importuned to take an Oath from those who were deputed thereunto by the King of Spaine, to live according to the custome of the Romish Church, and to observe the traditions invented by her; he, notwithstanding the threats and injuries done unto him, constantly held out against the said Oath, not casting how dear it might cost him in the end. Some of his kindred wished him at leastwise to withdraw himself aside for awhile into another City, till the urging of 1566.

Anno 1566. this Oath was over, as also that his Wife should change her Lodging in his absence.

To this counsel he consented; but the Lord, who governs all our intentions and purposes, had otherwise determined of him, namely to set him forth as an example of constancy unto others, and to bear witness so far to the Truth of the Gospel, as to seal the same with his Blood, by slaying him at that time in the City. For being ready to take his Journey, a near Neighbour of his, being an Enemy of the Gospel, accused him to the Commissioners for one that neither had nor would take the Oath according to the form appointed. Nicaise requiring to hear the tenour of the Oath, before he would make them answer, they told him that he must swear to keep and observe all ancient Customs; to receive in the Sacrament of the Altar his Creatour thrice in the year, and on Sundays and Holydays to hear Mass morning and evening. As soon as he had understood their meanings, he told them, he intended not at all to take any such Oath, nor to wound his Conscience in consenting to things so manifestly contradicting the Word of God; therewithal yielding them the reasons of this his resolution; accusing as well them for urging such an Oath, as those also who gave their consents thereto. Upon this he was committed and laid amongst Felons, in the Gaol called Piepgne, until Friday the 12th of November, on which day he received Sentence of death; namely to be bound and so led into the Market-place of the City, and there upon a Scaffold to be burned and consumed to ashes.

Having heard this Sentence, as he rose up, he said, now praised be God; and as he was about to have spoken more at large, the Procurer Fiscal being present prevented him, and thrusting him forward bid him march on. By and by they brought him to the place of Execution; and as it well fell out, having no Priest accompanying him, when he was come down to the Market-place, a near Friend of his coming to him commended him to God, and so they kissed each other.

Being now come nigh to the * Befroy of the City, seeing there a great multitude of People, who were assembled together to see him pass by, lifting up his voice, he spake thus, O ye Men of Tournay open your eyes; awake ye that sleep, and stand up from the dead, and Christ shall give you light.

He also prayed all whom he had any way offended to forgive him, as he for his part was ready to forgive all the World. The People hearing him say so, began to be moved and to make a great muttering. The multitude also that were come together were so many, that the Souldiers who accompanied the Patient (being now ready to suffer) could neither march nor keep rank; so as they were about to shoot. Which the People perceiving began to be moved so much the more, so as there had like to have been a great tumult. But going on they drew nigh to the place where the Scaffold was.

Nicaise all the while spent the time in prayer unto God, and being at the place of Execution he uttered these words, Lord, they have hated me without a cause, and ascended up joyfully to the Scaffold: where the Tormentors readily received him, and led him to the Stake; and as they were fastening him to it, he said, Eternal Father, have pity and compassion upon me, according as thou hast promised to all that ask the same of thee in thy Sons Name. Other Prayers he made there to his God, and so continued to his last gasp. And albeit the multitude made such a noise, and the beating of the Drums hindered his words from being all fully heard; yet he so often pronounced, and that with such vehemency, the word Jesus, that it, notwithstanding, might plainly be understood as long as the breath was in his Body. And thus ye have heard the godly life and blessed end of this constant Martyr.

Martin Bayart, Claude du Flot, with Jo. Dantricourt, born in the Country of Artois and Noel Tournemine, of Haring near Seclin, Martyrs 1566.

You may easily discern by the former Histories, that the Cruelties exercised against the Faithful in Flanders nothing diminished the increasing of them; for the innocent Blood thus shed was a means to bring many ignorant Souls to the knowledge of the Truth. These four above-named, dwelling in the City of Lisse, walked in the fear of the Lord, with zeal according to knowledge, as the event well manifested.

There was a Jesuit in the said City who had a Servant that was Cousin to one of the Martyrs, with whom they laboured, not without some peril, first to shew him the odiousness of that Sect, and then to instruct him in the Doctrine of the Gospel. To which purpose they lent him a Book containing good Instructions drawn out of the holy Scriptures. The silly Fellow, not considering the hurt that might follow, shewed it soon after to his Master. The false Prophet by and by knew that this Book was not forged upon his Anvil, and therefore diligently enquired of his man where he had it. Now that he might with the more expedition attain his desire, he gave him a piece of seven Stivers, telling him he should do well to bring him to the knowledge of them from whom he had received it; which was not hard to do, in regard they all four wrought upon their Trade (which was to dress Sayes) in an honest Widows house, who professed the same Religion with them.

The Jesuit coming to the knowledge hereof failed not, according to their guile, to reveal it to the Magistrate. Now left he might be suspected to be the trayer of them, the Fox withdrew himself the same time out of the City, whilst on a Saturday morning about two of the Clock these four were apprehended and imprisoned by the Magistrate. It fell out the same day, that certain Writings were set up upon the Town-house against the horrible tyranny of the Spanish Inquisition, which was then intended to be brought in and executed throughout the Low-Countries, which no doubt were the means whereby the Magistrates were the rather incensed against the Prisoners. But forasmuch as they were not found guilty of having any hand in this business, they were only examined about matters concerning their Faith. To which they answered with such courage and constancy, without varying or wavering, that the Gaoler wondered how they could answer the Judges so directly and pertinently (as it were with one consent) being notwithstanding severed one from another in the Prison.

The second of March 1566 they were condemned for Heretics by the Provost of the City, to the which they replied, that if they were Heretics then Gods Word must needs be Heresie, which could not be; and therefore they freely protested before all, that they were Christians, and held nothing but that which was agreeable to the Word of God. They were asked if they would submit themselves to the will of the Magistrates. They answered they would submit themselves to the will of God. Then was Sentence of death forthwith pronounced upon them, which was, that they should be burned alive before the Town-house. When they were brought out of Prison to be Executed, Noels Father came and embraced him, and kissing him said, Art thou led my Son in this sort unto death? This is nothing, Father, said he, for now am I going to life. And howsoever Noel wept in going up to the Scaffold, seeing his Father so dissolved into Tears; yet recovering himself, and being armed with new courage, he cried, O ye Priests, if we would have gone to your Mass, we needed not to have been here: but Jesus Christ never commanded nor instituted any such thing.

The Priests standing at the foot of the Scaffold, laboured to make the People believe they were Heretics, and that their Faith was the Faith of Devils, because they rejected the Sacraments. But to that one of them answered, that their Faith was nothing like to that of Devils; and as touching the Sacraments, they held so many as Christ ordained. Then said Martin, suffer us to die in peace, for we are in the right way and are going to Jesus Christ, hinder us not in this our Journey; with these and the like speeches the Priests mouths were stopped, not daring to come upon the Scaffold, as they were wont to do.

John Dauticourt coming up recited the Articles of the Creed, adding somewhat by way of exposition upon every Article. Those who knew him before his Imprisonment marvelled to hear him speak so judiciously. The Executioner thinking to please his Masters offered to gag him: but the Patient promised to hold his peace.

Y et

Yet being straitly fastned to the Stake by the neck, he said to the People; O my Friends; were it for speaking wickedly that they commanded me to be silent, it were somewhat, but I cannot be permitted to speak unto you the Word of God, and with a loud voice said, Who shall separate us from the love of Christ? shall Tribulations; or anguish? O Lord, we are delivered to death for thy sake, and are appointed as sheep to the slaughter. But let us be of good cheer my Brethren, for we shall be more than Conquerours, through him that loved us.

Mat. 7. 14.

The other three on their parts cried and said, This, this is the way that leads to life; this is the strait way by which we must enter thereto, as Christ our Lord hath taught us. Niel likewise said, Enter you my Brethren, and whilist I am alive pray for me; for after death prayers prevail not. When all of them were fastned to their stakes, and covered with fagots, with fire ready to set thereto, they began with one voice to sing the first part of the seven and twentieth Psalm, and after that the Song of Simson to the end: after which the fire began to be kindled, in the midst whereof they were heard to cry ten or twelve times to the Lord, especially John and Noel, with loud voices calling and saying, Lord receive us this day unto mercy, and unto thy Kingdom. And thus ceasing to cry any more, they yielded up their Souls into the hands of God. This constancy of theirs, proceeding from the work of Gods Spirit, was not without singular fruit, for the enlarging of the Church; for many being touched therewith went home thence, as if they had gone from a powerful Sermon.

Francis d'Alost in Flanders, Martyr, in the Year 1566.

THIS young man, being by his Trade a Cutler, during the time of his ignorance frequented the Court much, and took great delight in the vanity of this world, which gat him much respect of many, but chiefly among those of the Romish Religion, namely Priests and Monks, who willingly conversed with him, taking much contentment in his carriage and course of life. But as soon as God of his goodness by the means of his word had revealed unto him his Son Jesus Christ, he by and by altered and changed his former conversation: for having before lived in great dissoluteness, he now sharply reprov'd such as he knew to follow sinful ways: yea, he often taxed the Priests as well for their scandalous living as for their false Doctrine, wherewith they abused the People; but principally for making them to fall down to such a god as could not defend nor keep himself from Rats and Mice, and which is worse, to offer it up for the sins of the quick and the dead.

For these with other suchlike speeches, those who ere-whiles loved him began now to turn their love into hatred, inasmuch as he was fain to fly from them yea, and out of the Country also, being banished thence; threatening him, that if he were taken there again, he should be put to death, not as an Heretick, but as one having offended the penal Laws. But not long after the Lord wrought such an alteration not only in the Political but in the Ecclesiastical State also, that not the Laws concerning Heresie alone were disannulled, but free liberty was granted to the Faithful of the Low-countries, to return home into their houses again, and to have the exercisits of Religion, publicly and openly. Among these Francis returned at that time unto the City in which he was born. But this freedom so suddenly granted lasted not long. For the Devil, not enduring the light so to shine out, stirred up Imps asflesh to oppress the godly. Francis then apprehending the danger, was minded one morning to depart out of the City; but God had another work for him to do. For as he was passing along, he was apprehended in the street by one of the City, who with the Bayliff met him. The Bayliff would fain have baulked him, as if he had not seen him; but said the other, here he is, hold him fast; so they took him. Being conducted to Prison, among other speeches he said, now ye have taken me, you think to deprive me of my life, and so have your will of me, purposing my great dammage and hurt; but you are deceived, for it is all one, as if you took Counters from me, to fill my hand with a great sum of Gold.

In Prison he had many disputes with Priests and Cloister-men. But the Jaylour of all other dealt harshly with him, who could not endure to hear him speak of God. But if at any time he heard him sing Psalms and spiritual Songs, he would rage like a Bedlam. Once being very drunk, he set open the Prison-doors, and sitting on a bench he called to Francis, saying come out thou naughty and wicked Heretick, I will now see, if thy God can deliver thee out of my hands. Francis said, as the case stands it might easily be effected: If I were minded to escape away now, as I was heretofore, I could easily do it, but I will not; for God hath called me to suffer, and not to flee away, and therefore I will not resist, but rather obey his will.

The drunkard hearing him speak with such mildness, and moderation, and seeing that he would not come forth, being provoked thereto by him, in his fury he took up his stool on which he sat, and laid at him therewith, so as he had felled him to the ground, if the Servant had not stepped between, who took it out of his Masters hands by force: yet was the poor Prisoner very sorely hurt, and lay long in the Chirurgeons hands before his Head could be healed. But to make him amends, this cruel Jaylor dieted him so strictly both for meat and drink, that he had died with hunger, had not God inclined the heart of his Servant now and then, to relieve him, by conveying meat to him in secret.

After the Lord had thus by sundry trials proved the patience and constancy of this his good Servant, the Magistrates of the City of Alost consulted how to put him to death, having oft called the Executioner to this consultation; but they could not agree in the manner how to effect it. Some were of Opinion it were best to have him put to death secretly in the Prison; others advised to execute him openly, lest they should incur the Blot of being murderers. In the end waxing more hardy, having long detained him in Bonds, they called him forth into judgment, and pronounced Sentence upon him, which was, that because he had done contrary to the Kings Laws, in returning again to the City from which he was banished, he had therefore deserved to die, seeing also he held certain Opinions directly opposit to the Church of Rome.

Francis hearing his Sentence read, without any shew of dissembler, said, Now seeing you are so thirsty after Blood, I willingly yield it into your hands, and my Soul into the hands of my merciful Lord God Almighty. Francis said they, we command you to hold your peace; for if you will not, we will take order to bridle your Tongue. He then promised them to obey their command. As he went to suffer he used that speech of the Apostle Saint Peter, I must now shortly put off this my earthly Tabernacle, which the love of Christ Jesus my Lord constrains me to do. Being come into the Market place where he wast to be offered up a Sacrifice, he kneeled down; and having ended his Prayer, he said to the Executioner, do now what you are commanded, the will of God be done: and so presenting himself cheerfully to the stroke of death, he was beheaded the first of May, in the year 1566. his Body being afterwards exposed to the Fowls of the Air for a prey.

John Tufcaen of Audenard in Flaunders, Martyr, June the eighth, Anno 1566.

Behold here how God meant to awaken the men of this time out of their Brutish security, as it were with a Thunder Clap from Heaven.

THIS young man a maker of Tapistry about the age of two and twenty years, the Son of one called Simon Tufcaen dwelling in the Suburbs of Audenard, was trained up from his youth in all godly Nurriture. He hearing News that things went more aukly to pass in Brussels then he could have wished, determined in himself to make it known by the effect, that the adoring of a brea den God, which the Roman Church so much worshipped, was nothing else but an abominable and execrable sacrilege. Having cast to and fro in his mind, and thoughts, the weightiness of the business he was to undertake, at length he determined to demonstrate the same more fully and apparently in a publick assembly, which was the thirtieth day of May in the said year 1566. (which after the custom of the Romanists is called the feast of God, or Corpus Christi day.) Now by reason that two Cities of Audenard and Pamelle are joyned as it were in one, there were two Temples dedicated there, not to the Lord, but the onco Saint Walburgne, called the Church of Audenard, and the other to their Lady, which is within the jurisdiction of the Lord of Pamelle.

John Tufcaen directed his course towards this Church, to perform that which long before he had in his own thoughts projected. Being come into the Quire of the Church in Pamelle, beholding there a multitude of People utterly estranged from the true Worship of God ready to fall down and prostitute themselves before a brazen Cake, forthwith (not casting what should be the issue) being urged thereto through a zeal of Gods glory, drew towards the Priest, while he was elevating and shewing that which they call the Host; and with great vehemency snatched it out of his Hands, cast it to the ground, and brake it all to pieces, speaking with a loud voice; See here, my Masters, your goodly God, who you see is not able to help himself, but is here broken all to pieces. How long. How long, O ye senseless Priests, will you thus defile the holy Supper of the Lord? shall we never see an end of your filthy Idolatries? If the Authority of the holy Scripture can nothing move you, yet at length be warned and admonished by this present example, that their is not a jot of Divinity in this Bread, seeing it is subject to be thus handled: will ye worship a dead Idol, your selves being living Men?

At this so vehement and bold an exhortation, accompanied with such constancy, all the people there present stood amazed and in such an extasie, (but yet withal such a noise and bustling throughout the Church) that the Curate of the Parish, who before was in some by-corner there, coming towards the Quire, met Tufcaen, as he was passing through towards Preate without any fear or let. The Curate saluted him, not knowing what he had done, much less suspecting that he was the cause of all that tumult and stir; for he was his cousin. Howbeit John would take no knowledge of this salutation, but began to reprove him for deluding and abusing the poor silly people, being their overler; for a day will come, said he, in which you shall render an account to God for them. In the hearing of this, the Curate called upon the people to lay hold upon the said John Tufcaen, as hee was going out of the Church fair and softly. So that it had been easie for him to have quit himself out of their fingers, if he had but hastned his pace a little, because none offered to touch or apprehend him. The Curate seeing that, delayed not, but with all speed got him to the under Bailiff of Pamelle, by whose outcries and importunities the Bailiff could do no less but go with him to apprehend the great Heretic. As they were making towards him, he shewed no more semblance of escaping, than before.

Then they took and imprisoned him without any resistance. Dinner being ended, he was presented before the Magistrates of Pamelle to be examined in the presence of the Curate: after they had enquired of him who they were that incited and set him on to do such an outrageous act upon the Host, they asked him what he held the bread in the Mass to be, and whether he did not believe it was the Body of Christ: If, said he, you consider well what the Angel said to the Apostles at his assumption, viz. Act. 1. 11. this same Jesus, which is taken up from you into Heaven, shall so come in like manner as ye have seen him go into Heaven; You may plainly discern that we are not to seek him here below.

After many other questions and answers, being sent again to Prison, he was the second time examined: and being asked whether he was himself when he did it, or distracted? Hee answered, That he had done it, not rashly, but upon mature deliberation. Being further demanded what should move him to commit so heinous an act? If this, said he, seemeth so strange unto you, then I pray you tell me who moved Moses to break the Tables of Stone written with the finger of God? They perceiving that he secretly aimed at their Idolatry, sent him to Prison again.

The eighth of June he was brought betimes in the morning into the Judgment Hall, to receive their Sentence which was to be pronounced against him; where two Friers Minorites were purposely sent to see if they could turn him from his constancy: to which purpose asking him, if he did not believe that God was included in the bread which is lifted up in the Mass? He answered them by another question, namely, whether the Potter could make a Pot? They said yes, but what was that to the purpose? He asked them again, if the pot could make a Potter? The good Fathers, seeing wise about him, went, forthwith left him. When he saw he had thus stopped their Mouths, he thanked God.

Then the Magistrates of the City went up into the Judgment Seat, and gave Sentence against him, which was, first to have that hand stricken off, with which he had taken the Host out of the Priests Hands, and his Body to be burned to ashes, which afterward was to be scattered into the River.

Hearing this Sentence hee was very joyfull, thanking his Judges, and the Lord of Pamelle. But the Bailiff of Audenard willed him rather to ask forgiveness of God and of the people, for the offence he had committed. If I have offended any (said hee) I ask them forgiveness. Then was he led forth to be executed; and as he went, he sung in his own Mother Tongue the Lords Prayer with such confidence, as argued the inward peace of his Conscience, in dying in so good a quarrel.

The Tormentor willed him to stretch forth his Arm that this Hand might be cut off; which he did, suffering the same with such a patience, as if hee had felt no pain. And then with his eyes lifted up to Heaven, he said, O Lord God, it is for the glory of thy name that I endure these things: inable me now with strength from above, that I may finish this Sacrifice. Forthwith the fire was kindled, which made him at the first to shrink a little; but by continual and ardent prayer to God the Violence of the Torment was abated and asswaged. Now standing in the midst of the flames, his Body being in a manner half consumed, hee shewed apparent signs unto the beholders of his invincible courage, by holding up as well as hee could, his Arms on a light fire.

Thus was this valiant Martyr handled in the presence of Multitudes; which caused many to cleave the rather to the Doctrine of the Gospel, seeing him dye so constantly. The River of Escant received his ashes, that the Sentence given upon him might be fully accomplished.

Martin Smetius Martyr, Anno 1567.

Martin Smetius being Prisoner in the Castle of Vilvour, there came to him a Frier to examine him, and with a purpose to turn him from the Faith. But Smetius being a man learned, and of a quick understanding, remained constant, which so confounded his opposites, that hee went away with shame. The Frier invented a Recantation, to which it was reported that Smetius had subscribed. But an Elder of the Church, whose name was Cornelius Specen, coming to the knowledge thereof (by the helpe of Friends) got a sight of the said Recantation. Who in the presence of divers Friends conferring a certain Letter (which Smetius had put his name unto) with that writing, found it in nothing to agree therewith, and therefore the Recantation to be merely counterfeited. The eighth of February being Saturday, Smetius having his feet tied under an Horses belly, on which he was set, was thus brought to Vilvour to the Provost (who himself was afterwards hanged for his villanies.) His Sergeants passing immediately along with him through Malvoes, went towards Malladery of Wallen, where finding a ladder set up to an Oak, they hanged him thereon. Smetius being on the Ladder used these words; Lord forgive them, for they know not what they do.

And then singing certain verses of a Psalm, he yielded up his Soul into the Hands of the Lord.

Master John Goris and Joris of Asschen, Martyrs,
Anno 1567.

John Goris Chirurgion, born in Audenard, travelling towards Gaud, was betrayed by two Spies, who signified the same to the Bayliff; himself also going the same way whither Goris was travelling before him. The Bayliff, thirsting after the blood of this poor Innocent, rid on till he had overtaken him, asking him whither he went. I am going, said Goris, to the Parish of Nazaret. And I purpose also, said the Bayliff, to go thither, we will bear you company. Having passed on thus a little way, the Bayliff thinking himself sure of Goris, began to lay hands upon him. Goris seeing that leaped over a Ditch, and got into a little Wood. The Wood was presently beset with Country People; and being there apprehended, he was carried to Audenard as a Sheep to the slaughter, where he was committed to Prison. They laid many things to his charge, which they were not able to prove. Being examined the second time upon divers Articles, he answered thereunto with such wisdom, that the Council admired how a man of so mean account could defend his cause in so good a manner. But after they came to question with him concerning matters of Religion, now I see, said he, that you seek my blood.

By th's we see that even Devils are not by his own strength.

The Night following he was overtaken with such an apprehension of the fear of death, that for saving his life he was almost resolved to deny the Truth. But by the assistance of Gods holy Spirit calling his thoughts together, he instantly and orderly befoUGHT the Lord to deliver him out of this temptation, that by the power of his Grace he might overcome the infirmity of his Flesh: which prayer of Faith the Lord had such respect unto, that from that time he manfully resisted all Satans assaults, and maintained the Truth unto his last breath.

Though I tell, none else can say, yet I shall write, A. B. C. 8. A. C. 7. 6.

Having received Sentence he was nothing appalled thereat, but like the holy Martyr S. Stephen, prayed God that he would not lay his death to their charge. Coming to the place where he was to be Executed, casting himself down prostrate, he made his prayer to God; in which Prayer albeit he sought the Lord to forgive his Enemies, yet added he this wish, I am persuaded, that God being a just Judge will not leave their sin unpunished. Which prediction fell out not long after; for the Bayliff who apprehended him, and rejoiced in standing by whilst the Martyr was executed, was not long after shot with a Harquebuss, whereof he presently died like a Wretch.

After Goris was thus executed, they brought forth his Fellow-Prisoner, called Joris of Asschen; who the same day suffered the same kind of death, that is to say, he was hanged upon a Gibbet, which death he endured for the Name of Christ with like constancy as did the former. Which courage of his he thus manifested to his Parents and Friends, in a Letter written to them a little before his death.

A Letter written by Joris of Asschen, to his Parents and Friends, a little before the time of his Martyrdom.

Most dear Father and Mother, Sister and Brother, I write here unto you comfortable News, namely, that in all my life I never saw any day so pleasing to me as this is; in which the Lord hath counted me worthy to be one of his Champions, and to suffer for his holy Name: for which I give him most humble and hearty thanks, I also thank you much, good Father and Mother, that in all my distresses you have been beneficial and helpful unto me, and careful for me; for which the Lord abundantly reward you in his Kingdom. Rejoice with me, I pray you, that God hath now called me to such a glorious and welcome Marriage-day. Oh, how precious in the sight of the Lord our God is the death of his Martyrs.

Dear Friends, two Priests, yea, and some of the Magistrates also have sought to terrify me with many threats, thinking to turn me aside from my holy Profession; but the Lord of his great mercy hath given me his Grace to withstand them all: for I plainly told them I was not ashamed of the Gospel of Christ, but would be willing and ready to die in the defence thereof; following my Lord and Master Jesus Christ throw all afflictions, to be made partaker with him at the last of his eternal Joys in his celestial Tabernacle. Wherefore if God shall call any of you forth to suffer ought for his Names sake, bear the same, I beseech you, with meekness and patience, not declining from the Truth for fear or favour, to the right hand or to the left; but fear him rather who is able to cast Soul and Body into Hell.

The time which God hath lent us to converse in this World is but short, and therefore let us begin to abandon the love thereof, with all things that are therein, sometimes, that so we may be ready to follow the call of God.

Dear Father and Mother, I do take my last farewell of you, until we meet together again in the Kingdom of Heaven, where we shall partake of that joy which shall last for ever, all sorrows, tears and grief being wiped away. Be ye not therefore grieved I pray you, but be patient; for the affliction which is befalling me is most acceptable unto me, for which also I bless and praise the Lord.

The Lord prosper you in all your ways, to his glory and your good. Thank all my Friends for their love expressed toward me, and salute them kindly with an holy kiss in the Lord.

Your humble and obedient Son,
John Joris of Asschen.

Thus were these two Witnesses of Jesus Christ executed the 14th of April 1567.

A worthy Answer of a constant Martyr called Guy de Brez, Anno Dom. 1567.

Guy de Brez, a Minister of the Gospel, being committed Prisoner into the Castle of Tourney, was visited by many Ladies and Gentlemen, only out of a desire to see him, in regard he was a man so highly esteemed. Some at the first view scoffed, others raised on him; but others were moved to take pity and compassion on him. Among the rest, the Countess of Ren, accompanied with certain Gentlewomen, coming into the Prison, and at the first entrance beholding the Iron-chain to which he was fastened; Mr. Guy said she, I wonder how you can either eat, drink, or sleep in quiet; for were I in your case, the very terror thereof would go nigh to kill me.

O Madam, said he, the good cause for which I suffer, and that inward peace of Conscience wherewith God hath endued me, makes me eat and drink with greater contentment than my Enemies can which seek my life: yea, so far off is it that my bonds or chain do any way terrify me, or break off my sleep, that on the contrary I glory and take delight therein, esteeming them at a higher rate than Chains and Rings of Gold, or any other Jewels of price whatsoever; for they yield me much more profit. Yea, when I hear the rattling of my Chain, methinks I hear as it were some sweet Instrument of Musick sounding in mine ears: not that such an effect comes merely from my Chains, but in regard I am bound therewith for maintaining the truth of the Gospel.

The same Martyr in a Letter to his Wife acquaints her with Gods gracions dealing with him in all his Afflictions.

Speaking of his Apprehension, he shews how carnal Reason began to play its part against the Providence of God; for, said he, these thoughts came thronging into my head; What meant we to go so many in company together as we did? had it not been for such and such we had never been discovered nor taken. Under such-like cogitations I lay for a while, said he, even in a manner overwhelmed, till by the assistance of Gods holy Spirit my mind was raised up to meditate on Gods Providence. After which my heart began to feel wonderful rest and contentment; saying thus in my self, O my God, the day and hour of my birth was before ordained by thee, and ever since thou hast preserved and kept me in great perils and dangers, and hereto delivered me out of them all. And if now the hour be come wherein I must pass out of this life into thy Kingdom, thy holy will be done; I cannot escape out of thy hands; yea, though I could, yet Lord thou knowest I would not, seeing all my felicity depends upon conforming my will unto thine.

From these considerations I received no small consolation; and therefore, dear Wife, rejoice with me, I pray you, and bless our good God for these his mercies towards me; for he doth nothing but that which is equal and right. You have been privy to, and acquainted with all the Travels, Crosses, and Persecutions which have befallen me, yea, and have your self been partaker with me therein, when you accompanied me in my voyages during the time of my Exile: and now after all these you see, my welbeloved in the Lord, how he holdeth forth unto me his hand of Providence, to drive me home to himself into his blessed Kingdom. Know lead you the way, and when his will is you shall follow me thither. Our separation shall not be for ever: it will not be long ere we be gathered under one head Jesus Christ. This world is not the place of our rest: no, Heaven is our home, this is but the place of our banishment.

Let us therefore aspire after our true Country, namely Heaven, and long to be received into the Mansions of our Heavenly Father, where we shall see our Head and Brother, our Husband and Saviour Jesus Christ, with the noble triumphant assemblies of the Patriarchs, Prophets, Apostles, and so many millions of Martyrs; to whom I hope shortly to be gathered, having finished the course of that administration which I have received of the Lord Jesus. Wherefore, dear Wife, be you comforted in the meditation of these things. Take into your consideration the honour the Lord doth you, in giving you a Husband who is not only called to be a Minister of Christs Gospel, but also so highly advanced of God, as to be accounted worthy to partake of the Crown of Martyrdom. It is an honour which the Angels in Heaven are not capable of. I now rejoice in my sufferings, my heart leapt within me; in my afflictions, I find nothing wanting unto me; I am filled with the abundant riches of my God; yea, so far am I comforted therewith, that I have sufficient store not only for my self, but to impart thereof also to as many as I have opportunity to speak unto. Which bounty and favour I beseech my Eternal Lord God to continue to me his poor Prisoner: yea, I am perswaded that he will perform it unto the end; for by good experience I feel, that he never forsakes them that trust in him. I could never have imagined that God would have been so gracious as he hath been to me his poor Creature.

Brethren Prison of the Valiant one

I now taste of the fidelity and bounty of Christ my Saviour; I am here taught to practise what I have preached unto others. Yea, let me not be ashamed to confess, that when I heretofore preached I spake but as a Parrot, in regard of that which I have now better learned by proof and experience. I have profited more in the School-house of this Prison, than ever I did in all my life before: for I have the Holy Ghost, who is my constant instructor and Schoolmaster, teaching me how to handel my Weapons in this fight of afflictions. Satan on the other side, who is the sworn Enemy of all Gods Elect, compasseth me about on every side, as a roaring Lion thinking to devour me. But he who hath said, Fear not, I have overcome the World, puts it as it were new courage into me; and then I see the Lord, bruising Satan under my feet; feeling the power of God perfected in my weakness. And thus the Lord causeth me one while to feel my infirmity and weakness, that so I might take knowledge how I am but a poor earthen Vessel (even weakness it self) to humble me, that God may have all the glory; and then by and by he fortifies and comforts me, (I may truly say) incredibly above all I could ask or think.

For I would not change my condition with theirs who persecute me; I take my rest, eat and drink, with more hearts ease than they. I am indeed lodged in the strongest and vilest Prison they have, dark and obscure, which for the darkness thereof is called Brutemans; where I have no Air to breathe at, but a little thinking hole, where they lay all their rubbish, and where the drunkards commonly vent their urine. I am laden with Irons both on my hands and feet, which are a continual torment unto me, the Irons eaten through the Flesh even to the bare bones. The Provost Marshal comes to view my Fetters twice or thrice a day; fearing lest I should make an escape: for preventing whereof he hath placed three guards of forty men before the Prison door, &c.

And thus having given unto his Wife his advice, how to behave her self during her Widowhood, and how to train up her Children, with his loving Salutation, remembered to her self and other his special Friends, he closeth up the Letter.

In the end of a Letter written to his Mother, the rather to encourage her willingly to offer him up to God, he puts her in mind of two memorable examples of Women who were Mothers of Children, in this manner following.

I remember, saith he, that I have read in the Ecclesiastical Stories, how that in the hot persecutions of the Church in times past, the poor Christians were assembled together without a certain City, to hear the Word of God. Now a great Commander was sent of purpose to see these poor Innocents put to the Sword: And being on his way ready to put his bloody Commission into execution, the report thereof came to the ears of a true Christian Woman, who halted with all the speed she could, to be at this meeting, carrying her little Child in her Arms. As she drew nigh to the Troop of Horsemen, she rushed in, to get through, expecting that they would make way for her. The Governour seeing her make such haste, called her to him, and examined her whether she posted so fast? she gave him this short answer, I am going, said she, to the assembly of the Christians. What to do? said he; hast thou not heard that I am commanded to put them all to death? Yes, I know it well, said she, And therefore am I in such haste, that I may be counted worthy to lose my life with them. But what wilt thou do with thy little Child, saith he? I am carrying it thither, that even it also may partake of the Crown of Martyrdom with the rest.

By reason

The first example.

The Tyrants heart was so wounded with these prompt and plain answers of this filly Woman, that he retired back to the Emperor who had committed the execution of this business unto him, and told him the whole discourse; by means whereof the Emperors wrath was appeased, and the execution stayed. Here was an heart inflamed indeed with the fiery Zeal of Gods love. Here is a pattern fit to be presented before all Women and Mothers to imitate the same.

I call to mind one other Example of another and her Son in the times when Romanus suffered Martyrdom. He was commanded to worship Idols. His answer was, as he stood in the place of judgment, that he worshipped one God only, in Jesus Christ, his only Son. And this, saith he, is an Article so well known, that if any Child, though but of 7. years old, should be examined concerning it, he would easily make a direct answer to it. Then a Child about those years being presented publicly, Romanus said, come hither my pretty Boy, answer me; ought we to worship many Gods, or but one God in Jesus Christ? The little Child answered, That there be many Gods, we Children cannot believe; seeing to us there is but one God.

Then the Tyrant apprehending the Mother caused her Child to be scourged with Rods before her eyes. The Babe intreated her to give him some drink: to whom she said, Alas poor Child, I have no drink to give thee; but now my Song and drink of the Cup of Martyrdom, which Herod the King gave the young Children to drink of.

The second Example.

Then was the Childs head stricken off. Such Examples are left upon record for our use, that in such and the like Mirrors we might behold how the mighty power of God being made perfect in the infirmity of weak Flesh, all of us, with one heart and voice, should render unto him the Sacrifices of praise and thanksgiving for the same; shewing forth to our Brethren and Sisters his Triumphs and Victories with new Songs of rejoicing. The which sounding throughout the whole world, we may thereby incite all Creatures, yea, the very Angels of Heaven to magnifie and glorifie the name of our Lord eternally. So be it.

With

With this godly Personage Guy de Bree, was one Peregrine de la Grange, joined as his Prison-fellow and Fellow-labourer in the work of the Ministry.

Whose learned disputes with Richardot Bishop of Arras do here follow, written with his own hand.

The Bishop at his coming into the Prison being informed of the Prisoners name, and of his gentle disposition, began thus with him.

Bishop. I am much grieved Monsieur de la Grange to see you in this mean condition, and could wish it were far otherwise with you then now I see it is.

La Grange. Sir I humbly thank you for your love and kindness shewed towards me, altogether I confess without any desert of mine: and as for the base estate in which you now see me, God hath so comforted me therein with his grace, that I do without any great difficulty patiently suffer what he hath pleased to lay upon me; yea, I praise and bless his name, that he hath balanced the weight of my afflictions according to the strength which he hath given me, so as I sink not under the burthen: for as my sufferings in Christ abound, he causeth his consolations by Christ to abound in me also.

2. Cor. 1. 3

Bishop. It is usual with such as you are to glory in this kind of speech: for as soon as any afflictions befall you, you by and by file them the sufferings of Christ. And if any of you be put to death, then ye boast that it is for Gods Truth: but when things are laid to the Touchstone, the matter is nothing so nor so.

La Grange.

Sir, if your meaning be of such as have died for the Doctrine for which I am bound with this Chain, and thus fettered with Irons: I doubt not but they have given such a reason of their Faith, that whosoever shall read their answers, and weigh the same without partiality, must needs judge thereof even as we do. And for my own part I am ready to make it good before any whom it concerns, that the Doctrine I now hold and teach is according to Godliness, taken out of the pure Fountains of the holy Scriptures, without additions, diminishings, or varying in any way therefrom.

Deut. 32. 17

Bishop. We read that in all times men have been wont to shelter themselves under the Title of Gods Word, in so much that all the old Heresies maintained by Hereticks have run to this covert; so as great heed is to be taken, lest under this pretence men rush into errors.

La Grange.

I am not ignorant, Sir, hereof, in regard that Satan knows how to transform himself into an Angel of light, thereby to establish his delusions, causing darkness thereby to be taken for light. But the Holy Ghost, who is the Spirit of Truth, hath in such wise discovered his Jugglings, that none are deluded thereby, but those who at noon day close their eyes that they may not behold the light.

2. Cor. 4. 4

Bishop. Do you think that the holy Ghost hath given you such an Illumination, that the Truth should only be revealed to you, and to none other.

La Grange.

God forbid, Sir, I should have any such thought. I am not of the mind of those dreamers, who at this day brag of their having particular Revelations of the holy Spirit. But I speak of an ordinary and general Revelation, such as is taught us out of the Bible, which we call the holy Scriptures, according as it is therein declared unto us by the Prophets and Apostles.

He means the A. V. text, and their sense, Bish. 2. 20.

This was the effect of the Bishops first communication with de la Grange; after which he was heard to say twice or thrice to the Kings Commissioners, that he had no will to meddle any further with him. Being called for to be examined else-where before the said Commissioners, Peregrine took his leave of the Bishop, entreating him to intercede for him, that he might be eased of his Irons, alledging that the Prison was strong enough and sufficiently guarded.

The second time they met together, the Bishop having a prompt memory, made a rehearsal of what passed between them the day before, and after began thus with the said Peregrine.

Bishop. Seeing that which I hold as touching the Sacrament of the Altar is agreeable to the Scriptures, confirmed so long since by the consent of all the ancient Fathers, wherefore do you not agree with us therein? Had you rather hold with these Novelists, as with Calvin and with the confession of Auspurgae.

Anno 1566.

Grange. Sir, I am neither Calvinist nor Papist; I am a Christian, and what I hold concerning Religion is taken out of Christs Doctrine, who is the only Doctor of his Church. What Calvin hath taught conformable to the Word of God, I am of the same mind with him: and whereas you call your Religion, the old Religion, and ours the new, it troubles me not at all, since the Father of Lies hath long since forged the same, to disgrace the Truth, and to establish and maintain the multitudes of falsehoods and absurdities of your Tenets which you hold. For example, because Christ in giving his Disciples Bread in the Sacrament, said, This is my Body, thence they would make us believe that the Bread is become the Body of Christ, as if the Verb est signified a change of the Bread into another Substance, which is found in no Language whatsoever.

Bishop. We maintain not the Transubstantiation of the Bread from this Verb est, knowing that the Hebrews use the Participle of the present tense in stead of a Verb; but rather from hence, because Christ said, This is my Body.

La Grange. I told you that Jesus Christ in his Supper gives us that body which was conceived by the holy Ghost in the Womb of the Virgin Mary; which was crucified, dead and buried, raised again the third day, and is ascended into Heaven; yet we utterly deny that there is any change made of the Bread. Therefore if you would have us believe it, let us have some proof of Scripture for it.

For they had many disputes touching this point, which are not here inserted.

Bishop. To speak properly, the Transubstantiation of the Bread cannot be proved by the word of God, and yet we must believe it for the reasons above said.

La Grange. Your glorying then that you have the Word of God on your side is as you see come to nothing. And why have you then turned so many of Gods Saints for denying that which you cannot maintain by the Scriptures? For our parts, we should blush to affirm, that the Substance of Bread remains after the words of Consecration, if we could not prove the same from the very form of the Institution of the Sacrament, wherein Christ took Bread, and having giving thanks he brake Bread, and gave to his Disciples Bread, and they took and did eat Bread: yea, Saint Paul rehearsing the Institution calls it Bread thrice.

1. Cor. 10. 2

21, 26, 27

Bish. You know that in the Hebrew-Tongue Bread is taken for the remainders of what was eaten; Paul therefore in that place speaks of those viands which the Corinthians did eat in their Love-feasts, reproving their abuse. So also, howsoever Paul calls it Bread there, and that in the second of the Acts of the Apostles mention is made of the breaking of Bread, all this serves non your turn.

Act. 2. 42

La Grange. I grant that Bread is taken in the Scripture in this sense; but be it that Bread be taken for the meat that was left, yet you read not that the Substance was changed into the Substance of other meat, or lost the property thereof. It is certain that the Scripture useth not this Phrase, of breaking of Bread in the use of the Lords Supper, for nothing; for thereby we are given to understand, that it is not a sign only in appearance or shew, but the true Substance of Bread.

Bish. Let it be what it will; we hold close to the words of Jesus Christ, where he saith, This is my Body; and therefore also believe what we speak. I care not if I be deceived in this matter, nor for bearing reproach for the same, either before God or men; for before God himself I will plead thus, Lord, thou hast said it, and I believe it.

Understand the words of the sacramentally, and all is well.

La Grange. We rest in the same thing also; but whilst we have an eye unto Christs meaning and intent, which was to establish a Sacrament: we also receive from his mouth the same words as well as you, but sacramentally, where the outward sign bears the name of the thing signified.

Bish.

Anno
1566.Erod. 12.43.
Ge. 71.15.

Bijh. As touching the Sacraments in the Old Testament (which had their extent only to the coming of Christ, and no further) we indeed do hold, that the sign bears the name of the thing signified thereby; and thus the Paschal Lamb was called the Pasover, and Circumcision was called Gods Covenant, being but a sign thereof: but it is otherwise now in the Sacraments of the New Testament, which have their continuance unto the end of the world, containing in them the thing signified.

La Grange. Your distinction will be but idle if we come to the Sacraments of the New Testament, which are only two, (howsoever the Church of Rome holds seven) to wit, Baptism and the Lords Supper. The Scripture calls Baptism the washing of Regeneration, because it is a sign thereof, yet bearing the name of that whereof it is but a sign. Nor among your own Writers do we find, that the Water in Baptism is changed into the Blood of Christ; which is notwithstanding the true Laver of Regeneration. Also the Cup is called the New Testament, because it is a sign thereof.

Dare you now affirm that the Cup is the New Testament? But because you seem to bring in for confirmation of your Opinion the ancient Fathers, we are content to be tried herein by them, even in our cause also, and it shall appear that they are not so contrary to us as you suppose; and this will clear our Doctrine from the crime of Novelty, wherewith ye slander it. Afterwards we will come to touch such inconveniences and absurdities as flow from your Doctrine.

The Bishop answering that he was content, La Grange began as followeth.

Gelasius a Pope of Rome.

Chrysostom.

La Grange. Gelasius, who was an ancient Doctor, yea, and a Pope also, said in a Council held at Rome, That the substance and nature of Bread and Wine remained in the Sacrament of the Lords Supper, even as the humane Nature of our Lord Jesus Christ was united unto his divine Essence. Chrysostom an ancient Dr. in his imperfect work upon St. Matthew, denies that the Body of Christ is inclosed under the Bread in the Sacrament, but holds that it is only an outward sign thereof.

Bijh. I have, as you know, before answered that Sentence of Gelasius, and then I told you that he was not seen in Philosophy, and therefore could not dispute substantially of the substance of the Bread; yea, I verily think he understood not what this word Substance meant, but took it for that which we call Accidents; as sometimes by this word Accident we understand Substance; witness Judas, who takes it in this sense.

Augustine.

La Grange. Sir, I cannot conceive that such a learned Father could be so ignorant, as to know what the substance of Bread should mean, or at least the nature thereof, seeing he eat of it daily. St. Augustine hath this saying on the third Psalm, That Christ shewed admirable patience in receiving Judas to that Banquet, in which he instituted and gave to his Disciples the sign of his Body and Blood.

Bijh. I doubt not but many such Sentences are to be found in St. Augustine which seem to favour your Opinion; as where he saith to Adrianus the Manichee, That Jesus Christ did not chuse to call it his Body, albeit he gave but the sign thereof. But such kind of speeches must be expounded by conferring one place with another.

La Grange. Nay Sir, we have not only St. Augustine, but also the most part of the ancient Fathers (all which you say are against us) on our side.

Bijh. Well, but come now to the absurdities and inconveniences of our Doctrine, whereof you spake.

Ab'sturdity.

La Grange. Amongst other, I will instance in this one; By the Doctrine which you teach you sever and disjoin that which in it self is joynd and united together. In the Supper of the Lord the Son of God gives us his Flesh for our meat and his Blood for our drink; which are coupled together by outward Sacramental signs, Bread and Wine: now according to your Doctrine the Bread is converted into Flesh and the Wine into blood, and ye separate the Flesh from the Blood of Christ.

Bijh. We separate not the Flesh from the Blood, seeing that by concomitancy the flesh is never without blood, nor blood without flesh.

Ab'sturdity.

La Grange. If this be so, we should in one and the same action receive the Flesh and Blood of Christ twice; for taking the Bread, which you say hath Blood accompanying it by your Concomitance, you receive whole Christ in Flesh, and then again in blood: and thus we receive the Flesh twice and the Blood twice.

Bijh. What inconvenience cometh of receiving the same twice in one action?

La Grange. Christ did not institute his Supper to be received twice in one action, but faith in the singular number, Take, eat, this is my Body; he said not in the plural, These are my Bodies. This only absurdity, if there were no more, overturns the Lords Institution.

To this the Bishop made no answer.

La Grange. If we mark Christs words, it will appear that the absurdities in your Doctrine do cross this Commandment, Eat; for what eat you Sir, I pray you, in this Sacrament?

Bijh. The Accidents of Bread.

La Grange. Eat you nothing but the Accidents? It is said, Eat, this is my Body.

Bijh. We receive the Body and Blood.

La Grange. When you eat the Body, do you not bruise it with your Teeth?

Bijh. No, for Christs Body is insensible; so as when we eat or bruise the Cake, the Body is not bruised therewithal, but the Form; the Body is not dismembred, but every bit is the Body of Christ.

La Grange. Sir, you still fall into the former Absurdities; for making three pieces of your Cake in the Mass, and every piece thereof the whole Body of Christ, it thereupon follows, that in taking three pieces you swallow down three Bodies of Christ together.

Absurdity

Bijh. We must not be led thus by humane sense.

La Grange. Sir, that which I say is manifest enough, and so that which you affirm of your Forms cannot stand; for Christ saith not, Eat this Form, but Eat, this is my Body. Now we cannot eat, unless we gnaw with our Teeth, in bruising that we eat. If you say that the Bread, which is Flesh as you hold, is conveyed under the Tongue and gently swallowed; then I answer, This is not eating but swallowing: for, can he be said to eat, who being half pined with hunger swallows his Bread and Meat without chewing? Nay, he may rather be said to devour it. Moreover, if the Bread, which as you affirm is Flesh, be put into a mans Mouth and swallowed, then how will you answer that which Christ said in St. Mark 15. 27. Thew, That whatsoever enters into the mouth goeth into the belly, and is cast out into the Draught; or Back-chamber, as we call it.

Bijh. These words must be taken of our ordinary eating, which is call'd saving your presence; after it is eaten into the Draught.

La Grange. What becomes then of this swallowed Flesh?

Bijh. The Forms are turned into it, and the Flesh of Jesus Christ is gone; but these things must not be too curiously examined.

La Grange. This Answer cannot stand: the Accidents, which you call kinds, cannot be changed therinto; it is the Substance which is changed. But let us come to a more substantial Argument: you teach, That whosoever receives this Bread, which you call Flesh, receives Jesus Christ. How is it then that St. Paul saith, He that eateth and drinketh unworthily, eats and drinks damnation to himself, &c.

1 Cor. 11.

27.29.

Bijh. This Argument hath some weight in it; for thus you reason, he that receives Christ doth therewithal receive eternal life; but by our Doctrine all receive Christ in the Sacrament, therefore they must needs have eternal life.

I confess it is true according to your Minor Proposition, that they receive him: But I deny that all receive him unto life everlasting; for if they receive not the Flesh by the Holy Ghost, it profits them nothing.

La Grange. I have taken the first part of my Proposition out of St. John, where Christ saith, He is the life; John 11. 25. but seeing we cannot receive so much as a common Herb without the virtue of it; much less can we receive Christ without that life which is comprehended in him; otherwise we should receive a dead Body without efficacy, and not Jesus Christ, who causeth those that eat him to live eternally. For this Sacrament was instituted of God by his Son, to manifest and set forth his Fatherly good will towards us, not contenting himself to have received us once as strangers into his household by Baptism, but as his own Children: and therefore hath ordained this second Sacrament of the holy Supper, that in his house we might have wherewith to nourish and feed us continually. Now as touching the Holy Ghost, it is by him that we eat the Flesh of Jesus Christ and drink his Blood, conjoyning by his powerful working those things together which by distance of place are severed far off one from another, causing all that is in Christ to become ours, and as by a Conduit-pipe conveying unto us the true partaking of Christs Flesh and Blood; so as whosoever receives Christ hath eternal life.

Bishop. That is, if he receive him by the Holy Spirit; for otherwise the flesh profiteth nothing, as Saint John faith.

La Grange. Sir, the place you alledge makes against you; for Christ there reproves his Disciples for thinking they should eat his Flesh after a carnal manner, as it appears by the words following, For the words, said he, which I speak unto you are spirit and life. If then we are so wile as to observe that the Sun, sending down its substance on Earth by the beams thereof, doth after a sort cause the Herbs to spring forth and grow, shall not the influence of the Spirit of Christ be of much more efficacy to bring us to the true participation of his Flesh and Blood?

Bishop. Then the Bishop was desirous to be gone, saying it grew late, and so for want of time our conference ended. The Bishop commended me to God, and then took his leave of the Company. This is the sum of our Communication, so far as I can remember.

By this brief recital we may observe what holy boldness, mixed with meekness, the Lord had indue'd this his worthy Servant with, even in the flower of his Age, being drawn from his studies and from the place of his birth to preach the Gospel to the Valencians, and at length to seal up the same with his Blood.

A short Narration of the life and death of these two valiant Champions of Christ, Guy de Brez, and Peregrin de la Grange, Ministers and Martyrs.

NEXT to the pure preaching of the Word, nothing so much commends those whom the Lord calls out to give their lives for the same, as doth an holy and blameless conversation, continued unto their happy departure out of this World. It remains then in few words, that we set forth the conversations of these two holy Persons, that thereby the Mercies and Graces of the Lord bestowed upon them may have the greater lustre.

Guy de Brez, born in Mons in Hainault, being in his younger years much addicted to Popish Superstitions, came by continually reading of the Scriptures to taste the sweetness of Christian Religion; which knowledge brought forth no small fruit in him in due season: Yet so, as it could by no means be relished or received by them of his Nation. Whereupon he departed from Mons, and having learned the Art of painting Glais, came to London whilst good King Edward the Sixth reigned, who gave persecuted Strangers leave to have harbour within his Realm of England. After his abode there a while, and understanding that the preaching of the Gospel obtained some entertainment in the Low-Countries, he went over to give his assistance to those of his own Country.

The first-fruits of his labours were most an end in bestowing some Exhortations in such places where he found any willing to give him audience, though never so few in number.

But above all he clave to them of the City of Lisle, because he found there a great number of Believers who desired nothing more than to hear the Gospel publicly preached unto them. At that time also began an holy conflict *against the pestilent Sect of the Anabaptists, which as Cockle mingled it self amongst the good Corn. In this City he continued until the Flock of Christ were dispersed by reason of Persecution, and then went to Gand, where he wrote his Book called the Staff of Faith, extracted out of the ancient Fathers. After that being desirous to profit more and more in the knowledge of such things as were requisite to be in a Minister of the Gospel, he travelled towards Layfanna, and thence to Geneva, to furnish himself with the Tongues; and thence withdrawing himself into the Low-Countries, he there established the Churches of Lisle, Tourmay, and of the Valencians; in which Cities God so prospered his labours, that he was preserved by his divine Providence, as it were in the midst of the fiery flames, from falling into the hands of his Enemies. And not to stand longer in relating the pains and travels of this faithful Servant of Christ, not only the Reformed Churches of the said Country can testify, but also these of Dien, Montdidier, and Amiens also, which he was an happy Instrument to support, whilst the cruel Persecutions in his own Land would not permit him to continue his Office of teaching them.

The Duke of Bovillon obtaining him drew him to his City of Sedan, where he also continued a while in publishing the glad-tidings of salvation, until the Church of Amiens began in the month of August 1576, to call him to be their Pastor. But he could not obtain leave of those of Sedan to depart from among them without a great deal of difficulty, because they evidently foresaw by the beginning of the Persecutions in the Low-Countries, into what a Sea of troublous Tempests he should be cast: and yet perceiving how the heart of this holy Man longed to be gone, to yield his assistance to those of his own Nation: at length they consented to let him go with them that requested to have his help. Now having stayed but a while there, the Brethren determined to send him to his ancient Church of the Valencians, who received him with no little joy, in regard the Lord had formerly ordained him to erect a Church there peculiarly.

To come now to Peregrin de la Grange, he was born in Chute nigh to St. Marcellin in Dauphin. In the Month of June in the year 1565, he was sent from the Schools of Geneva, at the request and instance of the Valencians, to serve in the Ministry among them. Such was his meek and mild disposition, that it won him much love and respect, and made his Ministry to be so much the more acceptable in the eyes of all men. After the demolishing of Images in the City of the Valencians, two Churches were employed by those of the Reformed Religion for the use of Prayer, preaching the Word, and administration of the Sacraments. Now the detaining of these Churches, the one of them being used by a Stranger, namely by the said La Grange, who was none of K. Philips Subjects, being also against the Decree of Margaret then Regent of the Low-Countries, gave occasion to Noicurin, as then principal Bayliff of Hainault and Valence, not only to frustrate and break all accords with the said Valencians, but moreover to afflict and besiege them extremely. During which siege, because the Supper of the Lord was administered in both the said Churches, it did so much the more enkindle the rage of the Enemy against them, so as when the City was taken, La Grange was the more cruelly used, as you shall read when we come to speak of his death.

The same Adversaries, who encountered Guy de Brez, his Companion, assailed him also; but he overcame them by the help of Gods Holy Spirit, who gave them both such power, as their Enemies were not able to resist.

They were imprisoned the 11 of April, and on Saturday the last of May, the Provost of the Bands came into the Prison about three of the Clock in the Morning, to give these two Prisoners warning to prepare themselves for death; for they were to die at six or thereabouts. Whereupon both of them began highly to magnifie God for his goodness, and gave the Provost thanks for the good news which he had brought them. As soon as they were up and ready, Mr. Guy entered into the fore-Court, bidding the rest of the Prisoners good morrow; and then testifying to them his joy, spake after this manner: Brethren, I am this day to die for the Doctrine of the Gospel, and now, blessed be God, I joy and rejoice therein; I had not thought that God would ever have done me this honour. I feel my self replenished with joy more and more, from minute to minute, my God addeth new courage unto me, and my heart leaps for joy within me.

Peregrin de la Grange.

His meek disposition won him much respect.

Anno
1566.

Then exhorting the Prisoners to be of good cheer, he told them it was no hard matter to die, and so by way of acclamation alleged that place out of the Apocalypse, O how happy are the dead that die in the Lord; for they rest from their labours, and their works follow them! He further befought the Prisoners to stand fast in the Doctrine of the Son of God, which he had taught them, avowing it to be the undoubted Truth, which was maintained, by him before the Bishop of Arras and many others.

Beware you do nothing, said he, against a good Conscience; for I foresee that the enemies of the Gospel will execute the utmost of their rage against us; thinking thereby to weaken our Faith, that so they might turn you from the Truth, and so causing you to do such things as should bring dishonour to the cause for which you are in Bonds. Take heed therefore ye shrink not; for if ye do, you shall certainly feel such an Hell in your Consciences, as will never cease to vex and torment you. O my Brethren, how good a thing is it to nourish a good Conscience.

One of the Prisoners asking him whether he had finished a certain work which he had begun, he answered, No; for now I must cease to labour, because I am passing along towards the Heavenly rest: the time of my departing is at hand, I go to reap that in Heaven which I have sown on earth, I have fought a good fight, I am at the point of finishing up my course: from henceforth the Crown of Glory is laid up for me, which the Lord the righteous Judge shall give unto me. He thinks (said he with a joyful and smiling countenance) that my Spirit hath obtained Wings to soar aloft into Heaven, being invited this day to the Marriage Supper of the Lamb.

As he was speaking, the Provost came in with Bands into the Court, and putting off his Hat saluted him. Mr. Guy bade him welcome, and gave him thanks again for his good News. The Provost replied, It grieveth me much that things should be carried thus. To which Guy joyfully answered, I accept of you as of my good Friend, I love you with all mine heart. Then taking his leave of the Prisoners he went into the little Hall of the Prison.

Soon after Peregrine de la Grange entered into the same Court, who as he carried himself comfortably during all the time of his imprisonment, so then after his accustomed manner he began with an amiable countenance to cheer the Prisoners, with bidding them good morrow; and then said thus unto them; I am this day to die for the Truth, and then the Heavenly Inheritance is prepared for me: my name is written in the Book of life never to be blotted out, because the gifts and calling of God are without repentance.

He protested also, That for his part he never taught ought there but the pure Word of God; as for the Doctrine of the Papists, it led Souls, he said, to perdition and destruction: and thence took occasion to exhort the Prisoners to separate themselves from it, and to cleave wholly to the Doctrine of the Gospel. Then leaving them he went into another room, and called for a Brush to Brush his Hat and Cloak, causing his shoes to be blacked; For now, said he, I am bidden to the Marriage of the Lamb, where I am to feast with him forever and ever.

Going thence, some of the Prisoners came to him, and finding him sitting in the entry of the Prison upon a Bench, with Bread and Wine set before him, which was brought him for his breakfast, they asked him if he went to suffer with those shackles on his heels? I would I might (said he) yea, and that they would bury them with me too, that they might manifest the inhumanity of my adversaries. And as those Brethren comforted him, he replied, that he felt such joy of the holy Ghost in his heart, that he could neither with mouth nor Tongue express it; adding, That God shewed him a thousand times more favour to take him after this manner out of this Transitory life, than if he had let him die in his bed by sickness: for now (saith he) I shall die with enjoying the benefit of all the powers of my Soul, praying the Lord to have mercy upon me.

Then every one taking his leave of him, they retired, and forthwith Guy and La Grange were led to the Town-hall to receive Sentence of death, namely to be hanged for transgressing the Kings commandment given at the Court of Brussels. And so not mediating at all with any of the points of Doctrine which they had preached, they especially insisted upon the admiration of the Lords Supper, against an express charge given them to the contrary.

To be short, La Grange being brought to the place of execution, and now upon the Ladder, he protested with a loud voice (notwithstanding the noise which the Soldiers kept about the Gibbet) that he died only for preaching to the People the pure Truth of God; taking Heaven and Earth to witness the same with him.

Then was Mr. Guy brought thither; who kneeling down to have made his Prayer at the foot of the Ladder, was not suffered to make an end; for lifting him up they made him by and by to ascend the Ladder. Being thereon he fastened his feet in the rungs, exhorting the People to carry themselves with all due respect towards the Magistrates, shewing how some had overruled themselves in that behalf.

Then Mr. Guy exhorted them to stand steadfast in the Doctrine which he had taught them, avouching that it was the undoubted Truth of God. He could not finish his speech fully, because the Commissioners gave a sign to the Executioner to hasten and make an end.

He was no sooner turned off the Ladder, but there fell out such a Tumult among the Soldiers, being in Arms in the Market place, that they ran up and down the City, shooting off their Pieces against such as they met; as well Papists as others, yea killing one another in a grievous manner, so as some fell down dead among many others that were wounded and hurt. And thus were they finiten with great fear without any ground thereof at all.

Notes touching the estate of the Faithful in the City of Venice, and of some executed there for the Truth, in the year 1566.

It pleased God for a long space to free this noble City from being subjected to the cruel Inquisition of the Pope, by reason whereof the face of a Church was to be discerned there, from the year 1530, to the year 1542. They enjoyed such freedom of conferring and scanning of the Points of Religion there, that they came in a manner to make profession thereof publicly; so as many strange Nations came to take notice thereof. But the Father of lies observing this began to bestir himself, by setting his Lieutenant on work, who hath his seat at Rome, to disturb these good beginnings: for it came to pass, that whilst Multitudes of good Christians flocked thither from other parts, in process of time such a course was taken by Antichrists supporters, that many of them were imprisoned, and afterward sent thence to Rome.

The rest by a new found execution, never till then heard of, were cast into the Sea, and drowned in the bottom of the same. The manner of it was thus: After they had received Sentence, an Iron Chain was fastened about their middle with a Stone of great weight tied thereto; and then were they laid upon a Plank between two Wherries, which being come to the Place appointed the Wherries parting asunder, the Martyrs were forthwith drowned. Yet for all this many ceased not still to assemble together in a place appointed for that purpose, to talk and discourse of Heavenly matters, yea, and to make some collections for relief of the poor; so as in the year 1566, they called to them a minister of the Gospel, to establish and constitute a Church among them; having also the Supper of the Lord administered to them. But some false Brethren creeping in, under pretence of making the same profession with them, betrayed them.

Then began the Popish Inquisition to be erected there with the greatest cruelty that might be, towards the maintenance whereof the Pope sent every year a certain sum of money to those holy Fathers, to be distributed among such as were appointed to be spies and revealers of such secrets as they could come to the knowledge of. Thus were many cast into the Sea and drowned; some were sent to Rome; others were detained so long in Prisons (which were like graves) that they rotted there.

Mr. Anthony Ricetto, Martyr.

Amongst others who were condemned to be drowned, there was one Malter Anthony Ricetto of Vincence having a Son about twelve years old, who coming to visit his Father, according to the discretion of Children, besought him with tears to yield to those who had condemned him, and to save his life, that he might not be left Fatherless.

A True Christian (said his Father) is bound to forgoe goods, Children, yea, and life it self, for the Maintenance of Gods Honour and Glory: For which cause he was now ready and resolved to lay it down, the Lord assisting him.

The Lords of Venice offered to restore unto him his Patrimony, which was partly morgaged and sold, if he would submit himself to the Church of Rome. But he refused whatsoever conditions they this way tended unto him. Some that were Prisoners with him, namely one Mr. Julius Ferlan hath reported much of the abstinence, patience, and holiness of this excellent man, so far as to parallel him to another John Baptis. On the fifteenth day of February 1565. which according to our computation is, 1566. Captain Clairmont came unto him, and told him, that Francis Sega was resolved to recant. To which Ricetto by and by replied, What tell you me of Sega? I will perform my Vows unto the Lord my God; and so he was led bound fast to they wherby. A Certain Priest who accompanied him, presented unto him a wooden Crucifix, exhorting him to return and to die in the favour of God, reconciling himself unto the Church of Rome, the holy Spouse of Christ. But Ricetto, rejecting that Crucifix, besought the Priest and those that followed them to come out of the snare of the Devil, to cleave to Jesus Christ; and to live, not according to the Flesh, but after the Spirit; for if you do otherwise, said he, assure your selves your unbelief will bring you into that lake of fire that shall never be quenched. For though you confess with your mouth that you knew Jesus Christ, yet you not only deny him by your works, but you persecute him in his members, being seduced, and bewitched by the Pope, who is the open enemy of the Son of God.

When they were come nigh to the two Castles, the Captain bound his hands; now, because it was very cold, he called for his cloak which they had taken from him. Then said the Wherry-man, fearest thou a little cold? What wilt thou do when thou art cast into the Sea? Why art thou not careful to save thy self from drowning? Dost thou not see that the poor flea skips hither and thither to save her life? To whom he answered, And I am now flying to escape eternal death.

Being arrived at the place where he was to suffer, the Captain put a Chain of Iron about his middle with a very heavy stone fastened thereto. Then Ricetto, lifting his eyes to Heaven, said, Father forgive them, for they know not what they do. And being laid on the plank, hee said, Lord Jesus into thy Hands I commend my Spirit: and then pulling this weighty stone towards him, not waiting till the Boats were sundred one from another, as in such kind of executions they were wont to do, this holy man slept in the Lord; which was no small terror to the Magistrate, in that there was never any that died this kind of death before, with so much constancy and resolution.

Mr. Francis Spinola, Martyr.

The Sunday following, Master Francis Spinola of Milaine, being about the age of six and forty years, was apprehended and brought into the Prison, called Des clefs de dix. That often keyes, where he found poor Francis Sega. Two days after (which was the eight and twentieth day of February) Spinola was brought before his Judges, where they delivered into his hands a little Treatise of the Lords Supper, of which he freely confessed he was the Author; shewing that the opinion which he there maintained was this, That the Bread and Wine were the signs, and not the things signified, and therefore must not be adored. He was questioned with as touching the power of the Pope, prayer to Saints, and about Purgatory. He answered that the Popes power was from man, which the Roman Confistory and certain Princes had given him: but that God the Father had given Jesus Christ to be the Head of the Church, and to have all power in Heaven and Earth. What is Peter then, or what is Paul? He further added, that he would not worship nor pray to any other but to God only, as it is written. The memorial of the Saints he well approved, as of those who were the true Branches ingrafted into the Vine Christ.

Alfo for his part he acknowledgeth none other Purgatory, but the Blood of Christ, as it is manifest in the Epistle to the Hebrews, and in the first Epistle of John.

Then as Spinola was returned into his Prison Francis Sega (whom he was ignorant of) waited his coming, holding a Candle in his hand and passing by with his Keeper, saluted him by his name; whence it came to pass, that they two conferred together about the Doctrine of the Gospel. Now howsoever Sega differed from Spinola, touching the number of Sacraments, yet he referred himself to the judgment of the True Church of Christ in that behalf. But after that he had learned that Spinola had constantly stood to the defence of the Truth, he was very joyful and much comforted, saying, That God had reserved him for such a time as this, to make him partaker with him of so great consolation.

He wrote consolatory Letters to Spinola, committing his writings into his hands, whereof some were preserved, and the rest lost by the carelessness of a false Brother. Upon the three and twentieth day of February, 1567. the Keepers of the Prison told Sega that he was to die within one hour after the shutting in of the evening. At the hearing of which news hee intreated Spinola, to pray with him. After prayer, Sega telling him that his Soul was heavy to the death; Spinola gave him this answer, Fear not, for it will not be long before it shall feel those joys which shall endure for ever.

Being brought out of his dark Dungeon, according to the time limited, hee took his leave of Spinola and the rest of the Prisoners. As hee was entred into the Boat, a certain Frier began to persuade him to return into the right way. Sega answered, that he was already in the way of our Lord Jesus Christ, and passing on he called upon the name of God. He seemed not to be much moved at the binding of his Hands, but was a little amazed at the fastening of his Body to the Chain. Yet by and by taking unto him a Christian resolution, he took whatsoever they did unto him patiently. Being laid upon the board or plank, hee commended his Soul into the Hands of God, and being left of the two Boats (upon the edges whereof the plank was stayed) the one decliming this way, and the other that way, he fell into his Sepulchre the Sea, and died patiently.

Spinola soon after was presented the second time before his Judges, namely the tenth of March, where he reproved the Popes Legate with his Clergy there present, as also the Lords of Venice who sat in judgment upon him, because contrary to their Consciences they so persecuted the Truth of God, calling them the offspring of the Pharisees, Caiphas, and the Gentiles, who now, said he, kill Jesus Christ in his members. The nine and twentieth of March following, hee was the third time brought before them, where they asked him if he would not recant his Errors. He answered that the Doctrine he maintained was not Erroneous, but the very same Truth which Jesus Christ and his holy Apostles taught and preached, and for which all the Martyrs, as well of old time as now have willingly layd down their lives, and endured the pains of death.

After all this, Spinola became so weak, that he determined to strike Sail (as they say) and to apply himself to the time; being brought hither to by the advice of some, namely that he should gain a giving of his consent to what the Magistrate required of him, by means whereof he might escape their Hands. But about the tenth of September, coming again to himself, and espying whereunto this determination tended, hee protected before all that he would stand in the confession he had made from the first of April last past. Wherefore on the ninth of August hee was brought again before the same Judges, where he openly confirmed the same.

Anno
1566.

His Judges said, that he should either be drowned or burned alive. Then on the thirteenth of January 1566. (according to the Venetian account, which according to ours was 1567.) On Tuesday morning being come before the Tribunal, Sentence was pronounced upon him that hee should be drowned as an Hereticke. To which he gave them this answer, I am no Hereticke, but the Servant of Jesus Christ. At which words the Popes Legate commanded him to hold his peace, telling him that he lied. The next day in the morning (which was the last of January) he was brought into St. Peters Chappel, where he was degraded, because he had been a Priest; and the night following he was conducted unto the Sea, and there drowned in the place appointed; who died praying and blessing God with invincible constancy.

A Relation of such things as fell out under the Government of the Duke of Alva, and of many men put to death, 1567.

THe afflictions of the Protestants in the Low-Countries were multiplied this year under the dominion of Ferdinando Duke of Alva. It is well known that the Spaniards, using all their endeavours to rule over this Countrey at their pleasures, had no better opportunity to accomplish their design, than to establish among them their Inquisition, thereby to domineer over the goods, honors, and lives of every one. The Nobles, Citizens, and Commons did what they could to oppose the same: to which purpose they had instantly besought the King, to afford them his Royal presence, that hearing once their complaints, his Majesty might take some order for matters of so great importance; alledging to this end the example of the Emperour Charles his Father: who upon a business far inferior to this, adventured himself with much diligence to pass through the Enemies Country, who were but a while before reconciled; only to stay some mutinies begun in the City of Gand. These things had so moved his Majesty, that he made them a promiscuous Letters of his coming. But his intention was broken off by such as were the upholders of the Inquisition, that so they might with the more facility attain the end of their desires. In stead of their King then, they had sent unto them the Duke of Alva, who at his entrance found the Prisons replenished with Gentlemen and other personages of note, whom the Dutchess of Parma had left in bonds after her death.

Long did they languish in this Captivity, whilst the Duke of Alva by fair promises dissembled a kind of meek and gentle carriage of mind towards them, giving them some hope of a general pardon, proceeding from the Kings clemency; that thus he might catch the Lords and Governors the more cunningly into his nets, whereof the Lord Memoral Earle of Egmond, Prince of Gand, Governor of Flanders and Artois, and others of quality gave but too lamentable experience; who being fed with vain hopes were at length inhumanly put to death.

The sixteen Provinces also subjecting themselves under this new government, lost their ancient liberties and privileges; which evidently appeared by the exploits done from the year 1567. hitherto by a new Council of twelve, elect and settled there by the Duke; the principal of which were Vergas and Delrio, the Fathers of the Inquisition, which Council was commonly called the Council of Blood.

The death of two Barons of Battenbourg, the one called Gysbrecht, and the other Thierri, Brethren, with certain other Gentlemen executed the same day at Bruxella, 1568.

AMong many Gentlemen and Captains who were apprehended after the discomfiture of the Assembly in Holland, whom the Dutchess of Parma had imprisoned in the Castle of Villford, the two Brothers of Battenbourg most ancient Barony situated upon Menfe, about two miles off from Nieuwmege, did manifest above others how much they had labored by being intruded in the Church of Geneva. The elder of them was Gysbrecht, and the other Diarrich or Thierri; who from the flower of their youth had constantly professed and confessed the pure Doctrine of the Gospel.

On Tuesday the first of June, Anno 1568. the Duke of Alva began to declare to the world his fained meekness, putting to death the same day these two Brethren, besides the Lords, Heter Dandelat, Philip Wingle, &c. They were first brought into Provoost Spellans house, near the Horse fair, in the City of Bruxella, compassed about with a strong guard, and many Drums beating, that none might hear what were their last speeches. As they went to their death, Battenbourg the elder seemed to be somewhat penfive, whereas Diarrich his Brother was very cheerful, comforting the other with his gracious words, saying, Ah Brother, is not this the day we have so much desired? Be not sorrowful now; for it is the highest honor that can befall us here to suffer for the Doctrine of the Son of God. It may be for the love you bear me, you grieve to see me dye first: I am content that you should drink of that cup before me, in regard you are the elder; if not, all is one, seeing we are going to our God.

Gysbrecht by and by replied, Think not, dear Brother, that the joy of the holy Ghost is taken from me now. I am drawing nigh to the Lord, being ready to dye for his holy name.

Then ascending the scaffold, after he had made his fervent Prayers to God, the Executioner taking off his head, he slept happily and sweetly in the Lord. His Brother following him next with such alacrity, as much astonished the spectators.

He desired, as some say, to see his Brother and when he had espied his head, he cried, I shall by and by be with thee, my Brother. So after he had ended his prayer, he was by a quick dispatch united unto him.

Those who testify these things report, That the other Gentleman had so much favour as to be buried; but these two Brethren were made a spectacle, being hanged up: the cause was, for that in the very same morning they suffered, as also before, they directly set themselves against the Idolatries which were proposed unto them.

The Saturday after, the fifth of June, the Earls of Egmond and Horne were beheaded, and there made a publique gazing stock. Of which two, the Earl of Horne, who died last, gave an evident proof of that true knowledge of God wherewith he was indued, and in which hee had more especially increased in the time of his troubles and afflictions.

An extract of a complaint with a protestation of the Prince of Orange and the Gentlemen of the Low Countries, touching their oppressions.

THis year in the Month of July, the Prince of Orange, William of Nassau, accompanied with many Lords and Gentlemen of the Low-Countries, all professors of the Gospel, for prevention of the slander and pretences of Rebellion put upon them by the enemies thereof, published in writing a Declaration; that it might appear to all, that they were so far off from plotting any Treason against the Kings Majesty, that on the contrary, they did by all the means they could acknowledge him to be their natural Prince and Sovereign. The true causes indeed for which they took up Arms under the Authority of their Prince, for their own defence, as also of those who professed the Protestant Religion, were the extortions, the confiscations of Body and goods, with the continual condemnations and putting to death even of the most Noble personages of the Countrey.

And that the Prince of Orange might make known to all, what injustice and cruelties were exercised upon those of the Religion, he discovered the notorious subtilties of the Cardinal of Granvelle and others, who under the cloaks of the pretended Catholick Religion, sought nothing else thereby but the diminishing of Gods glory, the Kings Authority, and the welfare of the common wealth, shedding the Blood of many a True Christian, by whose death followed the loss of their temporal estates; and all, forsooth, under pretence of Justice.

And

To wit Brabant, Luxembourg, Guelderland, Flanders, Artois, Hainaut, Holland, Zealand, Namur, Zutphen, Friesland, Malines, Utrecht, Over-Yssel, and Groningen.
* Le Comte de Sion

And forasmuch as tortures, vexations, banishments, executions both by fire and water, by strait imprisonments, Sword and Gibbets did still increase more and more; that for these considerations the cause was lawful and good, in taking upon them the defence of so miserable a People; to whom the Dutchess of Parma, Governess under his Majesty, had expressly permitted the preaching of the Gospel, for preventing of the perils and dangers which threatened the ruine of the said Countries.

And as the said Prince had been a faithful and loyal-Servant to his Majesty, in doing him many acceptable Services, without either sparing his person or goods, so was he also ready prest to be employed still in the like, more than at any time heretofore. And thus proceeding on further, he made it apparent to every one whose Judgment was not forestalled, that the Duke of Alva, who in respect of the dignities conferred upon him ought himself to be a pattern and a protector of the Nobility and Gentry, had notwithstanding put to death three-score Gentlemen, with others of Quality, rich Burgemasters of Brussels, and of other Cities besides; that this his ambition, being risen to a notable height of cruelty, durst put to death the Illustrious Earls of Egmond and Horne, without any shew of Law or equity, who had so faithfully served the Emperour Charles of famous memory in his Wars.

Yea, that he might yet further debate the Nobility of the Country, which is as it were the principal support of his Majesty; he caused the Heads of the said Earls to be set upon Poles and Forks; By such Spectacles charging upon their Parents and Friends much obloquy and disgrace. Yea, this horrible Execution did strike such a fear and terror into many, that to avoid these oppressions they fled the Country. For a conclusion he added, that all these things laid together, the issue thereof tended to the extirpation of all true Religion, and consequently the depriving of the Faithful, not only of their spiritual, but corporal good also. And therefore as a Prince, being a Native member of the Empire, he held himself obliged, in having compassion over the wrecks made among so many poor Christians, to lend them his best help and furtherance for the free passage of the Gospel, and the consolation of such of his Majesties good Subjects, as were persecuted, imprisoned and oppressed.

Before we shut up the History of the year 1568, we will add to the former Martyrs some that were executed in the Low-Countries at divers times in the said year, without tying our selves to any strict order touching their death.

Schoblant the Son of Barthel, John de Hues, Joris Coomans, Martyrs.

The eleventh of February there were taken and imprisoned in Antwerp, Schoblant the Son of Barthel, John de Hues, and Joris Coomans. After which they were all joyfull and glad in the Lord, confessing that nothing fell out in this regard, but by his Divine Providence; as it appears by Letters written to their Brethren the seventeenth of March, containing that which followeth.

Seeing that it is the will of God that we should suffer for his holy Name, and in the quarrel of his Gospel, we certify you Brethren, that we are of good courage hitherto, howsoever the Flesh continually rebels against the Spirit, counselling it ever and anon according to the advice of the old Serpent. But we are well assured that Christ who hath bruised, will also still bruise the Serpents head, and not leave us comfortless. True it is, we are now and then pricked in the heel, but that is all the Serpent can do: nor are we discouraged, but keep our Faith close to the Promises of God, who is the Lord of Heaven and Earth, having created all things of nothing.

He forsook not Joseph in Egypt, nor left the three young Men in the fiery Furnace: no, nor Daniel in the Lions Den. This is the God of Abraham, Isaac and Jacob, and of their righteous posterity; so that without fear we can say with the Prophet David, The Lord is my help, tower, strength and refuge. By such and the like Scriptures, dear Brethren, we comfort our selves in our bands, rejecting all confidence in any man whatsoever. Be not dismaid then, good Brethren and Sisters, for our bands and imprisonment. For so is the good will of God now towards us. And therefore pray rather that he will give us grace to persevere constantly unto the end. So be it. Anno 1568.

The Examination of Schoblant, taken the 24. of March, in the presence of the Marquis, of the Bayliff, of the Secretary and many others, 1568.

Marq. W Here were you born?

Schob. In Sommerwall.

Marq. Where did you marry your Wife?

Schob. At Middleborough in Zealand.

Marq. Where were your Children baptized?

Schob. In the Church of Christ, in which true Christians are bound to baptize their Children.

Marq. Though you should say no more, we have sufficient testimony even from your own mouth.

Have you received the Lords Supper?

Schob. Yes, Sir.

Marq. Are ye not a Minister?

Schob. No, Sir.

Marq. Ought not you to submit your Judgment to that which hath been decreed in a General Council, where so many Learned men were assembled, Bishops and Cardinals, saying the same?

Schob. I have read of some Councils where the Spirit of God was not present.

Marq. Would you not now willingly return into the bosom of the holy Roman Church?

Schob. I will cleave to whatsoever God shall teach me out of his holy Word. And thus for that they parted.

On the seven and twentieth of March, Schoblant received Sentence of death; whereat he was nothing terrified, but began to sing the Song of Simon, and the fortieth Psalm.

The night following he wrote his last farewell to his Brethren, and excuseth Joris for not being condemned with him, although they were both presented at the same time before the Judges. I pray you dear Friends be not offended, faith he, that Joris my Fellow-prisoner is not offered a Sacrifice with me. It is not, I assure you, for denying his Saviour. But let us meditate on that which the Lord said to S. Peter; If I will that he tarry till I come, what is that to thee? follow thou me. This I apply to my self at this time, for which I render humble and hearty thanks to God, who hath accounted me worthy, not only to confess the Lord Jesus with my mouth, but also to seal the same confession with my blood. I now Brethren bid you farewell, waiting with a joyfull heart the call and cry of my Husband, who now invites me to come unto him.

Out of Prison the same night before the day wherein I must be offered up a Sacrifice. Written with mine own hand.

Schoblant the Son of Barthel.

The next day he entreated the Gaoler with a great deal of earnestness that he would not suffer the Friars and Monks to come in to trouble him: for, said he, such kind of People can do me no good, seeing the Lord hath already sealed up the assurance of my salvation in my heart by his holy Spirit. I am now going to my Spouse, putting off this earthly Mantle, to enter into the celestial glory, where I shall be freed from all Superstitions. And then he added further, Would to God I might be the last that these Tyrants should put to death, and that their thirst after blood might be so quenched with mine, that the poor Church of God from henceforth might enjoy her rest and quiet.

Having sung the fortieth Psalm with his Fellow-prisoner, concluding the same with saying the Lords Prayer, they killed one another, and commended one another unto God with many tears.

After which the Executioner came in, and when he had bound him, he led him away. In going out of the Prison he said, farewell Joris, I go before thee, follow thou me. Joris answered, so will I Brother, I will follow thee. In his passage towards the place

John Hues finished his course in Prison.

Here followeth a Letter written by Joris Coomans, out of Prison, to the Church of God in Antwerp.

Gen. 15. 1. Brethren I write unto you being left alone, whereas we were three in number; John Hues is now dead in the Lord. I did my best to comfort him whilst he breathed. So as now I am alone, and yet not altogether alone, seeing the God of Abraham, Isaac and Jacob is with me. He is my exceeding great reward, and will not fail to reward me as soon as I shall have laid down this earthly Tabernacle: pray unto God that he will strengthen me to the end; for from hour to hour I expect the dissolution of this house of Clay.

Not long after, Joris was examined by the Magistrates, who questioning with him of his Faith, he answered freely thereto, proving what he said by the holy Scriptures.

The Marquis asked him, if he were resolved to dye for the Faith he professed.

Yes, saith Joris, I will not only venture to give my Body, but my Soul also for the confirmation of it.

Marquis. How came you to understand the Scripture, seeing you have not the Latin Tongue?

Joris. Call in hither your Doctors, and I will let them see that I have learning sufficient to confute them. You greatly admire them, but Christ gives thanks to his heavenly Father for hiding his secrets from the wise and prudent, and revealing them to Babes.

Marq. I hitherto spied you in hope to see you recant, but you grow still worse and worse.

Joris. Sir, during the time of my Imprisonment I have shed many a salt Tear, and by the Grace of God I am become much more resolute and better. But to fashion my self according to your appetite I have no stomach at all, no, although you burn me, as you have done my Brother Seoblant.

Marq. And I can tell you that it will cost you but little better cheap.

Joris. I am ready if it be to morrow.

Then said one of the standers by. Sir, he hath neither Wife, Child nor Goods to lose, and that makes him so willing to die.

Joris. Be it that I have none of all these, yet must I suffer death for Conscience sake. But what care you for that? I would you could be silent and bethink your selves well what you do; you shall answer these your doings at the last day, where you must all appear, and then there will be no respect of persons.

Marq. If you use this kind of language I will commit you to the Hole; where you shall be fed only with Bread and Water, and that I think will tame your Tongue. Therefore be quiet and sing me no more of these Psalms.

Joris. Well Sir, I may well refrain my outward voice, but neither you nor all the world besides, shall ever be able to let me from praising God in my heart; nor shall you sit as Lords over my Conscience.

Marq. We have heard you preach but too long. Then he said, Gaoler, take him and cast him into the Hole. Then was he put among Thieves, as a Lamb among many Wolves. Thus this constant Witness of Christ remained firm (scorning both their threats and torments) till they had burned him as they did Seoblant. August 14. the year 1568.

Giles Annik, John Annik his Son, and Lovis Meulen, Martyrs 1568.

Persecution grew still hot in Flanders.

Giles Annik, with John Annik his Son, were driven from Renay in Flanders, and retired unto Endon in East Friesland. But by reason of their sudden departure, they could not take their Wives with them; and therefore returned thither again in the year 1568 to convey them thence. The tyranny of the Duke of Alva and his Spaniards was then in the height; by reason whereof they durst not enter the Town openly, but took up their lodging in the Evening at an honest mans house, called Lovis Meulen. Now it was this night in which the Enemies had fore-appointed to make a secret search in the Town for such as professed the Gospel, knowing nothing of these two who were but now come thither. So passing by this house, and seeing the light of a Candle in it, they imagined to meet with their prey there; wherefore forcing the door open, they took these two Prisoners, together with their Host; God having appointed them to be the Witnesses of Christ.

So after they had been detained in bands, they were all three condemned by the Magistrates to death, as Heretics. Giles was the first that they brought to the place of Execution, and when the Priests offered to put their Idol into his hands, he refused it: whereat his Adversaries being moved caused him to be gagged, that the people might not hear him speak ought to their edification. Then was he burned, dying constantly and blessedly in the Lord.

Forthwith the Serjeants were sent to fetch his Son out of Prison; who, being endued with a singular fortitude and constancy, called to him one whose name was John Camber, being the first man that laid hold on him at his apprehension, saying, I forgive thee my death: then preparing himself to die in the Lord, the Hangman cut off his Head. Likewise Lovis Meulen, who having lodged these Strangers, according to the Rule of the Apostle, was executed by the Sword, which death he willingly endured for the Name of Christ in the year 1568.

Louyes de Kiken-Poof, Martyr, 1568.

THIS Woman was the Widow of one Huges Moyers born in Renay, about the age of sixty years, one that truly feared God. The Magistrate of Renay imprisoned her in the year 1568. because two years before the with her Children had confessed that a Minister should preach in an Out-house on the backside of her dwelling; she was also very charitable in relieving the Poor, every way shewing forth the fruits of a true living Faith. Having been kept in Prison seven months, she was condemned to die the nine and twentieth of July. After her condemnation the Curate of St. Martins came into the Prison, purposing to have heard her confession. But the Woman spake unto him with such a Divine grace, and with a Spirit so replenished with zeal, that the tears trickled down his Cheeks, and going his way he said, I came to comfort you, but I have need rather to be comforted of you.

Then being brought by the Serjeants to the place of Execution she was beheaded; unto which she yielded her self with much boldness and joy of heart, July the ninth.

A strange accident fell out upon the death of this Woman; for a Cousin of hers being with Child, and ready to lye down at the same time, when this Martyr was going to be executed, hearing the sound of the Bell (which usually toils when any are to suffer) she fell into a trembling, and remained so three weeks, beyond her reckoning, her Fruit stirring to and fro in her Womb, as if a Weaver had moved his Shuttle from one end of his Web to another; the neck of it bowing down as if it had been broken with some blow. By which it appeared that these cruel Tyrants were the cause of this poor Innocents death. The Woman viewing this strange sight sent for the foresaid Curate; who being come in, and beholding this spectacle, suddenly fountained, and was never well after to his dying day.

Notes touching Christopher Gauderin, Martyr, and others.

THIS Christopher was bred up under the Abbot of Enname; who dying, the said Christopher added himself to the making of Linnen Cloth, which he quickly grew expert in. But having been trained up in a bad School, as soon as the Sunday was come, he spent and consumed all his weeks earnings. Now by reason of a Friend of his that wrought wit' him, called Louis Stallens, God brought him into the right way. For the said Louis would often tell him, that he ought rather to dil. bute of his gettings to the Poor, than to spend them so wastfully; for if he continued so, God would surely call him to an account for it. These and the like exhortations so wrought upon this spendthrift, that he began to alter and change his course; so as instead of frequenting Taverns, he became a diligent hearer of Sermons, and also gave himself much to the study of the holy Scriptures: insomuch that not long after he was called by the Church to the Office of a Deacon, the which he discharged carefully and faithfully.

Having occasion to go to a place called Audenard, in the month of March, 1567. to make distribution of certain Alms to the poor there, he was arrested and sent Prisoner to the Castle by the Bayliff, who had formerly seen him in the said Abbots house. The Bayliff asked him how he came now to turn Hereticke; for you learned not this (said he) of your Master the Abbot. Nay Sir, said Christopher, I am no Hereticke, but a right believing Christian; which he taught me not indeed, but rather other vile qualities, the which I am ashamed now to rehearse.

In Prison he had many disputes touching matters of Faith, which he so defended and maintained by the Word of God, that he put his Adversaries to silence.

Some objecting against him his youth, being about the age of thirty years, he would tell them, that mans life consisted but of two days, viz. the day of his birth, and the day of his death, and therefore he must needs die once; for my part therefore (said he) I am now willing by death to pass into eternal life.

Perceiving in the evening that he was certainly to die the next day, the striking off of his Bolts being a sign thereof, he ceased not to pour out his Soul to God in prayer, until ten of the Clock, doing the like in the morning very early. His Prayer being ended, he put on a clean shirt, and washed himself, saying to his fellow Prisoners, Brethren, I am now going to be married, I hope before noon to drink of the Wine of the Kingdom of heaven. When he came down he found three Prisoners who were prepared to suffer with him; namely John Liebert, W. Spiere, and a Woman called Jannekin Bearts.

These four exhorted one another, and encouraged each other to suffer death constantly. Which done, a Friar forthwith presented himself before them, coming as he said to convert them. But Christopher said unto him, Away from us thou Seducer of Souls, for we have nothing to do with thee. Whereupon he by and by departed. Then came in the Hangman; who as he was busie about them to put into every one of their mouths a Gag, they bade one another farewell. John Liebert said, What shall we not have liberty in this our last hour to praise God with our voice and Tongue? Christopher answered, Brother, let not this discourage us; for the greater wrong our Enemies think to do unto us, the more assistance we shall find from God: and so never ceased to comfort them till himself was gagged also.

A confident speech.

Then the Executioner brought them to the Town-houle to hear their Sentence read; which in sum was this, That they should be hanged because they had been present at the hearing of Sermons. Thus these three men yielded up their Souls to God with admirable constancy, at the Gallows.

The Woman, being every way virtuously given, was condemned to be beheaded, because she had sung Psalms, and made a certain exhortation out of the Word of God to her Neighbours, as a womans up-lifting. She was beheaded on the back side of the Town-houle. Now because her Body was much enfeebled, she was caused to sit upon a stool, receiving three blows with the Sword overthrowing the Teeth. Yet she constantly sate still till she obtained the Crown of Martyrdom, the same day in which the forementioned Martyrs died, which was the second of June. Anno 1568.

Piere Coulogue, and Betken his Maid-Servant, Martyrs, Anno 1568.

His Peter Coulogue, by his Trade being a Goldsmith dwelling in Breda, had long served the Church there in the office of a Deacon; wherein he carried himself with the good approbation of all. His house also was free for the Assembly to meet in, as oft as the exercises of Christian Religion were performed amongst them.

But the Enemies of the Truth not enduring the sweet favour hereof imprisoned him, and laid him in Irons: which the faithful there took very heavily, using all the means they could to have access to visit him. But the Enemies taking knowledge thereof caused him to be conveyed into the Castle; whence both his and the Churches sorrow was yet further encreased, because they could not now come to be a comfort one to another.

His Servant Betken, being very zealous and well read in the Scriptures, brought him his ordinary dyet from day to day, never ceasing to comfort and confirm him out of the Word of God. All which she had liberty to do nine months together. At length they imprisoned her also; whereof she was right glad, thinking her self happy to suffer ought for righteousness sake. Not long after Peter was put to the Torture; which after he had endured, they came in like manner to his Maid-servant Betken: who spake unto them after this manner, My Masters, wherefore will you put me to this Torture, seeing I have no way offended you? Is it for my faiths sake? You need not torment me for that; for as I was never ashamed to make a confession thereof, no more will I be now at this present before you; I will freely shew you my mind therein. But for all this they proceeded on with that which they intended. Which the perceiving said, Alas my Masters, if it be so that I must suffer this pain, then give me leave first to call upon God. To which her request they yielded. Now whilst she was making her Prayer, one of the Commissioners was so surpris'd with fear and Terror that by and by he swooned, and could not be fetched again. And thus the poor Maid escaped the Torture.

Soon after being examined touching her Faith, they condemned these two Innocents to be burned. Now as they were led to be executed, great sorrowings and complaints were heard among the People. But as for Peter and his Maid, they prayed to God with ardent affection, that he would perfect the good work which he had begun in them, and assist them with the Power of his holy Spirit, until they had finished their course.

The courage and constancy of the said Betken did so move many of the godly, both Men and Women, that not casting what peril or danger might ensue thereof, they brake through the Multitude, embracing the Prisoners, and praising God for their constancy; saying, Fight manfully, for the Crown is ready prepared for you.

After they were come where they should suffer; Betken began to speak unto the People with an amiable countenance, saying thus unto them, Brethren and Sisters, be you always obedient to the Word of God, and fear not those that can kill the Body, for on the Soul they can have no power: as for me, I am now going to meet my glorious Spouse the Lord Jesus Christ. And then falling both down upon their knees, they prayed to the Lord with great devotion. Being risen up from prayer, the Executioner laying hold of them bound them with Chains to the Stake, and then strangled Peter, but would not strangle the other, who encouraged her Master till he had yielded up the Ghost, and till the fire had taken hold of herself. Then was she heard and seen to magnifie the Lord out of the midst of the flames; so as many among the Multitude were ravished at her invincible constancy. Thus did these two Martyrs of the Lord give up their last breath in the fire. Martyr the 29 Anno 1568.

Giles Meyere Martyr, Anno 1568.

Mat. 23. 37.

Ad. 2. 10. 20.

IN Flanders, at a place called Vinderhout, distant from Gand about a mile, there was a certain Curate called Giles de Meyere, whom it pleased God to illuminate with the true knowledge of his Gospel. Now having received a Talent from God, he would not hide it with the Evil servant; but sought all means how to imploy the same. He had the fear of God always before his eyes, manifesting the same as well in his Doctrine as in his Conversation, being careful to instruct those whom God had committed to his charge. Yea, he went from House to House comforting and exhorting every one as occasion served, out of the Word of God; above all, labouring with them to beware of the abominable Superstitions of the Papacy.

He taught them; that Forgiveness of Sins, the Grace of God, and Eternal Life, was not to be obtained by our own Merits, but by the free and only Grace of God in Jesus Christ.

The Clergy of Gand having notice given them hereof, namely, that their Doctrine and Authority would come to be little set by, if this Curate should proceed on thus in his course without let, they never rested until they had pursued him to the death. They imprisoned him then, in the Month of March, Anno 1567. calling him into a deep and dark Hole, where for a certain space he remained, bearing this affliction patiently and constantly, calling upon God night and day, praising him for effecting him worthy to suffer for his sake. In which his afflictions many good people, who came often to visit him, received such instruction and consolation from him, that they were hardly drawn to leave him, till of necessity they must; their departure was always accompanied with abundance of tears.

The Priests and others of that Rabble, ceased not likewise to ply him with Disputations, thinking by that means to make him renounce his Faith; but to no purpose: for he remained still firm and constant, keeping himself close to the Word of God written, which so vexed them, that they procured him to be laid in the Castle, where his Sentence was to be hanged: The Spaniards being then at Gand, took him thence, bound him, girding and straining him strangely with cords, and would needs have him burned. As he was led thither, they abused him shamefully with mocks, thrusting him forward, and striking him cruelly: The Captain of the Band gave him a blow over the face with his Gantlet, which much disfigured him. Finally, these Tyrants handled him worse than any Dog, only because his patient and constant carriage of himself tormented and enraged them.

Being come to the place, they thrust him into his little Cabin, piled up with Fagots and Wood, and then set fire unto him; where he was heard distinctly and plainly to use these words, (albeit they had gagged him) Father, into thy hands I commend my spirit. Thus this faithful Witness of Jesus Christ died quietly and constantly in the Lord, April the fourth, Anno 1568.

Among these sad Relations, a little to quicken and refresh the spirit of the Reader, I will here insert a Letter full of Consolations, written out of Prison to the Faithful, by one William Touart Merchant, who had his dwelling in the City of Lille in Flanders.

THis honourable Personage, being come to the Age of Eighty years, or thereabouts, used his House for the space of fourteen or fifteen years as a Church, where in the Assembly in the City of Lille commonly met. Being chafed and banished thence in the year 1561. he withdrew himself for a while to Tournay, whence he was constrained to fly, and to go to Amiens and Mouledier, Cities of Fleardy, that there he might enjoy the pure preaching of the Gospel. Afterward returning into his own Country he came to reside in the City of Antwerp, where after he had continued many years, he was at length imprisoned and condemned to be burned with two others, who suffered for the same cause. But it pleased God so to dispose of him, that he died another kind of death, to shew that his chosen Servants have to triumph over the same, some one way, and some another. For being plunged into a Cistern or Tub full of water, he was drowned in Prison, and then they carried his Body out of the City to a place called Berken, where the dead bodies of the Condemned are laid upon the Wheels or Crutch. Among many Letters which he wrote during the time of his Imprisonment, my Author hath selected out this one, which here followeth.

Dear Brethren and Sister: in Jesus Christ, I most humbly thank my good God that he hath so fortified and comforted me by his Grace, that I feel my self more cheered by lying in this dark Prison, than if I were walking in the open Streets or Fields. I say, this I feel according to the spirit; for as touching the flesh, what doth it apprehend here but stinking vapours and smoke?

Wherefore, my Beloved, if it so fall out that you be apprehended for the Name of Jesus Christ, fear not the Prison, nor those that have power to kill the Body; for having done that, they can go no further. Be ye not afraid then, seeing it is the reward which our good Captain Jesus Christ hath promised to all his faithful Soldiers and Servants. He who turns his back in this Conflict goes by the loss; but whosoever fights manfully, obtains in the end the Crown, not a Crown of Gold, but of Glory immortal. We here lay down a fading life, filled with griefs and troubles, to change the same for a life everlasting; we put off the rags of this mortal flesh, to be clothed with robes immortal; we forsake a loathsome life for joy and felicity eternal; ought any gain or exchange to be compared with this? O sweet and happy Martyrdom, how dost thou dignify and enrich us, in despite of the World, Devil, and our own Flesh! And which of us now can complain, seeing our Sovereign Lord and Master hath so expressly foretold it to all his followers? Will any man come after me, saith he? Let him then take up his Cross and follow me. Let us bear, oh let us then bear the Cross cheerfully and with joyfulness, that we may be received in the presence of his heavenly Father: for it is not only given us to believe in Christ, but also to suffer for his sake; Phil. 1. 2. 1. and if we suffer with him, then we shall also reign with him.

O that we could admire his bounty, who no sooner impleys us in his work, but hath the wages ready in his hand wherewith to recompence us. Your sorrow, saith he, shall be turned into joy. Let us then cast off every weight that presseth down, and whatsoever else that stands in our way to Heaven-ward; be it Father, Mother, Brother, Sister, Husband, Child, yea, and our own Life also. Let us with the wise Merchant-man sell all, that with him we may purchase that precious Pearl. How happy do I esteem them who are called to suffer, and leave their life for confessing the Name of Jesus Christ? For the eternal Sun of God will confess their Names before his heavenly Father, and his holy Angels. They shall be clad with white Robes, and shine as the Sun in the Kingdom of Heaven, filled with gladness in the presence of the Lamb. They shall eat of the fruit of the Tree of Life, which is in the midst of the Paradise of God. Rev. 2. 7.

Let us fix the eyes of our minds upon these so great and precious promises of Jesus Christ, which be hath made to all those which persevere in well doing unto the end. O how happy shall we be, when we are delivered from these bodies of death, to live for ever with our God! Let us continually pray then with the Disciples, Lord, increase our faith. O dear Brethren! remember me always in your Prayers, who am bound here in the bonds of Antichrist. Remember these also who are in bonds, as if you were bound with them; pray, I say, without ceasing; for our Adversary the Devil is always compassing us about with his fetches, to cause our hearts to faint. And you are not ignorant what a potent Enemy our own Flesh is unto us. But I confidently believe that our good God, who hath begun this good work in me, will perfect the same even unto the day of Christ.

Fare ye well.

It was strange to see what spectacles of dead Bodies, slain by the Bloody Inquisition, were to be gazed on in a manner in every place: especially in the Cities of Tournay; and of the Valencians, in regard of the Multitudes tudes of Believers, both of men and women, who had long languished in sundry Prisons, in great misery and necessities. Now that we may not forget what fell out in the beginning of this year 1569. thus it happened.

In the City of Valence were executed seven and fifty persons, whereof the greater part were Burgeses of the City; only because they clave to the true Faith of Jesus Christ.

This slaughter was distributed into three several days. Ten were beheaded on Munday the four and twentieth day of January; twenty on Tuesday following; and the other twenty the day after that; and so the seven in their order after the rest, not without much astonishment and lamentations of the poor people, with the remainder of the Burgeses of that City.

A notable Cruelty executed upon a good woman, called Perrette Curte, in the year 1569.

As she was travelling from Orleanse to a place called Montargis, where she intended to meet her Husband, called Mr. Anthony Chanoriner des Meringes, who had escaped the fury of his Enemies: she being in her Inn at supper, two or three desperate Villains knocked at the door, and coming in, asked of the said Curte, Art thou not Meringes Wife? She answered, Yes. Then rapping forth execrable Blasphemies, they said, Thou art she we looked for. This done, they stripped her into her Smock, took away her moneys and rings from her, and brought her to the River side; where after great Blasphemies, they said, Confess thee. The woman answered, Seeing I must dye, give me leave to call upon God first. They deriding her, said, Pray then, let us hear what kind of Prayer thou wilt make. She having in her prayers commended her Soul to God; one of them swore, Gods death, is this all? Wilt thou say nothing else? Then said one of them to another, Let us cast her into the River: which they agreed to do; some taking her by the head, and others by the heels, and so throwing her in, heaped great pieces of Ice upon her to cause her to sink, and then went their way. But understanding that the poor woman had got upon a great flake of Ice, to save her self thereon. Peter Gouge returned, who was one of the murderers, and had betrayed her into the hands of the rest, notwithstanding her Husband had covenanted with him to convey her to him in safety: This Gouge, I say, finding her there, gave her a deaths wound, the which had never come to light, had not the said Gouge confessed the same, being imprisoned by the Dutches of Ferrare for that very fact; yet escaped he unpunished (contrary to the Law of Provols) albeit he was sent to the Provost Marshal of Montargis to that end, and was set at liberty, for the hatred which these bare against the Doctrine of the Gospel, whereof the said des Meringes was a Minister.

Now the dead body floating to and fro upon the water, rested no where, until it came over against the Lodging where the said des Meringes lay (as if it had there demanded execution of Justice upon the Offenders) where being known, and conveyed thence, was buried by some of the Assembly who yet remained in the City.

Another Cruelty committed in Orleanse about the same time.

A Woman in the City of Orleanse was constrained by the Murderers (who broke in upon her Husband in the night) to stand and hold the Candle to them, whilst they murdered him.

Of the coming of the Queen of Navarre to the City of Paris in France, with the manner of her sickness and death there.

Before I come to mention the bloody Massacres of France, especially that of Paris, Anno 1572. which made way to all the rest, I cannot omit to place here, as an entrance thereunto, the History of that noble and virtuous Lady Jane de Albert, Queen of Navarre, because it contains much matter worthy of due observation.

This good Queen, before she could be drawn to come to Paris to solemnize the Marriage of her Son, the Prince of Navarre, with the Sister of Charles the Ninth, then King of France, received Letters upon Letters from the said King, to accompany the Prince her Son in that Solemnity: now, whereas she cast some doubts touching her Sons marriage with one of another Religion, the King assured her that all things should be so wrought, as should give her good satisfaction and content; promising that he would get a dispensation from the Pope to that end. But when the Queen understood that the King was minded to have this Marriage solemnized at Paris, she would by no means hear of it: For I will not, said she, put any confidence in that seditious people, being the sworn Enemies both of my self and mine.

Still the King persisted in his sute for the obtaining of the same at her hands. Also having intelligence by some of his Agents, that the Queen of Navarre began a little to waver, he solicited her yet once again to come, assuring her that all things should be carried in such a peaceable sort, that she should have no cause to complain. At length the Queen came from Rochel to Blays in the Month of March, 1572. with great attendance, where it is incredible to think what welcome she had on all sides, especially from the King and his Brethren, &c. who yet, when all was done, could say to his Mother, Now Madam, have I not quit my self well? Let me alone, and I will bring them all into the Net.

In April following were the Articles concluded concerning the Marriage of the Prince of Navarre with the Kings Sister. In the beginning of May the King wooes the Queen of Navarre again to come to Paris for preparing of things fitting for this Marriage; which she accordingly yielded unto, and parting from Blays on the sixth of the said Month, came to Paris on the fifteenth of the same. After which she went from place to place in the City into sundry Houses and Shops, to find out such things as might tend to the adorning of the day of so great a Solemnity.

The Queen-mother could by no means brook this good Queen; and therefore not finding with what colour she could dispatch her with the rest, and yet fearing the height of her spirit if she should survive, as also that she could not then so work upon the flexibility of the Prince her Son as she intended, she consulted with one Rene, whose practise it was to impose things; who by such means adventured to poison the Prince of Conde by the scent of a poisoned Apple, which upon some suspicion was first tried upon a Dog; and it had almost cost the Princes Chyrurgion his life, by smelling too nigh thereto. This Rene, selling to the Queen of Navarre his perfumed Drugs, found the way how to poison her therewith, although others thought the contrary. But the said Rene was heard afterwards to make his brags, that he had the like in store for two or three more, who suspected no such matter.

On Wednesday the fourth of June, the Queen fell sick of a continual Fever, and kept her bed; which proceeded, as it was given out, from the grief she had in her Lights, wherein by long continuance was bred an Impostume, she being also disordered with the heat of the Season and her extraordinary Journeys. This burning Fever grew so strong upon her, that within five days after she died, to the great grief of the better sort, but to the joy of the secret Council.

The Malady indeed was in her Brain, which was not searched: in which the Queen-mother had an hand, though she seemed much to mourn for the affliction of her good Friend. Now so far as in the time of her sickness she manifested with what Spirit she was guided, we will here set down the true narration of her behavior, both in the same her sickness, and also at her death.

Perceiving in her self by the strength of the Disease (howsoever others figured it) that she could not long continue, she made her self ready to receive from the hand of God that which he had appointed concerning her; and to that end requested the night have such light about her, as might comfort her in this case out of the Word of God, as also to pray with her and for her, according to that which S. James saith, Is any sick among you, Let him call for the Elders of the Church, and let them pray over such a one, knowing that the fervent Prayer of a righteous man availeth much with God.

Anno 1572.

Pope Pius 5. whilst he lived, could by no means endure to hear of, or give his consent to this marriage: but he died, and then way was made for this marriage to be concluded.

John 5. 16.

Anno 1566

Heb. 12.

Thus, according to her desire, a Minister resorting unto her, shewed out of the Scriptures, That Christians ought in all things to submit themselves to the will of God, as to the Father of Spirits, that they might live. And albeit the rigor of his chastisements doth sometimes seem to our flesh, as if they were sent to none other end but for our ruin and destruction; yet ought we to consider, that because he is just, he can do nothing but justly, and being a Father, he cannot but therein seek the welfare of his afflicted Children.

To which she replied, I take all this, faith she, as sent from the hand of God my most merciful Father; nor have I during this extremity, feared to dye, much less murmured against him for inflicting the same upon me; knowing that whatsover he doth, he doth the same so, as all in'the end shall turn to my everlasting good.

The Minister continuing in his speech, added, That the causes of sicknesses and diseases must be sought beyond the course of Physick, which always looks to the corruption of the humours, or to the more noble parts of the Body any way disordered: for howsoever it was not amiss to have respect to these things, as to second causes, yet ought we to ascend higher, namely to the first, even to God himself, who disposed of all his Creatures as it pleased him. He it is that makes the wound and heals, that kills and makes alive. And therefore to him we ought to direct our Prayers for comfort in all our griefs and suffering, and in the end for full deliverance; seeing it is no hard matter with him to restore health unto us, if his good pleasure be such.

Deut. 32. 39.

To this she answered, That she depended wholly upon Gods providence, knowing that all things are wisely disposed by him, and therefore besought him to furnish her with all such graces as he saw to be necessary for her salvation. As for this life, said she, I am in a manner weaned from the love of it, in regard of the afflictions which have followed me from my youth hitherto, but especially because I cannot live without daily offending my good God, with whom I desire to be with all my heart.

Deut. 32. 16.

The Minister told her, That long life, how full of troubles soever it were, was notwithstanding to be esteemed among the blessings of God, seeing his promise implies so much; and not only so, but because our life may many ways serve to his glory, and it hath an honour and a pledge of his favour, even as it is to him whom his Prince employs long in his service, having had experience of his fidelity for many years together. In which respect she was earnestly requested to pray, That if it were the will of God to employ her yet longer in his service, for the further enlargement of his Gospel, that he would grant unto her such recovery of health and good disposition of body, that with renewed strength she might be encouraged to finish her course much more nobly than hitherto.

Whereupon she protested, That in regard of her own particular, her life was not dear unto her, seeing so long as she lived in this frail flesh, she was still prone and apt to sin against God: only, said she, her care was somewhat for her Children (which God had given her) in respect they should be so soon deprived of her now in their young years; yet not doubting, said she, but although it should please God to take me from them, that himself will be a Father and a Protector over them, as he hath been to me in my greatest afflictions; and therefore I commit them wholly to his government and fatherly care. These were her very words.

The Minister said, That he blessed God to see in her Majesty this assurance of Faith, and so to cast her care upon the Providence of God, praying her still to persevere therein, which would sufficiently seal unto her the truth of her Faith. And thus, said he, did the Patriarchs in times past commit the care of their Posterity over into the hands of God; as may appear by Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, touching their several blessings.

Gen. 24. 1.
Gen. 27. 36.
Gen. 31. 2. & 40.

But yet it was very requisite, as he said, that she should make choice of such, who, for their sincerity both in Life and Doctrine, might continue to water in these young Primely Plants the Seeds of Piety, which had been sown in them by so great pain and industry; seeing it was to be hoped, that the example of her Faith and Constancy in the Service of God, which she had set before them, would serve as a perpetual inducement to imitate her so noble Vertues.

Now whereas she had again declared, That death was not terrible unto her, because it was the way by which we pass hence to our eternal rest: The Minister told her, That Christians had little cause to fear death, in regard they should not dye at all, according to Christ's words in the Gospel of John, He that liveth and believeth in me shall never dye. For death (so to speak properly) is no death to them, but a sleep; being often so called in Scriptures; and therefore Christ for their sakes hath overcome and triumphed over it in his own person. So as now we may cry out with S. Paul, O death, where is thy sting? O grave, where is thy victory?

Because by death we pass to life. Joh. 8. 51, 52. John 11. 26. John 12. 13. Acts 7. 60. 1 Cor. 15. 55

She was often admonished by him to make Confession of her Sins before God, shewing, That bodily Diseases tended to the dissolution of Nature, and that death was the wages of sin; declaring moreover, that by this her chastisement she might discern what she had deserved, if God should now enter into judgment with her, not only in regard of the fall of our first Parents, in which guilt she was enwrapped, as well as others, but also by her own personal sins, seeing the best of men or women in the world are in themselves but poor, miserable and wretched offenders: yea, if the Lord should punish us according to our demerits, we could expect nothing at his hands but eternal death and condemnation.

Rom 6. 23.

Rom 5. 12.

At these words she began, with her hands and eyes lifted up to Heaven, to acknowledge, That her sins which she had committed against the Lord were innumerable, and therefore more than she was able to reckon up: But yet she hoped that God for Christ's sake, in whom she put her whole reliance, would be merciful unto her.

Psal. 19. 13.

From the later clause of her speech the Minister took occasion to declare at large upon what ground she was to expect the fruit of this mercy of God in Christ; seeing the whole have no need of a Physician, but they that are sick: and therefore Christ faith in that place, He came not to call the righteous, but sinners unto repentance: And that he is ready to fill the hungry with good things, whereas in the mean while he stands the rich empty away. Of all which, said he, you ought so much the rather to be persuaded in your Conscience, by how much the more the Holy Spirit witnesseth to your spirit that you are the Child of God, Crying in you, Abba, Father. For what is Faith else, but a firm trust and assurance of the good will of God, manifested towards us in his blessed Son.

Mark 2. 17.

Luke 2. 13.

Now the Minister, fearing he might some way offend her by his over-long Discourse, held his peace; the rather because the Physicians thought that a long continued speech might be hurtful unto her; but she on the contrary earnestly requested him not to forbear speaking unto her about these matters of life and eternal salvation; adding, that she now felt the want of it, in regard that since her coming to Paris, she had been somewhat remiss in hearing such Exhortations out of the Word of God: And therefore I am now the more glad, faith she, to receive comfort out of it in this my so great extremity.

Rom. 8. 16. 17. What faith is.

The Minister then endeavoured to set before her the happiness of Heaven, and what those joys were which the faithful there possess in the presence of God: which when the Scriptures intend to discover unto us, they only tell us that the eye hath not seen, nor hath the ear heard, nor hath it entered into the heart of man, to conceive what those things are, which God hath prepared for them that love him. To which purpose he used this Similitude; As if a King, minding greatly to honour some noble Personage, should bring him to his Court, and there shew him his state and attendance, his Treasures, with all his most precious Jewels: even so, faith he, will the Lord one day reveal to all his elect and faithful people, his magnificence and glory, with all the Treasures of his Kingdom, after he hath gathered them home to himself, decking and adorning them with light, incorruption and immortality.

Psal. 116.

1 Cor. 2. 9.

This happiness therefore being so great, her Majesty, he said, ought to be the less careful about the leaving of this transitory life, seeing that for an earthly Kingdom, which he was now to forego, he should inherit an heavenly; and for temporal good things, which vanish and come to nothing in the using, she should for ever enjoy those that were eternal and everlasting: For her faith being now firmly settled upon our Lord Jesus Christ, she might be assured to obtain eternal Salvation by him. On which words he took occasion to direct his speech in more particular manner unto her, saying :

Madam, do you verily believe that Jesus Christ came into the world to save you? And do you expect the full forgiveness of all your sins, by the shedding of his Blood for you?

To the which she readily answered the did; believing that he was her only Saviour and Mediator, looking for salvation from none other, knowing that he hath abundantly satisfied for the sins of the whole World, and therefore was assured that God for his sake, according to his gracious promises in him, would have mercy upon her.

Thus you have in part the godly speeches which passed from this religious Lady in the beginning of her sickness; all which was within the space of three or four days. Howsoever before that, and since also, she ceased not to continue the same her fruitful and comfortable communications, now and then sending forth most affectionate sighs to God, as a testimony of that hope and desire she had in enjoying his Presence; often uttering these words, O my God, in thy good time deliver me from this body of death, and from the miseries of this present life, that I may no more offend thee, and that I may attain to that felicity which thou in thy Word hast promised me.

Neither did she manifest her pious affection by these her words only, but therewithal shewed a joyful and resolute countenance, as the vehemency of her sickness could bear; which gave sufficient proof to all that beheld her, that the fear of death could not drive her from the steadfastness of her Faith.

When she had finished these her consolatory speeches, they usually went to prayer; intreating the Lord that he would arm her with constant patience, and have mercy upon her. Which Prayer it shall not be altogether impertinent to insert in this place, serving as a Form of Prayer upon the like occasion.

The Prayer.

O Lord our God, we consule here before thy Divine Majesty, that we are altogether unworthy of thy infinite mercies, by reason of our manifold iniquities; and that we are so far off from deserving to be heard of thee in our requests, that we are rather worthy thou shouldst reject both our persons and our suits; but seeing it hath pleased thee to make us a gracious promise of hearing and granting our requests, we humbly beseech thee freely to forgive all our offences, and to cover them under the obedience and righteousness of thy dear Son, that through him our selves and poor services may be well pleasing before thee. For, Lord, we acknowledge that all our afflictions are measured out to us by thine hand, who art a most just Judge, in regard we have every way provoked thee to wrath by our infinite sinnings against thee; yea, by our rebellions, which now testify against us. For alas, Lord, our life hath no way been answerable to that perfect obedience which thou in thy holy Law justly requirest at our hands, which we from day to day do transgress; and therefore do here cast down our selves at this time before thy glorious presence, unfeignedly acknowledging our misery and wretchedness from the very bottom of our hearts.

Yet, Lord, mercy is with thee, and because thou art our Father, therefore thou desirest not the death of sinner; but rather that they should convert and live. For this cause we now fall down before the Throne of thy Grace, with confidence of obtaining thy wonted mercy, which thou hast promised to such as call upon thee in truth: beseeching thee, which art the Father of Mercies, to have compassion on all such whom thou hast humbled under thy mighty Hand, by any of thy Rods and Chastisements; but more especially this thy servant the Queen, who lieth here before thee sick of a dangerous Disease, that as thou hast righteously afflicted her for her sins (which she also doth with us acknowledge) so it would please thee in pardoning them all unto her, for thy beloved Sons sake, to grant that she may profit by this thy correcting hand for the time to come. Above all, give her a sweet sense, yea a just assurance of thy eternal joy, that so she may with the greater patience take down this bitter potion ministered unto her from thy hand, and that the sole desire of enjoying thy presence may cause her to forget all worldly greatness and magnificence; knowing that they are nothing in respect of the glory which is now set before her.

Endue her also with meekness of mind to bear the tediousness of her affliction; for howsoever the spirit be willing, yet the flesh is weak, yea full of resisting and unbelief; that so receiving all things from thee, as from a Father, she may the more willingly submit her will unto thine.

And because, O good God, thou hast made her hitherto an happy Instrument for the advancement of thy glory, and the defence of thy poor afflicted people, we pray thee, if it may stand with thy good pleasure, restore her to health again, that she be excellent work which thou hast by her means begun, may not be left unperfected, but by virtue of this her deliverance, she may with renewed forces undertake the same in better sort than ever before, especially for the well educating and training up the children which thou hast given her.

But Lord, if thou have a purpose now to call her home to thy self, who are we that we should contradict thy holy will? only we pray thee that thou wouldst confirm her more and more in the knowledge of thy blessed Gospel, and thereby also in the certainty of her salvation, which thou hast given her by faith in thy Son Jesus Christ, that thus she may not cease to sanctify and call upon thy holy Name unto her last breath.

And as touching our selves, who are here by thy good Providence gathered together about her, being in bodily health, give us to know the uncertainty and brevity of our life; that so, according to our duty, we may behold the same in this mirror which thou hast set before us; as knowing that even the greatest in the world are subject to the same calamities, as well as the small; that so our chief care may be to employ the remainder of our time to thy honour and service: all which we crave of thee in the Name of Jesus Christ thy Son, our only Mediator and Advocate. Amen.

Thus we have, as near as we could, gathered the sum of the Prayer. During which she ceased not, with hands and eyes steadfastly lifted up to Heaven, to fetch many deep sighs, especially when mention was made of that mercy of God in Christ which he extendeth towards poor sinners. So as there was at any time present that might not evidently perceive, that her heart and affections were joined to the Prayer which we pronounced in her presence.

And while she thus lay, the still continued in her godly resolution to depart hence, that the might be with Christ, taking great delight in the holy and christian Exhortations which were usually made unto her by many godly and learned men, who came in to visit her, to whom she also manifested no small testimony of that Faith, and Hope, which she had in God, touching the salvation of her Soul, by her holy and christian speeches, which for brevities sake are here omitted.

Yea, albeit the Lord exercised her much with the sense of her inward Disease, yet could you not at any time discern any speech favouring of discontentment or impatience, to proceed out of her mouth; nay, scarcely a groan, which not only those of her own Family, but many others can testify, even the Queen-mother, with others also, who now and then came in to see her.

But if at any time she felt any refreshings from the violence of her Disease (there being no Malady so vehement which hath not some intermission and breathing time) she manifested to all her willingness to obtain the recovery of her former health, refusing to that end no good means prescribed for her by the learned Physicians. Again, when she perceived her sickness to encrease upon her, and that she grew worse and worse, she was no whit appalled thereat, but shewed her self to be armed with an invincible constancy, to undergo the utmost that death could do against her, preparing her self willingly for that last Conflict.

Moreover, seeing her Ladies and Gentlewomen weeping about her bed, she would forthwith rebuke them, saying, I pray you weep not for me, forasmuch as you see God doth now by this sickness, call me hence, so enjoy a better life, and to enter in at the desired haven, towards which this frail Vessel of mine hath for a long time been keering; only she shewed her self somewhat grieved, that she lacked opportunity to reward them, and many more of her Family and Train which had done her faithful service, as she could have wished; excusing her self with these words unto them, That it was not for want of good will, but by being overtaken, and so prevented, by this her unexpected sickness. But, saith she, I will not fail to give order concerning the same to my uttermost ability.

In the end, feeling her strength to decay more and more, she gave order to have her last Will and Testament made, wherein she above all wished, that her Children might have but the grace to honour and fear the Lord, exhorting them constantly to continue in the profession of the Gospel, in which they had been trained up from their youth; ordering especially that her Daughter, the Princess, should be educated and instructed therein, by the four Ladies which she had appointed and brought with her out of Bearne for that end and purpose. And being come to age, her desire was that she might be joyed in marriage to some Prince of the same Religion, by the counsel and advice of the Cardinal of Bourbon and Gasper Count of Coligny Admiral of France, whom she made Executors and Overseers of her said Testament. But here it may not be omitted briefly to relate another Conference which she had with a Minister of the Gospel before her departure.

The eighth of June, which was the day before her death, she caused a Minister of the Gospel to be called for, and finding that she was drawing nigher unto her end than before, she wished him to speak somewhat largely of such temptations as Satan is wont to assail Gods Elect withal in their last Confitt.

To which the Minister answered, That then was the hour indeed wherein that sworn Enemy of all the Faithful did most busily bestr himself, if he could, to deprive them of the comfort of their Salvation; not sparing at that time especially to set upon them with might and main: but yet even then the Lord is not, nor will be wanting to his, filling their hearts with such joy and comfort of the Holy Ghost, as shall make them, through the same, more than Conquerours.

The first Engine then which Satan useth against the Saints to cause them to despair, is to present before their eyes the innumerable heaps of their sins and pollutions, wherewith they have any way been defiled in their whole life; and then presents unto them Gods Justice, before which no flesh can be able to subsist, unless it be pure and spotless: whence he infers, that miserable sinners can expect and look for nothing, but an horrible desolation and condemnation. But against these assaults, in the first place, must be opposed (as David doth in the One and fiftieth Psalm) the infinite multitudes of Gods compassions, which do infinitely surpass the multitudes of our sins. And as touching the Justice of God, we confess that no Creature that is defiled with sin, can in any sort abide to be strictly examined by it, if it shall the same to a severe account: but we also know that God will never enter into judgment with those that believe in his Son, but allows unto them that righteousness & obedience which was accomplished in him, which is only sufficient for us, being imputed unto us, to oppose against the judgment of God: therefore in it alone they expect to stand before his face, and not by their own dignity or worthiness. Indeed if they were to appear before the Throne of Justice, to receive thence what they have deserved, they had good reason to be overwhelmed in utter despair, as oft as they think upon, or look on the same: but turning their eyes upon him, who being the eternal Son of God, hath clothed himself with our Human Nature, to bear in the same the punishment due to our sins, and therein acquitted us, then Gods Justice doth no way affright us, but rather yields us assured comfort, because they make this their full resolution, that forasmuch as God is just, he cannot require the same debt twice. Having therefore received full and perfect satisfaction of him, whom he hath ordained to be our Surety, and paid our debts for us, thence we gather assurance that he will no more require them of us.

To which purpose these Sentences are to be well observed. It is Christ who hath borne our griefs, and carried our sorrows. That the chastisement of our peace was upon him, and with his stripes we are healed. That we all like Sheep have gone astray, and have turned every one to his own way, and the Lords path laid upon him: he iniquity of us all. Christ is our peace, and the propitiation for our sins. The Lamb of God which taketh away the sins of the world. These, with many the like Sentences, the Minister propounded by way of answer to this virtuous Ladies demand: concluding the same thus, that Gods Justice ought not to terrify those that believe in Christ, of whose righteousness and redemption they are partakers, knowing that Jesus Christ who knew no sin, was made sin (that is to say, an Oblation for sin) for us, that we might be made the righteousness of God in him.

I grant, saith he, that these things belong not to all indifferently, but only to such, as believing in the Son of God, do wholly rest themselves satisfied in the merit of his Death and Passion; which merit of his, as S. Peter witnesseth, sufficeth for their salvation.

After these matters premised, he asked her whether she placed her whole confidence on Christ crucified, who died Rom. 4. 25, for her sins, and rose again for her justification?

To which the Noble Princess answered, That she neither expected salvation, righteousness, nor life from any else, then from her only Saviour Jesus Christ, being assured that his only merit abundantly justified for the full satisfaction of all her sins, albeit they were innumerable.

This being your Faith, Madam, (said the Minister) you cannot come into condemnation, when are passed from death to life. Then taking an occasion again to resume her former speech, That she had no cause to be afraid of Gods Throne of Justice, seeing it was turned into a Throne of Grace and Mercy unto her; and that the hour of death should now be exceedingly welcome to her, seeing it could be nothing else but a sweet passage into a far better life, as also the time in which all tears should be wiped away from her eyes: He likewise shewed, that she would do well continually to be thinking on that excellent Sentence, Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord, because from thenceforth they rest from their labours, and their works follow them.

For then, said he, the time approacheth wherein she should enjoy the visible presence and society of her husband Christ, and have fellowship with the blessed Angels and Celestial Spirits, with the holy Patriarchs, Prophets, Apostles, and Martyrs of the Son of God, so partake with them of the same felicity and glory.

The Minister minding yet further to found her, whether she were loth to leave this life, used these words; And now, good Madam, (said he) if it should please God by this your sickness to put an end to this wearisome pilgrimage of yours, where yet you remain with us, and to call you home to himself, wherewith he gives us to see some evident signs and tokens, are you willing, I beseech you, to go unto him? To which this excellent Princess, with great magnanimity and courage, without any astonishment, replied, Yes, I assure you.

Then he once again added, Good Madam, open the eyes of your Faith, and behold Jesus your great Redeemer sitting at the right hand of his Father, reaching out his hand to receive you unto him. Are you, are you willing to go unto him? Yes, I assure you, saith she, most willing, and much more willing than to linger here below in this world, where I see nothing but vanity.

The Minister, not willing to continue longer in this kind of discourse, asked if she were pleased that they should go to prayer, declaring that godly personages there present would willingly joyn their desires with hers. To which she consenting, the said Minister prayed by her a good space, whilst this pious Lady manifested her ardent affection to call upon God.

When prayer was ended, the Minister differing in her the undoubted testimonies of her repentance, and of the sorrow she conceived for the offences which she had committed against God, together with the assured confidence which she had in his mercies, as a Minister of the Gospel, and Ambassador of the Son of God, by the Authority dispensed to him, having committed to him the Word of Reconciliation, he assured her in his Name; that all their sins were forgiven her of God, and that they should never come into account before his judgment-seat: yea, that she should no more doubt thereof, than if the Son of God from Heaven should say unto her, Daughter, thy sins are forgiven thee. And to the end that troubled Consciences might the better be quieted, Christ hath used these words, speaking to his Ministers, saying, Whose soever sins ye remit, they are remitted; and whose sins ye unloose, they are unloosed. The reason is, because the word which they pronounce is not the word of a mortal man, but of the immortal God, being of no less weight, than if himself uttered the same.

Then he asked of her Majesty, if she accepted of so gracious a Message which assured her of the free pardon of all her sins. Yea, said she, and make no doubt thereof.

Not long after these Exhortations, the Admiral coming in, and with him another Minister, she also gave ear to him for a good space together; whose discourse tended to prepare her for death, as he had done who had spoken to her immediately before; who having finished his speech, prayed also with her, and for her, which she heard with great attention and affection. Then she requested that these two Ministers might stay with her all night in her Chamber, and that they would in no wise leave her.

The greater part of this night was spent in holy Admonitions which these two Ministers gave to this gracious Lady and Princess one after another. Besides these Admonitions, the commanding that some Chapters of the holy Scripture, which were pertinent for her condition, should be read unto her; one of the Ministers read in her hearing certain Chapters out of the Gospel of S. John, namely, from the fourteenth to the seventeenth. After he had read to her these Chapters, he went to Prayer, which being ended, the Queen desired to take some rest; but it was not long ere he commanded them to read again: whereupon the other Minister having made choice of certain Psalms of David, full of ardent and affectionate prayers, suited to this Princess's present Affliction, he read them unto her, and for a Conclusion read the One and thirtieth Psalm, where the Prophet, among other things, doth there commend his Spirit into the hands of God; because, saith he, thou hast redeemed me, O Lord God of truth.

The Queen willed them to pray with her again: and thus, as I have said, was the most part of the night spent in such virtuous Exercises, namely, in Exhortation, in Reading the holy Scripture, and in Prayer: during all which time the Ministers never discerned in any of her speeches or behaviour the least impatience. Nay, whereas some days before she fell sick, she shewed how affectionately she was bent to provide things most magnificent for the day of her Sons Marriage, according as the state of so great an Alliance required; it was admirable to observe, that after this sickness had seized upon her, God wrought in her such a forgetfulness and neglect of all such matters, that she never made shew of having so much as a thought thereof.

This night being thus passed and spent by this noble Queen, the persevering in the expressions of like pious actions and ardency of Faith, the next day in the mornings between eight and nine of the clock, she departed this life, to take possession of a far better life, sweetly yielding up her Spirit into the hands of God, the ninth of June 1572. the sixth day after she fell sick, in the 44. year of her age.

She had her perfect speech always even to the hour of her death: shewing not only the stayedness and soundness of her judgment (which ever in times past she had) in her care about the salvation of her Soul, but in her other worldly affairs also.

Now to avoid all jealousies and suspicions of her being wronged by Poison, or otherwise, in this matter of her so sudden sickness, her Body was opened by sundry expert and learned Doctors of Physick and Chyrurgery, with all exquisite diligence, who found her heart and liver very sound and untouched, her lungs only excepted, which long before on the right side had been very ill affected, by reason of an extraordinary hardness which they had contracted, and withal a great Impothume, which, so far as man could judge, they concluded was the cause of her death. But they had no command given them to open the Brain, and therefore finding somewhat out of frame in her Body, they delivered their Opinions only concerning the same.

Thus you have with as much brevity as I could, and as the merit of the thing required, the true report of the manner of this virtuous Princess's sickness and death, thus far related unto you; only my request is (saith my Author) that if any have a more perfect and particular knowledge of the excellent parts wherewith the Lord had adorned and beautified her, they would not suffer the same to be buried in silence, but to cause it to see the light; that on the one side it may serve as an example to Posterity; and on the other side, that we may learn to bless God for her Piety and Constancy.

An Introduction; first into that which leads to the death of the Admiral of France; Then, to the Massacre at Paris, and so in some other Cities.

And first, what moved the Admiral to come to Paris.

After the death of the Queen, certain Princes were solicited by the King to give their attendance at Paris for the solemnizing the Marriage of the Prince of Navarre (now made King by the death of his Mother) according to the Ceremonies which were thereto appertaining. Among the rest, Letters were directed to the Admiral by the King himself, to come to this Marriage; which were delivered unto him by Caragues: wherein the King assured him he would not tarry long after him; willing him not to be afraid of the fury of the Parisians, nor of their threats which they had formerly uttered against him. For he was not ignorant of the deadly hatred they bare him, and therefore wrote unto the Maier of the City, to look unto it at his peril, that the Admiral had no wrong offered him by the Citizens, either at his entrance or continuance in the City. For of all the Cities in that Kingdom, it is the most superstitious, and easily moved to Sedition; and therefore the Admiral, being of a contrary Religion, could expect but ill welcome at his coming thither; especially because at his solicitation the Crois of Gascones was removed out of the Street of S. Dennis.

The Queen-mother and the Duke of Anjou wrote unto the Maier also, and likewise to the rest of the Magistrates, to the same effect; but especially to their Servants, some whereof had a little light given them touching that device. To be short, they endeavoured to take all rubs out of his way, that he might with the less mistrust fall into the same.

The Admiral, not casting any perils, resolved to take his journey to Paris. Albeit he lacked not sundry advertisements from his own Followers, and others his well-willers in the Kingdom; who honoured him much, desiring him, that howsoever he had no sinister opinion of the King, of his Mother, or any of theirs, yet at the least he was to take into his consideration the place whither he went, and amongst what Enemies he was now to venture himself. But he always leaning upon the testimony of a good Conscience, and being confident in Gods Providence, not moved by these Advertisements, took his Journey to Paris with very few Attendants. Being come thither, he was honourably received of the King, and of his Brethren, and of the Queen mother, with others also.

The Marriage of the King of Navarre with the Kings Sister being solemnized on the seventeenth and eighteenth of August, 1572. and all the Triumphs and Feastings accompanying the same being finished, the Admiral determining to take his leave at Court, and so to return homewards, the Deputies of the Reformed Churches brought him their Requests on a sudden, to present the same to the King, in regard of many wrongs the said Churches had sustained; and therefore they instantly besought him, that he would not leave the Court till some order might be taken for redress thereof.

This, with other Impediments, were the occasions of detaining him still there.

Mauravall coming to Paris whilst these Feasts lasted, having presented his Service first to the King and his Mother, the Duke of Anjou, with those of the Guise; after some speech had with the King and Queen-mother, one called Chail had a command to direct him to the house whence whence the blow should be given: who left him with a Woman in the said House, which Woman was forbidden not only to ask his Name, but also so much as to enquire for what cause he was lodged there.

On Friday, the two and twentieth of August, in the morning he trimmed up his Harquebuse, watching secretly the Admirals coming.

Marshall
hurlt the Admiral.

The Admiral at his going forth out of the Louvre meeting the King coming out of a Chappel which is before the same, passing thence to play at Tennis, he scarcely had gone an hundred paces from the place, but as he returned to his lodging on foot to dine there, attended on by some twelve or fifteen Gentlemen, reading a petition; out of the Window of a lodging (where Villemur Tutor to the Duke of Guise usually lay) he was shot with an Harquebuse charged with three brass bullets, one of which took off the fore finger on his right hand, and he was hurt with another in his left arm. Feeling himself thus wounded, he willed some of his Followers to enter that House, and to enquire who it was that had done that or who set him on work to do it: and then to advertise the King thereof, giving him to understand how well his Commandment was observed.

Now whilst they were busie to force open the door, the Murderer fled out by a back way, escaping thence out of the gate of Saint Anthony; where one attended him, holding a Spanish gennet brought out of the Duke of Guise Stables; whereon he galloped away, yet not without some difficulty: for flying thus in some fear, he fell off his Horse twice or thrice.

A Gentleman seeing the Admiral hurt came to support his left arm, binding up the hurt thereon with his handkerchief. And thus was he conducted to his lodging, which was distant from thence about some twenty paces. In his passing a Gentleman said it was to be feared the bullets were poisoned: to which the Admiral replied, All must be as it pleaseth God.

The King hearing of the Admirals hurt left his game, where he was playing till then with the Duke of Guise, and throwing away his Racket as it seemed in an anger, with a sad and heavy countenance withdrew himself into his Chamber; the Duke of Guise following him within a little while after.

The King of Navarre and the Prince Conde complaine to the King.

The King of Navarre, the Prince of Conde, with many other of the Religion, having notice of the Admirals hurt, complained to the King of this untimely accident; treating they might have leave to depart out of the City, seeing they could expect little safety there. The King made his moan to them of the mischance that hapned, swearing and protesting that he would execute such impartial justice upon the offender, and on all the complotters, as should give the Admiral and all his friends content; only he willed them to stay, promising them ere long to provide for their security.

The Chirurgions and Physicians were presently sent for, amongst whom was Ambrose Pare the Kings Chirurgian, a Man very expert. He began first with the Admirals finger, which put him to much pain, in regard the scissers were not sharp enough to cut it off at once; besides he was faine to stop and open the wound thrice. Then he came to the left arm, making incisions in two places into which the bullet had pierced. The Admiral endured all this with an undaunted countenance, and wonderful patience, whilst those which stood by and saw him so mangled could not refrain from tears. Captain Monin held him with both his arms about the middle, and Cornaton held his hands. He seeing them astonished, my friends, said he, why weep you? I think my self happy to be thus handled in the cause of God. And anon tasting his eyes upon a Minister called Merlin, he said, Here ye see, my friends, Gods blessings. I am hurt indeed; but I know it is come to pass by the will of my Heavenly Father, humbly thanking his Majesty in that he is pleased to honor me so far, as to suffer any thing for his holy Name. Let us pray unto him, that he would grant unto me the gift of perseverance.

Then looking upon the said Minister who wept over him. Oh Master Merlin, said he, what will not you comfort me? Ye Sir, said he, for wherein may you take greater comfort, than in calling to mind how greatly God hath always honored you in esteeming you worthy to suffer rebuke for his Names sake, and true Religion? The Admiral replied; alas, if God should deal with me according to my deserts, he might have put me to worse torments than these. But blessed be his holy Name, in that he is pleased to take pity on me his poor and unworthy Servant. Be of good cheer, Sir, then said another unto him; for seeing God hath spared your more Noble part whole, you have cause therein to magnifie his goodness. In these wounds you have received from God a testimony of his love, rather then of his displeasure, seeing he hath preferred your head and understanding safe.

Then said, Merlin, Sir, you do well in turning your thoughts away from him who hath committed this outrage upon you, in looking only unto God; for no doubt it is his hand that hath smitten you therefore for the present, cease to think on the malefactor. I assure you, said the Admiral, I do freely forgive him from the bottom of my heart, and those also that are his abettors; being fully perswaded, that none of them all could have done me the least hurt, no, though with violent hands they had put me to death. For what is death it self to Gods Children but an assured passage to an eternal rest and life?

Now as the said Minister declared how the evils which happen to the Children of God in this present life, do often incite and quicken them up to pour out their Prayers into the bosom of the Almighty, the Admiral presently with a loud voice and ardent affection prayed thus.

The Admirals Godly and devout Prayer.

Lord God and Heavenly Father, have pity upon me for thy goodness and mercies sake; remember not Lord the sins of my life past, nor the offences which I have committed against thee; for if thou narrowly mark our sins, the looseness of our behaviour and disloyalties, in transgressing thy holy commandments; Lord, who shall stand? who is able to bear the weight of thy displeasure? I renounce all Idol Gods; I acknowledge thee to be the only true God, and worship thee alone O Eternal Father, in thine Eternal son Jesus Christ. I beseech thee for his sake, that thou wouldst give unto me thy holy Spirit, and therewithal the gift of patience. I put my trust in thy free mercy; for therein consists the stay and prop of all my hope, whether I live now at this present, or live for the time to come. Behold Lord, here I am, do with me as it pleaseth thee; having this confidence in thee, that if I now depart hence, thou wilt receive me into the blessed rest of thy Kingdom. If it please thee to lengthen out my days here on earth. O heavenly Father give me Grace that I may spend the residue thereof in setting forth the Glory of thy holy Name, and in maintaining, to the utmost of my power, thy pure worship and Service. Amen.

The Admirals Godly and devout Prayer.

Having ended this Prayer, Merlin asked him, if it pleased him that the Minister of Christ should now pray with him and for him. To whom he said, yes, with all my heart; I pray you begin. Whilst Merlin pronounced the Prayer, applying the same to the present occasion, the Admiral with his eyes looking up to Heaven expressed the ardency of his affection, in consenting therunto. Prayer being ended, Merlin began to propound unto the Admiral the examples of the Martyrs, shewing that from Abel to Abraham, and consequently hitherto, who ever carried themselves in any degree of faithfulness in the House of God, felt at one time or other the smart of afflictions in divers kinds. The Admiral answered, that when he called to mind the sufferings of the Patriarchs and Martyrs, it much comforted him, and helped him somewhat to allay the bitterness of his afflicted estate.

The Ministers pray with him.

The King of Navarre and the Prince of Conde having bitterly bewailed this outrage committed upon the Admiral (as you heard before) about two of the Clock in the afternoon, the King, accompanied with the Queen Mother, his Brother, and other of the Lords, went to visit the Admiral.

The King & Queen Mother came to visit the Admiral.

The King with tears seemed to be exceeding sorry for that which was come to pass, promising him, with one Blasphemous Oath upon another, to revenge the fact, no less than if it had been committed upon his own person: praying him to come and take up his lodging with him, in the the Lowure for his greater security and safety. Whereupon, the Admiral, after some discourse made to the King in secret, gave him most humble thanks for so great a favour, as to visit him in his own person.

Upon the Motion made by the King, Maxilles his chief Physician was called, demanding of him, whether the Admiral might safely be removed thence into the Lowure, or not? His Answer to the King was, that it could not be done without danger. Some of the Admirals friends thought it fitting to request a guard of Soldiers to be assigned by the King unto him for his better security. The King answered, he liked well of that device, being fully determined to provide for the Admirals safety as his own, and would preserve him no less than the apple of his Eye. After the King called for the bullet of brass wherewith the Admiral was hurt, that he might see it, asking whether he was not put to great pain when his finger was cut off, as likewise touching the dressing of his arm? Now as Cornaton shewed the bullet, having his sleeve all bloody (because he was appointed to hold the Admirals arm, while it was in dressing) the King asked if that were of the Admirals Blood? and whether so much Blood issued out of his wounds? adding (after Cornatons Answer) he never saw Man in his life shew greater constancy and magnanimity of Spirit than the Admiral did.

Then was the Queen Mother desirous to see the bullet, saying, I am glad the bullet is taken out; for I remember when th. Duke of Guise was killed before Orleans, the Physician told me, that if the bullet was gotten out, there was no danger of death, though it were poisoned.

Then Cornaton answered, we have foreseen that, Madam; for being careful to prevent that danger, the Admiral had a medicine given him to expel the poison, if peradventure any such thing should be.

Some good hopes of the Admirals recovery.

The Saturday before the Admiral was slain he began to be somewhat cheered, so as the Chirurgions and Physicians gave out, that they would warrant the Admirals Life: because his arm, having lost but little of its strength, would soon be healed. This news was brought to the King, who seemed to entertain the same joyfully. The new married Wife came also to visit the Admiral. But all this was but a lightning before death. For that night there was heard a great clattering of Armour in the City, and many Torches lighted every where, born by many of the people. Some Gentlemen, whose lodgings were nigh to the Admirals, rose, and went out, asking some of their acquaintance the reason why there were so many up in Arms at that hour of the night: They answered; That the King much desired to see a Castle assailed and defended, deviled only in sport to give him content. They passing yet further came to the Lowure, where they likewise saw many Torches lighted, and Troops of armed Men.

The Guard there could no longer contain themselves, but began to pick a quarrel with them; and as one of the said Gentlemen was about to speak, a Gascoine Soldier struck at him with a Partizan, and then they fell upon the rest. The noise hereof spreading, the Queen Mother said, seeing it is not possible to retain the fury of the Soldiers any longer from breaking out, * Let the Bell of the Church of S. German be tolled, said she.

* That was the watchword, as you would say, when the Mother was to begin. The mark or sign by which the Murderers were to be distinguished from the rest, was a white handkerchief knit about the left arm, and a white Cross in their Hats. Proverb.

The Admiral coming to the knowledge of this uprore (though he had but few of his followers about him, was not much moved thereat; trusting (as he often used to say) upon the Kings favor, whereof he had large experience. Also he knew that when the Parisians should understand how much the King disliked their folly, though they had an intention of doing him some mischief, yet would they be quieted as soon as they saw Coffeins and his Guard.

This Coffeins was appointed by the Duke of Anjou to defend the Admirals Lodging, wherein the old Proverb was verified, That the Wolf was set to keep the sheep.

About break of day, August the four and twentieth, 1572. being Saint Bartholomews day, they began to knock at the door where the Admiral lay. La Bonne, who lay not far from him, having the keyes, perceiving that there were some who came on a message from the King to the Admiral, came down quickly and opened the door; presently Coffeins fell upon him and stabbed him with his dagger, so that he dyed. Then with his Harquebusers rushing into the House, killing such as they met, others fled. Cornaton awaking with the noise that he heard at the door (for he lay in the next Chamber by Jean Thier, causing the Switzers and other Officers to fortifie it. Coffeins hearing that cried to him to open it in the Kings Name, and he so handled the matter, that with the help he had, he forced the door open, and after gained the stairs. The Admiral and those that were with him, taking notice how they shot off Pistols and Guns, finding themselves inclosed in their enemies hands, fell to prayer, begging pardon of God for their Sins.

The Admiral rising out of his Bed, and putting on his night gown, commanded Merlin the Minister to make the prayer. He also, calling earnestly upon Jesus Christ his God and Saviour, commended his Spirit into his hands. He that testified these things and made report thereof, coming into the Chamber, and being asked by the Admiral what that Tumult meant; Sir, faith he, God is now summoning us to look to our end. The Admiral seeing what would be the issue, answered, I have long since expected death: have your selves if it be possible, for you cannot secure me; I commend my Soul into the hands of the merciful God. Those who were present and escaped have affirmed, that the Admiral was no more affrighted at death, which he saw present before his eyes, than if there had been no likelihood thereof at all.

The Admirals Christian and constant carriage of himself in these broils.

Forthwith every one in the Chamber getting up to the top of the House, and having found a window near the Roof, saved themselves there; but the greater part, who were beneath in the next room to the Admiral were slain, others miraculously escaped. In the mean while Coffeins having made his way caused certain Switzers of the D. of Anjou guard to enter into the House.

Besine, Coffeins, and Sarlabour, with their Targets in one hand, and their naked Swords in the other, broke open the Admirals Chamber door, and Besine (which was afterwards slain himself by one Bervouille upon the way, after he had escaped out of Prison) coming towards the Admiral, holding the point of his Sword to his Breast, said thus, Art not thou the Admiral? I am the Man, said he, with an undaunted courage, as the Murderers afterwards confessed. Then beholding the naked Sword, Young Man, said the Admiral, show oughtest somewhat to respect my years; and my infirmity of Body, but it is not thou that canst shorten my days. Besine desperately thrust the Admiral into the Body with his Sword, and then smote him therewith on the head the rest had every one a blow at him; so as he presently fell down wounded to death.

The Admirals wound to death.

Whilst this mischief was in acting, the Duke of Guise being below in the base Court, with other Romish Catholic Lords, cried to the Murderer above, Besine hast thou done? It is done, faith he. Then the Duke replied, Monsieur, our Knight (meaning King Henries Bassard) will not believe it unless he see it with his eyes; throw him down out of the Window.

Then Besine and Sarlabour, lifting up the Body of the Admiral, cast him down unto them, where he lay naked on the ground, exposed to all sort of scorn and mocks of the Multitude, some trampling on him with their feet. Now because the blow which Besine had given the Admiral on his head, had so covered his face with Blood issuing thence, that his visage could not be discerned, the Duke of Guise stooping down took his handkerchief, and wiping his face therewith said, It is he, I know him well enough; and giving this poor dead Body a spurn on the Head with his foot (whom all the Murderers in France feared whilst he lived) he passed thence, encouraging his Soldiers saying, We have made a good beginning; now let us go on to the rest, for the King hath so commanded, the King hath so commanded, repeating it over twice.

An Italian of the Duke of Nevers Guard cut off the Admirals Head, and brought it to the King and Queen Mother, which being embalmed was sent to Rome to the Pope, and to the Cardinal of Lorraine, being there at that time. The common people on the Monday following cut off their hands and privy Members, and then in this woful plight being dragged up and down three days in the Channels throughout the Streets, he was at the last carried out of the City to a Gibbet in Mount Faucon, where they hanged him by the feet; from whence some that were well disposed, going

The Admirals Head sent to Rome.

Anno 1572. going together in the night to this gibbet, took down the Body of the Admiral; the which they interred so secretly, that do the Papists what they could, they could never find it out, but it lay buried still, so as they were fain to make a Body of straw, and hung that up in stead of the Body it self, rather than none at all.

Here, as in fittest place is briefly related the Sentence which the Court of Parliament in Paris denounced against Gasper Coligni Admiral of France, after he was massacred as you have formerly heard, viz.

1. First, That for his conspiracy practised against the King and State in the year 1572. the said Court had condemned him of high Treason.

2. That his memory shall be utterly raised out.

3. If his Body or any figure thereof shall be taken, that the same shall be first drawn upon a burdle to the place called Le Grene, and there hanged upon a Gibbet by the Executioner.

4. After which, a Gibbet shall be set up at Mount-faucon, and be there to be hanged up in the most eminent place thereof.

5. His Arms and Armor to be drawn at an horse-tail through the Streets of the said City of Paris, and other Cities where they should be found, and there by the Minister of Justice to be broken and battered in pieces; in sign of his perpetual ignominy.

6. All his goods and possessions to be forfeited to the Kings use.

7. All his Children to be pronounced ignoble: as also held unworthy and incapable of any honor or dignities whatsoever.

8. His House and Castle of Chastillon upon the Loine, the Base Court and all appurtenances thereunto appertaining to be defaced and demolished to the ground.

9. Then in the said place this Sentence shall be set up engraven in Brass.

10. Lastly, that on the four and twentieth of August, 1572. general Processions be made through the City of Paris, by way of thanksgiving to God for this punishment inflicted upon the Conspirator.

Pronounced and Executed in Paris, the seven and twentieth, and nine and twentieth of October, Anno 1572.

Signed,

Malon.

Great joy at Rome for their successful events.

At Rome solemn Masses were sung, and thanks rendered to God for the good success which the Roman Catholics had obtained in massacring the Huguenots. At night, in token of joy and gladness, were made many great bonfires in sundry places. And as the report went, the Cardinal of Lorraine gave a thousand Crowns to him that brought this desired news unto him. Touching whose death I will here insert that which I had written of it.

A note touching the manner of the Cardinal of Lorraine's death.

The Cardinal of Lorraine, a principal pillar in the House of Guise, a crafty and cruel persecutor of the Reformed Churches, soon after the Reign of Henry the third, Brother of Charles the ninth, in the year 1574, died at Avignon frantique, at the hour of whole death there happened such a horrible Tempest in the Air, that all stood amazed at it. The people observing how it fell out in one of the chief Cities where Popery bare the sway, thought it the more remarkable; not sticking to say, that this vile worldling, who had enriched himself beyond measure by execrable practices, received now in the prime of his youth and in the top of his hopes, the just reward of all his wicked proceedings; it being not possible, that a Soul so replenished with iniquity could depart quietly.

But those of the Religion added. That in this his sudden departure shined the wonderful providence of God. in that one of the Popes great supporters, coming to Avignon with a purpose to arm the King of France and Polonia against the Christian Assemblies (out of a vain confidence thinking, that at his only word and threat the Prince would be persuaded to overthrow all) it should fall out so contrary to his expectation, that the Master-builder and upholder of violent and bloody Councils must now in the midst of his Triumphs come to so fearful and miserable an end: That he, who bent all his wits to cross the Counsel and Wisdom of God, should at an instant in this City be smitten with frensie. To give warning to all, that there is no Wisdom or Counsel against the Lord; who blotteth the ripest wits when they dare to oppose him therewith. But now to return again to the matter where we left.

The same day that the Admiral was hurt, the King advised the King of Navarre, his Brother in Law, to lodge in his Chamber, with ten or twelve of his truest Servants, to protect him from the designs of the Duke of Guise, whom he called an unhappy Boy.

The Admiral as it seemeth somewhat before his death made his will, in which he gave the King Counsel, that he should not give his Brethren over great portions. The Queen Mother hearing this, and reading the same to the Duke of Alencon the Kings Brother; Now you see, faith she, the heart of your friend the Admiral, whom you so much loved and respected.

The Duke answered, I know not how much he loved me, but I well perceive by this how much he loved the King.

The English Embassador made almost the like answer when the said Queen told him, How the Admiral had advised the King not to trust the English too far.

Indeed Madam, faith he, hereby it appeared that though he bare but little good will to the English, yet he manifested himself a loyal Servant to the Crown of France.

The Sieur de Brion, Governor of the little Marquisse of Conde, Son to the late Prince of Conde, hearing these stirrs, taking his little Master even in his shirt, thinking to convey him somewhere out of the way, met these Murthers, who plucking from him the said young Prince, massacred the old Man in his presence, whilst the Prince with tears intreated them to spare his Governour. But they dyed his white hairs in his own Blood, and then barbarously dragged him through the mire.

This Sunday morning all that were Popishly affected took liberty to kill and spoyl; it being credibly reported, That the number of the slain that day and two other days following, in the City of Paris, and in the Suburbs, did amount to above ten thousand, counting Lords, Gentlemen, Prefidents, Counsellors, Advocates, Lawyers, Scholars, Physicians, Merchants, Tradesmen, Women, Maids, and Children. The Streets were covered with dead Bodies, the River was dyed with Blood, the Gates and entrance into the Kings Palace painted with the same colour: but the blood-thirsty were not yet satisfied.

But going from House to House with their Associates where they thought to find any Huguenots, they brake open the doors, then cruelly murdered whomsoever they met, sparing neither Sex nor Age. Carts were laden with dead Bodies of young Maidens, Women, Men & Children, which were discharged into the River, covered in a manner all over with the slain, and dyed red with their Blood, which also streamed down the streets from sundry parts thereof, whereat the Courtezans laughed their fill, saying, That the Wars were now ended, and that hereafter they should live in peace, &c. But it would take up too much time to recite all the lamentable passages of this sad and rueful tragedy.

The Admiral a loving and loyal Servant to his Prince and Country

Brion Governor to the Prince of Conde Son massacred.

Ten thousand massacred within three days in the City of Paris, &c.

The report was this: Report was raised there that a Treason of the Huguenots was discovered, who had conspired to kill the King, his Mother, and his Brethren, having already killed fifteen of the guard.

This with some others which follow, belonging to this History, because they could not be omitted, are here under inserted.

TO begin then with Monsieur Pierre de la Place President of the Court of Requests, whose story we will relate some what at large, because his singular piety requires the same. On Sunday morning about six of the clock, one called Captain Michael, Harquebuser of the King, came into his lodgings, into which he had the more easie access for divers private respects.

This

This Captain being armed, having a Harquebuse on his shoulder, a Pistol at his Girdle, and his Hangerchief tied about his left Arm, presenting himself before the said De la Place, the first words he spake were, that the Duke of Guise had slain the Admiral by the Kings appointment, with many Huguenots besides: and because the rest of them of what quality soever were destinated to death, he was come to his lodging to exempt him from the common destruction: only he desired to have a fight of that Gold and Silver which was in the House. The Lord De la Place somewhat amazed at the audacious malapartness of the Man, who, in the midst of ten or twelve persons which were there present in the room, durst presume to utter such Language, askt him if he knew where he was, or whether he thought there was a King or no?

To this the Captain Blaspheming answered, that he willed him to go with him to know the Kings pleasure. The said Lord De la Place hearing this, fearing also some danger to be towards, by Sedition in the City, slipped forth at a back door behind his lodging, purposing to get into a Neighbours House. In the mean while mult of his Servants vanished out of sight, and this Captain having stored himself with a thousand Crowns, was intreated by the Lady Marets, Daughter to the said Lord, to convey her Father with the Lord Marets her Husband into the House of some Roman Catholick, which he consented to do, and also performed it.

After this, De la Place, being refused at three several Houses was constrained to retire back again into his own, where he found his Wife very penive and grieved beyond measure, fearing lest this Captain in the end would call her Son in Law and Daughter into the River, as also for the eminent danger wherein her dear husband and all his family were.

But the said Lord De la Place, being strengthened by the Spirit of God with incredible constancy in the inner Man, sharply rebuked her; and afterwards mildly demonstrated unto her, that we must receive these and the like afflictions from the hand of God; and so having discoursed a while upon the promises of God comforted her.

Then he commanded such Servants and Maids as remained in the House to be called together, who being come into his Chamber, according to his custome on the Lords days, he made a form of exhortation to his Family: then went to prayer, and began to read a Chapter out of the Book of Job, with the exposition or Sermon of Master John Calvin upon it. So having spoken somewhat of Gods mercy and justice, which as a good and wise Father useth to exercise his elect with sundry Chastisements, lest they should be intangled here below with the things of this World, he shewed how needful afflictions were for Christians, and that it was beyond the power of Satan or Men to hurt or wrong them, unless the Lord of his good pleasure gave them leave. What need have we then, said he, to dread their Authority, which at the most can but prevail over our Bodies? Then he went to prayer again, preparing himself and his whole Family rather to endure all sorts of Torments, yea death it self, than to speak or do ought that might tend to the dishonour of God.

Having finished his Prayer, word was brought him, that Seneca the Provost Marshal with many Archers were at the door of his Lodging, commanding the same to be opened in the Kings Name, saying that he came to rescue the person of the Lord De la Place, and to preserve his House from being pillaged by the common sort. The Lord De la Place having intelligence of this speech commanded the door to be opened to him, who entering in declared the great slaughter that was made upon the Huguenots every where in the City by the Kings command; adding this withal in Latin, that he would not suffer one to live, Qui mingat ad Parietem. Yet have I express charge from his Majesty, saith he, to see that you shall sustain no wrong, but only conduct you to the Louvre, because the King is desirous to be informed touching many things about the affairs of those of the Religion, which he hath now in hand, and therefore willed him to make himself ready to go to his Majesty. The Lord De la Place answered, that he always thought himself happy before he left this Life, to gain any opportunity by which he might render an account to his Majesty of his behaviour and actions.

But in regard such horrible Massacres were every where committed, it was impossible for him to pass to the Louvre, without the certain danger of his person; praying him to assure his Majesty of his willingness to come, the whilst leaving in his Lodging as many Archers as he thought fitting, until the fury of the people was somewhat pacified. The Provost agreed to his request, and left with him one of his Lieutenants called Toute Voie, with some four of his Archers.

Not long after comes into his Lodging President Charon, then Provost of the Merchants, with whom conferring a little in secret, going his way he left with the four Archers which were there before, four more of the City Archers. The whole night following was spent in stopping up and fortifying of all passages from entering the House, with logs and provision of Flint-stones, damming up the windows, so as it seemed by this so exact and diligent a defence, the Archers were left in the House, to free the said De la Place and all his Family from the common calamity, till Seneca, returning the next day after two of the Clock in the afternoon, declared that he had express charge from the King to bring him to his Majesty without delay. He replied as before, that it was dangerous as yet to pass through the City, in regard that even the same morning there was an House pillaged next to his.

Seneca on the contrary insisted, saying, it was the common speech of these Huguenots to protest that they were the Kings most loyal and obedient Subjects and Servants; but when they were to manifest their obedience to his commands, then they came off but slowly, seeming rather much to abhor and detest it. And whereas he pretended danger, Seneca answered, that he should have a Captain of Paris who was well known to the people, to accompany him. As Seneca continued this speech, the Captain of Paris surnamed Paxon, a principal actor in this Sedition, entered the Chamber of the said Lord of Place, offering his Service to conduct him through the City to the King; which De la Place would by no means yield unto, telling Seneca, that he was one of the most cruel and bloody minded Men that was in all the City; and therefore seeing he must needs go to the King, he intreated that the said Seneca would be his guard. To whom Seneca answered, that having now other affairs to look unto, he could not conduct him above fifty paces.

Then his Wife (though otherwise a very gracious and good Lady) out of that entire love which the bare to her Husband, prostrated her self at the feet of the said Seneca, beseeching and intreating him to accompany her Husband to the King. But the said De la Place, who never shewed any sign of a dejected Spirit, came to his Wife, took her up from the ground, rebuked her, and told her, that it is not the Arm of Flesh that we must stoop unto, but unto God only. Then turning himself about, he perceived in his Sons Hat a white Cross, which through infirmity he had placed there, thinking thereby to save himself, for which his Father sharply chid him, commanding him to pluck that mark of Sedition thence; telling him that we must now submit our selves to bear the true Cross of Christ, namely, those afflictions and tribulations which it shall please our good God to lay upon us, as sure pledges of that eternal happiness, which he hath treasured up for all his elect Servants. Thus seeing himself pressed by the said Seneca, to go with him to the King, resolving upon death, which he saw he could not avoid, he took his Cloak, embracing his Wife, earnestly wishing her above all things to have the fear of God and his honour in precious esteem, and then went on his way boldly. Coming into the Street where the glass-house is, over against Cocks-freet, certain Murderers who attended there for his coming, with their daggers in a readiness, killed him, about three of the Clock in the afternoon, as an innocent lamb in the midst of ten or twelve of Senecas Archers, who led him into that butchery: and then pillaged and embezzled away what they found in his Lodging for the space of five or six days together. His Body (whose Soul was now received into Heaven) being carried into a Stable, and covering his face over with dung, the next day they threw him into the River.

Peter Ramus the Kings professor in Logick, a Man renowned among the learned, was not forgotten. He had many enemies, among other one called James Carpenter, who

But being discovered, he offered a good Sum of Money to save his life; yet was he massacred, and cast down out of an high Chamber window to the ground, so as his Bowels issuing out of the Stones, were afterwards trailed through the Streets; the Carcass was whipped by certain Scholars; being set on by their Tutors, to the great disgrace of good Letters which Ramus professed.

I do here, faith the Historian, forbear to write what cruelties were exercised in this foresaid City of Paris, on Sunday, Munday, Tuesday, and the days following; because in such confusions, those that survived had little leisure to think upon the Murthers committed in their presence, to observe every particular; I content my self therefore to say in a word, that no Man living in Paris taking notice what was done there this Saint Bartholomew's day, &c. but will aver that there was never seen, heard nor read of such perfidious disloyalties, strange ravishments, more than brutish cruelties, audacious robberies, execrable blasphemies, as those that were committed in these few days; wherein it was safe for one to be any thing, rather than an honest Man.

Of a young Man who preferred his Mothers safety in these broyle before his own.

A Young Man about the Age of two and thirty years, a sincere Christian, and excellently well learned above many of his Age and time, going early abroad this Sunday morning upon some special occasion, returning home, and perceiving what a strange rumour there was concerning the death of the Admiral throughout the City of Paris, he out of his singular and Child-like affection to his Mother, hastened to her with all possible speed, informing her what had happened and so wrought for her, without delay and not regarding his own safety, that he secured her in a place, as you would say, fitted for the purpose. After which himself being found alone shut up in his study at prayer, to which exercise he had long before devoted himself. The furious Massacres on that part of the City asked him if he would obey the King, he answered, yes, but I must also obey God.

Then they began presently with battle axes and staves to load him with blows on the head, that he received his own Blood into his hands; and then making an end of him, they threw him into the River.

Two Ministers massacred.

Two Ministers appertaining to the King of Navarre, the one called More, the other Desgoris, fell also into the hand of these Murderers, who killing them, cast them into the Water. I cannot learn, faith the Historiographer, by report, that any more Ministers were slain at this time, than these two. At the writing herof many were living, who laboured in the work of the Lord, in the Church of Paris, as were also miraculously preserved.

An inhumane Cruelty.

Philip le Doux a greater Jeweller, at his return home from Guibray Fair, being gone to bed, his Wife at that time had the Midwife attending upon her, being ready to be delivered: she hearing these furies below bounding at the door, commanding it to be opened to them in the Kings name, as ill as she was, adventured to go down, and opened the same to these Tygers, who presently stabbed her Husband in his Bed. The Midwife seeing them bent to Murder the Woman also, now ready to lie down, instantly intreated them to tarry, at least so long till the Infant (which would be the 20. Child that God had given her) was born. Having contested some while with them, they took this poor Woman half dead with fear, and thrust her into the fundament with a dagger to the very hilts. She finding her self mortally wounded, and yet desirous to bring forth her fruit, fled into a corn-loft; whither they pursued her, giving her another stab into the Belly with a Dagger, and then cast her out of a Window next to the Street: upon which fall the Child came forth of her Body, the Head foremost, gaping or yawning, to the great astonishment and confusion of the Papists, who were constrained often with detestation to acknowledge and confess the cruelties of their Butchers.

Behold here another.

ONE of the Massacres having snatched up a little Child in his Arms, the poor Babe began to play with his Beard; and to smile upon him; but in stead of being moved to compassion therewith, this barbarous wretch wounded it with his dagger, and so cast it all on a gore-blood into the River, so as it was a good while ere it could recover the own colour again.

To proceed on further and fully to relate all the Tragical acts committed in this Massacre at Paris, to set down the thundrings of Guns and Pistols, the lamentable voices and outcries of the slain, the roarings and horrible blasphemies belched forth by these Massacres and Devils incarnate; were enough to cause the Paper whereon they should be described either to bluish, or weep.

Not to stay the Reader therefore any longer in this; having many things of the like nature to present unto thy view, we will pass from the dolorous City of Paris to other Cities in France, and set before thee as in a glass a company of horrible and rueful spectacles.

Massacres committed upon those of the Religion, at Meaux in Brie.

Let us begin then with those of Meaux in Brie, which is not above a days journey from Paris.

The poor Protestants in this City were destinated to drink off this Cup of Martyrdom after their Brethren and Sisters in the foresaid City of Paris. Therefore on the same Sunday the four and twentieth of August, about four of the Clock in the Afternoon, a Post was sent to Meaux with Letters, accompanied with a Seditious fellow called Le Froid. Being come thither, the Packet was presented to Monsieur Levis Coffer, the Kings Attourney there. Upon the receipt whereof, this Attourney halted hither and thither in his own person to adventure such cut-throats (as had had their hands in pillaging and robbing those of the Religion in the first, second, and third troubles) with commands, that they should be ready to come forth of their Houses Armed, at the stroke of seven of the clock, and then cause the Gates instantly to be shut.

The time prefixed being come, which was about Supper time, the gates were shut, and then they began to execute their cruelties in sundry parts of the City. Thus was that night passed, not without uprores and strange events.

On the next day, which was Monday; about three of the Clock in the morning, these good Catholics began to pillage the Houses of the Protestants, of the best things they had, which continued till eight of the Clock, their trading liked them so well. But the principal of all the spoils were conveyed into the Court and House of this Noble Attourney Coffer; yet these were only the beginnings of sorrows.

For after robbing and spoiling they fell to shut them up in Prisons: which being filled, the Massacres having Coffer for their Captain (who usually carried in each hand a Pistol ready to discharge) went into the said Prison on Tuesday the six and twentieth of August, about five or six of the Clock at night, with Swords, Daggers, and Butchers knives.

Nigh to this Prison there was a great Court enclosed on every side with walls and a very strong Gate. In a corner whereof is a large pair of winding Stairs; containing five and twenty, or thirty steps, by which they go up to the Judgment-Hall to the Seat of Justice. Into this Court were the Murderers assembled; which done, Coffer went up into his Seat. Then they had a scroul or bill containing the Names of the Prisoners there imprisoned; who were called over one by one to the number of two hundred and upwards, as some of the Murderers themselves have since reported, when as they impudently made their brags of these their horrible impieties and injustices.

What from here would not have been moved to compassion herewith

There was and drawn where the in officers should begin, conduct, and. This case was then branded for notorious villanies, and a mis-happen fell low.

Then the Attourney laughing began to call for the first Man, named in the Bill; who being brought forth, and seeing naked Swords before him, falling down and craving forgiveness of his Sins at the hands of God, was suddenly butchered by five or six.

One Quintin Crojer, an Elder of the Reformed Church, being called forth, and seeing many of his Companions massacred before his eyes, kneeled down, praying God to pardon these murderers; at which prayer they fell a laughing, and not being able with their Daggers to pierce a Jerkin of double Buff which he wore, and which they were loth to spoil, (for it was a good booty) they cut asunder the points, and then gave him five, or six stabs with a Dagger into his Body; and so this good Man wounded to death, calling upon God, rendered up his Spirit into the hands of him that gave it.

Faren Haren, a man zealously affected to Religion, who had been Sheriff of the City in the first troubles, having by his endeavours chased the Mass out of Meaux, for a time was mortally hated of these Seditious Papists; and therefore they were not contented simply to kill him, but first cut off his Nose, Ears, and secret parts, then giving him many small thrusts into divers parts of the Body, they constrained him to and fro among them, as if he had gone thorow the pikes. But being weakened, and not able any longer to hold out, in regard of the Blood that issued from all the parts of his Body, he fell with his face to the ground, and instantly calling upon the name of the Lord, received infinite gashes and wounds after he was dead.

By this time it grew late; therefore these Bloodsuckers, having almost wearied themselves in worrying these poor lambs and sheep of Christ, deferred the execution of the rest till after supper, as well to take some breathing and refrection, as also to murder the residue with the greater alacrity. For in as much as the Blood of the slain shined yet upon the Swords and Arms of the murderers (their sleeves being tucked up) which something hindered their proceeding; after they had drunk wine their fill, they meant to return and make themselves drunk with Blood also; which that they might the more freely they took with them Butchers great Axes wherewith they smite down their Oxen, and in the presence of this honest Attourney felled these poor Prisoners one after another; who called upon God, and crying so loud for mercy, that all the City in a manner rung thereof. This Massacre lasted from nine of the Clock at night till it was midnight. And for as much as there yet remained many Prisoners alive, they deferred this their Bloody business till the next day.

But this may suffice to have been said as touching this massacre at Meaux in Brie; pass we on now to the City of Troyes in Champaign, and there take notice, as it were by the way, what cruelties were executed in that place.

Persecution of the Faithful at Troyes in Champaign.

News coming to Troyes of the Massacre executed at Paris, the greater part of the Judges and Officers of the King were sent to the Bailiff of Troyes, with commandment diligently to make search for all those of the Religion, from House to House, and to imprison as many as they could meet withal.

In this City there was a Merchant called Peter Belin, a Man of a turbulent nature. This Belin was at the Massacre in Paris on S. Bartholomew's day; from whence he was sent with Letters from the King dated the eight and twentieth of August, to the Major and Sheriffs of Troyes, to cause all these persecutions to cease, and the Prisoners to be set at liberty. On the third of September he came to Troyes with these two Letters (which had been first published in Paris) with commandment to deliver them to the foresaid Magistrates to be proclaimed there also.

But at the first entrance into the City, he began to enquire, that all might hear him, whether they had not executed the Huguenots there as they had done in Paris; which was his language thorow the Streets till he came home. But even some of the Papists, who were not so cruelly minded, demanded of Belin the contents of the Kings Letters, wherof they had some inkling before.

But he, like a Bedlam swelling with choler, swore that whosoever said they contained any thing tending to pacification, lyed. Halting therefore to the Bailiffs House at Troyes, after he had delivered him the packet, and buzzed somewhat in his ear, he put him on to see this execution done. Now that the same might pass the better for current, the help of the Executioner of Troyes was requested; whose Name was Charles.

Yet he shewing himself more just and humane than the rest, peremptorily refused to have his hand in an act tending to so great cruelty; answering, that it was contrary to his Office to execute any Man before Sentence of death had first been pronounced by the Magistrates. If they had such Sentence to shew against any of the Prisoners, he was ready to do justice; otherwise he would not presume, without a warrant, to bereave any Man of his life: and so with these words he returned home to his House.

Now albeit this answer, proceeding from such a kind of Person whose Office and custom it was to shed Blood, might somewhat have allayed and taken off the edge of the most barbarous Tyger in the World; yet the Bailiff sleighting it, was the further enraged. Upon this he sent for one of the Jaylors of the Prison who kept those of the Religion; but he being sick of a Certain Ague, Martin de Bures was sent to know his pleasure.

The Bailiff telling him at large what Belin had signified to him in private; as also, that on a sudden all the Prisoners of the Religion must be put to death, that so the place might be purged of them: This (he said) you must not fail to do. But (said the Bailiff) that the Blood may not run into the Streets, you shall cause a trench to be digged in the midst of the Prison, and at the two ends thereof set certain vessels to receive the same.

But this de Bures for some considerations, as namely thinking the Kings Letters (wherof he had had some intelligence) might be proclaimed, made no halt to perform his charge, acquainting no Man with ought that had passed between the Bailiff and him; nor not Perennet the Keeper, who then lay sick in his Bed.

The next day, being Tuesday, which was the fourth of September, the Bailiff came into the Prison about seven or eight of the Clock, and calling for Perennet asked of him with a smile, Perennet, is it done? Perennet, knowing nothing more or less, asked of him what? Then saith the Bailiff, Why, are not the Prisoners dispatched? and thereupon was ready with his Dagger to have stabbed him. But coming a little better to himself, he told Perennet what his purpose was, and how he was to behave himself concerning the execution thereof; willing him by all means not to forget to make the said Trench. At which words this Perennet standing amazed, though otherwise he was a fellow forward enough of himself to commit any Outrages against the Protestants, certified the Bailiff, that such an inhumane act could not be committed over to him, fearing least in time to come Justice might be followed against him by the Parents or Allies of the Prisoners. No no, said the Bailiff, fear not, I will stand between you and all harms. Others of the Justices have consented thereto besides my self, and would you have better security than that?

Within a while after, the Jaylor coming into the Court of the Prison, where the prisoners were abroad recreating themselves, caused every one to resort to his Cabin or Hole, because, said he, the Bailiff will come by and by, to see whether the Keepers have done as he commanded them: which they did. Then began these poor sheep to fear they were destined to the slaughter, and therefore went presently to prayer. Perennet instantly called his Companions about him, reporting to them what the Bailiff had given him in charge. Then they all took an Oath to execute the same; but approaching nigh to the Prisoners, they were so surprised with fear, and their hearts so failed them, that they stood gazing one upon another, having no courage to act such a barbarous cruelty, and so returned to the Jaylors lodge, whence they came, without doing any thing.

But in stead of laying this to heart, as an advertisement and warning-piece sent them from above; as if of set purpose they meant to resist against the checks of their own Consciences, and so kick against the pricks, they sent to the Tavern for sixteen Pints of the best Wine,

Troyes

Anno 1569.

Troys measure, with Sheeps Tongues and other viands, and intoxicating their Brains with Wine, they drew a list or Catalogue of all the Prisoners, which they delivered to Nicholas Martin, one of their Confederates, who was to call them forth as he saw their names set down in the scroul, and thus as they came forth they Massacred them.

Ladot one of the Prisoners, being called forth as his turn came, presented himself before them with a cheerful countenance, calling upon the Name of the Lord. Now as he was to receive the stroke of death from these desperate blood-spillers, he prayed them to forbear a little, till he had put off his doublet, being oiled, which he was wont to put on when any Tumult grew in the City; and having himself unlaced it, presenting his naked breast unto them, he received the blow, and fell down dead.

But poor Meurs escaped not so good cheap; for his turn being come, he was no sooner in their light, but one of them let drive at him with the point of his Halbert, redoubling the same oft to have killed him, yet could not. The poor Man seeing himself thus dealt withal by the Caitiff, and no end made, took hold with his hands on the point of the halbert, and himself pointing him to the Seat of the Heart, cried to the Murderer with steeled voice, Here, Souldier, here, right at the heart, right at the heart, and so finished this life.

Howsoever in this Massacre these two formerly mentioned are for brevities sake only named, yet by that which immediately follows you may perceive they were not a few who suffered in this tragedy.

The Massacre (saith my Author) being ended the Murderers made a great pit on the back side of the Chappel of the Priory, whereto they cast the Bodies one upon another, some of them yet breathing. So as one called Mausere lying in the midst of them, was espied to raise up himself above his fellow Martyrs in this pit, upon whom they forthwith throwing Earth (as was reported) stifled him, being but half dead. But because the order which the Bailiff set down was not observed, namely the making of a Trench in the Prison to receive the Blood which was shed, it ran in such abundance out at the Prison door, and thence through a Channel into a River nigh thereto, that it was turned into the colour of Blood. Which some of the Papists themselves taking notice of, being ignorant of the fact, were so terrified therewith, that they ran along the Street, crying and pointing at every one they met withal to behold this so horrible and lamentable spectacle. Whereupon many hasting to the Prison by this occasion, could conjecture no other but that the Prisoners had slain one another.

This was presently noised through the City, insomuch as some went to inform the Lieutenant and Bailiff thereof. But what? it was as if they had run to the Wolves to tell them the Sheep were devoured.

Whilst this so savage a cruelty was committed in the Prison, one Bartholomew Carlet a Cooper, Prisoner there for debt (who of all the Troop of the Murderers in Troys was one of the principal) having in the former troubles exercised most notorious cruelties against those of the Religion, was called in by these Massacres to be one of their Associates; who executed his part in so bloody a manner, that (as himself afterwards often acknowledged) he with his own hands laughtered thirty of these poor Innocents: So far was he grown past shame or common honesty. But this his fact was so pleasing to certain of the Popish Religion at Troys, that for a recompence thereof they paid his debt, and set him free out of Prison; which was done (as the report went) by making a Collection for him in certain Parishes.

The next day after, which was the fifth of September, this Worshipful Bailiff of Troys, that he might apply the plaister when the parties were dead, causes the Kings Letters, which he had received the thirtieth of the Month of August before going, to be published in all the corners of the City with sound of Trumpet. The Bailiff (as we have been credibly informed) was present in person at the publication, and as the Notary read the contents thereof to him, he pronounced the same jeringly and not with a full and Audible Voice, as matters of such Consequence ought to be read.

Of the Massacre at Orleance.

It now remains that we proceed unto the City of Orleance, and to take notice whether the Papists there were less cruel than those of Paris. But, saith the Historian, when I call to mind what hath been the report of those that were present at that time in Orleance, it causeth the Hair to stand upright on my Head: Yet for as much as it is convenient that posterities to come may be acquainted with the fury of these monsters in nature, we will commit that to writing whereof we have credibly been informed.

On Saturday, the three and twentieth of August, Letters were sent from the King to Orleance, unto Sieur de la Renie President of Dion, to prevent all disorders, murders &c. With command, that he should advertise the Citizens, how the Admiral was hurt, as also to assure those of the Religion, that ere long such Justice should be executed on the Actors, as all France should take warning thereby not to enterprize the like.

This was carefully performed by the said Sieur de la Renie the same day; who caused those of the best rank of both Religions to be present at the publishing of the Kings mind. The Faithful thinking themselves secure, were quiet, and on the Sabbath day assembled in the place appointed for their meeting, to the number of 300. Persons, Men, Women, and Children.

But on the same day towards night came a new Order to the Justice, Major, and Sheriffs of the said City, by which they were enjoined to be up in Arms, and to gather to them what strength they could; with express charge to make havock of those of the Religion. To this purpose the Captains of twelve Companies were appointed to be the leaders to the rest, divided into eight and forty Squadrons.

The cruel Massacre of Dechampeaux a worthy Counsellor in the City of Orleance, by a wretched Villain his Neighbour.

One of these blood-suckers called Texier came with a small Troop to a Counsellors House of Orleance, whose Name was Dechampeaux Lord of Bonill, bidding himself and his company to Supper with him. Dechampeaux bid them all kindly welcome, making them good cheer, being ignorant of that which had happened at Paris. But Supper being ended, and all of them being risen from the Table, Texier bad him deliver his purse. Dechampeaux laughing thereat, thinking that he had been but in jest, this cruel and unthankful guest with Blasphemous Oaths told him in few words what had happened in the City of Paris, and what preparation there was among the Roman Catholics of Orleance, to cut off and root out the Protestants there. Dechampeaux seeing there was no time now to contest with him, gave money to this thief: who, to requite the courtesie and good entertainment he had had, embred his hands in the Blood of his host and neighbour, a Man of as good and upright a carriage as was in all the City, and afterwards himself with his Troop pillaged the whole House.

The fix and twentieth day of August following the Massacres began the Execution about the Ramparts, after such a strange manner; as he that had but a spark of humanity left in him, out of compulsion would be moved to abhor and detest it. In these quarters there inhabited many of the Religion. All the night long was heard nothing but shooting off of Guns and Pistols, forcing open of Doors and Windows, fearful outcries of the Massacred, both of Men, Women, and little Children, trampling of Horses, and rumbling of carts, hurrying of Dead Bodies to and fro the Street swarming with unwonted exclamations of those of the common sort, which horrible Blasphemous exploits, Some crying kill them all; and then take the spoil; others, spoil not, but kill all.

On Wednesday the Massacre began more fiercely, and so continued to the end of the week, not sparing to break these and the like jests upon the poor Massacred: Where canst thou now find your God? What is become of all your Prayers, and Psalms now? Let your God, whom you called upon, save

A cruel and unthankful guest.

So all miseries go to rack.

These were miserable canst thou now find your God?

save

Save you if he can. Yea some of them, who in times past had been professors of the same Religion, whilst they were massacring the poor Innocents, durst sing unto them in scorn the beginning of the three and fortieth Psalm: Which in the French meter runs, Revenge may pren le quarrelle de moy, Judge me O God, and plead my cause. Others striking them said, sing now, Misericorde auppas-eux, Have mercy on me O God, which Language they used to this poor people in Paris and elsewhere. But these execrable outrages no way daunted the courage of the Faithful from dying steadfast in the Faith.

Touching the multitude of the slain, the Murderers did not flick to vaunt that in this City they caused more than twelve thousand Men to perish: Also an hundred and fifty Women, with a great number of Children of nine years old and upward. But as some of themselves have since reported, there were eighteen thousand murdered, besides Women and Children. The manner of their death was, first to shoot them with Pistols, then to strip them of their Clothes, and either drowning or else burying the dead Bodies in pits, namely such as dwelt about the Walls. They were armed also with knives and poyards: in like manner manner with Javelins and Partizans, wherewith they Murthered these poor, meek, and harmless Creatures.

On Tuesday at night certain of this bloody Crue came and knocked at the door of one that was a Doctor of the Civil Law, called Taillebourg; who opening a Casket, and understanding that they had somewhat to say to him, came down immediately, and opened the same unto them. At the first greeting they told him he must dye. Whereupon he fell to prayer, and that with such constancy and affection, that the Massacrers being astonished, and by a secret celestial power restrained, contented themselves only with taking his purse, in which there were fifteen Crowns, and so left him, offering him no more violence.

The day following certain Scholars resorting to his lodging, requested of him that they might see his Library, into which having brought them, one asked this Book of him, and another another, the which he willingly gave them. At length they told him they were not as yet satisfied, their purpose being to kill him. He prostrating himself upon the ground, and having ended his prayer, willed them to kill him there. But they forced him out of his own House, whence he went on with an undaunted courage, till in the way he lighted on the Body of a certain Shoemaker, newly wounded, lying gasping for breath. At which sight starting back as one somewhat appaled, he prayed them to kill him there; yet they would not, but constrained him to pass on forward. Being come to the Schools of the Civil Law, at least, said he, let me dye before this place, where I have taught so long; But they furiously repelling him, more than before, made him go further with them, where at length they knocked him down.

A rich Burgess of the City called Nicholas Bougars Steur de Noüe, a Man of singular worth, and highly esteemed of all, was at that time deadly sick. Some of the Murderers came into his Chamber with a purpose to kill him; but seeing him in that case spared him: yet finding there Noel Chaperon, an Apothecary who brought him Physick, they cut off one of his Arms, then drew him into the open Market-place, where they made an end of him.

The next day there came one to the lodging of him that was sick, who was wont heretofore to visit him. Now as he was entering in, he met the Mother of the sick party at the door going unto Mass, and coming up into the Chamber he stabbed the said sick Man with a Dagger in many places, and so killed a dying Man. Then with all silence, as if he had done no such act, wiping his Dagger, he went down the stairs again, and meeting one at the door who came to visit him that was sick, this fellow saluting him passed along by him, without any change either in his behaviour or countenance.

A Cook, having hid himself three whole days, was enforced for hunger to come forth, for lack of meat. But whilst he went about to escape one death, he fell into the talons of these Lions, who devoured him, and that forthwith.

Francis Stample a rich Merchant was threatened to have his throat cut presently, if he gave not the Murderers money: but having none about him, being taken by them out of his House, calling for pen and ink he wrote a Letter to his Wife, willing her forthwith to send him his ransom: he had no sooner sealed the Letter, but the Murderers deprived him thereof and his life together, laughing at that they had done. And though they got from his Widow a round sum of Money, yet could they not obtain at their hands the Body of her dead Husband.

But to fill up the measure of the popelings cruelty, that those of the Religion might taste thereof to the utmost, the Papists were not content to be Massacrers themselves, but constrained such of the Protestants as through fear had revolted, to play the Murderers also. Thus placing these wicked revolvers into the forefront of their companies, and arming them with Weapons fit for the purpose, they pressed them to march on before, and to give the first onset, crying to them, Smite them, smite them; are they not of your Brethren and holy Sisters? And if they refused to do as they were commanded, their turns were like to be next.

The Massacres committed at Bourges and la Chanite, are the rather passed over in silence, because the History requires at this time to touch only upon such things as are most remarkable, and shall after follow.

Yet one thing ought not to be forgotten which fell out in the City last mentioned. There was one John Sarrazin of the Age of seventy years and above, who for a long time had exercised the office of a Deacon in the Reformed Church; the which he so faithfully performed, that he was esteemed a Father of the poor. This good old Father was set upon on Tuesday night in his own House the fourth of September, 1572. and laid at with swords by these furious Murderers: who with a venerable and smiling countenance looking upon them, said, my friends, what will ye do with me have I ever offended any of you? And if I have let him speak. But nothing could any while prevail with these savage monsters to mollify their stony Hearts. For with a more than brutish rage they fell upon this gray Head and poor withered Carcass, who to fence of the blows crept under his bed, where one of these rakhels, his next neighbour and Godson, gave him such a thrust in with his Sword into the Belly, that his Bowels issued out.

The poor Man seeing himself thus wounded, and perceiving who had done it, said, Ah Godson, do you use me thus? I never hurt you, but have done you good. He languished of this hurt two days and two nights: during which time, as we have learned from his Wife, who gave her attendance on him all the while, he ceased not with great zeal to call upon God, thinking himself happy to have suffered that outrage for his name, and so not long after yielded up his Spirit into the hands of God that gave it.

The Horrible Massacre of the Faithful at Lyons in France.

ON Wednesday the seven and twentieth of August in the year 1572. about six of the Clock in the morning, Steur Mandoles Governor of Lyons was advertised of the Massacre at Paris; and within an hour and half after, a Souldier passing through the Streets made it known to the people, that the Admiral, and all the Protestant Princes were slain. By and by the gates of the City were shut, and guards of Souldiers placed here and there.

But lest those of the Religion should be moved with such an unwonted and an unexpected shutting in of the Gates (as in the time of open War) the Roman Catholicicks caused it to be bruited that all was done to secure the Protestants. To which report some gave too much credit; for besides the ordinary guard of the Governor, and that of the Cinadel, with the three hundred Harquebusers of the City, which amounted to about a thousand, there were gathered to them many besides of the City with Arms likewise; with command that if they desired any troop of those of the Religion coming abroad, though but with their Swords girt unto them, forthwith to cut them off with the rest also. But they, having endured themselves to an incredible modesty and patience, gave them not the least appearance of defending themselves, seeing a tempest now nigh

The day following, notwithstanding all these fair shews, they evidently perceived that their lives were at the mercy of the Papists, who had sucked the blood of many of them in the first troubles. For albeit they found no more passage for them out of the City than they did the day precedent, they might not now either freely go out or come in upon their necessary occasions: if they presented themselves in the Streets, they were clapt up in Prison; for which cause they were faine to keep their Houses. Night being come, they made a privy search in their dwelling Houses; some they rifled, others were ransomed, and the rest imprisoned. Many of them never coming thither, were either killed in the corners of the Streets with Daggers, or else cast into the River; whereof some (who were living when this History was in writing) were saved by swimming, being carried down with the Current of the Stream, half a mile beneath the City.

On Friday after there was a Proclamation with sound of Trumpets in all the chief places of the City, the sum of which was this, that those of the Religion were to appear before the Governour at his House, there to be informed what the Kings pleasure was concerning them. The greater part, being too credulous, feared not to make their appearance at the place assigned, whence soon after they were committed to sundry Prisons. The night following there were heard from all parts of the City lamentable cries and shriekings, not only of such as were massacred in their Houses, but of others half wounded to death, whom they haied to the River.

From that time forwards there were such Murthers and Outrages committed, throughout the City, that it seemed Hell was set open, and that Devils in the likeness of men coming from thence, ran roaring to and fro in the Streets.

On Sunday, which was the last of this Month of August, about eight of the Clock in the morning, the rest, who were left unmolested the Friday before, were made an end of then.

About one of the Clock the same day, commandment was given, that under every Ancient twenty five armed men, with twelve Porters, should be gathered to conduct them to S. Georges Gate, which is by the Archbishops House, in which were more then three hundred and fifty Prisoners; in which place the great Massacre was to be executed. The Keys of the Archbishops House, wherein so many Prisoners were inclosed, were delivered unto this bloody Crue; who joyfully offered themselves to perform so horrible a business; the which the ordinary Executioner refused, and common Souldiers abhorred to undertake, when the same was first propounded unto them; they answering peremptorily they would never do it.

The first alledged, That if according to the course of Justice Sentence of death had been denounced against them, he knew what he had to do; but for this their purpose, he told them, he thought they might have but too many Executioners in the City to satisfy their desire. The Souldiers answered, They thought it more then inhuman, to cut the throats of such as never offended them. But if the Prisoners had made any insurrection or Sedition in the City, they then might have some colour of reason to do it; otherwise they meant not to stain the honour of their Profession (which is accompanied with nobleness of spirit) with so villainous an act, more befitting Butchers then Souldiers.

But Mandelot and his Accomplises were not so scrupulous; for within three hours after, Clow Captain of the Harquebussiers of the City, came with an enraged Troop, &c. the greater part whereof were furnished with short Swords and Hangers.

As soon as Le Clow entred into the great Court, he gave the Prisoners to understand with a loud voice, That they must dye; and turning him towards his Slaughter-men, he said, On, on, go in, and to your work; but first he forgot not to demand the Prisoners Purfes for his Booty, which when he pocketted up, he gat him into a Gallery, there to satiate his hellish lust in taking a view of this cruel spectacle.

The Murthers began to fall upon the poor Prisoners with such barbarous cruelty, hacking and hewing them in so furious a manner, that within less than an hour they were all cut in pieces, not so much as one escaped their hands. All these for the most part were massacred kneeling on their knees, and lifting up their eyes and hands to God for mercy, whilst they had their hands and fingers cut off.

The death and martyrdom of Francis le Bossu, a Merchant, together with his Sons.

AMong all those that confessed the Name of Jesus Christ, and gave their lives for his Truth, a certain Merchant of Hats and Caps, called Francis le Bossu, well deserves to be set in the fore rank, with his two Sons; for whilst he trampled in the Blood of his Brethren, being besmeared therewith, and spitting as it were in his face, he encouraged his Children to take their death willingly & patiently using this speech, Children, we are not to learn now that it hath always been the portion of Believers, to be hated, cruelly used, and devoured by Unbelievers; as Christs silly Sheep of ravening Wolves: if we suffer with Christ, we shall also reign with him. Let not these drawn Swords terrifie us, they will be but as a Bridge whereby we shall pass over out of a miserable life, into immortal blessedness. We have breathed and lived long enough among the wicked, let us now go, and live with our God; let us joyfully march after this great Company which is here gone before us, and let us make way for them that shall follow after.

When he saw the Murthers come, he clasped his arms about his two Sons, and they likewise embraced their Father; as if the Father meant to be a Buckler to his Children, and the Children as if by the Bond of Nature (which binds them to defend his life from whence they received it) they meant to ward off the blows which were coming towards their Father, though with the loss of their own lives; who when the Massacre was ended, were all three found dead, thus embracing one another.

Now after this furious assault, these impudent Creatures went up and down the City, shewing their white Doubts all besprinkled with Blood; boasting, that some had killed an hundred, some more, some less. Forthwith the great Gates of the Archbishops House were set wide open for all comers; of whom surely there was none (were they of the devoutest Romanists) but must needs have their hearts wounded and pierced within them, to see so hideous a slaughter. And indeed some of them were heard to say, when they beheld this so inhuman and cruel an act, That certainly they were not men, but devils in the habit of men, that had done this.

The next morning, which was Munday, the first of September, the remainder of Corpses, which were cast into the water, were put into great Boats, which being rowed over to the other side of the River of Saon, were all cast on shore there; the Corpses being also spread upon the ground nigh to the Abbey of Esnay, like dung upon the Earth. The Monks would at no hand yield to have them buried in their Church-yard, esteeming them unworthy of burial; fearing also, that so many put together would be a means to infect the Air, and therefore gave them a sign to have them thrown into the River.

Now as the Multitude were dragging them in thither, an Apothecary came and informed them; that money might be made of the Grease that was taken out of their bodies. Then were the most corpulent Bodies presently sought ought, which when they had ripped up, a great quantity of that Commodity being gotten thence, was sold by these Merchants for three shillings the pound. And then not knowing how to wreck their malice any further upon them, after many derisions and scorn which the strangers by, but especially the Italians, had done to these poor despised Carcasses, they were tumbled into a great Pit, and the rest thrown into the River.

Those of Daulphine, of Languedoc, and Provence were amazed to see so many bodies floating upon the water, some dismembred, others fastned together with long Poles, others lying on the shore, some having their eyes put out, others their noses, ears, and hands cut off, stabbed in with Daggers in every part of their Bodies, so as some among them had no human shape remaining. Yes, so great a number of these mangled Corpses presented themselves on the Port of Tournon, that the men and women of the place began to make an Outcry, as if the Enemies had been at their Gates.

Not many Months after, when all these bloody Tragedies were ended, the Pope sent a Legate to the King, called Cardinal Ursin. This Legate was received with great Solemnity at Lyons, and the Streets hung with Tapestry. Now having heard Mass at S. Johns Church, and returning by the same door which he went in at, the greatest number of the Massacres attended his coming there, and as he passed by, they all kneeled down for his Absolution. But the Legate not knowing the reason why they kneeled so before him, one of the principal Agents kneeling there amongst them, told the Legate that they were those who had been the Actors in the Massacre. When the Legate perceived that to be the cause, he absolved them all with making the sign of the Cross.

The Massacres which were by the Pope's Legate.

Persecution at Angiers in France.

Mr. John Mason, a learned Minister, together with his wife and some others, Martyrs.

A Protestant Minister was murdered in his Garden.

AS soon as the Massacre was begun at Paris, a Gentleman of Paris, called Monseigneur, obtained a Passport with Letters to massacre those of the Religion at Angiers. Who, being disappointed of his Prey in one place, came to the lodging of a reverend and learned Minister, called Mr. John Mason, surnamed de Launay, Sieur de Riviere. Meeting his Wife at his entrance into the House, he saluted her and kissed her, as it is the manner in France, especially among the Courtiers, and asked her where her Husband was? She answered him, that he was walking in his Garden; and then directed him the way unto him.

Monseigneur having lovingly embraced La Riviere, said unto him, Do you know wherefore I am come? the King hath commanded me to kill you forthwith, and hath given me express charge to do it, as you shall know by his Letters. After which words he shewed him a Pistol ready charged. Riviere replied, That he knew not where he had offended the King; but seeing, said he, you seek my life, give me a little leave to cry to God for mercy, and to recommend my spirit into his hands.

Having made a short Prayer, he willingly presented his Body to the Murderer, who shot him in with his Pistol, and so he died by and by.

Not long after the King sent Puygailard, who drowned nine or ten, and amongst other, the Wife of this Minister of la Riviere above named, who expressed a singular constancy of Faith even to her last breath.

This Minister and Martyr formerly mentioned, surnamed Launay, was the eldest Son of Sieur de Launay, a man exceeding rich and wealthy, but an obstinate Papist. When as the old man observed how his Son was inclined to be a Professor of the Gospel, he threatened to disinherit him unless he would abjure, promising on the contrary to bestow great matters upon him, and to marry him honourably, if he would be ruled by him. All which his Son refusing, his Fathers love began to be turned into hatred; inasmuch that the young man was forced to fly to Paris, where in time he was called to be a Minister of the first Reformed Church planted in that City, under the Reign of King Henry the Second; from which Reformed Church other Churches in divers Cities in France fetched their Light.

Persecution at Roan.

WHEN the Massacres began to play their parts in this City, they counselled those of the Religion to get themselves into the Prisons, as into places of great security from the fury and rage of the People. But such as followed this advice, were there even ready to be devoured, as poor Sheep, by these greedy Wolves at their pleasure.

Six thousand massacred in few days at the City of Roan.

Those who were murdered in the City in a few days, some in their Houses, and others in the Prisons, amounted to six thousand, besides more than fifty women, upon whom they exercised no less cruelty than upon men.

Their Names for brevities sake are here omitted. The dead Bodies being piled together, were conveyed in Tumbrils out of the City, and thrown by heaps one upon another into great Pits digged for that purpose. Their Garments being washed in the River from their Blood, by certain poor women, were afterwards distributed here and there to the poor by the Papists, that they might seem with their unjust cruelty to mingle some works of Justice and Charity.

A Note touching the shameful revolt of a Minister called Du Rosier, with the event of it.

WITHIN a mile of Paris there is a place where those of the Religion, which dwell thereabouts, were wont to assemble to hear Sermons, and to participate of the Sacraments. Over this Flock was Huges Sureau (called Du Rosier) placed as Overseer.

Being in times past Minister at Orleans, he was discharged from thence, as one of a contentious spirit, and given to affect Novelties.

In process of time he came to be established the Minister of this foresaid Church nigh unto Paris.

Hearing the News of the Massacre, he fled with the rest for company. Being apprehended, he began to waver, perfwading many Prisoners to revolt as he had done; which caused him afterwards, if his repentance was found, to utter these words in a Book which I have, wherein he bitterly lamented his woful fall. The Murderers, said he, by their cruel hands murdered mens Bodies, whilst their Souls escaped safe; but I by my perfwasions have been a killer of Souls, in turning them from the Truth which before they professed.

The Judge who had him in Bonds sent Letters presently to Paris, to give notice of his apprehension, as also of some apparent signs which gave him hope of the Ministers Conversion.

The King by and by sent for him; who being brought into his presence, subscribed instantly to an Abjuration with detestation of the Huguenots Profession, before the King of Navarre and the Prince of Conde, maintained the Romish Religion, consented thereto with the Sorbonists at that time there present; against whom a few years before he had learnedly defended the Truth.

In this Abjuration he endeavoured to confute many Articles which were maintained by Calvin and Beza against the Romish Religion. In these disputes, this Minister being of a prompt wit and having ability to express himself well, handled the matter so cunningly, that the King of Navarre, the Princess his Sister, and the Princess of Conde so far yielded, that within five or six days after they went to Mais, and received Absolution of the Cardinal of Bourbon.

The Points about which this Rosier disputed, were these: First, Concerning the Marks of the Church; Secondly, Of the Trinity of Persons; Thirdly, Of the Incarnation of Jesus Christ; Fourthly, Of Christs descent into Hell; Fifthly, Of Original Sin; Sixthly, Of the Providence of God; Seventhly, Of Predestination and Reprobation; Eighthly, Of mans Free will; Ninthly, Of Justification; Tenthly, Of Succession; Eleventhly, Of Intercession of Saints; Twelfthly, Of the Sacrifice of the Mass; And, Lastly, of Transubstantiation. The Sorbonists caused this Confession to be printed; to which the Ministers of the Reformed Religion would not vouchsafe an Answer, knowing that he who made it did it contrary to his own Conscience, adding nothing thereto which had not been confuted a thousand times.

All this upon his Repentance he afterwards revoked, as is to be seen by his Book printed here in London in the French Tongue, in the year 1573. which Confession of his, contrary to his Abjuration, I have in my Custody.

Now touching the Prince of Conde, the King propounded to him three things; Either to go to Mais, to dye, or else perpetual Prison; and therefore to bethink himself well which of the three he liked best. The Prince answered, as it is reported, That by Gods grace he would never choose the first; as for the two latter, he referred himself to the Kings pleasure.

Anno 1527.

A Massacre at Tholouze in France.

ON Sunday, which was the eighth day after the Massacre of Paris, about eight of the Clock in the morning, the chief of the Papists received advertisement of that which had passed, with Letters directing them what they were to do. Then a Council was called, at the breaking up whereof the great Gates of the City were shut, only the Wickets left open, at which there was set such to watch as they thought fitting. Soon after it was noised through all the City, that the Lords and Gentlemen of the Religion were massacred at Paris. Which the Protestants at Tholouze noting, being gone forth about five of the Clock in the morning to hear the Sermon at Cassanet, some thought it fit not to return, but to resort to some other place: others resolved to go back again, that they might take order about their affairs. These, being ill advised, were suffered to enter in peaceably, leaving their Swords and Daggers at the Gate. At Evening Souldiers were placed here and there; but in regard many Counsellors of the Religion were abroad (that they might the better entrap them) the next day the Gates were not so carefully looked unto, but who would might come in, and go out at their leisure, without being questioned at all. This was done to draw in the simple people who wandered up and down the fields. The first president called Dafis, a subtle headed man, sent to the Counsellors abroad to come in, promising them their safety upon his word, shewing that their absence did but incense the Inhabitants of Tholouze the more against them. It was granted indeed, that there had been a Massacre at Paris, but that was upon some private quarrel, so as the King was not minded for that to break his Edict of Pacification.

Some of them were perfwaded and returned; others casting some peril resolved to retire to Montauban, Reaumont, and elsewhere. On Tuesday following, that they might hold them whom they had gotten within the Walls, and draw in Rich as yet kept themselves without, they caused it to be published with sound of Trumpets; That the Kings will was that none of the Religion should be molested, but respectively used. The Presidents with sundry others were present at this Proclamation, accompanied with a guard of Souldiers, which caused many of the Religion, especially the Counsellors, to suspect some treachery; who therefore hastened to the first President to know what these things meant. He answered, it was only to refrain the people from making a tumult. But perceiving that they could not by their cunning catch the Birds who kept aloof off, they wrecked their malice upon those they had in their hands.

On Wednesday next then, about ten of the Clock in the Morning, having separated their Troops into divers quarters, they caused them to enter into the Houses of those of the Religion, whom they imprisoned in sundry Prisons of the City. This business held them all that Wednesday. The Guard was doubled at the Gates, and one of the Parliament, with a Merchant that was a Papist, deputed as Commanders at the said Gates, to examine all such as went out, and to put back such as meant to escape. There was also a charge given, that none should dare to conceal any of the said Religion, as they would answer to the contrary. By means whereof many being discovered, were imprisoned. Among which were five or six Counsellors, men excellently learned, who comforted the rest. Thus were they detained three weeks. In the mean while the Massacres set upon the Neighbour Cities.

The three weeks being expired, they put all these Prisoners together into the Conciergerie, which is a special Prison. After which they began to manifest themselves: for the reason why they had deferred the slaughter of them so long, was, that they might obtain Authority from Paris; the which was brought them by their Deputies, whose names were Despech and Madron, rich Merchants of the City. These came with a Warrant from the King, that if the Massacre was not finished, then they should not defer any longer to put his will in execution. To which they shewed themselves but too forward and ready.

On Saturday morning before the Sun was up, certain Scholars who were Night-walkers, with other lewd Fellows to the number of seven or eight, armed with Axes and Butchers Knives, entered into the said Conciergerie; and causing the Prisoners to be called down one after another, they massacred them beneath at the stairs-foot of the Conciergerie, not permitting them so much leisure as to speak, much less to pray. It was thought that they massacred to the number of three hundred; afterwards spoiling them of all they had, stripping them out of their cloaths and shirts, and leaving them naked, their secret parts being only covered with a piece of Paper. They were exposed to the view of all for the space of two days; whilst they digged great pits, whereinto the Corpses thus cruelly massacred were cast naked one upon another. The Counsellors whom they had imprisoned, after they were massacred, were hanged in their long Gowns upon a great Elm which was in the Court of the Palace; and in the mean while the Houses of those of the Religion were sacked and pillaged.

Many among these, by reason of the barbarous cruelties used against their Brethren, abjured daily. Now because the Sorbonists provided a form of Abjuration to that purpose, for saving the lives of such as recanted, it shall not be impertinent to insert the same in this place; it being imprinted at Paris by Nicholas Roffet.

The Abjured minding to return into the lap of our holy Mother the Roman Church, must present themselves first to their Parsons or Curats, to be directed by them what they ought to do. Afterward to be sent thence to their Reverend Bishop and Diocesan, or his Official, to pronounce the said Abjuration in manner and form following.

The Form of their Abjuration.

1. I Such a one of such a Diocesse, and dwelling in such a place, acknowledge by the Grace of God the true Catholick and Apostolick Faith, from which I have wilfully gone astray and separated my self; and now desiring to return into the true Sheepfold, which is the Catholick, Apostolick, and Roman Church, I do profess to have abjured, and here before you my Superior, do abjure and detest all the Huguenot Errors of Luther, Calvin, and all Heresies whatsoever, wherewith heretofore I have been infected and defamed, consenting now to the Doctrine of our holy Mother the Church, beseeching you in the Name of God, and of his Son Jesus Christ, and of the glorious Virgin Mary his Mother, with all the beauteous Saints and the Saints in Paradise, that it will please you to receive me into the Fold of the Christian Flock and People of God, who live under the obedience of the Pope, ordained Christ's Vicar in the said Church, submitting my self patiently to bear, and willingly to perform the penance you shall think fit to impose upon me, absolving me from all Offences committed whilst I lived in such Errors, for which I bear ask pardon of God, of the said Church, and of you my Pastor (set over me by God the Creator) to absolve me with such Penance as you shall judge to be available for the satisfaction of my sins and offences. And that it may be seen that from the heart I have made, and do make this Abjuration.

2. I further confess, before God and you, that I believe all that is contained in the Apostles, Athanasius and Nicene Creeds, with all the Confessions of Faith besides, allowed and approved by the Councils of the Catholick, Apostolick, and Roman Church, and so forth as it followeth in those Creeds.

3. I also believe, acknowledge and confess whatsoever is contained in the Old and New Testament, approved by the said holy Catholick Apostolick Roman Church, according to the sense and interpretation of the holy Doctors, and by them received, rejecting wholly all other Interpretations as false and erroneous.

4. I acknowledge the seven Sacraments of the said Church to have been instituted by our Lord Jesus Christ, as necessary for the salvation of mankind, although all of them are not of necessity to be conferred upon all; namely, I acknowledge that the seven Sacraments be, Baptism, Confirmation, the Eucharist, which is the holy Sacrament of the Altar, Penance, extreme Unction, Orders, and Marriage; and that of them Baptism, Confirmation, and firmation, and Order; cannot be reiterated without Sacrilege. That the said Sacraments confer Grace, and have those effects which the Church hath taught, and that the form and use according to which they are administered to Christians is holy and necessary.

5. I further acknowledge, That the holy Mass is a Sacrifice and Oblation of the true Body and Blood of Jesus Christ, under the forms of Bread and Wine mingled with water; which Bread and Wine under the foresaid forms are in the Mass, by the words of Consecration there pronounced by the Priest, transubstantiated and changed into the said Body and Blood of Christ; albeit the Qualities and Accidents remain in the said forms after Consecration; and that the Mass is profitable and available both for the living and for the dead.

6. I acknowledge and confess the concomitance, namely, that in receiving the Body of Christ under the form of Bread only, I then likewise receive the Blood of Jesus Christ.

7. I confess that prayer to, and intercession of Saints for the living and for the dead, is holy, good, and profitable for Christians, and in no sort contrary to the honour of God.

8. That Prayers made in the Church for the faithful departed are beneficial for them, for the remission of sins, and mitigating of their pains deserved for the same.

9. That there is a Purgatory, where the Souls of such as are detained there are relieved by the prayers of the faithful.

10. I confess that honour ought to be given to the Saints reigning with Christ in Heaven, that they ought to be prayed to, and that they make intercession for us to God, and that their Reliques ought to be worshipped.

11. That the Commandments and Traditions of the said Church, consisting in Divine Ceremonies, are holy and good, as Fasting, Abstinence from Meats, Observation of Feasts, and other Ecclesiastical Rites, and ought to be observed according to the Traditions of the Apostles and ancient Fathers, continued from the Primitive times, and since brought into the Church by the Decrees of Councils, received thence long ago or lately: Also that I will and ought to obey them as prescribed and authorized by the holy Ghost, the ordainer of those things which serve to the upholding of Christian Religion, and of the holy Catholick and Apostolick Roman Church.

12. I likewise believe and consent to all the Articles concerning Original Sin and Justification.

13. I also steadfastly believe that the Pictures of Christ, of his holy Mother, and of all the Saints, ought to be retained in the Church, that the uses of them are very profitable, and that they ought to be worshipped.

14. I confess that the power of Indulgences and Pardons is left to the Church by Jesus Christ, and the use of them is greatly available; as also I acknowledge the Church of Rome to be the chief Mother of all Churches, and that she hath the holy Ghost for her guide: and that all private and pretended Inspirations contradicting the same, are of the Devil the Prince of Dissention, who would rent in sunder the seamless Coat of Jesus Christ.

15. Lastly, I strictly promise to observe and keep whatsoever was decreed and ordained by the last Council of Trent, and do promise before God and you, never to depart from the Catholick and Apostolick Roman Church. And if I shall (which God forbid) I submit me to the Correction and Canons of the said Church, made, decreed, and ordained against them which fall into Apostasy.

To which Abjuration and Confession I have subscribed with my hand, &c.

Some of those who for fear abjured, afterwards relented; others grew more and more hardened; inasmuch that in going off to Mass they took part with the Priests and Murderers, as if they had never made any Profession at all of the Truth.

Persecution at Bourdeaux the third of October, 1572.

Soon after the Massacre at Paris, tidings thereof came to Bourdeaux. Where it happened on a morning as the Protestants were taking Boat to hear a Sermon in a Meadow where they were wont to meet, being about three miles from Bourdeaux, between the River of Garonna and the Brook of la Jalla, that the Governour Mounsferrand commanded them to come back again. He had the skill to cloke the same under a plausible pretence, namely, that they should not be set upon there by the Multitude.

After their return they began to set a strong watch and ward at the Gates, so as none of the Religion could have leave to pass forth, unless he had a Passport from the Governour: yet means was made for their Ministers escape without being perceived; who went to Ad doc, expecting what the event of this business at Bourdeaux would be. Having intelligence of what was executed there, they staid certain days and nights, hiding themselves in the Rocks and Marshes, until they had opportunity to take shipping, and so sail into England.

Instantly thereupon there arrived at Bourdeaux the Lord of Montpensat from the King, who at his first coming feigned as if he meant to settle all things in peace. Yet he wrought under hand in such wise with the Governour, that the Massacre was resolved on, to which he was solicited by a Jesuite called Edmond Angier, who out of the Pulpit used horribly and bitterly to thunder and inveigh against the remissness and faintheartedness of the said Governour. Inasmuch as on S. Michael's day (as they called it) speaking of the Angels by whom God executes his Judgments, he cried out by the way of Interrogation, who executed Gods Judgments upon the Huguenots in Paris? The Angel of God. Who hath executed the like upon other Cities in this Kingdom? The Angel of God. In a word, he never ceased in publick and private to solicit the Papists of Bourdeaux to follow the example of the Parisians. And then as a creaking Raven, day by day he menaced those of the Religion with the approaching of an utter ruin and desolation, if they did not betimes return into the bosome of the Roman Church, which offer if they now refused, they should not be received in when they would.

Many being terrified with these threats, as also by the intreaties of their Kindred, who set before them the imminent danger which hung over their heads, revolted and abjured. The said Sieur of Montpensat caused Master William Blanck, an Advocate in the Court of Parliament, to be called before him, who was Counsellor to him and to his Father in Law; exhorting and perswading him to return to the Unity of the Roman Church.

Le Blanck answered, That he had sufficiently weighed and compared all things together, before he took upon him the Profession of that Religion which he now professed; which he said was the true Religion, acknowledging the same in every respect far to exceed the other.

Montpensat hearing this, rebuked him sharply, saying, That then he thought himself wiser than the King, and all those that professed as his Majesty did. Inasmuch as they who stood about Le Blanck began to handle him roughly; so that he had much ado to escape with his life, had not Montpensat rescued him from that danger, because he was come thither upon his word. The Governour said, If he had been there, he would have slain him.

The Governour, being pressed to dispatch this Massacre at Bourdeaux, wist not well what to do. For on the one side La Sieur de Vesins, with sundry others, coming from the Court, assured him from the King, that he wondered why the business was deferred so long; shewing, that he could not perform a more acceptable Service unto him than it. On the other side Stroff, who hovered about Rochet to take it, wished him to be well advised what he did, what Command soever he had to the contrary: Foreseeing belike, that if he went forward with his Execution, the Rochellers would have had the said Stroff in such a jealousy, that his Project would have been defeated, and so would be no small prejudice to the Kings Affairs; putting him in hope, that he would stand between him and all perils.

For the truth is, the Army by Sea, which was prepared against Rochet, lying for a time at Bourdeaux, under pretence of conquering Florida, would have been ready enough to have made a general Massacre there, but that they 1572.

Anno 1572. they were afraid the Rochellers would be incensed thereat.

Yet in conclusion the Governor, having ballanced things on both parts, was persuaded by the Sieur Montpessier to put the massacre in execution. To which purpose an Oath being taken, a Catalogue was made of such as they meant to spoil.

On Saturday then, which was the third of October, 1572. the Governor having assembled together all the scum of the City to aid and assist him in so barbarous an act, commanded them with other Souldiers to be ready presently after dinner to put the Kings command into execution. To which they were very forward, coming in their Liveries, attended on by Captains of Tens, to direct them touching that they had to do. The greater part of the Massacres had red Hats given them by Peter Esbornach, and for the Blood, wherewith they dyed their Arms, they were called the Red Band: others called them the Cardinals Band. The Governor commanded them to kill all those of the Religion, especially such as had taken Arms, and not to spare one. And himself intending to shew them the way, went to the House of Master John Guilloch, Lord of Obiere, Counsellor in the Court of Parliament to execute the hatred he had long since conceived against him: who being about to escape away out at a back Door, they caught and brought him into the outer Court before his House, in the presence of the Governor, who with a Sword massacred him; which done, his House was wholly pillaged.

At that time they brought a certain Minister out of the Consistory, who a few days before coming from the Country Saintron to Bourdeaux (for his better safety as he thought) was there apprehended and imprisoned: and as soon as he was come out of the Prison they massacred him before the Gates of the Palace.

Master William Savins House (a Counsellor of the said Parliament, who was one of the Religion) was forced open, pillaged and spoiled, and himself cruelly murdered. His Clerk called Simons, seeing his Master about to be massacred, embraced and comforted him: and being asked whether he were of the Religion, he answered yea, and would dye with his Master for the same.

Thus they were slain one in anothers Arms.

The cruel Martyrdom of Du Tour, a Deacon of the Protestant Church.

A Deacon of the Reformed Church called Du Tour, an old Man, who in the days of his ignorance had been a Priest in the Popish Church, being sick in his Bed, was haled forth into the open Street; of whom it being demanded, whether he would go to Mass, and thereby save his Life, he freely answered, No, especially now drawing so near his end, both in regard of his years and grievous sickness: I hope (saith he) I shall not so far forget the eternal Salvation of my Soul, as for fear of death to prolong this life for a few days; for so I should buy a short term of life at too dear a rate. They hearing him say so, massacred him instantly.

It was lamentable to see the poor Protestants wandering up and down, not knowing where to save their lives: some were rejected of their own Parents and Kinsfolks, who shut their Doors against them, pretending as if they knew them not; others were betrayed and delivered up by those to whose trust they had committed themselves: many were saved even by Priests and others, from whom a Man would have expected no such security. Some were saved by their very Enemies, whose hearts abhorred such detestable outrages.

All the City was full of terrors and horrible threats against those of the Religion, saying, that the Kings commandment was, that he would not have so much as one of them left in his Kingdom. And if any refused to go to Mass, that an Hole should be digged for him in the Earth, in which he should forthwith be buried without any more ado.

Scaffing Ballads sung in contempt of the Admiral of Chastillon and other Protestants.

Near the Palace and thoroughout the City were defamatory Libels sung against the Admiral of Chastillon and the Huguenots. In which regard, such in whose Hearts God had reserved but any sparkle of Piety, were so terrified and vexed with their Blasphemies, that the condition of the massacred seemed to be much better than theirs who were left alive; who heard and saw those things without ceasing, which to an honest mind was more bitter than death itself.

The Governor was very careful after the Massacre was ended, to advertise the Sieur Montpessier, by a Gentleman, of all things which had passed, according to the promise he had made unto him. Which Montpessier was suddenly surprised with a distaste; wherein feeling Gods hand heavy upon him, he uttered such lamentable outcries, that his Blood and Soul were poured out at once, a Judgment justly inflicted upon him, for all the innocent Blood which he had shed without a cause.

Montpessier suddenly surprised with a strange distaste.

The Judgment of God upon one Vincent.

He like Judgment of God fell not long after upon another of these Massacres called Vincent, Advocate of the Court, one who had had his hand deeply dyed in this Bloody enterprise, not sticking to boast that with his own hands he had murdered Agrauldes door-keeper of the Court. This Man also fell dangerously sick, but in the end recovering again, and as he thought being in good health, he told some of his friends that he felt his Arms strong enough to handle his Courtax or short Sword as well as ever he had done. But within a while after he was overtaken by the hand of God, with such a flux of bleeding at his nose, as could not be restrained nor diverted by any of the remedies that were then used. It was an hideous sight to see him still bowing his head over a basin full of Blood, which without ceasing issued out of his nose and mouth.

This Bloody wretch then, who breathed forth nothing but Blood in the time of his health, nor could have his eyes satisfied with seeing the Blood of Innocents poured out, was forced whilst he lived to see himself drenched in his own Blood, even until his last gasp.

Another of them, thirsting after Blood as much as any of the rest, was taken with such a swelling in all the parts of his Body, that there was scarcely to be discerned in him the form of a Man, and so continued swelling more and more, till at the length he burst in sunder.

The Governor himself who was the chief Actor in this Massacre, about two years after gathering all the Forces he could to besiege Genes, with an intention to do wonders there, presenting himself ready for the purpose, was chosen to go in the rank of five and twenty or thirty brave Gentlemen, and he only shot with an Harquebuse, being dyed. The rest by and by retiring came off safe, without doing any further exploit.

Thus we have taken a view of the extreme afflictions, terrors and oppressions of the Reformed Churches in many parts of France, wherein within a few weeks well nigh thirty thousand were put to death.

Now in the year 1573. many places whither the faithful were fled for refuge, were assailed by open war; namely, in the first place that of Sancerre, the History whereof you have here in a short view presented before you in that which followeth.

A Relation of the extreme famine which happened in the City of Sancerre in France, being besieged with five hundred Horsemen and about five thousand Footmen the ninth of January, 1573. with their deliverance.

Being (saith the Story) compassed about with irreconcilable Enemies, from about the beginning of April; the want of victuals having caused them to gather together all the Asses and Mules they had in the City, they were eaten up in less than a month.

Then they came to Horses, Cats, Rats, Mice and Dogs. After these were spent, they fell to eat Ox and Cow-hides, Sheep-skins, parchment, old shoes, Bullocks, and Vincent dyes drenched in his own Blood.

Another of this wretched crew (swelled so long that he burst in sunder. God meets with the Governor himself at length.

Thirty thousand massacred within a few weeks in the Cities of France.

The Want of victuals was then General of the Kings Army.

and horse-hoofs, horns, and lanterns, ropes, and harnesses, leather girdles, &c.

In the end of June the third part of the besieged had not Bread to eat. Such as could get hemp-seed, ground it, or stamped it in Mortars, and made Bread of it, the like they did with all sorts of herbs, mingling the same with bran if they had it. There they eat meal of chaff, nut-shells, and of slate, excrements of horses, and men, yea, the offal which lay in the Streets was not spared.

The nine and twentieth of July, a poor Man and his Wife were executed for having eaten the Head, Brains, and Entrails of a young Child about three years old which dyed of hunger; having made ready the other parts to eat at another meal. An old Woman lodging in their House, eating a part of this mournful dyer, dyed in Prison, within a few hours after her imprisonment.

They were found guilty of other offences; but this aggravated the same the more. All Children under twelve years of age dyed. It was lamentable to hear the piteous voices uttered by poor Parents for the misery wherein their eyes beheld their languishing and dying Infants.

To which purpose you may take notice here of a memorable accident. A boy of ten years old, being ready to yield up the Ghost, seeing his Father and Mother weeping over him (whose Arms and Legs when they handled, felt as if they had been dried sticks) laid unto them, wherefore weep ye thus, in seeing me famished to death? Mother, faith he, I ask you no bread, I know you have none: but seeing it is Gods will I must dye this death, let us be thankful for it. Did not the holy Man Lazarus dye of Famine? Have I not read it in my Bible? In uttering these with the like speeches he yielded up the ghost the thirtieth day of July.

That all the People dyed not of famine in the end of this Month, it was by reason of certain Horses which were reserved for service if need should be, and six Kine which were left to give milk for the sustentance of young Infants. These Beasts were killed, and their flesh sold for the relief of such as were living, with a little Corn, which by stealth some brought into the City; so that a pound of Wheat was sold for half a Crown.

There dyed by fight in Sancerre but eighty four persons, but of the Famine more than five hundred. Many Soldiers getting forth as they could out of the City, flying from the Famine, chose rather to dye by the Sword of the Enemy; whereof some were slain, others imprisoned, and the rest put to death by the Executioner.

But when all help of Man failed, the King having sworn that he would make them eat up one another, the King of Kings delivered them by his wonderful providence. For at this instant the Embassadors from Poland came into France to accept the Duke of Anjou for their King, at whose intreaty (which could not well be denied) poor Sancerre, more than half famished, was now set at liberty by raising the siege, who otherwise were determined to leave their Bones there, rather than to yield themselves into their Enemies hands, in regard they had oft threatened them with a general Massacre. Whereas now by the Kings appointment they were permitted to pass out of the City armed; if any would tarry, that they should not be molested: having liberty granted them to dispose of their affairs, as they pleased, with promise of conserving the honour and chastities as well of Virgins, as Women, &c.

Of this siege Marshal said, that it was great, long, and slightly; but though well assailed yet better defended.

Now let us come to the City of Rochel, which being at this instant strongly besieged by the forces of France, both by Sea and Land, with about forty and fifty Thousand Men, was yet in the end also delivered, though not without many hot conflicts, by the immediate hand of God; namely thus: The Embassador of Poland arriving in France the seventeenth day of June, a truce was made on the sudden, Articles of peace drawn, and sent to the King, who consented to them, and returned answer in form of an Edict, granting to those of Rochel, Montauban, Nismes, and others which stood upon their defence, liberty for the exercises of Religion; the rest to live peaceably in their Houses, and therein to minister the Sacrament of Baptism, and Marriage as they had wont to do, so as their Assemblies exceeded not the number of ten, besides the Parents.

He restored to the Rochellers and others their Rights and Privileges, letting fall all the Decrees given out against them, approving of their defensive War; giving them leave, according to their ancient custom, to retain in their Cities, Towers, and Fortresses, Men and Munition, yea, to receive in Governors among them, provided that they were such as they had no cause to suspect or except against.

By virtue of this Edict, upon the tenth day of July, about ten of the Clock in the forenoon, the Sieur of Biron entered into the City at the gate called de Coigne, with an Herald of Arms, and four of the Kings Trumpeters (at which hour peace was proclaimed in the most eminent places thereof) accompanied with the Lieutenant of the City, and with the Lord of Villiers. After which, dining at the Majors House, he soon after retired, being conducted along till he came without the City.

The same day many small Vessels laden with Biskets, Corn, Meal, Fish, and other provision entered into the Haven. At this siege the Duke D. Anseau lost his life, with Coffins, who had broken into the Admirals Lodging, and began the Massacre at Paris: besides many great Lords, Gentlemen, Captains, Lieutenants, and Antients, to the number of three score, the greater part of which, having their hands embred in those other bloody Massacres, being come thither received their reward, namely, either present death, or wounds so incurable that they escaped not with life.

One thing ought not here to be passed over in silence, to wit, the provision of victuals which God furnished this besieged people withal, when all other provisions began to fail them, namely, an infinite number of small Fishes never seen before in that Haven, which every day yielded themselves to the mercie of the necessitous Inhabitants. But as soon as the Edict was published, and the Rochellers set at liberty by the arriving of the Polish Embassadors, these Sea fishes withdrew themselves.

Although this relation following, touching another siege of this City of Rochel, suites nothing at all with the order of time, happening as it did in the year 1628. yet so far as it seems to have some affinity with the terrible famine wherewith both the City of Sancerre and it were afflicted; let not the Reader be offended for placing the same here somewhat out of place, being a thing to worthy of note.

An extract of a Letter written on board the Saint George his Majesties Ship in Saint Georges Island.

There dyed in this siege of Rochel, the thirtieth of October, 1628, sixteen thousand persons, the rest enduring a world of miseries; most of all their food being hides, leather, and old gloves: other provisions being very scarce were at an excessive rate; viz.

A Bushel of Wheat	xx. li.
A pound of Bread	xx. s.
A quarter of Muston	valued Money.
A pound of Butter	xxxx. s.
An Egge	viii. s.
An ounce of Sugar	ii. s. vi. d.
A dried Fish	xxx. s.
A pint of Wine	xx. s.
A pound of Grapes	ii. s.
A pint of Milk	xxx. s.

Also it is reported, that through the famine, young Maids of fourteen or sixteen years of age did look like old Women of an hundred years old. The famine was such, that the poor people would cut off the buttocks of the dead as they lay in the Churchyard unburies. All the English that came out looked like Anatomies. They lived two Months with nothing but Cow-hides and Goats-skins boiled; the Dogs, Cats, Mice, and Frogs being all spent. And this with a world of other miseries did they suffer, in hope of being relieved by others. Thus much I thought good to let you understand.

Anno 1574.

A certain Gentleman, Nephew to the English Governor of Anjou, bragging that he had been one who murdered the Admiral, showing a bare Sword which he had used in this slaughter, threatened the Rochellers, but God cut him short also, at the siege of Sancerre.

Anno
1588.A Description of the manner of the death of Charles the ninth, King of France.

IN the year 1574. Charles the ninth, King of France (in the time of whose Reign these forenamed execrable Massacres were executed) fell sick; which sickness fell upon him before his Brother the Duke of Angou took his voyage into Poland: from which during the Winter season he obtained some recovery. But that which then seemed to ly hidden brake forth again afresh in the Spring; so as this Prince, after he had languished three whole Months, viz. February, March, and April, drew his Physicians to a consultation about the state of his Body; who in the end concluded to purge and let him blood. But these remedies took not such an effect as the King and they expected; for he fell wasted and consumed away, being in the flower of his Age, to the wonder of many. Some guessed he had taken a surfeit either in eating or drinking; others, that he was enchanted.

The thirteenth of May he dyed, in the presence of his Mother, and of the Cardinals of Bourbon and Ferrare, &c.

He was born on the twenty seventh day of June, 1550. He began his Reign the first of December, 1560. and so Reigned, as that it gives to Posterity just cause both of admiration and detestation. Thus this Prince lived not forty years fully compleat. Now if any desire to be further satisfied as touching the manner of his death, I refer them to that which Master John Fox hath written thereof not many lines before the conclusion of this Book, commonly called the Book of Martyrs.

A Note touching a Bull of Pope Sixtus the fifth, wherein the King of Navarre, and the Prince of Conde were declared Hereticks, &c. with the Censure thereof by the Parliament of Paris.

IN September 1585. Pope Sixtus the fifth, by a Bull sent from Rome, condemned the King of Navarre, and the Prince of Conde for Hereticks, excommunicated them, degrading them and their Successors from their dignities, especially laying claim to the Crown of France, abjuring their Subjects from their Oath of Allegiance, and exposing their Countries for a prey to them that could first subdue them.

The Court of Parliament of Paris made a notable Remonstrance to the King concerning these Bulls, in the which they sought to maintain the privileges of the Gallicane Church. Among other things, these words that follow are very remarkable. The Court thinks that these Bulls are set forth in a stile altogether of a new stamp, and so contrary to the modesty of former Popes, that they can in no sort discern therein the spirit of a Successor of the Apostles. And therefore (as the Deputies of the said Court added) we can neither find by our Registers, nor by any Antiquity, that the Princes of France ever subjected themselves so far to the Authority of the Pope, nor that the Subjects have taken such knowledge of the Religion of their Princes. The Court therefore cannot determine ought thereupon, unless first of all the Pope can cause his pretended right in translation of Kingdoms, to appear; which Kingdoms were established and ordained of God, before the name of a Pope was heard of in the World: that he manifests not to us what Title he hath to intermeddle with the matter of the Succession of a young and vigorous Prince, who, for ought the Pope knows, may have his succession yet in his loyns: that he shews not with what appearance of justice or equity he should deny that privilege which is allowed to such as are accused of Heresie against the Decrees of antient Canons, namely that no Man ought to be held as an Heretic, until his defence be fully and freely heard; till he have received often admonitions from many Synods, and thereupon sentenced by a Council lawfully assembled.

Further they added, that seeing the Pope in stead of instruction, breaths forth nothing in his Bulls but destruction, changing his Shepherds crook into a terrible Thunderbolt, rather to scatter then sweetly to call the erring flock into the Bosom of the Catholick Church, the Court cannot safely admit of, or entertain a Bull so pernicious and opposite to the general good of all the Christian World, and to the Sovereignty of the Crown of France; yes, they further were of opinion, that this Bull deferred to be thrown into the Fire and burned, and the Solicitors or upholders thereof for examples sake to be severely chastised; humbly beseeching the King to maintain his Edicts in his own Kingdom in peace.

This Remonstrance took small effect; for not long after, the King being solicited by the Principal of the League, set forth a Declaration the seventh of October, upon the Edict published in July next before going; wherein having confiscated the Body and Goods of those of the Religion with their Associates, who in any Province had taken Arms against the fury of the League, it was ordained, that those of the Religion within six Months were to depart out of the Kingdom, unless within fifteen days fully accomplished after the said Declaration they should abjure.

The Parliament, suffering themselves to be carried down by the violence of this stream, accepted and admitted this Edict. The Princes framed an opposition against the Popes Bull, appealing therefrom, as a wrong done unto them, offering to make it appear in a free and lawful Council, that the Pope had maliciously belied them, in calling them Hereticks; so as if he refused this fair and lawful course by them propounded, they would hold and esteem him for that great Antichrist, and would proclaim an open irreconcilable War against him. This opposition was affixed and set up at Rome the seventh day of November.

Not long after, among those of the Religion which were imprisoned, others were more severely handled. Among many, take notice here of two Honourable Women, whose memory ought to be celebrated in this History of the Martyrs; namely, Radagonda Daughter of Master John Foucoult, Attourney in the Parliament of Paris, Widow, of the Age of forty years, and Claude Foucoult her Sister, a Virgin about thirty six, who were apprehended the nine and twentieth of October 1585. the one of the Village of Pierrepin near Paris, and the other in the Suburbs of Saint German, and brought Prisoners into Chapelet because they denied to go to Mass, and would not abjure and forsake the true Religion. Being severed one from the other in Prison, they were examined upon sundry Articles* to which they made their direct answer according to the Word of God.

Then being put together, they were accused for disobeying the Kings commandment, which was, that those of the Religion were either to depart the Kingdom by such a time, or else abjure; They answered, that they were willing to leave the Kingdom, if they might obtain a convenient time to take order about that little which they had there; but refusing to yield to their request, they were shut up again, and the seventh of November in the presence of the Lieutenant, as also of the Advocate for the King, and a Sorbonist, they pleaded their Innocency. These Men getting no advantage against them, but being rather confounded by the Wisdom of Gods Spirit, speaking by these two Sisters, went and complained to the King, that they were obstinate Hereticks. This was in the beginning of the year, 1588.

They continued in Prison many weeks, being cumbered with many disputes, yet remained unshaken. The Friday before Easter the King himself was to see them, asking them whether they would conform themselves to the Catholick Apostolick Roman Church (as he called it.) They with such reverence and obedience, as became them, gave him their Reasons why they could not so do, confirming the same by texts of Holy Scripture. His second question was, why they had not obeyed his last Edict. The Widow answered, Sir, faith she, I have three small Children to care for; and whereas your Majesty allotted those of the Religion the term of fifteen days after six Months ended to depart the Kingdom; I have done my utmost to take up such Monies as were due unto me, but those who were indebted unto me neglected to pay me. Besides, he that kept my Vineyards of Pierrepin, to quit himself of me, accused me of Heresie, causing my Sister and my self to be here imprisoned, where we have lien six Months, and if so be our Petition presented by us find no acceptance in your Majesties sight, we most most humbly beseech you to grant that we may be freed out of Prison, and we will be gone instantly out of the Kingdom according to your Majesties Edict.

The date is past, said the King, nor will I shew you any favour, unless you will promise to go to Mass. He was much displeased in seeing their constancy. Now at the same time there was presented before him one named Richelot, who had been apprehended that very day in which the Women were taken for the cause of Religion, unto whom the King used not many words: only, in conclusion he said, there wanted nothing but fagots to burn him. This Richelot abjured, that day in which these two Sisters were executed. The King had five or six Sorbonists, which attended on him there, who offered to reason with the Prisoners by occasion of a word spoken by the Widow. But the King preventing it, said, we are not come hither to dispute, let them be laid waile, and none suffered to come to them.

Within half an hour after, the Duke of Longueville came to visit them, saying, he was sorry for their affliction, counselling them to go to Mass, alledging, it is written, Thou shalt obey thy Prince, and if he therein force you to it against your Conscience, he shall answer for it; adding, that they were to remember their Sex, and therefore to be teachable upon the point of obedience. They answered, that no earthly Potentate had any warrant to command Christians to sin against their Consciences.

They further besought him to be a means for them to the King, that they might be delivered: but all the answer he gave them was this. That if they would not return, the King would not deliver them: also there was great likelihood, after their long detention in Prison, that they must be executed in the end.

The next day being Easter Even, the Queen with the Dutchess of Foyeuse came into Chastelet to visit the Prisoners. But in stead of speaking to the two Sisters herself, she sent unto them a wicked Apostate, called Mathew de Lamy, who being a Minister turned Popish Priest, and one whom the League made no small use of; who loading these honourable Sisters with injuries and reproachful speeches, calling them Dogs and Devils incarnate, and worthy to be burned, so left them and never came any more unto them. Soon after the day of the Barricades, which is a defence made of Earth and Stones heaped up, serving to stop a Street or any passage, the Judges of Chastellet adjudged them to be hanged, and their Bodies to be burned to ashes. From which Sentence they appealed to the Court, and were brought into the Conciergerie, which is the name of a common Goal belonging to Paris or any other Prison.

Queen Elizabeth's picture burned in Paris.

On the Even before Saint John Baptists day in the Month of June, the common people in Paris making Fires as they were wont to do, amongst other infolencies, burnt in divers parts of the City a picture representing the Queen of England.

The next day the Curates and Preachers began in their Sermons to thunder, saying, That it was not enough to burn the pictures of Hereticks, but to burn the bodies of the obstinate Prisoners: which so enraged the tumultuous sort of people, that the day following, flocking together into the Court of the Palace, they threatened the Presidents and the Councill, that some mischief should follow unless they condemned these two Prisoners to dye. A gentle answer was returned to this factious crew, with promise also that the business should not long be delayed.

The next day the eldest Son of Radeconde presented a Petition to the Dutchess of Nemours, Daughter to the late Lady of Ferrare. Her Grace solicited the Duke of Guise her Son, for the Prisoners: whose answer was, That his coming to Paris was not to petition the King in favour of those of the Religion; and if he would do so (in regard of the Services which the Prisoners had done his Grandfather) yet he could not, fearing lest the mad multitude might set upon him.

The eight and twentieth day of the same Month of June, the Court having confirmed the Sentence given at Chastelet, sent them back thither to be executed, so as about noon they were gagged, because the Maid professed, that if they brought her into any Idols Temple, he would extend her Voice so loud against the same, that every one should hear it. About three of the Clock they were led as sheep to the slaughter, where they constantly perished in the profession of the true Religion.

The Widow being ascended the Ladder shook out of her hands a wooden Cross, which they had by force affixed thereto, whereat the multitude were so provoked, that they began to throw stones and staves at her, so as the Hangman having turned her off the Ladder cut the Rope by and by, letting her fall half dead into the Fire, wherein she yielded up her Soul into the hands of God, as also her Sister did.

Being now come to the year 1588. it gives us just occasion to call to mind that miraculous deliverance of our noble Queen and Country, from the intended invasion of the Spaniards the same year. The memorial whereof, that it might the rather be continued to the Ages succeeding, deserves by way of History here to be inserted as in its due and proper place. Of which deliverance it may truly be said (all things considered) that it was the Lords doing, and it is marvellous in our eyes. The true relation whereof here followeth.

A brief discourse touching the great preparations made by the Spaniards, and other Romish Catholics, for that invincible Navy, intended for the invading and surprising of the Realm of England, together with their utter overthrow.

Her Majesty of England having had intelligence from sundry places of the great and diligent preparation of the King of Spain in divers parts both by Sea and Land, not only of the strongest Ships in all places within his Dominions, but of all sorts of provision necessary for so mighty a Fleet, as he intended to set forth, and these rumours of War, which before were but sleight, daily increasing, at last it was certainly confirmed by the news on all sides, that in Spain there was an invincible Navy preparing against England; that the most famous Captains in Military knowledge, and the best Soldiers were sent for into Spain, from Italy, Sicily, yea from America. For the Pope and some religious Spaniards, and English fugitives, now recalled the Spaniard to the cogitation of surprising of England, which purpose was interrupted by the Portugal Wars. They exhorted him earnestly to do God this service, that had done so much for him; now that he enjoyed Portugal with the West-Indies, and many rich Islands, to add England to all were an especial service of God, fit for his Catholick Majesty. By this means he might add these flourishing Kingdoms to his Empire, and so keep the Low-countries in peace, and secure the Navigations to both Indies. That the preparations of Spain were so great that no power was able to resist it. They made him believe that it was an easier matter to overcome England, than to overcome the Dutchland, because the Navigation from Spain to England was much shorter, than to the Netherlands. And by surprising of England the other would easily follow.

Hereupon the Consultation began to be had, of the best way and means to oppress England. Alvarus Bassamus, the Marquess of S. Cres, who was chief commander in the Navy, advised first to make sure some part of Holland or Zealand, by the Land forces of the Duke of Parma, and by sending before him some Spanish Ships, so to take some place on a sudden, where the Spanish Navy might have a receivable, and from whence the Invasion might with convenience begin. For in the English Sea, which is troublesome, the Winds oft changing, and the Tides unknown, the Navy could not be in safety. With him agreed Parma who much urged this Expedition. Yet others disliked this Counsel, as a matter of great difficulty and danger, of long time, of much labour, of great expence, and uncertain success. And that neither secretly nor openly it could be performed, and easily hindered by the English. These thought that with the same labour and expences England might be won: and the Victory would be sure, if a well prepared Army from Spain might, with a strong Navy, be landed on Thames side, and of a sudden, surprise London the chief City, by an unexpected assault. This seemed a thing most ealie to be effected.

The Duke of Parma also in Flanders, by the commanders of the Spaniard, built Ships, and a great company of small broad Vessels, each one able to transport thirty horse, with bridges fitted for them severally; And hired mariners from the East part of Germany. And provided long pieces of Wood, sharpened at the end, and covered with Iron, with hooks on the one side; And twenty thousand Vessels, with an huge number of fagots, and placed an Army ready in Flanders, of 103. companies of Foot, and four thousand Horsemen. Among these seven hundred English fugitives, which were had of all other in most contempt. Neither was Stanley respected or heard, who was set over the English, nor Westmealand, nor any other who offered their help: but for their impiety towards their own Country were shut out from all consultations, and as Men unanimous rejected, not without detestation. And Pope Sixtus the fifth, that in such a purpose would not be wanting, sent Cardinal Alan into Flanders; and renewed the Bulls declaratory of Pius 5. and Gregory the thirteenth. He excommunicated the Queen, deposited her, as followeth her Subjects from all allegiance and as if it had been against the Turks and Infidels, he set forth in print a Conceit, wherein he bestowed plentiful indulgences, out of the treasure of the Church (besides a Million of Gold, or ten hundred thousand Duckats, to be distributed, (the one half in hand, the other half when either England or some famous Haven there-in should be won) upon all them that would joyn their help against England. By which means the Marquess of Burgundy, of the House of Austria, the Duke of Palatinate, Armada Duke of Savoy, Vespasian, Gonzaga, John Medici, and divers other Noblemen were drawn into these wars.

Queen Elizabeth, that she might not be surpris'd at unawares, prepared as great a Navy as she could, and with singular care and providence maketh ready all things necessary for War. And the her self, which was ever most judicious in discerning of Mens wits and aptness, and most happy in making choice, when she made it out of her own Judgment, and not at the commandment of others, designed the best and most serviceable to each several employment. Over the whole Navy she appointed the Lord Admiral Charles Howard, in whom she reposed much trust; and sent him to the West parts of England, where Captain Drake, whom she made Viceadmiral, joyned with him. She commanded Henry Seimor, the second Son to the Duke of Somerset, to watch upon the Belgick Shore with forty English and Dutch Ships, that the Duke of Parma might not come out with his forces. Albeit some were of opinion, that the enemy was to be expected, and set upon by land forces, according as it was upon deliberation resolved, in the time of Henry the eighth, when the French brought a great Navy upon the English Shore.

For the land fight, there were placed on the South Shores twenty thousand: And two armies besides were mustered of the choicest Men for War. The one of these which consisted of 1000. horse, twenty two thousand foot, was the Earl of Leicester set over, and camped at Tilbury on the side of Thames. For the enemy was resolved first to set upon London. The other Army was governed by the Lord Hunsdon, consisting of thirty four thousand foot, and two thousand horse, to guard the Queen.

The Lord Grey, Sir Francis Knolls, Sir John Norrice, Sir Richard Bingham, Sir Roger Williams, Men famously known for military experience, were chosen to confer of the land fight. These thought fit that all those places should be fortified, with Men and Munition, which were commodious to land in, either out of Spain, or out of Flanders; as Milford Haven, Falmouth, Plymouth, Portland, the Isle of Wight, Portsmouth, the open side of Kent called the Downs; the mouth of Thames, Harwich, Tarmouth, Hull, &c. That trained Soldiers through all the maritime Provinces should meet upon warning given to defend these places: that they should, by their best means and power, hinder the Enemy to take land; if he should take land, then should they wait the Country all about, and spoil every thing that might be of any use to the enemy, that so he might find no more victuals than what he brought upon his Shoulders with him. And that by continual Alarums the Enemy should find no rest day day or night. But they should not try any Battle, until divers Captains were met together with their companies. That one Captain might be named in every Shire which might command.

Two years before, the Duke of Parma considering how hard a matter it was to end the Belgick War, so long as it was continually nourished and supported with aid from the Queen; he moved for a treaty of peace, by the means of Sir James Croft, one of the Privy Council, a Man desirous of peace, and Andrew Lee a Dutchman, and professed that the Spaniard had delegated Authority to him for this purpose. But the Queen fearing that there was some cunning in this seeking of peace, that the friendship between her and the confederate Princes might be dissolved, and that so they might secretly be drawn to the Spaniard; she deferred that treaty for some time. But now, that the wars on both sides prepared might be turned away; she was content to treat of peace; but so, as still holding the Weapons in her hand.

For this purpose in February, Delegates were sent into Flanders, the Earl of Darby, the Lord Cobham, Sir James Croft, Doctor Dale, and Doctor Rogers. These were received with all humanity on the Dukes behalf; and they presently sent Dr. Dale to him, that a place might be appointed for their treating, and that they might see the Authority delegated to him by the Spanish King. He appointed the place near to Offend, not in Offend, which then was holden of English against the King. His Authority delegated he promised then to shew, when they were once met together. He wished them to make good speed in the business, lest somewhat might fall out in the mean time which might trouble the motions of peace. Richardus spake somewhat more plainly, That he knew not what in this interim should be done against England.

Not long after, Doctor Rogers was sent to the Prince, by an express commandment from the Queen, to know the truth, whether the Spaniard had resolved to invade England, which he and Richardus seemed to signify. He affirmed, that he did not so much as think of the invasion of England; when he wished that the business might proceed with speed; and was in a manner offended with Richardus, who denied that such words fell from him.

The twelfth of April the Count Arenberg, Chamipigny, Richardus, D. Maefius, and Garnier, delegated from the Prince of Parma, met with the English, and yielded to them the honour both in walking and sitting. And when they affirmed that the Duke had full Authority to treat of peace, the English moved, that first a truce might be made. Which they denied; alleging that that thing must needs be hurtful to the Spaniard, who had for six Months maintained a great Army, which might not be dismissed upon a truce; but upon an absolute peace. The English urged, That a Truce was promised before they came into Flanders. The Spaniard against that held, That six Months since a Truce was promised; which they granted, but was not admitted. Neither was it in the Queens power to undertake a Truce for Holland and Zeland, who daily attempted Hostility. The English moved instantly, that the Truce might be general for all the Queens Territories; and for the Kingdom of Scotland; but they would have it but for four Dutch Towns which were in the Queens hands; that is, Offend, Flushing, Bergen up Zoom, and the Briel; and these only during the Treating, and twenty days after; and that in the mean time it might be lawful for the Queen to invade Spain, or for the Spaniard to invade England, either from Spain or Flanders. At last, when the English could not obtain an abstinence from arms, and could by no means see the Charter by which the Duke of Parma was authorized to treat of peace; they proposed these things, That the ancient leagues between the Kings of England and the Dukes of Burgundy might be renewed and confirmed; That all the Dutch might fully enjoy their own privileges; That with freedom of Conscience they might serve God; That the Spanish and foreign Soldiers might be put out of Dutchland, that neither the Dutch nor their neighbouring nations might fear them. If these things might be granted, the Queen would come to equal conditions concerning the Towns which now she held (that all might know, that she took up arms not for her own gain; but for the necessary defence both of her self and of the Dutch) so that the Money which is owing therefore be repayed. To the which they answered, that for renewing the old Leagues there should be no difficulty, when they might have a friendly conference of that thing. That concerning the privileges of the Dutch, there was no cause why forraign Princes should take care, which privileges were most favourably granted not only to Provinces and Towns reconciled, but even to such as by force of Arms are brought into Subjection. That forraign Souldiers were held upon urgent necessity, when as Holland, England, and France were all in Arms.

Touching those Towns taken from the King of Spain, and the repaying of the money, they answered, That the Spaniards might demand as many Myriads of Crowns to be from the Queen repayed him, as the Belgicke War hath cost him since the time that he hath favoured and protected the Dutch against him.

At this time Doctor Dale by the Queens command, going to the Duke of Parma, did gently expostulate with him touching a Book printed there, set out lately by Cardinal Allen, wherein he exhorts the Nobles and People of England and Ireland to joyn themselves to the King of Spain forces, under the conduct of the Prince of Parma, for the Execution of the Sentence of Pope Sixtus the fifth against the Queen, declared by his Bull; in the which she is declared an Heretick, illegitimate, cruel against Mary Queen of Scots, and her Subjects were commanded to help Parma against her: for at that time a great number of those Bulls and Books were printed at Antwerp to be dispersed through England. The Duke denied that he had seen such a Bull or Book, neither would he do any thing by the Popes Authority; as for his own King, him he must obey. Yet he said, he so observed the Queen for her princely virtues, that after the King of Spain he offered all service to her. That he had perswaded the King of Spain to yield to this treaty of peace, which is more profitable for English than Spanish: for if they should be overcome they would easily repair their loss, but if you be overcome the Kingdom is lost.

To whom Dale replied, That our Queen was sufficiently furnished with forces to defend the Kingdom. That a Kingdom will not easily be gotten by the fortune of one Battel, seeing the King of Spain in so long a War is not yet able to recover his antient Patrimony in the Netherlands.

Well, quoth the Duke, be it so, these things are in Gods Hands.

After this the Delegates contended among themselves by mutual replications, weaving and unweaving the same web. The English were earnest in this, that freedom of Religion might be granted at least for two years to the confederate Provinces. They answered, That as the King of Spain had not intreated that for English Catholics; so they hoped the Queen in her wisdom would not intreat any thing of the King of Spain which might stand against his Honor, his Oath, and his Conscience.

Then they demanded the money due from the States of Brabant; it was answered, That the money was lent without the Kings Authority or privy: but let the account be taken, how much the money was, and how much the King hath spent in these Wars, and then it may appear who should look for repayment.

Thus the English of set purpose were from time to time driven off, until the Spanish Fleet was come near the English shore, and the noise of Guns were heard from Sea. Then had they leave to depart, and were by the Delegates honourably brought to the Borders near to Calis. The Duke of Parma had in the mean time brought all his forces to the Sea Shore.

Thus this Conference came to nothing; undertaken by the Queen, as the wiser then thought, to avert the Spanish Fleet; continued by the Spaniards, that he might oppress the Queen, being as he supposed unprovided, and not expecting the danger. So both of them tried to use time to their best advantages.

In fine the Spanish Fleet well furnished with Men, Munition, Engines, and all warlike preparation, the best indeed that was ever seen upon the Ocean, called by that arrogant title the Invincible Navy, consisting of a hundred and thirty Ships, wherein there were nineteen thousand two hundred ninety; Mariners Eight thousand three hundred and fifty; chained rowers eleven thousand and eighty; great Ordnance Eleven thousand six hundred and thirty. The chief commander was Perezius Gysmannus, Duke of Medina Sidonia; (for Antonius Columna Duke of Palan and Marquels of Saint Croix, unto whom the chief Government was allotted, dyed whilst things were preparing.) And under him also Joannes Martinus Ricaldus, a Man of great experience in Sea Affairs.

The 30. of May they loosed out of the River Tagus, and purposing to hold their course to the Groin, in Galicia, they were beaten and scattered by a tempest: three Gallies by the help of David Gwin an English Servant, and by the perfidiousness of Turks which rowed, were carried away into France. The Fleet with much ado after some days came to the Groin and other Harbours near adjoining. The report was, that the Fleet was so shaken with this Tempest, that the Queen was perswaded, that she was not to expect that Fleet this year. And Sir Francis Walsingham, Secretary, wrote to the Lord Admiral, that he might fend back four of the greatest Ships, as if the War had been ended. But the Lord Admiral did not easily give credit to that report; yet with a gentle answer entreated him to believe nothing hastily in so important a matter: As also that he might be permitted to keep those Ships with him which he had, though it were upon his own charges. And finding a favourable Wind turned Sails towards Spain, to surprise the enemies shaken Ships in their Harbours. When he was not far from the Shore of Spain, the Wind turning, and he being charged to defend the English Shore, fearing that the enemies unseen might by the same Wind be driven to England, he returned unto Flintmouth.

Now with the same Wind, the twelfth of July the Duke of Medina with his Fleet departed from the Groin. And after a few days he sent Rodericus Telis into Flanders, to advertise the Duke of Parma, giving him warning that the Fleet was approaching, and therefore he was to make himself ready. For Medina his Commission was to joyn himself with the Ships and Souldiers of Parma; and under the protection of his Fleet, to bring them into England, and to land his land forces upon Thames side.

The sixteenth day (with the relator) there was a great calm, and a thick cloud was upon the Sea till noon: then the North-Wind blowing roughly, and again the West-Wind till midnight, and after that the East; the Spanish Navy was scattered, and hardly gathered together until they came within the sight of England the nineteenth day of July. Upon which day the Lord Admiral was certified by Flemming (who had been a Pirate, that the Spanish Fleet was entered into the English Sea, which the Mariners call the Channel, and was descryed near to the Lizard. The Lord Admiral brought forth the English Fleet into the Sea, but not without great difficulty, by the skill, labour, and alacrity of the Souldiers and Mariners, every one labouring; yea the Lord Admiral himself put his hand to this work.

The next day the English Fleet viewed the Spanish Fleet coming along with Towers like Castles in height, their front crooked like the fashion of the Moon, the horns of the Front were extended one from the other about seven miles, or as some say eight miles asunder, sailing with the labour of the Winds, the Ocean as it were groaning under it; their Sail was but slow, and yet at full Sail before the Wind. The English were willing to let them hold on their course, and when they were passed by, got behind them, and so got the help of the Wind.

Upon the one and twentieth of July, the Lord Admiral of England sent a Pinace before, called the Defiance, to denounce the battel by shooting off some pieces. And being himself in the Arch-Royal (the English Pretorian Ship or Admiral) he set upon a Ship which he took to be the Spanish Admiral, but it was the Ship of Alfonso Leva. Upon that he bestowed much Shot. Presently Drake, Hawkins, and Forbisher came in upon the Spanish hindmost Ships, which Ricaldus governed. Upon these they thundered. Ricaldus laboured as much as lay in him to stay his Men, who fled away in their Navy, until his Ship beaten and much battered with many Shot hardly recovered recovered the Fleet. Thn the Duke Medina gathered together his dissipated Fleet, and setting up more Sail, held on their course. Indeed they could do no other, for the English had gotten the advantage of the wind, and their Ships were much more nimble, and ready with incredible celerity to come upon the enemy with a full course, and then to turn and return, and be on every side at their pleasure. After a long fight, and that each of them had taken some trial, as of their own courage, so of the Spaniards also, the Lord Admiral thought good not to continue the same any longer, in regard that forty Ships were then absent, which at that instant were scarce drawn out of Plymouth Haven.

The night following, St. Katherine a Spanish Ship, being fore torn with the fight, was received into the midst of the Navy to be mended. Here a great Cantabrian Ship of Oquenda, wherein was the Treasurer of the Camp, by force of Gun-powder that had taken fire, was fired: yet it was quenched in time by the Ships that came to help her. Of these that came to help the fired ship, one was a Galeon, in which was Petrus Waldeck; the Foremast of the Galeon was caught in the tackling of another ship, and broken. This was taken by Drake, who sent Waldeck to Dartmouth, and a great sum of money, viz. fifty five thousand Duckets, which he distributed amongst the Souldiers. This Waldeck coming into Drakes presence, kissed his hand, and told him they had all resolved to die; they had not been so happy as to fall into his hands, whom he knew to be Noble. That night he was appointed to set forth light, but neglected it; and some German Merchant Ships coming by that night, he thinking them to be enemies followed them so far, that the English Navy rested all night when they could see no light set forth. Neither did he nor the rest of the Navy find the Admiral until the next day at Even. The Admiral all the night proceeding with the Bear and the Mary Rose did carefully follow the Spaniards with watchfulness. The Duke was busied in ordering his Navy. Alfonso Leiva was commanded to joyn the first and last Companies. Every ship had his station assigned according to that prescribed form which was appointed in Spain; it was present death to forsake his station. This done, he sent Gladius an Anceani to Parma, which might declare to him in what case they were, and left that Cantabrian ship of Oquenda to the wind and Sea, having taken out the Money and Mariners, and put them in other ships. Yet it seemeth that he had not care of all for that Ship the same day with fifty Mariners and Souldiers lamed, and half burnt, fell into the Hands of the English, and was carried to Weymouth.

The three and twentieth of the same Month, the Spaniards having a favourable North wind turned Sails upon the English; the English being much readier in the use of their ships, set about a compass for the wind, and having gotten advantage of the wind, they came to the fight on both sides. They fought a while confusedly with variable success: whilst on the one side the English with great courage delivered the London ships with were inclosed about by the Spaniards: on the other side the Spaniards by valour freed Ricaldos from the extreme danger he was in: great were the effusions which by beating of Ordnances were heard this day. But the loss (by the good providence of God) fell upon the Spanish side, their ships being so high that the shot went over our English ships; and the English having such a fair mark at their taller ships never shot in vain. Amidst which encounters, Cock an Englishman, being caught indeed in the midst of the Spanish ships, could not be recovered, but perished, howbeit with great honor he revenged himself. Thus a long time the English ships with great agility were sometimes upon the Spaniards, giving them the one side, and then the other, and presently were off again, and still took the Sea, to make themselves ready to come in again. Whereas the Spanish ships being of great burthen were troubled and hindered, and stood to bee marks for the English Bullets. For all that the Admiral would not admit the English to come to board their ships, because they had a full army in their ships, which he had not; their ships were many in number, and greater, and higher, that if they had come to grapple, as some would have had it, the English being much lower then the Spanish ships must needs have had the worst of them that fought from the higher ships. And if the English had been overcome, the loss would have been greater than the victory could have been; for ours being overcome would have put the Kingdom in hazard.

The four and twentieth day of July they gave over the fighting on both sides. The Admiral sent some small Barks to the next English shore, to supply the provision; And divided all his Navy into four Squadrons; The first whereof was under his own government; the next Drake governed; the third Hawkins; the last Forbisher. And he appointed out of ever Squadron certain little ships, which on divers sides might set upon the Spaniards in the night, but a sudden calm took them, and so that advice was without effect.

The five and twentieth day, being St. James day, S. Anne the Galeon of Portugal, not being able to hold course with the rest, was set upon by some small English ships. To whose aid came in Leva, and Didacus Telles Enriquez with three Galeasses: which the Admiral and the Lord Thomas Howard espying, made in against the Galeasses (the calm was so great that they were drawn in by Boats with cords) and did so beat upon the Galeasses with great shot, that with much ado, and not without great loss, they hardly recovered the Galeon. The Spaniards reported that the Admiral of Spain was that day in the hindmost company, and being come nearer the English ships then before, was fore beaten with the English great Ordnance, many men slain in her, her great mast overthrown. And after that the Admiral of Spain, accompanied with Ricaldos and others, did set upon the English Admiral, who by the benefit of the wind suddenly turning escaped. The Spaniards hold on their course again, and send to the Duke of Parma, that with all speed he should joyn his ships with the Kings Fleet. These things the English knew not, who write that they had stricken the Lanthorn from one of the Spanish ships, the Stern from another, and had fore beaten a third, doing much harm to her. That the Non-Parigly, and the Mary Rose fought a while with the Spaniards; and the Triumph being in danger, other ships came in good time to help her.

The next day the Lord Admiral knighted the Lord Thomas Howard, The Lord Sheffield, Roger Townshend, John Hawkins, and Martin Forbisher, for their valour well employed in the last fight. After this they resolved not to set upon the Enemy until they came into the freight of Calis, where Henry Sessor, and William Winter staid for their coming. Thus with the fair gale the Spanish Fleet goeth forward, and the English followed. This great Spanish Armadoe was so far from being esteemed invincible in the opinions of the English, that many young men and Gentlemen, in hope to be partakers of a famous victory against the Spaniards, provided Ships of their own charges, and joyned themselves to the English Fleet; among whom were the Earls of Essex, of Northumberland, of Cumberland, Thomas and Robert Cecilles, Henry Brooks, William Hutton, Robert Cary, Ambrose Willoughby, Thomas Gerard, Arthur Gorge, and other Gentlemen of good note and ability.

The seven and twentieth day at Even, the Spaniards cast anchor near to Cadiz, being admonished of their skilful Sea-men, that if they went any further, they might be endangered by force of that Tide to be driven into the North Ocean. Near to them stood the English Admiral with his Fleet within a great Guns shot. To the Admiral, Sessor and Winter now joyn their ships; so that now there were an hundred and forty ships in the English Fleet, able and well furnished for fight, for Sail, and to turn which way was needful: and yet there were but fifteen of these which bore the burden of batrel and repulsed the enemy. The Spaniard, as often he had done before, so now with great earnestness sent to the Duke of Parma to send forty fire Boats, without the which they could not fight with the English, because of the greatness and flowiness of their own ships, and the agility of the English ships. And intreating him by all means now to come to Sea with his Army, which Army was now to be protected as it were under the wings of the Spanish Armadoe, until they took land in England.

The third fight.

Knights made.

Paraphrasing to execute this design on the 12. of August, the night being dark, but by the same was prevented, and so the next Section following.

The Admiral would not suffer his ships to come to grapple with the Spaniards.

But the Duke was unprovided, and could not come out at an instant. The broad Ships with flat bottoms being then full of chinks must be mended. Victuals wanted and must be provided. The Mariners being long kept against their wills began to shrink away. The Ports of Dunkirk and Nieport, by which he must bring his Army to the Sea, were now so beset with the strong ships of Holland and Zealand, which were furnished with great and small munition, that he was not able to come to Sea, unless he would come upon his own apparent destruction, and cast himself and his men wilfully into a headlong danger. Yet he omitted nothing that might be done, being a man eager and industrious, and inflamed with a desire of overcoming England.

stragem of the English

But Queen Elizabeth her providence and care prevented both the diligence of this man, and the credulous hope of the Spaniard: for by her commandment the next day the Admiral took eight of their worst ships, charging the Ordnance therein up to the mouth with small shot, nails, and stones, and dressed them with wildfire, pitch and rosin, and filled them full of brimston and some other matter fit for fire, and these being set on fire by the ministry and guiding of Young and Prowse, were secretly in the night by the help of the wind set full upon the Spanish Fleet, which on Sunday the seventh of August they sent in among them as they lay at anchor.

When the Spaniards saw them come near, the flame shining and giving light all over the Sea; they supposing those ships, besides the danger of fire, to have been also furnished with deadly Engines, to make horrible destruction among them; lifting up a most hideous woful cry, some pull up anchors, some for hast cut their Cables, they set up their Sails, they apply their Oars, and stricken with a Panick terror, in great haste they fled most confusedly. Among them the Pretorian Gallies floating upon the Seas, her Rudder being broken, in great danger and fear drew towards Calis, and sticking in the Sand was taken by Amias Preston, Thomas Gerard, and Harvey; Hugh Moncada the Governor was slain, the Soldiers and Mariners were either killed or drowned; In her there was found great store of Gold, which fell to be the prey of the English. The ship and Ordnance fell to the share of the Governour of Calis.

The Spaniards report, that the Duke when he saw the fiery ships coming commanded all the fleet to pull up their anchors, but so as the danger being past, every ship might return again to his station: and he himself returned, giving a light to the rest by shooting off a Gun; which was heard but of a few, for they were far off scattered, some into the open Ocean, some through fear were driven upon the Shallows of the coast of Flanders.

The 4th Fight
before Graveling, Aug.

Over against Graveling the Spanish fleet began to gather themselves together. But upon them came Drake and Fenner, and battered them with great Ordnance: to these Fenton, Southwel, Beefton, Croft, Riman, and presently after the Lord Admiral, Thomas Howard, and Sheffield came in and all joyned together. The Duke Medina, Leva, Oquenda, Ricalaus, and others with much ado getting themselves out of the shallows sustained the English force as well as they might, until most of their ships were pierced and torn; the Gallion St. Matthew, governed by Diego Pimentellus, coming to aid Francis Toletan, being in the Sr. Philip, was pierced and shaken with the reiterated shots of Seimer and Winter, and driven to Offend, and was at last taken by the Flushingiers. The S. Philip came to the like end; so did the Gallion of Biscay and divers others.

The last day of this Month, the Spanish Fleet striving to recover the Straights again, were driven toward Zealand. The English left off pursuing them, as the Spaniards thought, because they saw them in a manner cast away; for they could not avoid the shallows of Zealand. But the wind turning, they got them out of the shallows, and then began to consult what were best for them to do. By common consent they resolved to return into Spain by the Northern Seas, for they wanted many necessaries, especially shot, their ships were torn, and they had no hope that the Duke of Parma could bring forth his Forces. And so they took the Sea, and followed the coast toward the North. The English Navy followed, and sometimes the Spanish turned upon the English, inasmuch that it was thought by many that they would turn back again.

A description of the Queens coming to the Camp at Tilbury, with the manner of her behaviour there, as it is related by a Popish Spy, in a Letter written here in England to Menda. The Copy of which Letter by good hap was found in the Chamber of one Richard Leigh a Seminary Priest, as well in French as English: which Priest was executed for high Treason whilst the Spanish Armado was on the Sea.

She caused also, saith he, an Army to incamp near the Sea side upon the River of Thames. After the Army was come thither, she would not by any advice be stayed, but for comfort of her people, and to shew her own magnanimity of heart, she went threunto, lying at that time between the City of London and the Sea, under the charge of the Earl of Leicester, placing herself between the Enemy and her City; and there she viewed her Army, passing through it divers times, and lodging in the borders of it, returned again and dined in the Army. First viewing from place to place the people as they were by their Countries lodged and quartered by their several Camps. Afterwards when they were all reduced into battel, prepared as it were for fight, she rode round about with a Leaders staff in her hand, only accompanied with the General and three or four others attending upon her: but yet to shew her State (I well marked it) she had the sword carried before her by the Earl of Ormond. There she was generally saluted with cries, with shouts, with all tokens of love, of obedience, of readines, and willingness to fight for her, as seldom hath the like been seen in an Army, considering she was a Queen. All which tended to shew a marvellous concord in a mutual love between a Queen and her Subjects, and of reverence and obedience of Subjects to their Sovereign; all which she requited with very princely thanks and a good speech.

I could enlarge the description hereof with many more particulars of mine own sight; for thither I went as many others did, and all that day wandering from place to place, I never heard any word spoken of her, but in praising her for her stately person and princely behaviour, and in praying for her life and safety, with cursing of all her Enemies, both Traitors and all Papists, with earnest desire to venture their lives for her safety. And besides such particular acclamations, the whole Army in every quarter did so devoutly at certain times sing in her hearing, in very tunable manner, divers Psalms put in form of prayers, in praise to Almighty God, no ways to be misliked, that the greatly commended them, and with very earnest speech thanked God with them. This that I write you may be sure I do not with any comfort, but to give you these manifest arguments, that neither this Queen doth discontent her people, nor her people do shew any discontent in any thing they be commanded to do for her service, as heretofore hath been imagined.

The same day wherein the last fight was, the Duke of Parma, after his Vows offered to the Lady of Halla, came somewhat late to Dunkirk and was received with some opprobrious words of the Spaniards, as if in favour of Queen Elizabeth he had slipped the fairest opportunity that could be to do the service. He to make some satisfaction, punished the Purveyours that had not made provision of beer, bread, and victuals which was not yet ready nor embarked, secretly smiting at the insolvency of the Spaniards, when he heard them glorying, that what way soever they came upon England, they would have an undoubted victory; that the English were not able to endure the sight of them. Bernardinus Mendoza did indeed by Books in France sing a foolish and lying triumphant song before the victory. The English Admiral appointed Seimer and the Hollanders to watch upon the coast of Flanders, that the Duke of Parma should not come out; himself followed the Spaniards upon their Backs, until they were past Edenborough Firth.

The Spaniards seeing all hopes fail, and finding no other help for themselves but by flight, fled again and never made stay. And so this great Navy, being three years preparing with great cost, was within a Month overthrown, and after many were killed, being chased away (of English there were not one hundred lost, nor one Ship lost, saving that of Cocke) was driven about al Britain by Scotland, Orcaides, Ireland, tossed and shaken with Tempests, and much lessened, and came home without glory. Whereupon some Money was coyned with a Navy fleeing away at full sail, and this Inscription, Venit, Vidit, Fugit. Other were coyned with the Ships fired, the Navy confounded, in honour of the Queen, inscribed, Dux famina fedit. As they fled, it is certain that many of their Ships were cast away upon the shoars of Scotland and Ireland. More than seven hundred Soldiers and Mariners were cast up upon the Scottish shoar, who at the Duke of Parma his intercession with the Scots King, the Queen of England consenting, were after a year sent into Flanders. But they that were cast up upon the Irish shoar by Tempest came to more miserable fortunes; for some were killed by the wild Irish, others by the Deputies command; for he fearing that they might joyn themselves to the wild Irish (and Bingham the Governour of Connaught being once or twice commanded to slay them having yielded, but refusing to do it) Fowle the Under-Marshal was sent and killed them; which cruelty the Queen much condemned; whereupon the rest being afraid, sick and hungry, with their torn Ships committed themselves to the Sea, and many were drowned.

Q. Elizabeth gives

God for the unexpected
a Deliverance.

Queen Elizabeth came in publick Thanksgiving to St. Pauls Church, in a Chariot drawn with two Horses, her Nobles accompanying her with a very gallant Train through the Streets of London which were hung with blew Cloth: the Companies standing on both sides, were in their Liveries; the Banners that were taken from the Enemies were spread; She heard the Sermon, and publick Thanks were rendered unto God with great joy. This publick Joy was augmented when Sir Robert Sidney, returning out of Scotland, brought from the King assurance of his noble mind and affection to the Queen, and to Religion; which as in sincerity he had established, so he purposed to maintain with all his power. Sir Robert Sidney was sent to him when the Spanish Fleet was coming, to congratulate and to give him thanks for his propense affection towards the maintenance of the common cause; and to declare how ready she would be to help him if the Spaniard should land in Scotland; and that he might recall to memory with what strange ambition the Spaniard had gaped for all Britain, urging the Pope to excommunicate him, to the end that he might be thrust from the Kingdom of Scotland, and from the Succession in England: and to give him notice of the threatening of Alonso and the Popes Nuncio, who threatened his ruine if they could work it; and therefore warned him to take especial heed to the Scottish Papists.

The King pleasantly answered, That he looked for no other benefit from the Spaniard, than that which Polyphemus promised to Ulysses, to devour him last after his Fellows were devoured.

To close up this whole relation, hear what Theodore Beza writes in his certain gratulatory Verses written in Latin, and sent unto her Majesty: the effect of which Verses is this in English.

Wish Navy huge the Spaniard proud
The English Seas had spread,
And all to set the English Crown
Upon the Spanish Head.

And would you gladly understand
The cause of all this rout,
Ambition first did lay the Plot,
And Lucre brought them out.

How well this Pride thus puffed up
A puff did overblow:
And swelling wave such swelling Wights
How well did overflow.

How well that Warrior of Mankind,
That Spanish cruel Wolf,
Was roft and tumbled up and down
Within the Ocean Gulf.

And you for whom both all the Winds
And all the Waters fight;
O Noble Queen, of all the World
The only true delight.

Go forward still to rule for God,
Ambition laid aside;
Go forward still for Christ his Flock
In bounty to provide.

That thou maist England govern long,
Long England thee enjoy,
As well a love unto the good,
As to the bad annoy.

From Geneva, besieged by the Duke of Savoy, the twelfth day of August, Anno 1589.

Your Majesties most humble Orator, Theodore Beza.

The death of the Duke of Guise, and Henry the third King of France.

IT was not long after that the Duke of Guise, who was slain by the Lord Laugna at the Kings Chamber Door, and King Henry the third were taken away; he being the last of the House of Vallois, and dying without any lawfull Heirs of his Body begotten.

The manner of whose death was thus. A Frier of the Order of St. Dominick, called James Clement, pretended he had matters of great consequence to impart to the King: who being admitted into his presence, upon his knees presented the King with a Letter which he drew out of one sleeve; which whilst the King attentively read, the Frier pulled forth a poysoned Knife out of his other sleeve, wherewith he stabbed the King into the lower part of his Belly. The King feeling himself hurt therewith, snatching it out of the wound, struck the same into the Friers eye, who hasting to get away, the King crying out. His Lords and Gentlemen perceiving what the Frier had done, slew him presently with Rapiers and Swords. The King before he died, having reigned fourteen years and seven months, called for the King of Navarre, all the Princes, Lords and Noblemen, that were in his Camp, and declared that the King of Navarre was the true lawfull Heir to the Crown of France; willing them all to acknowledge him for their King, and that notice should likewise be given throughout all his Camp and Kingdom also.

Thus the Sovereign Judge of the World made way for the entrance of Henry the Fourth to have Dominion over the Kingdom of France. Now howsoever from the year 1589 to this present year 1598, the Churches of Christ have seen marvellous changes, and how the League for a time made many furious Onsets; yet it pleased God so to moderate things, that the faithful were preserved from being persecuted; yea, they obtained of their Prince many priviledges and favours. For the King in the first years of his Reign continuing in the profession of the true Religion, wherein he had been bred and brought up, did manfully resist both those of the League, and the Spaniards, the great God of Battels blessing the right and just Wars undertaken by this Prince, to the confusion of all his Enemies, till he fell to side with Popery; though the affairs of his Kingdom gained but little thereby.

A Note touching the Popes Bull.

THE Leaguers seeing what prosperous success God gave King Henry the Fourth in his Wars undertaken against them, fearing that in the end all would yield unto him, they procured a new Excommunication from Rome, against him and all his faithful Subjects, causing

the

the same to be published at Pontide P Arch in Normandy by, Marcellus Luidrianus a malapert Jesuit. The King, being advertised thereof, commanded his Court of Parliament holden at Cane, to proceed again Pope Gregory the fourteenth who sent it, and his Nuncio that brought it, as against Tyrants, Conspirators with Rebels, perturbors of the State, fowers of seditions, and the common and Notorious Enemies of God and all goodness.

Then taking the Popes Bull, he caused it to be fastened to a Gibbet at Tours, by the common Hangman of the Town, and there to be consumed to ashes, to the great rejoicing of all the beholders.

The History of one Margaret Pierrone, who chose rather to be burned her self, than willingly to burn her Bible, Anno 1593.

THere was one Margaret Pierrone born in a Village of Cambray called Sanfay, who with her Husband retired into the City of the Valencians. Now because she could not endure the bad qualities of a Maid Servant of hers, she was by her said Maid accused to the new Sect-Masters surnamed the Jesuites, for that she had not been in many years at the Mass, as also for keeping in her house a Bible, in reading whereof was her whole delight. They acquainting the Magistrates herewith, she was by and by apprehended: some Friends sent her an inkling thereof beforehand once or twice, that she should get her somewhere out of the way, but the errand was not done, God having a purpose that she should bear witness of his truth, to fill up the number of those that were to die for the name of Jesus.

Being in Prison, the Judges calling her before them, said Margaret, are you not willing to return home unto your house, and there live with your Husband and Children? Yes faith she, if it may stand with the good will of God. They added further, that they had so wrought with their Fathers the Jesuites, that in doing a final matter she might be set at liberty: If, faith she, it be not a thing contrary to Gods glory and mine own Salvation, you shall hear what I will say. No such thing, Margaret, said they: for a scaffold shall be erected in the chief place of the City, upon which you are to present your self, and there to crave pardon for offending the Law; then a fire being kindled, you must cast your Bible therein to be consumed, without speaking any word at all,

I pray you my Master tell me, faith she, Is my Bible a good Book, or no? Yes, we confess it is, said they; If you allow it to be good, said the Woman, why would you have me cast it into the fire? Only said they, to give the Jesuits content. Imagine it to be but paper that you burn, and then all is well enough, do so much for saving your life, and we will meddle no more with you; you may buy you another when you will.

They spent about two hours in persuading her hereto, shewing how the might do a less evil, that a greater good might come of it. By the help of God, faith she, I will never consent to do it. What would the people say, when they see me burn my Bible? will they not exclaim and say, yonder is a wretched Woman indeed, that will burn the Bible wherein are contained all the Articles of our Christian Faith? I will burn my Body sure, before that I will burn my Bible.

Then seeing she would in no sort conform her self either to the will of the Jesuites, or to theirs, they caused her to be committed close Prisoner, and to be fed only with Bread and Water, none to be permitted so much as to speak unto her, thinking by this hard usage to overcome her: but all was to no purpose. Being thus long shut up, and no news heard of her one way or other, every one imagined that they had put her to death privily. Her Judges were willing to have saved her life, sending often a Doctor unto her called N. of Vvenoyne to turn her from her Resolution; but he found it too hard a task for him to effect, often confessing to them that sent him, that he found no cause at all in her why they should put her to death.

But on Wednesday the two and twentieth of January 1593. she was condemned to be brought upon a stage set up in the Market place before the Town-House, Anno 1593. there to see her Books burnt; then her self to be strangled at a Post, and her Body dragged to the Dunghill without the City. She coming to the place, and ascending the Scaffold, distinctly pronounced the Lords Prayer. Then seeing her Books burned in her presence, she uttered these words with an audible Voice; you burn there the Word of God, which your selves have acknowledged to be good and holy. Having again repeated the Lords Prayer, she was strangled and died peaceably in the Lord, so as she was nothing altered in her Colour after she was dead, leaving to the Valencians the truth of this Sentence, Preious in the sight of the Lord is the Martyrdom of his Saints; and to the Judges, and her Hangmen the Jesuites, a perpetual corraive to their Conscience.

An English man burned at Rome.

IN the year 1595. about the end of May there was executed a Young Man at Rome about the age of five and twenty years, who went into the Church of Magdalen, where beholding their behaviour, being pricked forward with Religious Zeal and constant Resolution, not being able to endure the sight of those horrible impieties which were there committed amongst them: As the Bishop was setting forward to go on Procession, this Young Man directed his way towards the Church Porch: and as the Procession began to pass forward he waited till the Bp. came that bare the Host, and in his going forth stepped to the Pike, plucking it out of his Hands, threw it to the ground, saying aloud, ye wretched Idolaters, do ye fall down to a Morfel of Bread? The people presently fell upon the Young Man; yet without touching his Person, notwithstanding the great stirr they made, he was from thence sent to Prison to the Capitol. Complaint being made thereof to Pope Clement the eighth touching all that which had happened; He presently ordained that he which had done it should be burned the same day, for an example and terror to all his Companions. But some of the Popes Cardinals being then at hand, advised that he should be detained rather a while in Prison, to be examined by all exquisite Tortures, to make him confess his fellows, and who had set him on. Having kept him eight days in Prison, nothing could be drawn from him, but this speech, Such was the will of God.

When they saw they could not prevail, his Indictment was framed, and his Sentence registred, namely that he was to pass from the Capitol, Naked unto his middle, and to wear on his head the form of a Devil, or Dragon, his Breaches painted all over with flames of fire, and thus being bound in a Cart, to be burned alive, being first carried in this manner about the City.

The Patient understanding how he was to be handled, lifting up his eyes, implored help from the Almighty, and seeing how he was derided of all, continued in his devotion and Prayers. He could not refrain from uttering somewhat against the life of the Cardinals and their Associates, who hearing it, began to be in a rage, and that he might no longer bewray their wickedness, they caused a great Gagg to be forced into his mouth, which vexed him more then all the rest, when he testified, saying, How shall I call upon my God? But he patiently submitted himself to endure all their cruelties.

In this plight he was brought to Magdalens, where he had cast down the Idol, and there one of the Hangmen cut off his hand before the door: at which the Patient being not much moved, his hand being set on a pole in the Cart, the two Tormentors made him feel the force of the fire taking each of them a great torch in his hand flaming with which they scorched and burned his flesh through all the City of Rome.

At length they arrived at the place called Campio de Fior, by which time the Young Man was brought into a pitiful case, being scorched all over his Body, all blistered and bloody, having nothing whole but his Head, which he now and then lifted up.

Being taken down out of the Cart, and seeing the Post whereunto he was to be fastened with three Chains of Iron; he went of himself to the Post, and falling on his Knees kissed the Chains with which he was there to be bound till the Sacrifice should be ended.

But

Anno 1601. But before the Fire was put to him, he was urged by Friars and Priests to worship an Idol which they presented there before him. From which turning away his face, he shewed unto them his constant resolution to the contrary, holding on his Christian course unto the end : which he truly testified ; for as soon as the flames of Fire seized on him, bowing his head he quietly yielded up his Soul into the hands of God.

The death and Martyrdom of an old Man of Millan, who was burned at Rome.

THe same year they burned an old Man who for a long time had lien in the Inquisitors Caves. He dyed with great constancy and resolution. Before his death he was exhorted and importuned by the Monks to kiss a Crucifix. He seeing their impudency, said, If ye take not this Idol out of my sight, you will constrain me to spit upon it, which when they heard, he was sent away to the Fire, and consumed to Ashes.

The Troubles and Persecution of Bartholomew Copin, a godly and Religious Martyr of Christ.

IN the year 1601. Bartholomew Copin of the Valley of Lafarne resorted unto a place called Aff in Piemont, with certain Merchandise, purposing to vent the same at a Fair there, which was to be kept the day following. It so fell out, that sitting at Supper in the evening with sundry other Merchants, one amongst the rest began to use some speech about the diversities of Religions, and therewithal spake something tending to the disgrace of those of the Vallies of Angrougne and the Neighbour Villages.

Copin hearing such speeches cast forth against his Brethren, as he little expected from men of that sort, and also against their Religion, all which tended to the dishonour of God ; he feared lest it should be offensively taken, if he should not make some reply unto those blasphemies which he heard with his ears, and so answer him who held such a discourse against the Religion which himself professed. He who reproved Copin asked, Are you one of Vandois ? He answered, yes I am. And what, said the other, believe you not that God is in the Host ? No, said Copin. Oh, said the other, see how false your Religion is ! My Religion, said Copin, is no less true than God is God, and as certain as I am sure to die.

The next day Copin was called before the Bishop of Aff, who told him that report had been made to him of some offensive speeches which he had used the night past in his Lodging ; and therefore it behoved him now to acknowledge his fault, if he meant to obtain pardon for the same, otherwise he must look to be chastised according to his demerits.

Copin answered, he had uttered nothing, but that which he was first provided to speak ; nor had he said ought, but what he was resolved to maintain to the hazard of his life. He affirmed that God had bestowed upon him some worldly goods, as also a Wife and Children, but that he was not so glued in his affection to any of them, but he could be content to forgo them all, rather than the peace of a good Conscience.

As touching his carriage and behaviour, if it pleased him, he said, to make enquiry thereof among the Merchants of Aff, they could all resolve him as touching his honest dealing : who also he knew would witness with him, that he had wronged none in all that time he had conversed among them. And inasmuch as he was a Merchant trafficking in and about his lawful calling, he ought to be dismissed and to be no further molested. For if it were lawful for Jews and Turks to trade in Fairs and Markets, and to use Commerce throughout Piemont ; that favor ought much more to be permitted unto him who was a Christian. And as touching the matter of Religion, whereabout he was accused, he medled not at all therewith for his own particular, but had questions propounded to him concerning the same by others ; in which regard leave was granted him to answer and to yield a reason of his Faith in any place, to any whomsoever they were that should ask what he thought of the same : yea a liberty was granted even by his Excellency to those of the Vallies of Vandois to answer any man to a question demanded ; provided that he proceeded not to teach and instruct others.

The Bishop regarded none of these allegations ; but commanded he should be put into Prison. The next day the Bishops Secretary came to visit Copin, testifying how much good will he bore him ; advising him as a Friend, that if he acknowledged not his fault, he was in great danger of his life.

Copin answered, that his life was in the hands of God, and that he would never seek to save it to the prejudice of Gods glory : also, that he had not above two or three turns to fetch here in this world, before he arrived in Heaven ; and therefore prayed God so to assist him by his grace, that he might never leave the strait way which leadeth thereto.

A few days after he was examined by a Monk, who was an Inquisitor, in the presence of the Bishop, who vexed him a long while with his signed discourse, and by fair words endeavoured to draw him to abjure his Religion. But Copin resisted him still by the holy Scriptures ; shewing that if he should now be ashamed of Christ and deny him, Christ might justly be ashamed of him, and utterly deny him before his Heavenly Father.

The Monk finished his dispute with this dogged farewell, Away thou cursed Lutheran ; thou shalt go to all the Devils in Hell ; and when thou comest to be tormented amongst these unclean Spirits, then wilt thou remember these holy admonitions which we have tendered unto thee for the saving of thy Soul, but thou hadst rather go to Hell, than to reconcile thyself to thy holy Mother the Church. It is not long since, said Copin, that I was reconciled to the true Church.

After many violent assaults they gave way for his Wife to come unto him, and with her one of his Sons promising them to set him at liberty to go home with them, if he would make amends for his fault committed, by acknowledging the same. They gave his Son and Wife leave, to this purpose, to stay Supper with him in Prison : during which time he used many exhortations tending to patience ; albeit the Wife should depart to her house without an Husband, or the Child without his Father : for be you well assured, said he, that God will be a better Husband and a Father unto you than ever I was or can be. For his own part, he said, he was not bound to love Wife or Children more than Christ : besides, they had cause to rejoice, and to think him happy, that God would honour him so far as to bear witness to his Truth with the loss of his life, and hoped, he said, that God would be so favorable to him, as to support him under any torments he was to endure for his glories sake.

In conclusion he commended his Son and one Daughter to his Wives care, which God had given them in the married estate, charging her again and again to see them brought up virtuously and in the fear of God. He charged his Son to obey his Mother, so should he be made partaker of the promised blessing. He intreated them both to pray for him, that God would fortifie him against all temptations. And thus having blessed his Son, and taken leave of his Wife, they were conducted out of the Prison, and he shut up as he was before.

The Woman and her Son were dissolved into Tears, sighing and crying out, that it would have moved the honest heart to Compassion : but this holy man, not contenting himself with that he had said to them by word of mouth, writ unto his Wife this Letter ensuing, the original whereof she hath exhibited to us, written and signed with the hand of the said Copin ; the inscription thus following :

To my wel-beloved Wife ; Susanna Copin, from the Tower of Lafarne.

Dear yoke-fellow ; I received much consolation by your coming to this place, and by so much the more as it was beyond my expectation ; and I suppose you also were not a little comforted that you had such an opportunity offered you, as to sup with me the last night, being Saturday the 15. of September 1601 : I know not well what they aimed at in permitting you so to do. But God ordereth all these things. But as far as I can guess, it shall be the last time that ever we shall sup together in this life : and therefore pray to God that he will not cease to be a comfort unto you. Trust you still in him him, for he hath promised never to leave nor forsake those that put their trust in him. God hath endued you with wisdom, govern your own family in such sort, that our Children Samuel and Martha may be obedient unto you: whom in the name and authority of God, I command that they obey you, for so the blessing of Almighty God shall light upon them.

Dear Wife, be not over pensive for me, for if God hath ordained me now to attain unto the end of my race, and that I must render into the hands of the Almighty my Soul, which so long time he hath lent me; my hope is, that of his holy and Divine mercy he will receive it into his Kingdom, for his own beloved Sons (like Jesus Christ our Lord, through whom I believe that my sins are forgiven, for the only merit of his holy death and Passion. Also my prayer is, that he will assist me by the power of his holy Spirit unto my last breath.

Be fervent in Prayer, and in all other parts of Gods worship and service, for this is the way to true blessedness. Take no care about sending any thing unto me for these three weeks, and then I pray you send me some money, if you think good, to give the Taylor, and some what more for mine own necessities, if it please God I live so long. Also I pray you call to mind what I have often told you, namely how God prolonged King Hezekias life for fifteen years. But he hath preserved my life much longer; for it is many years ago since you saw me at the point of death, and through Gods goodness I am alive; and I hope, yea I am assured, that he will so long preserve me as shall be for his glory and my eternal good, through his only free-Grace.

From the Prison of Asst, the sixteenth of September, 1601.

The Bishop of Asst was somewhat troubled about this his Prisoner; for if he had let him go, he feared it would breed some scandal, and many might thereby be emboldened to open their mouths wide against the Roman Religion. Besides, there was a Clause in the Contract made between his Excellency and the People of Vandoi, which exempted those of the Religion from offence, in these words; And if it shall fall out that they be asked or questioned withal in Piemont, about the cause of Religion, by any of his Excellencies Subjects, it shall be lawful for those of the said Religion to answer without suffering any penal or personal punishment for the same.

Now Copin had a question put to him, in which respect he ought to have been cleared. But the Bishop would by no means hear that he had unjustly imprisoned him; and therefore that his death should not be laid to his charge, nor yet that he should be sent away absolved, he sent the cause of his Edictment to Pope Clement the eighth, to know what should be done with him. We cannot learn what answer the Pope returned to the Bishop; but not long after this good man was found dead in Prison, not without some apparent suspicion of his being strangled there; left if they had executed him in publick, the People should have been edified by his constancy.

Being dead, he was condemned to be burned, and therefore having caused him to be brought out of Prison, they read his Sentence openly, and the Body was cast into the fire.

Thus have you the last among the Vandoi, which is come to our knowledge, that were persecuted to death for the cause of Religion.

Mention hath heretofore been often made of sundry bloody Massacres in foreign parts; but we are now come to fall upon the report of a business near home, which if the most wise and watchful providence of God had not timely and graciously prevented, it would have to the ruine of our Church and State) proved such a Massacre, like whereof the Heart of man never conceived, the Ear of man never heard of, nor the Tongue or Pen of man could scarce ever have uttered; namely, at one blow to have blown up not only the King, Queen, and Royal posterity, but the whole body of the State in general. Now as the Church and State had each of them a share in this so admirable a deliverance from God upon the fifth day of November, Anno 1605. so each of them shewed their care, if it might be, for ever to Anno perpetuate the praise of God for the same on the said day; the one by establishing an Act of Parliament for it; the other by publishing a form of thanksgiving the better to effect it; some expression whereof the Reader may hap to meet with at the end of the discourse following.

A discourse touching the manner of the discovery of the Powder-Treason, with the Examination of some of the Prisoners.

While this Land and whole Monarchy flourished in a most happy and plentiful peace, as well at home as abroad, sustained and conducted by these two main Pillars of all good government, Piety and Justice, no forain grudge, nor inward whispering of discontentment any way appearing; the King being upon his return from his hunting exercise at Royston, upon occasion of the drawing near of the Parliament time, which had been twice prorogued already; partly in regard of the season of the year, and partly of the Term; as the winds are ever stillest immediately before a storm; and as the Sun blenks often hottest to foretell a following shower; so at that time of greatest calm did that secretly hatched Thunder begin to cast forth the first flames and flaming Lightnings of the approaching Tempest.

On the Saturday of the week immediately preceding the Kings return, which was upon a Thursday (being but ten days before the Parliament) the Lord Mountague and heir to the Lord Morley, being in his own Lodging ready to go to Supper at seven of the Clock at night, one of his Footmen (whom he had sent of an Errand over the street) was met by an unknown man of a reasonable tall personage, who delivered him a Letter, charging him to put it in my Lord his Masters hands. Which my Lord no sooner received, but that having broken it up, and perceiving the stile to be of an unknown and somewhat unglible hand, and without either date or subscription, did call one of his men unto him for helping him to read it. But no sooner did he conceive the strange contents thereof, although he was somewhat perplexed what construction to make of it (as whether of a matter of consequence, as indeed it was, or whether some foolish devised Pasquil by some of his Enemies to scare him from his attendance at the Parliament) yet did he as a most dutiful and loyal Subject conclude, not to conceal it, what ever might come of it. Whereupon, notwithstanding the lateness and darkness of the night in that season of the year, he presently repaired to his Majesties Palace at White-Hall, and there delivered the same to the Earl of Salisbury his Majesties principal Secretary. Whereupon the said Earl of Salisbury having read the Letter, and heard the manner of the coming of it to his hands, did greatly encourage and commend my Lord for his discretion; telling him plainly, that whatsoever the purpose of the Letter might prove hereafter, yet did this accident put him in mind of divers advertisements he had received from beyond the Seas, where-with he had acquainted as well the King himself, as divers of his privy Counsellors, concerning some business the Papists were in both at home and abroad, making preparation for some combination among them against this Parliament time, for enabling them to deliver at that time to the King some Petition for toleration of Religion; which should be delivered in some such order, and so well backed, as the King should be loth to refuse their request. Like the sturdy Beggars, craving Alms with one open hand, but carrying a stone in the other, in case of refusal. And therefore did the Earl of Salisbury conclude with the Lord Mountague, that he would in regard of the Kings absence impart the same Letter to some more of his Majesties Council; whereof my Lord Mountague liked well; only adding this request by way of protestation, that whatsoever the event hereof might prove, it should not be imputed to him, as proceeding from too light and too suddain an apprehension, that he delivered this Letter, being only moved thereunto for demonstration of his ready devotion and care for preservation of his Majesty and the State. And thus did the Earl of Salisbury presently acquaint the Lord Chamberlain with the said Letter. Whereupon they two in the presence of the Lord Mountegle, calling to mind the former intelligence already mentioned, which seemed to have some relation with this Letter: The tender care which they ever carried to the preservation of his Majesties Person, made them apprehend, that some perillous attempt did thereby appear to be intended against the same; which did the more nearly concern the said Lord Chamberlain to have a care of, in regard that it doth belong to the charge of his Office to oversee as well all places of Assembly where his Majesty is to repair, as his Highness own private Houses. And therefore did the said two Counsellors conclude, that they should joyn unto themselves three more of the Council, to wit, the Lord Admiral, the Earls of Worcester and Northampton, to be also particularly acquainted with this accident: who having all of them concurred together to the re-examination of the Contents of the said Letter, they did conclude, that how slight a matter it might at the first appear to be, yet was it not absolutely to be contemned, in respect of the care which it behooved them to have of the preservation of his Majesties Person.

Wherefore they resolved for two reasons, first to acquaint the King himself with the same before they proceeded to any further inquisition in the matter, as well for the expectation and experience they had of his Majesties fortunate Judgment in clearing of obscure Riddles and doubtful Mysteries; as also because the more time would in the me a while be given for the Practice to ripen, if any was, whereby the discovery might be the more clear and evident, and the ground of proceeding thereupon more safe, just, and easie. And so according to their determination did the said Earl of Salisbury repair to the King in his Gallery on Friday, being Alballow-day, in the afternoon, which was the day after his Majesties arrival, and none but himself being present with his Highness at that time, where without any other speech or judgment given of the Letter, but only relating simply the form of the delivery thereof, he presented it to his Majesty, the Contents whereof follow.

MY Lord, out of the love I bear some of your Friends, I have a care of your preservation. Therefore, I would advise you as you tender your life, to devise some excuse to shift off your attendance at this Parliament. For God and man have concurred to punish the wickedness of this time. And think not slightly of this advertisement, but retire your self into your Country, where you may expect the event in safety. For though there be no appearance of any stir, yet I say, they shall receive a terrible blow this Parliament, and yet they shall not see who hurts them. This counsel is not to be contemned, because it may do you good, and can do you no harm, for the danger is past so soon as you have burnt the Letter. And I hope God will give you the grace to make good use of it: To whose holy Protection I commend you.

The King no sooner read the Letter, but after a little pause, and then reading it over again, he delivered his judgment of it in such sort, as he thought it was not to be contemned, for that the title of it seemed to be more quick, and pithy, then is usual to be in any Pasquil, or Libel (the superfluities of idle Brains.) But the Earl of Salisbury perceiving the King to apprehend it deeper then he looked for, knowing his nature, told him that he thought by one Sentence in it, that it was like to be written by some fool or mad man, reading to him this Sentence in it, For the danger is past so soon as you have burnt the Letters, which he said was like to be the saying of a fool: for if the danger was past so soon as the Letter was burnt, then the warning behooved to be of little avail, when the burning of the Letter might make the danger to be chewed. But the King on the contrary considering the former Sentence in the Letter, That they should receive a terrible blow at this Parliament, and yet should not see who hurt them, joining it to the Sentence immediately following, already alleged, did thereupon conjecture, That the danger mentioned should be some sudden danger by blowing up of Powder: For no other Insurrection, Rebellion, or whatsoever other private and desperate Attempt could be committed or attempted in time of Parliament, and the Authors thereof unless, except only it were by a blowing up of Powder, which might be performed by one base Knave in a dark Corner; whereupon he was moved to interpret and construe the latter Sentence in the Letter (alleged by the Earl of Salisbury) against all ordinary sense and construction in Grammar, as if by these words, For the danger is past so soon as you have burnt the Letters, should be closely understood the suddainty and quickness of the danger; which should be as quickly performed and at an end, as that Paper should be blazing up in the fire; turning that word of As soon; to the sense of, As quickly: and therefore wished, that before his going to the Parliament, the under Rooms of the Parliament-house might be well and narrowly searched. But the Earl of Salisbury wondering at this his Majesties commentary, which he knew to be so far contrary to his ordinary and natural disposition, who did rather even sin upon the other side, in not apprehending, nor trusting due advertisement of practices and Perils when he was truly informed of them, whereby he had many times drawn himself into many desperate dangers: and interpreting rightly this extraordinary Caution at this time to proceed from the Vigilant care he had of the whole State, more than of his own Person, which could not but have all perished together, if this designment had succeeded: He thought good to dissemble still unto the King, that there had been any just cause of such apprehension; and ending the purpose with some merry jest on this Subject, as his custom is; took his leave for that time. But though he seemed so to neglect it to his Majesty, yet his customable and watchful care of the King and the State still boyled within him; And having with the blessed Virgin Mary laid up in his heart the Kings fo strange judgment and construction of it; he could not be at rest till he acquainted the forefaid Lords what had passed between the King and him in private.

Whereupon they were all so earnest to renew again the memory of the same purpose unto his Majesty, as it was agreed that he should the next day, being Saturday, repair to his Highness which he did in the said privy Gallery, and renewed the memory thereof, the Lord Chamberlain then being present with the King. At what time it was determined, that the said L. Chamberlain should, according to his custom and Office, view all the Parliament Houses, both above and below, and consider what likelihood or appearance of any such danger might be gathered by the sight of them: but yet as well for staying of idle Rumors, as for being the more able to discern any mystry, the nearer that things were in readines, his Journey thither was ordained to be deferred till the afternoon before the sitting down of the Parliament, which was upon the Monday following. At what time he (according to this conclusion) went to the Parliament house, accompanied with my Lord Mountegle, being in Zeal to the Kings Service earnest and curious to see the event of that accident whereof he had the fortune to be the first discoverer: where, having viewed all the lower Rooms, he found in the vault under the upper House great store and provision of Billets, Faggots, and Coals: and inquiring of Whyneard Keeper of the Wardrobe, to what use he had put those lower Rooms and Cellars; he told him that Thomas Percy had hired both the House and part of the Cellar or Vault under the same, and that the Wood and Coal, under which were hidden thirty six Barrels of Powder great and small, besides great Bars of Iron, pieces of Timber, and massive Stones covered over with Faggots therein, was the said Gentlemans own provision. Whereupon the Lord Chamberlain, casting his eye aside, perceived a fellow standing in a Corner there, calling himself the said Percies man and Keeper of that House for him, but indeed was Guido Fawkes, the owner of that hand which should have acted that monstrous and hellish Tragedy.

The Lord Chamberlain looking upon all things with a heedful indeed, yet, in outward appearance, with but a careless and reckless eye, (as became so wise and diligent a Minister) he presently addressed himself to the King in the privy Gallery, where in the presence of the Lord Treasurer, the Lord Admiral, the Earls of Worcester, Northampton, and Salisbury he made his report, what he had seen and observed there; noting that Montegle had told him, That he no sooner heard Tho. Percy named named to be the possessor of that House; but considering both his backwardness in Religion, and the old dearth in friendship between himself and the said Percy, he did greatly suspect the matter, and that the Letter should come from him. The said Lord Chamberlain also told, That he did not wonder a little at the extraordinary great provision of Wood and Coal in that House, where Thomas Percy had so seldom occasion to remain; as likewise it gave him in his mind, that this man looked like a very tall and desperate Fellow.

Disputations about the manner of the further search.

This could not but increase the Kings former apprehension and jealousy: whereupon he insisted (as before) that the House was narrowly to be searched, and that those Billets and Coals would be searched to the bottom, it being most suspicious that they were laid there only for covering of the Powder. Of this same mind also were all the Counsellors then present. But upon the fashion of making of the search was it long debated: for upon the one side they were all so jealous of the Kings safety, that they all agreed, that there could not be too much caution used for preventing his danger. And yet upon the other part they were all extream loath and dainty, that in case this Letter should prove to be nothing but the evaporation of an idle Brain; then a curious search being made, and nothing found, should not only turn to the general scandal of the King and the State, as being so suspicious of every light and frivolous toy, but likewise lay an ill-favoured imputation upon the Earl of Northumberland, one of his Majesties greatest Subjects and Counsellors, this Thomas Percy being his Kinsman and most confident Familiar. And the rather were they curious upon this point, knowing how far the King detested to be thought suspicious or jealous of any his good Subjects, though of the meanest degree. And therefore though they all agreed upon the main ground, which was to provide for the security of the Kings person, yet did they much differ in the circumstances, by which this action might be best carried with least din and occasion of slander. But the King himself still persisting that there were divers shrewd appearances, and that a narrow search of those places could prejudice no man that was innocent, he at last plainly resolved them, that either must all the parts of those Rooms be narrowly searched, and no possibility of danger left unexamined, or else he and they all must resolve not to meddle in it at all, but plainly to go the next day to the Parliament, and leave the success to Fortune; which he believed they would be loth to take upon their Consciences: for in such a case as this, an half doing was worse than no doing at all. Whereupon it was at last concluded, That nothing should be left unsearched in those Houses: and yet for the better colour and stay of rumor, in case nothing were found, it was thought meet, that upon a pretence of Whymards missing some of the Kings Stuff or Hangings which he had in keeping, all these Rooms should be narrowly ripped for them. And to this purpose was Sir Thomas Knevet (a Gentleman of his Majesties privy Chamber) employed, being a Justice of Peace in Westminster, and one, of whose ancient fidelity both the late Queen and our now Sovereign have had large proof: who, according to the trust committed unto him, went about the Midnight next after to the Parliament-House, accompanied with a small number as was fit for that Errand. But before his entry into the House, finding Thomas Percies alleged Man standing without the doors, his Cloaths and Boots on at so dead a time of the Night, he resolved to apprehend him, as he did, and afterward went forward to the searching of the House, where after he had caused to be overturned some of the Billets and Coals, he first found one of the small Barrels of Powder, and after all the rest, to the number of thirty six Barrels, great and small. And thereafter searching the Fellow whom he had taken, found three Matches, and all other Instruments fit for blowing up the Powder ready upon him, which made him instantly confess his own guiltiness, declaring also unto him, That if he had happened to be within the House when he took him, as he was immediately before (at the ending of his work) he would not have failed to have blown him up, House and all.

Was found at Midnight without the House.

Agreed that the search should be under colour of seeking for Wardrobe stuff missed by Whymard.

Thus after Sir Thomas had caused the Wretch to be surely bound, and well guarded by the Company he had brought with him, he himself returned back to the Kings Palace, and gave warning of his success to the Lord Chamberlain and Earl of Salisbury; who immediately warning the rest of the Council that lay in the House, as soon as they could get themselves ready, came with their fellow Counsellors to the Kings Bedchamber, being at that time near four of the Clock in the Morning. And at the first entry at the Kings Chamber-door, the Lord Chamberlain, being not any longer able to conceal his joy for the preventing of so great a danger, told the King in a confused haste, that all was found and discovered, and the Traytor in hands and fast bound.

Then, order being first taken for sending for the rest of the Council that lay in the Town, the Prisoner himself was brought into the House, where in respect of the strangeness of the Accident, no man was staid from the sight or speaking with him. And within a while after the Council did examine him; who seeming to put on a Roman Resolution, did both to the Council and to every other person that spake with him that day, appear so constant and settled upon his grounds, as we had all thought we had found some new Mutius Scævola born in England; for notwithstanding the horror of the Fact, the guilt of his Conscience, his sudden surprising, the terror which should have been stricken in him by coming into the presence of so grave a Council, and the reflex and confused questions that every man all that day did vex him with; yet was his countenance so far from being dejected, as he often smiled in scornful manner, not only avowing the Fact, but repenting only, with the said Scævola, his failing in the execution thereof, whereof he said the Devil and not God was the discoverer; answering quickly to every mans objection, scoffing at any idle questions which were propounded to him, and jesting at such as he thought had no authority to examine him.

All that day could the Council get nothing out of him touching his Complices, refusing to answer to any such questions as he thought might discover the Plot, and laying all the blame upon himself; whereunto he said he was moved only for Religion and Conscience sake, denying the King to be his lawful Sovereign, or the Anointed of God, in respect he was an Heretic; and giving himself no other name than John Johnson, Servant to Thomas Percy. But the next Morning being carried to the Tower of London, he did not there remain above two or three days, being twice or thrice in that space re-examined, and the Rack only offered and shewed unto him, when the Mask of his Roman fortitude did visibly begin to wear and slide off his Face; and then did he begin to confess part of the truth, and thereafter to open the whole matter, as doth appear by his Depositions immediately following.

The true Copy of the declaration of Guido Fawkes, taken in the presence of the Counsellors whose Names are underwritten.

I Confess that a practice in general was first broken unto me against his Majesty, for relief of the Catholic Cause, and not invented or propounded by my self. And this was first propounded unto me about Easter last was Twelve-month, beyond the Seas, in the Low-Countries of the Archdukes obedience, by Thomas Winter, who came thereupon with me into England, and there we imparted our purpose to three other Gentlemen more, namely, Robert Catesby, Thomas Percy, and John Wright: who all five consulting together of the means how to execute the same, and taking a Vow among our selves for secrecy (which Vow was this, You shall swear by the blessed Trinity, and by the Sacrament you now purpose to receive, never to disclose directly or indirectly, by word or circumstance, the matter that shall be proposed to you to keep secret; nor desert from the execution thereof until the rest shall give you leave. After which, being confessed and receiving Absolution, the forementioned received the Sacrament thereupon, by the hands of Gerrard the Jesuit there present) Catesby propounded to have it performed by Gunpowder, and by making a Mine under the upper House of Parliament: which place we made choice of the rather, because Religion having been unjustly suppressed there, it was fittest that justice and punishment should be executed there.

This

Anno 1605.

Anno 1605, This being resolved amongst us, Thomas Percy hired a House at Westminster for that purpose, near adjoining to the Parliament-House, and there we began to make our Mine about the 11. of December 1604.

The five that first entred into the work were Thomas Percy, Robert Catesby, Thomas Winter, John Wright, and myself; and soon after we took unto us Christopher Wright, having sworn him also, and taken the Sacrament for secrecy.

When we came to the very foundation of the Wall of the House, which was about three yards thick, and found it a matter of great difficulty, we took unto us another Gentleman, Robert Winter, in like manner with Oath and Sacrament as aforesaid.

It was about Christmas when we brought our Mine to the Wall, and about Candlemas we had wrought the Wall half through; and whilst they were in working I stood as Sentinel, to descry any man that came near, whereof I gave them warning, and so they ceased until I gave notice again to proceed.

All we seven lay in the House, having Shot and Powder, being resolved to die in that place, before we should yield or be taken.

As they were working upon the Wall, they heard a rustling in the Cellar of removing of Coals, whereupon we feared we had been discovered, and they sent me to go to the Cellar; who finding the Coals were a felling, and that the Cellar was to be lett, viewing the commodity thereof for our purpose, Percy went and hired the same for yearly Rent.

We had before this provided and brought into the House twenty Barrels of Powder, which we removed into the Cellar, and covered the same with Billets and Faggots, which were provided for that purpose.

About Easter, the Parliament being prorogued till October next, we dispersed our selves, and I retired into the Low-Countries, by advice and direction of the rest, as well to acquaint Owen with the particulars of the Plot, as also left by my longer stay I might have grown suspicious and so have come in question.

In the mean time Percy having the Key of the Cellar, laid in more Powder and Wood into it. I returned about the beginning of September next, and then receiving the Key again of Mr. Percy, we brought in more Powder and Billets to cover the same again; and so I went for a time into the Country till the 30th of October.

It was further resolved amongst us, that the same day that this act should have been performed, some other of our Confederates should have surprized the person of the Lady Elizabeth the Kings eldest Daughter, who was kept in Warwickshire at the Lord Harringtons House, and presently have proclaimed her Queen, having a project of a Proclamation ready for that purpose; where in we made no mention of altering Religion, or would have avowed the deed to be ours, until we should have had power enough to make our party good; and then we would have avowed both.

Concerning Duke Charles the Kings second Son, we had sundry consultations how to seize on his Person. But because we found no means how to compass it (the Duke being kept near London, where we had not forces enough) we resolved to serve our turn with the Lady Elizabeth.

And in regard that before this Discourse could be ready to go to the Press, Thomas Winter being apprehended and brought to the Tower, made a Confession in substance agreeing with this former of Fawkes, only larger in some circumstances: I have thought good to insert the same likewise in this place, for the further clearing of the matter and greater benefit of the Reader.

Thomas Winters Confession, taken the three and twentieth of November, in the year 1605, in the presence of the Counsellors, whose Names are under-written.

My most Honourable Lords,

Not out of hope to obtain pardon; for speaking of my temporal part, I may say, The fault is greater than can be forgiven; nor affecting here the title of a good Subject; for I must redeem my Country from as great a danger, as I have hazarded the bringing of her into, before I can purchase any such opinion: only at your Honours command I will briefly set down mine Accusation, and how far I have proceeded in this business, which I shall the faithfuller do, since I see few courses are not pleasing to Almighty God, and that all or the most material parts have been already confided.

I remained with my Brother in the Country from Abhallonside until the beginning of Lent, in the year of our Lord 1603. the first year of the Kings Reign; about which time Mr. Catesby sent thither, intreating me to come to London, where he and other my Friends would be glad to see me. I desired him to excuse me: for I found my self not very well disposed; and (which had happened never to me before) returned the Messenger without my company. Shortly I received another Letter, in any wife to come. At the second Summons I presently came up, and found him with Mr. John Wright at Lambeth, where he brake with me, how necessary it was not to forsake our Country (for he knew then I had a resolution to go over) but to deliver her from the servitude in which she remained, or at least to assist her with our uttermost endeavours. I answered, that I had often hazarded my life upon far lighter terms, and now would not refuse any good occasion, wherein I might do service to the Catholick Cause; but for my self I knew no mean probable to succeed. He said, that he had bethought him of a way at one instant to deliver us from all our bonds, and without any foreign help to replant again the Catholick Religion; and withal told me in a word, It was to blow up the Parliament-House with Gunpowder; for, said he, in that place have they done us all the mischief, and perchance God hath designed that place for their punishment. I wondered at the strangeness of the conceit, and told him, that true it was this stroke at the root, and would breed a confusion fit to beget new alterations: but if it should not take effect, (as most of this nature miscarried) the scandal would be so great which the Catholick Religion might hereby sustain, as not only our Enemies, but our Friends also would with good reason condemn us. He told me, The nature of the disease required so sharp a remedy, and asked me if I would give consent. I told him, yes, in this or what else soever, if he resolved upon it, I would venture my life. But I proposed many difficulties, as want of an House, and of one to carry the Mine, noise in the working, and such like. His answer was, Let us give an attempt, and where it filleth pass no further. But first, quoth he, because we will leave no peaceable and quiet way untied, you shall go over and inform the Constable of the state of the Catholics here in England, intreating him to solicit his Majesty at his coming thither, that the penal Laws may be recalled; and we admitted into the rank of his other Subjects; withal, you may bring over some confident Gentle-

Gentleman, such as you shall understand best able for this business, and named unto me Master Fawkes. Shortly after I passed the Sea, and found the Constable at Bergen near Dunkirk, where by help of Master Owen I delivered my message. Whose answer was, that he had strict command from his Master, to do all good offices for the Catholics, and for his own part he thought himself bound in Conscience so to do, and that no good occasion should be omitted, but spake to him nothing of this matter.

Returning to Dunkirk with Master Owen, we had speech whether he thought the Constable would faithfully help us, or no. He said, he believed nothing less, and that they sought only their own ends, holding small account of Catholics, I told him that there were many Gentlemen in England, who would not forsake their Country until they had tried their uttermost, and rather venture their lives, then forsake her in this misery. And to add one more to our number, as a fit man both for Counsel and execution of whatsoever we should resolve, we wished for Mr. Fawkes, whom I had heard good commendations of; hee told me the Gentleman deserved no less, but was at Brussels, and that if he came not, as happily he might, before my departure, he would send him shortly after into England. I went soon after to Offend, where Sir William Stanley as then was not, but came two days after. I remained with him three or four days, in which time I asked him if the Catholics in England should do any thing to help themselves, whether hee thought the Archduke would second them? He answered, no: for all those parts were so desirous of peace with England, as they would endure no speech of other enterprise; neither were it fit, said he, to set any project afoot now the peace is upon concluding. I told him there was no such resolution, and so fell to discourse of other matters, until I came to speak of Master Fawkes, whose company I wished over into England. I asked of his sufficiency in the Wars, and told him we should need such as he if occasion required; he gave very good commendations of him. And as we were thus discoursing, and I ready to depart from Newport, and taking my leave of Sir William, Master Fawkes came into our company, newly returned, and saluted us. This is the Gentleman, said Sir William, that we wished for, and so we embraced again. I told him, some good friends of his wished his company in England, and that if he pleased to come to Dunkirk, we would have further conference, whither I was then going: so taking my leave of them both, I departed. About two days after came Master Fawkes to Dunkirk, where I told him that we were upon a resolution to do somewhat with England, if the peace with Spain helped us not, but had as yet resolved upon nothing; such or the like talk we passed at Graveling, where lay for a wind, and when it served we came both in one passage to Greenwich, near which place we took a pair of Oars, and so came up to London, and came to Master Catesby whom we found in his lodging; hee welcomed us into England, and asked me what news from the Constable. I told him, good words, but I feared the deeds would not answer. This was the beginning of Easter Term, and about the midst of the Term (whether sent for by Master Catesby, or upon some business of his own) up came Master Thomas Percy. The first word he spoke (after he came into our company) was, shall we always (Gentlemen) talk, and never do any thing? Master Catesby took him aside, and had speech about somewhat to be done, so as first we might all take an Oath of Secrecy, which we resolved within two or three days to do; so as there we met behind St. Clements, Mr. Catesby, Mr. Percy, Master Wright, Master Guy Fawkes, and my self; and having upon a Primer given each other the Oath of Secrecy, in a Chamber where no other body was, we went after into the next Room, and heard Mass, and received the blessed Sacrament upon the same. Then did Master Catesby disclose to Master Percy, and I together with Jack Wright tell to Master Fawkes the business for which we took this Oath, which they both approved. And then was Master Percy sent to take the House which Master Catesby in mine absence had learned did belong to one Ferris, which with some difficulty in the end he obtained, and became as Ferris before was, Tenant to Whynniard. M. Anno Fawkes underwent the name of Master Percies man, calling him Johnsen, because its name was the most unknown, and received the keys of the House, until we heard that the Parliament was adjourned to the seventh of February. At which time we all departed several ways into the Country, to meet again at the beginning at Michaelmas Term. Before this time also it was thought convenient to have a House that might answer to Master Percies, where we might make provision of Powder and Wood for the Mine, which being there in a night made ready, should in a night be conveyed by Boat to the house by the Parliament, because we were loth to foyle that with often going in and out. There was none that we could devise so fit as Lambeth, where Master Catesby often lay; and to be keeper thereof (by Master Catesbys choice) we received into the number, Keyes, as a trusty honest man: this was about a Month before Michaelmas.

Sir Edward Coke laughs at the arrangement of Charnock further, that Catesby and Thomas Percy meeting together complained one to another of the Kings proceedings and therefore the only way was to kill the King, which Percy himself would undertake to do. Thomas said Catesby, thou shalt not so adventure thyself, there is a plot in our greater advantage, and then discovered to him the Powder Treason.

Some fortnight after towards the beginning of the Term, Master Fawkes and I came to Master Catesby at Moorecrops, where we agreed that now was time to begin and set things in order for the Mine. So Master Fawkes went to London, and the next day sent for mee to come over to him; when I came, the cause was, for that the Scottish Lords were appointed to sit in conference of the Union in Master Percies House. This hindered our beginning until a fortnight before Christmas, by which time both Mr. Percy and Master Wright were come to London, and we against their coming had provided a good part of the powder; so as we all five entered with Tools fit to begin our work, having provided our selves of Baked meats, the less to need sending abroad. We entered late in the night, and were never seen, save only Master Percies man, until Christmas Eve. In which time we wrought under a little Entry to the wall of the Parliament house, and underpropped it, as we went, with wood.

Whilest we were together, we began to fashion our business, and discoursed what we should do after this deed was done. The first question was how we might surpris the next Heir: the Prince happily would be at the Parliament with the King his Father, how should we then be able to seize on the Duke? This Burthen Mr. Percy undertook, that by his acquaintance, he, with another Gentleman, would enter the Chamber without suspicion, and having some dozen others at several Doors to expect his coming, and two or three on Horseback at the Court Gate to receive him, he would undertake (the blow being given, until which he would attend in the Dukes Chamber) to carry him safe away: for he supposed most of the Court would be absent, and such as were there, not suspecting, or unprovided for any such matter. For the Lady Elizabeth, it were easie to surpris her in the Country by drawing Friends together at an hunting near the Lord Harringtons, and Abby Mr. Catesbys house, being not far off, was a fit place for preparation.

The next was for Money and Horses, which if we could provide in any reasonable measure (having the Heir apparent, and the first knowledge by four or five days) was odds sufficient.

Then what Lords we should save from the Parliament; which was first agreed in general, as many as we could that were Catholics, or so disposed; But after we descended to speak of particulars.

Next what forrain Princes we should acquaint with this before, or joyn with after. For this point we agreed, that first we could not enjoyn Princes to that secrecy, nor oblige them by Oath; so to be secure of their promises: besides we knew not whether they will approve the project or dislike it. And if they do allow thereof, to prepare before might beget suspicion, and not to provide until the business were acted, the same letter that carried news of the thing done, might aswell intreat their help and furtherance. Spain is too slow in his preparations to hope any good from in the first extremities, and France too near and too dangerous, who with the Shipping of Holland, we feared, of all the world might make away with us.

But

Anno 1605.

But while we were in the middle of these discourses, we heard that the Parliament should be anew adjourned until after Michaelmas; upon which tidings we broke off both discourse and working until after Christmas. About Candlemas we brought over in a Boat the Powder, which we had provided at Lambergh, and laid it in Mr. Percies Houfe, because we were willing to have all our dangers in one place.

We wrought also another fortnight in the Mine against the Stone-wall, which was very hard to break through; at which time we called in Kit Wright; and near to Easter, as we wrought the third time, opportunity was given to hire the Cellar, in which we resolved to lay the Powder and leave the Mine.

Now by reason that the charge of maintaining us all so long together, besides the number of several houses, which for several uses had been hired, and buying of Powder, &c. had lain heavy upon Mr. Catesby alone to support; it was necessary for him to call in some others to ease his charge, and to that end desired leave, that he, with Mr. Percy, and a third, whom they should call, might acquaint whom they thought fit and willing to the business; For many, said he, may be content that I should know, who would not therefore that all the Company should be acquainted with their names: to this we all agreed.

After this Mr. Fawkes laid into the Cellar (which he had newly taken) a thousand of Billets, and five hundred of Fagots, and with that covered the Powder, because we might have the house free, to suffer any one to enter that would. Mr. Catesby wished us to consider, whether it were not now necessary to send Mr. Fawkes over, both to absent himself for a time, as also to acquaint Sir William Stanley and Mr. Owen with this matter. We agreed that he should (provided that he gave it them with the same Oath that we had taken it before) viz. to keep it secret from all the world. The reason why we desired Sir William Stanley should be acquainted herewith, was to have him with us as soon as we could; And for Mr. Owen, he might hold good correspondency after with foreign Princes. So Mr. Fawkes departed about Easter for Flanders, and returned the later end of August. He told me that when he arrived at Brussels, Sir William Stanley was not returned from Spain, so as he uttered the matter only to Owen, who seemed well pleased with the business, but told him that surely Sir William would not be acquainted with any Plot, as having business now a foot in the Court of England: but he himself would be always ready to tell it him, and send him away so soon as it were done.

About this time did Mr. Percy and Mr. Catesby meet at the Bathe, where they agreed, that the Company being yet but few, Mr. Catesby should have the others authority to call in whom he thought best; by which Authority he called in after Sir Edward Digby, though at what time I know not, and last of all Mr. Francis Tresham. The first promised, as I heard Mr. Catesby say, fifteen hundred pounds; the second two thousand pounds; Mr. Percy himself promised all that he could get of the Earl of Northumberland's Rents, which was about four thousand pounds, and to provide many galloping Horses to the number of ten.

Mean while Mr. Fawkes and my self alone bought some new Powder, as suspecting the first to be dank, and conveyed it into the Cellar, and set it in order as we resolved it should stand.

Then was the Parliament anew prorogued until the fifth of November, so as we all went down until some ten days before, when Mr. Catesby came up with Mr. Fawkes to an house by Enfield-Chace called White-Webs, whither I came to them, and Mr. Catesby wished me to enquire whither the young Prince came to the Parliament: I told him, that I heard that his Grace would not be there. Then must we have our Horses, said Mr. Catesby, beyond the Water, and provision of more company to surprize the Prince and leave the Duke alone.

Two days after, being Sunday at Night, in came one to my Chamber, and told me that a Letter had been given to my Lord Mountgale to this effect; That he wished his Lordships absence from the Parliament, because a blow would there be given; which Letter he presently carried to my Lord of Salisbury.

On the Morrow I went to White-Webs, and told it Mr. Catesby, assuring him withal that the matter was disclosed, and wishing him in any case to forsake his Country. He told me he would fear further as yet, and resolved to send Mr. Fawkes to try the uttermost, protesting that if it were his case, he would try the same adventure.

On Wednesday Mr. Fawkes went and returned at Night, of which we were very glad.

On Thursday I came to London, and on Friday Mr. Catesby, Mr. Tresham and I met at Barnet, where we questioned how this Letter should be sent to my Lord Mountgale, but could not conceive; for Mr. Tresham forware it, whom we suspected.

On Saturday Night I met Mr. Tresham again in Lincoln-Inn-Walks. Where he told such speeches, that my Lord of Salisbury should use to the King, as I gave it lost the second time, and repeated the same to Mr. Catesby, who hereupon was resolved to be gone, but stayed to have Mr. Percy come up, whose consent herein we wanted. On Sunday Mr. Percy being dealt with to that end would needs abide the uttermost trial.

This suspicion of all hands put us into such confusion, as Mr. Catesby resolved to go down into the Country the Monday that Mr. Percy went to Siem, and Mr. Percy resolved to follow the same Night, or early the next Morning. About five of the Clock, being Tuesday, came the younger Wright to my Chamber, and told me that a Nobleman called the Lord Mountgale, saying, Arise and come to Essex-House, for I am going to call up my Lord of Northumberland, saying withal; The matter is discovered. Go back Mr. Wright (quoth I) and learn what you can about Essex-Gate. Shortly he returned and said, Surely all is lost: for Lepton is got on Horseback at Essex-Door: and as he parted, he asked if their Lordships would have any more with him; and being answered no, he is rode as fast up Fleetstreet as he can ride. Go you then (quoth I) to Mr. Percy, for sure it is for him they seek, and bid him be gone; I will stay and see the uttermost. Then I went to the Court-Gate and found them straightly guarded, so as no body could enter. From thence I went down towards the Parliament-House, and in the middle of Kingsfreest found the Guard standing, that would not let me pass. And as I returned I heard one say, There is a Treason discovered; in which the King and the Lords should have been blown up. So then I was fully satisfied that all was known, and went to the Stable where my Gelding stood, and rode into the Country. Mr. Catesby had appointed our meeting at Dunchurch, but I could not overtake them until I came to my Brothers, which was Wednesday Night. On Thursday we took the Armour at my Lord Windors; and went that Night to one Stephen Littletons Houfe, where the next day (being Friday) as I was early abroad to discover, my Man came unto me and said; that an heavy mischance had fevered all the Company; for that Mr. Catesby, Mr. Rookwood and Mr. Grani were burned with Gunpowder, upon which light the rest dispersed. Mr. Littleton wished me to fly, and so would be. I told him I would first see the Body of my Friend and bury him, whatsoever befel me. When I came, I found Mr. Catesby reasonable well, Mr. Percy, both the Wrights, Mr. Rookwood and Mr. Grani. I asked them what they resolved to do: they answered, we mean here to die. I said again; I would take such part as they did. About eleven of the Clock came the Company to beset the House, and as I walked into the Court, I was shot into the Shoulder, which lost me the use of mine Arm: the next shot was the elder Wright stricken dead, after him the younger Mr. Wright, and fourthly Ambrose Rookwood shot. Then said Mr. Catesby to me (standing before the Door they were to enter) stand by me Tom, and we will die together. Sir, quoth I, I have lost the use of my right Arm, and I fear that will cause me to be taken. So as we stood close together, Mr. Catesby, Mr. Percy, and my self; they two were shot (as far as I could guess, with one Bullet) and then the Company entered upon me, hurt me in the Belly with a Pike, and gave me other wounds, until one came behind and caught hold of both mine Arms.

And so remain yours, &c.

But here let us leave Fawkes in a lodging fit for such a Guest, and taking time to advise upon his Conscience, and turn our selves to that part of the History which concerns the fortune of the rest of his partakers in that abominable Treason. The News was no sooner spread abroad that morning, which was upon a Tuesday, the fifth of November, and the first day designed for that Session of Parliament; The News, I say, of this fo-strange and unlooked for Accident was no sooner divulged, but some of these Conspirators, namely, Winter and the two Brothers the Wrights, thought it high time for them to hasten out of the Town, (for Cateby was gone the Night before, and Percy at four of the Clock in the Morning the same day of the discovery) and all of them held their course with more haile than good speed, to Warwickshire toward Cobventry, where the next day Morning, being Wednesday, and about the same hour that Fawkes was taken in Westminster, one Grant a Gentleman having associated unto him some others of his Opinion, all violent Papists and strong Recufants, came to a Stable of one Benock a Rider of great Horfes, and having violently broken up the same, carried along with them all the great Horfes that were therein, to the number of seven or eight, belonging to divers Noblemen and Gentlemen of that Country, who had put them into the Riders hands to be made fit for their service. And so both that company of them which fled out of London,
As also Grant and his Complices met all together at Dunchurch at Sir Everard Digby his Lodging the Tuesday at Night, after the discovery of this treacherous attempt: the which Digby had likewise for his part appointed a match of Hunting to have been hunted the next day, which was Wednesday, though his mind was Nimrod-like upon a far other manner of hunting, more bent upon the blood of reasonable Men than brute Beasts.

This company and hellish Society thus convened, finding their purpose discovered and their treachery prevented, did resolve to run a desperate course, and since they could not prevail by so private a Blow, to practise by a publick Rebellion either to attain to their intents, or at least to save themselves in the throng of others.

And therefore gathering all the Company they could unto them, and pretending the quarrel of Religion, having intercepted such provision of Armour, Horfes and Powder, as the time could permit, thought by running up and down the Country, both to augment piece and piece their number (dreaming to themselves that they had the virtue of a Snow-ball, which being little at the first, and tumbling down from a great Hill, groweth to a great quantity, by increasing it self with the Snow that it meeteth by the way) and also that they beginning first this brave shew in one part of the Country, should by their sympathy and example stir up and encourage the rest of their Religion in other parts of England to rise, as they had done there. But when they had gathered their force to the greatest, they came not to the number of Fourcore, and yet were they troubled all the hours of the day to keep and contain their own Servants from stealing from them; (who notwithstanding all their care) daily left them, being far inferior to Gr- deons Host in number, but far more in faith or justness of quarrel.

And so after this Catholick Troop had wandred a while through Warwickshire to Worcestershire, and from thence to the edge and borders of Staffordshire, this gallantly armed Band had not the honour at the last to be beaten with the Kings Lieutenant or extraordinary Commissioners sent down for the purpose, but only by the ordinary Sheriff of Worcestershire were they all beaten, killed, taken & dispersed. Wherein ye have to note this following circumstance so admirable, and so lively displaying the greatness of Gods Justice, as it could not be concealed without betraying in a manner the glory
due to the Almighty for the same.

Although divers of the Kings Proclamations were posted down after these Traytors with all the speed possible, declaring the odiousness of that bloody attempt, the necessity to have had Percy preferred alive, if it had been possible, and the assembly together of that damned Crew, now no more secret Conspirators, but open and avowed Rebels; yet the far distance of the way (which was above an hundred miles) together with the extreme deepness thereof, joynd also with the shortness of the day, was the cause that the hearty and loving affections of the Kings good Subjects in those parts prevented the speed of his Proclamations. For on the third day after the flying down of these Rebels, which was on the Friday next after the discovery of the Plot, they were most of them all surprized by the Sheriff of Worcestershire at Halbeach, about the Noon of the day, and that in manner following.

Grant, of whom I have made mention before, for taking the great Horfes, who had not all the preceding time stirred from his own house till the next Morning, after the Attempt should have been put in execution, he then laying his account without his Host (as the Proverb is) that their Plot had, without failing, received the day before their hoped for success, took, or rather stole out their Horfes (as I said before) for enabling him, and so many of that Soul-less Society that had still remained in the Country near about him, to make a sudden surprize upon the Kings elder Daughter, the Lady Elizabeth, having her residence near to that place, at the Lord Harringtons House; whom they thought to have used for the colour of their treacherous design (his Majesty her Father, her Mother and Male Children being all destroyed above.) And to this purpose also had that Nimrod, Digby, provided his hunting match against the same time, that numbers of People being flocked together upon the pretence thereof, they might the easier have brought to pass the sudden surprize of her person.

Now the violent taking away of those Horfes long before day, did seem to be so great a Riot in the eyes of the common People, that knew of no greater mystery:
And the bold attempting thereof did engender such a suspicion of some following Rebellion in the hearts of the wiser sort, as both great and small began to stir and arm themselves, upon this unlooked for Accident. A-

Anno 1605. among whom Sir Fulke Grevill the elder, Knight, as became one both for ancient in years and good reputation, and by his Office being Deputy Lieutenant of Warwickshire, though unable in his Body, yet by the zeal and true fervency of his mind, did first apprehend this fore-said Riot to be nothing but the sparkles and sure Indices of a following Rebellion; whereupon both stoutly and honestly he took order to get into his own hands the Munition and Armour of all such Gentlemen about him, as were either absent from their own Houses, or in doubtful guard; And also sent forth direction to the Towns about him, as thereupon did follow the striking of Winter by a poor Smith, who had likewise been taken by these vulgar People, but that he was rescued by the rest of his Company; who perceiving that the Country before them had notice of them, hastened away with loss in their own sight, 16 of their Followers being taken by the Townsmen, and sent presently to the Sheriff at Warwick, and from thence to London.

But before 12 or 16 hours past, Catesby, Percy, the Winters, Wrights, Rockwood, and the rest bringing them the assurance that their main Plot was failed and betrayed, whereupon they had builded the golden Mountains of their glorious hopes: They then took their last desperate resolution to flock together in a Troop and wander, as they did for the Reasons aforesaid. But as upon the one part, the zealous duty to their God and their Sovereign was so deeply imprinted in the hearts of all the meanest and poorest sort of the People (although then knowing of no further mystery than such publick misbehaviours as their own eyes taught them) as notwithstanding all their fair shews and pretence of their Catholick cause, no Creature, Man or Woman, through all the Country, would once so much as give them willingly a Cup of Drink, or any sort of comfort or support, but with Execrations detested them: So on the other part, the Sheriffs of the Shires where-through they wandered, conveying their People with all speed possible, hunted as hotly after them, as the evilests of the way and the unprovidedness of their People upon that sudden could permit them. And so at last after Sir Richard Verney, Sheriff of Warwickshire, had carefully and straitly been in chase of them to the confines of his County, part of the meaner sort being also apprehended by him; Sir Richard Walsh Sheriff of Worcestershire did likewise dutifully and hotly pursue them through his Shire; And having gotten free trial of their taking harbour at the House above-named, he did send Trumpeters and Messengers to them, commanding them in the Kings Name to render unto him his Majesties Minister; and knowing no more at that time of their guilt than was publicly visible, did promise upon their dutiful and obedient rendering unto him, to intercede at the Kings hand for the sparing of their lives: Who received only from them this scornful Answer (they being better willests to themselves of their inward evil Consciences) That he had need of better assistance, than of those few numbers that were with him, before he could be able to command or controul them.

The preparations to assault the House.

Catesby, who was the first Inventor of this Treason in general, and of the manner of working the same by powder in special, himself now first mistook with the blowing up of Powder, and next he and Percy both killed with one shot proceeding from Powder.

But here fell the wondrous work of Gods Justice, that while this Message passed between the Sheriff and them, the Sheriffs and his Peoples zeal being justly kindled and augmented by their arrogant Answer, and so they preparing themselves to give a furious assault; and the other Party making themselves ready within the House to perform their promise by a defence as resolute, It pleased God that in the mending of the Fire in their Chamber, one small spark should rise out and light among less than two pound weight of Powder, which was drying a little from the Chimney; which being thereby blown up, so mained the Faces of some of the principal Rebels, and the Hands and Sides of others of them (blowing up with it also a great Bag full of Powder, which notwithstanding never took fire) as they were not only disabled and discouraged hereby from any further resistance, in respect Catesby himself, Rockwood, Grant, and divers others of great account among them were thereby made unable for defence; but also wonderfully stricken with amazement in their guilty Consciences, calling to memory how God had justly punished them with that same Instrument which they should have used for the execution ating of so great a sin, according to the old Latin saying: In quo peccamus, in eodem plehimur: as they presently (see the wonderful power of Gods Justice upon guilty Consciences) did all fall down upon their knees, praying God to pardon them for their bloody enterprise: and thereafter giving over any further debate, opened the Gate, suffered the Sheriffs People to rush in furiously among them, and desperately fought their own present destruction; the three Specials of them joyning Backs together, Catesby, Percy and Winter, whereof two with one shot, Catesby and Percy were slain, and the third, Winter, taken and saved alive.

And thus these resolute and high aspiring Catholicks, who dreamed of no less than the destruction of King and Kingdoms, promised to themselves no lower estate than the government of great and ancient Monarchies, were miserably defeated and quite overthrown in an instant; falling in the Pit which they had prepared for others, and so fulfilling that Sentence which his Majesty did in a manner prophecy of them in his Oration to the Parliament; some presently slain, others deadly wounded, stripped of their Cloaths, left lying miserably naked, and so dying rather of cold than of the danger of their wounds; and the rest that either were whole, or but lightly hurt, taken and led Prisoners by the Sheriff, the ordinary Minister of Justice, to the Gaol, the ordinary place even of the basest Malefactors, where they remained till their sending up to London, being met with a huge confluence of People of all sorts, desirous to see them as the rarest sort of Monsters; fools to laugh at them, Women and Children to wonder, all the common People to gaze, the wiser sort to satiate their curiosity in seeing the outward cases of lo unheard of a Villany; and generally all sorts of People to satiate and fill their Eyes with the sight of them, whom in their hearts they so far admired and detested: serving so for a fearful and publick spectacle of Gods fierce wrath and just indignation.

Anno III. JACOBI Regis.

An Act for a publick Thanksgiving to Almighty God, every Year, on the fifth day of November.

Forasmuch as Almighty God hath in all Ages shewed his power and mercy, in the miraculous and gracious deliverance of his Church, and in the protection of Religious Kings and States, and that no Nation of the Earth hath been blessed with greater benefits than this Kingdom now enjoyeth, having the true and free profession of the Gospel under our most Sovereign Lord King JAMES, the most great, learned and religious King that ever reigned therein, enriched with a most hopeful and plentiful Progeny, proceeding out of his Royal loins, promising continuance of this happiness and profession to all Posterity: the which many malignant and devilish Papists, Jesuites and Seminary Priests, much envying and fearing, conspired most horribly, when the Kings most excellent Majesty, the Queen, the Prince, and all the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and Commons should have been assembled in the Upper-house of Parliament, upon the fifth day of November, in the Year of our Lord 1605, suddenly to have blown up the said whole House with Gunpowder; an invention so inhumane, barbarous and cruel, as the like was never before heard of, as was (as some of the principal Conspirators confessed) purposely devised and concluded to be done in the said House, that where sundry necessary and religious Laws for preservation of the Church and State were made, which they falsely and slanderously term cruel Laws enacted against them and their Religion, both place and persons should be all destroyed and blown up at once, which would have turned to the utter ruine of this whole Kingdom, had it not pleased Almighty God, by inspiring the Kings most Excellent Majesty with a divine Spirit, to interpret some dark phrases of a Letter shewed to his Majesty, above and beyond all ordinary construction, thereby miraculously discovering this hidden Treason, not many hours before the appointed time for the execution thereof: Therefore the Kings most excellent Majesty, the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and all his Majesties faithful and loving Subjects do most justly acknowledge this great and infinite blessing to have proceeded merely from God his great mercy, and to his most holy Name do ascribe all honour, glory and praise. And to the end this unfeigned thankfulness may never be forgotten, but be had in a perpetual remembrance, that all Ages to come may yield praises to his Divine Majesty for the same, and have in memory this joyful Day of deliverance.

Be it therefore enacted by the Kings most Excellent Majesty, the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and the Commons in this present Parliament assembled, and by the Authority of the same, That all and singular Ministers in every Cathedral or Parish Church, or other usual place for Common-Prayer within this Realm of England and the Dominions of the same, shall always upon the fifth day of November (say Morning-Prayer, and give unto Almighty God thanks for this most happy Deliverance, and that all and every person and persons inhabiting within this Realm of England and the Dominions of the same, shall always upon that day diligently and faithfully resort to the Parish Church or Chappel where the said Morning-Prayer, Preaching, or other Service of God shall be used and ministered.

And because all and every person may be put in mind of this duty, and be the better prepared to the said Holy Service, Be it enacted by Authority aforesaid, that every Minister shall give warning to his Parishioners publickly in the Church at Morning-Prayer, the Sunday before every such fifth day of November, for the due observation of the said Day. And that after Morning-Prayer, or preaching on the said fifth day of November, they read distinctly and plainly this present Act.

God save the King.

A Prayer and Thanksgiving for the happy deliverance of his Majesty, the Queen, the Prince, and the States of Parliament, &c.

Almighty God, who hast in all Ages shewed thy Power and mercy, in the miraculous and Gracious deliverances of thy Church, and in the protection of Righteous and Religious Kings, and States professing thy holy and eternal Truth, against the wicked Conspiracies, and malicious practices of all the Enemies thereof: we yield unto thee from the very ground of our hearts all possible praise and thanks for thy wonderful and mighty deliverance of our gracious Sovereign K. James, the Queen, the Prince, and all the Royal Branches, with the Nobility, Clergy, and Commons of this Realm, assembled together at this present in Parliament, by Popish Treachery appointed as sheep to the slaughter, and that in most barbarous and savage manner, no age yielding example of the like cruelty intended towards the Lords annointed and his People. Can this thy goodness, O Lord, be forgotten, worthy to be written in a Pillar of Marble, that we may ever remember to praise thee for the same, as the fact is worthy a lasting Monument, that all posterity may learn to distrust it? From their unnatural Conspiracy, not our merit, but thy mercy, not our foresight, but thy providence hath delivered us, not our love to thee, but thy love to thine annointed Servant, and thy poor Church, with whom thou hast promised to be present to the end of the world. And therefore not unto us, nor unto us, Lord, but to thy name be ascribed all honour, and glory in all Churches of the Saints, throughout all generations: for thou Lord hast discovered the snares of death, Thou hast broken them and we are delivered. Be thou still our mighty Protector, and scatter our cruel Enemies which delight in Blood: insatiate their counsel, and root out that Babelish and Antichristian Set, which say with Jerusalem, Down with it, down with it, even to the ground. And to that end strengthen the hands of our gracious King, the Nobles and Magistrates of the Land with Judgment and Justice to cut off those workers of iniquity (whose Religion is Rebellion, whose Faith is Faction, whose practise is murdering of Souls and Bodies) and to root them out of the confines and limits of this Kingdom, that they may never prevail against us, and triumph in the ruins of thy Church; and give us grace by true and entire repentance to avert else and the like judgments from us. Thus, Lord, we earnestly crave at thy merciful hands, together with the continuance of thy powerful protection over our dread Sovereign, the whole Church, and these Realms, and the speedy confusion of our implacable Enemies, and that for thy dear Sons sake, our only Mediator and Advocate. Amen.

Franco di Franco, an Italian, made away in secret in the City of Vine.

IN the year 1611. on the day which the Papists call the Fast of God, a young man of six and twenty years old, being miraculously called unto the knowledge of the Gospel, was by certain Italians led through a Church where Mass was to be sung, and being urged to shew how he liked it, began to refute their Idolatry with great zeal, admonishing the People there present, not to suffer themselves to be so seduced by the pompous splendor of such vain Superstitions: Telling them, That that God which the Priest held up was no God, as those seducers made them believe, but a mere Idol, seeing it was not able to remove it self from one place to another unless it were born. Jesus Christ the Son of God our Saviour is to be sought, faith he, at the right hand of God the Father Almighty. This young man was forthwith compassed about with an innumerable Company of People, who buffeting him often on the face, and spurning him with their feet, haled him thence into the common Gaol of the City.

After many days the Bishop with sundry other Lords, calling him before them, asked him if the Hereticks had not persuaded him to use such words as he had spoken: also whether he had not a resolution to kill the Queen, or her Son the King, or the Bishop of Vine? The Prisoner wisely and resolutely answered, That no man had set him awork to do it, but only the zeal he had of Gods Glory, his Conscience provoking him thereto; holding it impossible for him any longer to suffer that men should attribute that honour to a dead Idol, which is only due to Jesus Christ his Saviour.

As touching their other demand, his answer was, that Christian Religion teacheth us not to murder men, as Papists have hitherto done in France, England, in the Low-Countries and elsewhere, as Histories do daily shew. The Prisoner also admonished the Bishop of Vine to forsake all Idolatry, to preach Gods Truth and Verity, and cease to bewitch the poor People with Humane Inventions: moreover this faithful witness did with much vehemency and constancy maintain the Truth of God, so that the Bishop of Vine drove out of his Hall his Servants and such as came in there to hear him, But he got little by it, for as they went here and there in the City, they told it abroad, how in all their lives they never heard man speak with that courage and boldness of Divine things to so good purpose, as this young man had done.

Not long after he was again brought before the same Judges, and questioned as before: but in stead of yielding, he hardened his face against the impudency of his Adversaries. They purposing to quell this his magnanimity, caused him to feel the Torture. When he had suffered the utmost of their cruelty, he was so far off from abjuring the Truth, that on the contrary his confession discovered in him a greater resolution than ever before, being delirous and shewing himself ready prest to receive the Crown of Martyrdom.

To be short, the last of June 1611. which was the same day twelve-month 1610. where in the City of Vine, being the Capital City of the great Duchies of Lithuania, at eight of the clock in the morning there happened as terrible a fire as hath been heard of, at the hour in which the said Bishops and a great Company of Jesuits were going on Procession: the fire was so vehement, that within the space of seven hours it devoured 6. thousand five hundred and fourteen houses; which fell out as the Jesuits supposed, because they spared the Hereticks there. Whereupon the Martyr of Christ was cruelly butchered there by the Enemies of the Gospel, not in a publick place, nor by day, though he instantly requested the same at the hands of his Judges; but privately in the night, in a place walled about nigh to the Governours House.

Before they put him to death, he was cruelly tortured, and then bound by the Executioner to a Post, where they drew out his Tongue under his Chin; which done, cutting off his Head; his Body being divided into four quarters, was carried the next day through the City upon six many Poles.

An History of three Englishmen put to death at Rome.

Three English-men meeting together entered into a conference concerning the state of the Church at that time, complaining that the zeal of Gods glory was wonderfully cooled among men, yea, and that even those of the Religion were grown but too worldly wife; that Satan by little was sowing the seeds of Atheism every where, by rocking Men asleep in the Cradle of Security; whereupon having in humble manner commended themselves into the hands of God, they determined to take their voyage to Rome, and there to encounter with the Adversary of Christ. Thither they came; and after a few days two of them behaving themselves modestly, did in secret manifest to some there the Truth of the Gospel, who being betrayed were imprisoned and put to death without any further ado.

The third, having resolved to act his part in publick, gave over himself to suffer all the extremities the wit of Man could invent. It came to pass one day that this man, espousing the Pope in the midst of his Massing devotion, stepped quickly unto him, plucked the consecrated Host out of his hands, cast it to the ground, trod it under foot, uttering invective speeches against the Mass and Antichrist. The People in a rage fell upon the Englishman; who, being altogether bruised with their filts and feet, said, You Hangman, find out as many torments as you can, the hand of the Almighty will shew it self the more gloriously. My Soul is resolved to vanquish death valiantly. He was forthwith bound and set upon an Ass, six Torches were lighted, and from Street to Street the Executioners bare them by him, burning therewith his Face, Mouth and Tongue first; for he had said before to one of the Tormentors, Thou hast no power over my Soul, thou Wretch, knowest thou not that God understands the voice of my secret thought and complaint. When the flames came overthwart his Checks, he was heard to cry, Lord forgive these men, for they know not what they do. After they had burned all his Face, put out his eyes, scorched and roasted his Body; in the end they consumed it wholly to ashes.

The learned Author, who set forth this History in a notable Work of his, notes neither the Year nor the Names of these English-men. It should seem to be about the time of Pope Clement the Eighth, in Anno 1595. for in his ample discourse he mentions an old wife man le sage veillard burned at Rome (after these English-men) who before he went to the Fire, spake with such efficacy to his Confessor sent unto him (who also left him not till he yielded up his Spirit in the midst of the flames into the hands of Christ) that this Confessor going the next day into the Pulpit, maintained the cause of the old Wife man with such boldness and zeal, that all the Audience hearing him attentively, without any resistance, understood his meaning, and never accused the Preacher.

An admirable Capuchin.

But in Lent following, a Capuchin Frier preaching before Pope Clement the Eighth called him Antichrist, and during that Lent ceased not to preach the Truth of the Gospel, in the Chair of Penitence, under the Robe and habit of a Liar, &c. In the same Work my Author (saith our Historian) mentions another Italian Preacher called N. Montalchin, who in describing his History hath these words: The Pope perceiving that by executing the Martyrs thus openly in the sight of the People, instead of terrifying them, thereby many were the more encouraged, he resolved with himself thence-forward to conceal his open violence out of the sight of the Sun, and to exercise it rather in the dark and in the night season. The Inquisitors, who had Montalchin in their hands were preparing a way to murder him privily, according to the Popes intention.

It so fell out, that the Taylor smelling the injustice which these Reverend Fathers were devising against the poor Prisoner, adventured to give him notice of it, to the end he making his peace with God, might fit himself for death. This experienced Souldier of Jesus Christ plotted a way under-hand, by a Spiritual wife, to catch the wife in their craftiness: faining therefore, a Repentance, he called for his Judges, telling them he was now minded to revoke his Errors, after they had pronounced Sentence against him, and would in the hearing of all recant what he had in publick maintained against the Truth.

His Judges, believing he had spoken in good earnest, promised him his life upon those terms. Now that they might the rather satisfy their pride, they made known to every one the time and place appointed for his Abjuration. All the City assembled together to take knowledge of this so unexpected a novelty. Montalchin was brought and placed on a Scaffold for that purpose. He stood there in his Shirt, holding in his hands two Torches lighted: then silence being obtained, he began to speak to the People as followeth.

Dear Brethren and Children, I have a long time taught you such a Doctrine as hath troubled you. I am now brought hither to open my mind unto you. Montalchin is a sinful man and therefore may err. But lend me your attention a while, and I will let you see the difference between both Opinions: Three words (enle, seule, seulement) will serve to distinguish between falshood and truth.

1. I have taught you that Christ is our only Sacrifice, our only Priest, who only was once offered for us. But the Doctors teach the contrary, to wit, that the true Body of Christ without Bread is offered up for the living and for the dead, that the Priests ought daily to offer up the natural Body of Christ really in the Mass.

2. I have taught that in taking the visible signs in the Sacrament, we do therein by Faith only take the spiritual and heavenly Bread of our Souls.

The Doctors say, that Christs Body is taken Flesh and Blood into the mouth and belly of the Communicant.

3. I have preached that Jesus Christ is our only Mediator, and that by him alone we have access unto the Father.

But the Doctors go further, and will have us to come to the Virgin Mary, making her and all the Saints departed our Mediators and Intercessors.

4. I have declared that we are justified only by Faith in Jesus Christ, and that the free Mercy of God is the foundation of our salvation.

The Doctors would have us to help our Faith and Grace by good Works, as meritorious causes of salvation.

5. You have heard me preach that Christ only gives grace; and that he alone pardons sins.

They affirm that the Church hath a Coffer or Chest, of which the Pope keeps the Keys, wherinto are put the Merits of Saints, which he largely distributes abroad to such as will buy his Pardons with Money.

6. I have told you, that the Canonical Books of the Old and New Testament are the only ground of our faith and salvation.

The Doctors add thereto their unwritten Verities.

7. I have taught you that after this life ended, there are only two places prepared for them to go unto who die and depart out of this World; One, the place of joy and comfort, the other of torment.

The Doctors say, there are four, viz. Paradise, Hell, Limbus and Purgatory.

8. I have preached, that the Pope is not a god on Earth, but only a Bishop, and that only of one place, if he therein behave himself as a good Bishop ought to do.

The Doctors make him Lord of the World, and the Head of the visible Church.

9. Now, O Christian Brethren, judge you of that which I have said, and see if you can discern Truth from Error; Truth leads you to life, honour and blessedness; Error and Lies to death and destruction.

Be now either Servants of Truth, or the Slaves of Error. For my part I will cleave to the truth of the Gospel, and do condemn all Errors and Lies: let Montalchin dye, and live thou, O Lord Jesus.

L I I I 2

Then

Then threw he down his two burning Torches, one this way and another that way, offering his hands to be tied and bound, which caused a great tumult among the People. Montalchin was returned back again to Prison.

Now Reader, it will not be hard for thee to imagine what entertainment he found there: whether or no the Popes * Decree was executed to the full upon this worthy Confessor, who in the face of the world did so nobly triumph over Satan and Antichrist his Lieutenant.

* Which was to put the Martyrs to death privately, as was noted in the beginning of this History.

Conclusion.

The invincible Constancy of the Martyrs tried the Persecutors; their fiery burning Zeal dried up the Rivers; the slaughter of mens Swords seemed to be blunted; the Hangmens Halters to be utterly spent and wasted, &c.

Anno
1620.

A True Narration of a Bloody Massacre committed upon the Protestants by the Papists in the greater part of the Valtoline, in the Year 1620. after the New Stile: Published for a necessary Admonition to all Estates, wherein the Gospel is professed amongst the Papists, and for Example to all true Christians of constancy in the Profession of the Holy Gospel.

Matt. 5. 10.

Blessed are they that are persecuted for righteousness sake, for theirs is the Kingdom of Heaven.

The true declaration of the Massacres of the Valtoline.

ALbeit that the Grisjon Lords, being as it were the Sovereign Magistrates, had by sundry Decrees, according to the common liberty of the two Religions in those Countries granted, that in the Country of Boalex, a place belonging to the Territory of Tell, there should be established a Church for the Religion, which should receive the ordinary stipend which at that present was allowed to other Churches of the Valtoline, An. 1619. in the month of May. The Minister of the Church of Tell with the Ministers of Irian and Bruse, together with the assistance of the principal Lords of Tyrane and Tegly, did meet together in the said place of Boalex, to preach in the Church of that place. But so great was the multitude and concourse of the Papists in that place in Arms, that they were of necessity enforced to give over their purpose; and at that time was Mr. Gaudenius Tacher the Pastor of Bruse almost beaten to death with Staves, a young man of Tyrane was slain outright, and others very cruelly handled by some of these Villains, who by that occasion may worthily be called the first Martyrs of the Country of Tyrane.

Within a short time after was murdered a Servant of the Governour of that place, where the rage and fury of those murderers grew unto that height, that they did not only contemn the Proclamations published by the Governour, but in scorn or despite thereof they passed up and down before the Palace, threatening to kill the said Governour, and other principal persons of the Church of France.

Now for that the ordinary Magistrate of that place was not strong enough to suppress the outrages and insolencies of those Villains, from whom none could be secure either in their Houses or abroad, by reason of the frequent attempts which they made upon the Protestants, the rather for that they bordered near upon a foreign Jurisdiction, to which they had recourse when they had committed any mischief, the Governour was constrained to make his address for justice to the Sovereign Duke of the Country, who about the midst of February, Anno 1620. granted a Commission, wherein were named these Commissioners, viz. the Lords Jochinus Montalce, at that time Vicar of the Valtoline, John Baptista of Salicchi, a Doctor of Law, Ja. Rumel a Captain, Salomon Candeamma Buoli, Landlaine of Tavor, in the ten Jurisdictions, Diegeanus Fertmannus, Captain of the Lordship of Meienfeld, and John Andrea Mimiardino for the Chancellorship, &c.

By these persons, besides the Processes framed already by the Lords, John of Cappaul, Governour of Tyrane, and Andreas Enderlins of Tegly, there were again divers Processes framed anew, and upon the imprisonment and revealing of certain persons it was discovered and confessed, there was a resolution made in the same place of Boalex, to put to the Sword not only the Preacher if he had preached, but also all the People, as many as professed the Gospel, as they could light upon, yea even the Magistrate himself; besides there were divers persons discovered, and those of principal rank, who were the Authors of those wicked and barbarous practices, and had promised all possible aid and assistance unto them.

And therefore, the importance of the business being of great consequence, it was thought expedient that those Lords Commissioners should return to Tavor, and report to the Court of Justice, which there resided, all the business which resulted of these Processes; which they accordingly did about the midst of April last past. Moreover, they were intreated by divers Noble persons of the Protestant Church of the Valtoline, that they would with all possible speed provide a Garrison of Grisjons for the defence of the Valley, in regard that by the foresaid discovery they had great reason to fear a general Rebellion, in case they should proceed to chastise the Authors of those tumults and disorders, and that such a business could not be, without intelligence with the Spaniards, and that so much the more likely, that some certain years ago such another practice had been discovered and attempted to be put in practice, as it came to pass 1584. and since of late.

All these businesses were considered, but it was not possible to put the same in effect for many reasons, had it not been that they received intelligence that a number of Spaniards approached near to the three Plevs, which were places adjoining to the Valtoline, by which occasion the Magistrate and Governours of the Valtoline were constrained to put a Guard near the Trenches of Tra-bona and Morben, about the Kalends of July 1620. thinking to secure the Valley from the forain Enemy: and that Guard consisted of the Countrymen and dwellers in the Valtoline: and this course wrought no other effect, but that the Protestants by this means were inclosed in of all sides, that they could not flee away on that side by the way already concluded, but anticipated within eight days which was the Sabbath-day. The ninth of July 1620. followed the Massacre in the Country of Tyrane and Tegly, as now since in Sondres, a principal Country of this Valley.

The

Anno

1620

The Massacre of Tyrane, wherein were murdered about three score Persons.

The beginning of their murders was made at Tyrane, wherein those barbarous and wicked fellows were assisted by certain Villains who lived near in a forain Jurisdiction, of whom the Principal Captains and Ring leaders, were Jacopo Robustello of Grosseto, Marco Antonio de Venosta, a Doctor of Physick of Mazzese, and Francis Venosta of Tyrane, a Doctor of the Civil Law. These together with their confederates and dependants, both such as were domestique, and came from forain places, that were the most cruel and bloody Villains which could be picked out thereabouts, before any enterprize covertly made, gave order, that all the ways and Passages of every side should be well guarded, to the end that their cruel enterprize upon the Protestants of the Country should not so readily be discovered, and they the Attempters themselves should be the less troubled in the Execution.

Then about six of the Clock in the night, they entred into the County of Tyrane, like so many foming wild Bore, making their rendezvous of Doctor Francesco Venosta. They caused four Muskets to be discharged before the Palace of the Scignior Padessa the principal Magistrate of the place, and rung the great Bell of Tyrane. Upon which signal all the Inhabitants in that Vicinity took the Alarm, and made head toward the said house. They gave order to break the Bridges which lay towards Bruse, and on the place they planted a strong guard, and this was done before day. Suddenly upon the dawning of the day, the Bells began to ring another peal at Matella, and then these Traitors began to bandy and range themselves together. The Protestants, who without fear or suspicion of any pacifice against them, came out of their houses into the streets to see what the matter was, were suddenly shot and most cruelly murdered in the place. Others by force entred into the houses of the Protestants, drew them out of their beds, and without any compassion slew all they could meet withal.

John Andrea Cataneo was by his Wife delivered from the hands of those Murderers, but was again by force recovered by them. And although this Gentlewoman was a near Kinswoman of Robustello, and of Dr. Venosta, as Cousins once removed, and this Cataneo had ever esteemed them among his better Friends, yet could not he obtain the favour to have his life spared. He prayed them that first he might have leave to speak with the said Doctor, which could not be obtained. In the mean time he escaped into another house adjoining, and hid himself in a Garret in the top thereof, hoping to escape the hand of those his furious Persecutors: but all in vain, for they nevertheless pursued him into the house, where he poor Gentleman hid himself, they took him, and cast him down out of the house into the street; and when they found there was yet life in him, they with a most inhumane and unspeakable cruelty dispatched him with a piece of Timber.

Antonio de Salva, a Chancellor in that Valley being appointed Judge upon criminal causes, a man of the greatest authority in the Pregella, and other places, who at that instant was resident at Sondres, being desirous to save himself together with his Deputy, Marco Antonio Venosta, a Doctor of Law in the house of Jacobo Homedeo was drawn out of the house into the street, with Venosta and his Servant Antonio Keller of Soglio in the said Pregella, and slain with a shot of Musket, being of the age of forty two years.

Seignior Andrea Enderline of Kublis in Prettigonia, a Gentleman of great worth, very singularly learned, and skilful in many Languages, being at that time Governor of Teglie, in the name of the three Leagues, being in this hurlyburly by chance in Tyrane in the house of Battista Baruffino, was also with his Servant George Peterlin frangled to death in the Chamber where he was found: and this noble Gentleman, being first cast out of the Chamber Window, was all his Body overlo beaten and bruised, that you could not know him; and yet after, their fury not ceasing, they knitting a Cord about his neck threw him into the River of Adda:

notwithstanding he was afterward found and buried.

In the mean time, with this Governour also was slain John the Son of Senior Michael Montio of Bruse, a Gentleman of singular goodness and Wisdom, who before time had been Deputy to his Father in the Government of Trabona, and in the same demeaned himself with great commendation. Who being detestous to withdraw himself from Tyrane to his own house, was intreated by Ambrosio Baruffino, Son of the forsaide Battista, for his greater security to lodge with him in his house. Which courtesy when he had accepted, suspecting no Treachery in his new Host, he was by him shot with a Musket, and cast into the Flood of Adda, being of the age of forty years.

The reverend Gentleman Senior Antonio Basso, Pastor of the Protestant Church of Tyrane, a man of great Sanctity and Wisdom, and a lover of the peace of the Country, hearing the noyse of these uprores, he and Master Samuel Andrejcha the Pastor of Mello in the lower Tercier, whom he had visited that day, withdrew themselves into a Hall, where having recommended their Souls to God, they were most cruelly slain.

Neither did those furious Persecutors rest here; but besides they cut off Basso's head, and carried it into the Church, and fixed it upon a Pole in the Pulpit where before time he was wont to preach, laying with all disgrace and scorn, Come down Basso, thou hast preached long enough already.

In like manner at the same time the Palace of the Chequer of Tyrane was besieged by those Helhounds; wherein dwelt Senior John de Cappaul being at that time Governor. To which place Michael Lazarone, a man of good account and Chancellor of that Office, had retired himself early in the morning to save his life. But because he was extremely hated of the Papists, by reason of his singular Piety, Religion, and sincerity, he was especially pursued by them; inasmuch as those Rebels followed him even to the Palace, threatening to set fire on the same, if he were not delivered into their hands. Lazarone seeing that, notwithstanding the Palace was well furnished with great ordnance, faulcons, muskets munition, and other necessary provision, he was like to fall into the hands of his Enemies, for that the said Governor was resolved in his judgment to overcome those miscreants rather by fair and courteous dealing than by force, was enforced that evening to fly out of the house, and to hide himself about the Banks of the River Adda, wherein he covered himself, and lay close three whole hours all naked, poor Gentleman, to save himself. But his Enemies, and principally Doctor Vincenzo followed him hotly, accompanied with many shot, and at the last they found him, and drew him out of the Water. And albeit he did with Tears in his eyes beseech them that they would give him his life, in compassion of his dear small Children, yet could not he obtain that favour at their hands, but they answered him, That this was no time for pity, and favour: but if he would swear by the Popes Bull, and abjure his Faith, in that case they would then his favour, and grant him his life, but he, with a great courageous resolution, answered, God forbid and defend that I for love of this temporal life should deny my Lord Jesus Christ, who with his precious Blood upon the Wood of the Cross did at so dear a rate redeem me, and after that I have so long time through his grace freely and publicly confessed him, should now hazard the loss of eternal life, to which I was elected before the foundation of the World; I say God forbid. Upon this speech he was in most barbarous and savage manner murdered by them.

The very same evening was the Gate of the Palace burnt to the ground by those Rebels, who the next morning entred into the same, raging with fury, and took the Governour Prisoner with his young Son; spoiling and ransacking Wives, and Maidens, and carrying away all they could lay hands on. The Governour of the Palace was carried away Prisoner to the house of the forsaide Dort Francesco, and at last, after he had long time been tugged to and fro, he was miserably slain with a shot.

John Antonio Mazano endeavouring to make resistance against those Rebels and his Wife defending him, was with her self and two young Children miserably killed.

Another called John Antonio Schloffer, a Gardonefe, having made long resistance, and killed one of the Rebels, was at the last taken, and tyed to a Tree, and so shot to death.

To be short, these Villains had no regard of any Person, neither young, nor old, nor weak, nor strong, but all of all sorts were either shot unto death, or cut in pieces, or in one manner or other destroyed; and the number of those Persons in estimation, who in Tyrane received the Crown of Martyrdom for the profession of the Gospel, was about sixty.

Of those who by the grace of God, although with great danger, escaped through the horrid and vast Alpes into Retia and other parts, were only three Persons, that is, Doctor Jacobo Albertino, Jacobo Nevio de Coira, and Egido Venosta, who left behind them Wealth, Wives, Children, and whatsoever goods they had.

The Ladies who were not slain were constrained to change their Religion, and at this day go to Mas, saving the Wife of the said Lazarone and her Daughters, and her Niece, being the Wife of the said Egido, who by the assistance of Almighty God continued in safety. And there also the eighth of August, the said Ladies were released, who retired themselves into Retia, viz. the Wife of this Lazarone, and her two Daughters, leaving behind them in the Valtolme one Daughter and two young Sons who cannot obtain leave to depart the Country.

C H A P. 2.

The Massacre of Teglio, wherein were murdered about sixty Persons.

These wicked Traitors having in this manner committed the foresaid execrable Massacre in Tyrane, suddenly the strangers and the outlaws of the Mountains, apparelled in red Caskocks, and well mounted on horseback, marked in the morning to Tellas the hour when the Sermon was, and ran like ravening Wolves to the Volta Church, being guided by two Friars, Azzo and Carlo Bessa, and by Antonio Bessa their Cousin German. The Protestants who were in the Church, observing the evil intention of those Villains, arose suddenly from their seats, and endeavored to shut the Church Door, and to barricado the place with the Benches. They without laboured with all their power to enter the Church, but not being able so speedily to do it, some of them climbed up unto the Windows, and discharged their Muskets among the People without respect of any Person, and killed very many of them. At last they forced the door, entered, and slew all they found, saving a few who promised to go to Mas. Some of the men and Ladies with their Children fled into the Belfrey to save themselves; but they set fire to the place, and most miserably burnt all that were within.

Amongst those who were slain in the Church, the chiefest of note was the reverend Lord John Piere Dante of Roma of the higher Engaden, a Minister of the Protestant Church of Tell, a man rarely endued with learning and the fear of God, and in those respects honoured even of his Enemies themselves; who after he had with lively reasons exhorted that afflicted Church of his constantly to persevere unto death in the known and confessed Truth, to the honour of his Saviour, even so long as the brevity of the time would permit him, was to the grief of very many miserably shot to death, being of the age of 42 years.

Amongst these was one Josui Gatti a Doctor of the Law, Lieutenant to the Podesta of Tell, and principal Justice, an honorable Gentleman, and of excellent virtues, about 43 years of age, together with Daniel Gugelberge.

Gaudenzo Guixziardi a Gentleman of like worth and honour, Cousin German to the Father of the forenamed Azzo Bessa, of the age of sixty four years; Margaritta his Daughter of the age of fourteen years, or thereabouts, was wounded with a Musket shot in the head, going about to bow her self by giving a last kiss to her dear Father who was yielding up the Ghost.

Antonio the Son of Scipion Bessa, a Gentleman very Anno rich and of excellent parts, although he was the near 1620. Kinship of Azzo Bessa, was shot to death, and died in the Arms of his Wife, being of the age of thirty seven.

Alcanio Gatti an Apothecary of Tell, being seven and twenty years of age, George his Brother eighteen years old, Jonata Piatti sixty five years old, Maximilian Piatti four and twenty years, Vincenzo Frigerio, Notary and Procurator of Tell, age 39. Marfilio Piatti, age 38. Filiberto his Brother age 19. Virginio Piatti, age 28. Lorenzo Piatti of Boaltia, age 23. slain with a Musket shot at the Window of the Steeple. Philippo Nova likewise of Boaltia, age 45. Bartolomeo his Brother, age 42. Pietro Marcionino Master of the School of Tell, age 35. Thomas de Boruno, age 64. together with his Son Claudio Gatti a Notary, age 43. Andrea Tempino a Gardonefe, age 41. Anna Gala di Zozio of the upper Agnadma Wife of Bartolomeo Nova a Roman Catholic, age 42. Benedetto Cattaneo, age 17. Giovanni Piccio, and John Martin Cattaneo his Sons, Lucius Federicke, age 60. Andrano Morello age 50. Josapha his Brother, age 35. Alberto Marcummi, 45. Federico Valentino of Zernexo, of Agnadma the lower, dwelling at Gura, of the hundred of Chiuro, age 64. Joanni Menghino of Posuovo, dwelling in Gura, 40 years of age.

In the Steeple of the Church were burnt these which follow; Horatio Gatti, Son of the above said Josue Gatti, age 6. Dr. Lelio Paravicino of Berbenno, a Physician of great worth, and excellently practised in his profession, dwelling in Tell, age 43. Azzo Guixziardi Nephew of the above named Gaudenzo a young courteous Gentleman, and of rare hope, age 22. Federico Guixziardi, age 24. Horatio Paravicino Son of Francisco, age 6. Margareta Marthianica Wife of Raphael Nova a Doctor of the Law, a Gentleman of great worth, age 43. Madalena her Daughter, Wife of Daniel Gatti, age 18. Albelmo Gatti Chancellor of the State of Tell, age 67. Giovann Pauli Piatti Son of Jonata, age 48. Claudia Piatti Daughter of Massimiliano, age 7. Violante late Wife of Theodore Gatti, age 64. Giovannina Widow of Vincenzo Nova, age 34. Pietro Regenzano Chancellor of the above named Podesta of Tell, age 46. Josue Meda, age 50. Martus de Borun, age 53. Madalena Girardona Wife of Claudio Gatti, age 33. Augusto Gatti Son of Abraham, age 22.

Abroad without the Church and Steeple were slain Vincenzo Gatti, Brother of Albelmo, age 73. Andrea his Son, age 32. who was murdered in the street called Lagone. Claudio Gatti Son of Theodore, Jonatan Meda Son of Josue, Daniel Lazzerato, Vincenzo Cattaneo, and Giovann Pietro Regenzano, who, coming from Morbegno from the Garrison, were slain in a certain place called Buffetta, age 13. or thereabouts. Thomaso Regenzano Brother of Giovann Pietro, age 38. Melebiar Marcionino wounded in the head, but after five days being found in his Bed, was solicited with great promises to renounce his Religion: but he with great earnestness and resolution refusing was murdered in his bed age 65. Giovanni Antonio Federici, Doctor of Law in Sonico, in Valaemencia, age 38. was very near to be murdered in Prison, from whence at the instance of Antonio Piatti Curate of Tell he was set free.

In this place it is worth the noting, that Giovann Ambasio Nova Son of Doctor Raffaele, a very learned young man, albeit out of humane infirmity to save his life he had promised in the Church of Tell to go to Mas, yet in short time recovering himself, and acknowledging his oversight with much grief and repentance for his fault, he with all speed departed from Tell towards Sondrio, supposing that he should be safely protected by his dear Kinship Nadar Marlemico; but being required by the Souldiers who kept the passage of Trisfrina, to deny his Religion, for refusing the same, he was slain in the way, being 22 years of age. This young man is a singular example for them who fall merely through infirmity and danger of death, not in other respect but yet after their fall, through the grace of God, and the crowing voice of the word do return to repentance, confessing their fault, and with pained sorrow of heart, bewailing the same; which even beset the blessed Apostle Peter himself.

C H A P. 3.

The Massacre following committed at Sondres in the Mountain of Sondrium and Malenk; wherein were left dead above 140. Persons.

THese wicked and savage wretches, having in this manner executed and finished this their impious and execrable enterprise at Tyrane and Tell, assembled themselves in the midst of the Valley of Sondres; where the principal and chief Justice of the Country made his residence, having before placed secure Guards upon every passage of the Country about. They came principally by the conduct of Giovanni Guizzardi, Prospero Svadino, and Gasilo Pezalis, being all three of Ponte, with an entire Company of Souldiers from Ponte, Chiur, and some few from Porti, who the very same Sunday marched to the Gate of Albosaglia: in which place they found Lucrezio Paribello a Dr. Giovann, Jacomo, and Floratio his Sons, with another Company of Souldiers attending the coming of the abovesaid J. Guizzardi with his Company.

This business was freely divulged all abroad in Sondres by the Roman Catholics themselves, that these banished came towards Sondres to execute the same design which they before had practised at Tyrane and Tell, who offered their aid to the chief Justice to defend him against the invasion, protesting that they would no more endure any such villanous attempts. Wherefore they took Arms, under pretence and shew of defence, beating up the Drums, and ringing the Bells for the Alarm: by which means not only great multitudes assembled in Arms out of the Countries adjoining, but also with one purpose and consent to do mischief, and to execute their malicious intentions against the Protestants who suspected nothing less. In the mean time the Protestants, trusting to the great promises which the Papists made them, mixed themselves amongst them.

These Persons, concealing their mischievous intent, killed at times sometimes one, sometimes another of the Protestants, in such manner, as although divers of them were slain, yet they did not understand the secret treachery.

Some of them endeavouring to flee towards the Valley of Malenco, which lies against Poschiavio, Agnada, and Pregaglia, were murdered by certain villains of Penchiero, a place about Sondres: and amongst other Gentlemen, were wounded and run through in many parts Frances Marliamio, Giovanni Andrea Chiffa, and others, particularly Dr. Bartholomeo Paravicino, Doctor of the Law in Berbenno, called the Fatt, who was cruelly murdered, being of age 53. years.

The day after was slain in the morning Nicholo Marlianco, Son of Pellesto, a man singularly affected to the publick good, and to the advancement of the Gospel. He was shot by his Cousin German Emilio Luvizaro meeting him in the street, the said Marlianco going in the Company of Lucio Orschetta of Zorno Agnada the lower, to visit the Court of Guard in the Quarvevo of Sondres, age 46.

At this time it was delivered for certain, that the day before was murdered Cesar the Son of Prospero Paravicino, and of Hortensia Marteninga, Countess of Barco, a Gentleman of most rare Abilities, travelling about his business towards Treslar, age 50. Besides Prospero his Son was slain, of age 27. also Battista Giarardo with his Son George, and many others: by which means, these Protestants were so scattered and left destitute of any head for their conduct, that they could not possibly unite themselves to make defence against their Enemies.

Only the Chancellor Giovann Andrea Migardino, calling to remembrance the matters contained in the abovesaid process, the same Sabbath day the ninth of July, with his Brother Gregory, and others of the Church of Sondres, withdrew themselves to the number of eighteen together, with certain Ladies and their young Children into their own house, which is adjoining to the Palace, and there they fortified themselves with resolution to defend themselves even to the death, seeing that in the street wherein they dwelt none durst come out of the doors, nor enter into the Church which stood over against them. Nevertheless, the enemy resolved to sit upon the house with a thousand armed men, threatening also the Magistrate to kill him, in case any of them should take any harm by those who were retired into the house. Whereupon the Magistrate commanded them in the house to depart; who being well armed took their way on the sudden by Sondres towards the Bridge, where for a time they fortified themselves, then returning again, they drew unto them certain others, and marched towards the Church of the Mountain of Sondres. In which place being gathered together with the Pastor, they made their Prayers to God, and afterwards to the number of three-score and thirteen Persons in all they passed the Valley of Malenco, which was beset by the Enemy on two sides; but those that kept those places were by the providence of God so astonished, that they fled away, and the Protestants, although they were pursued to the tops of the Hills did miraculously escape with safety.

The Enemy, that is to say, the proper Inhabitants of the Valley, with their Ringleaders James Robustello, Azzo Bessa, John Guizzardi, Lorenzo Parribello, and others entered into the Palace, they deprived the Magistrate of his Office, that is to say, Giovanni, Andrea Travieso of Scanti, of the upper Agnada Captain and Governour of the Valtoline, who with his family had retired himself into the house of Paul Clamar until Wednesday the eleventh of July; on which day, under pretence to secure them, they were conducted to Malenco, where in the Village of Chiffa, against their Faith given, they were made Prisoners, and detained for eight days following. They who by the commandment of the said Captain found themselves to be made Prisoners were delivered, putting in their Room certain of the Religion. They immediately changed the Callender, and gave for a Prey the goods of the Protestants: by which occasion great multitudes of Persons assembled from all the parts of the Valtoline to rob and spoil; and by reason of the sweetness which they found in pillaging the goods they met with in divers noble houses excellently well furnished, grew an intolerable heat and outrage to spoil, inasmuch as Brother robbed Brother, and the nearest of Kindred pursued and robbed one another, and followed one another to the death. The Peasants, hoping by means hereof to be exempted from paying their yearly Rents, ran with all fury and madness about the Woods, Bushes, and Mountains, searching after the poor Protestants, who were scattered by fear, whom they murdered as they found them with extreme cruelty.

Amongst these were these Gentlemen of greatest worth and resolution, Dr. Bartholomeo Paravicino of Sondres, from whom they took about two thousand Crowns; Dr. Nicolas his Brother, whose Brother Doctor Lelio had before been slain in the Church of Tell; Petronio Paravicino, Doctor, and Giovann Battista Mallero of Antwerpe in the Low-Countries, a man endued with excellent rare qualities of mind and Body; for he was both a good Philosopher and a learned Divine, and very fit to instruct you; He was surpris'd in the house of Morone, and when they had stoned him to death, they cut off his Head, ripped his Belly, and took out his Entrails. His Children, Giovann, Andrea, and Catharine were carried to Milano.

Annaldi Lisa, Wife of Anthony Grotti of Chio in the Territory of Vicentine, of an honorable and ancient house, was come out of Italy but some few years before for the liberty of her Conscience. This Anna was first by them exhorted with fair words to change her Religion; but the constantly persevering therein, was admired. A holy resolution. The world at the least have a care of her young Infant which she held in her Arms, being about two months old; otherwise she would make reckoning that in the twinkling of an eye both she and her Babe should die: but she with a bold and undaunted courage answered, That she had not departed out of Italy her native Country, neither had she forsaken all the estate she had, to renounce at last that Faith which had been inspired unto her by the Lord Jesus Christ; yes, that she would rather suffer, if it were possible, a thousand deaths. And how, faith she, should I have regard in this cause of my Infant since God our Heavenly Father spared not his only Son, my Lord Jesus, but delivered him up to death.

death for the love of me and of all sinners? Then giving them the Chio, he said, behold the Child; the Lord God, who hath care of the Birds of the air, will much more be able to save this poor Creature although by you it were abused and left in those wild Mountains. So unlacing her gown she opened her Breast, and said, Here is the Body which you have power to kill; but my Soul, on which you have no power to lay hand, that I commend to my God, and presently she was slain, and afterwards cut in pieces, being thirty five years old. The Infant, because it was a lovely and a sweet babe to look on was suffered to live. God restraining the cruelty of those Butchers, and was delivered to a popish Woman to nurse up. And here is to be observed, that this blessed Martyr imitated the commendable example of her dear Brother Giovanni Antonio, who for the Profession of the Truth of the Gospel having continued in the said Chio, and endured a grievous Imprisonment two years together, was at last condemned to the Gallies, where he died within two Months after. When he was bound in Chains, being carried from Chio, he said, You may indeed bind my person, but the word of God shall never the more be bound in the hearts of the elect, that it do not themselves manifestly it self, and bring forth fruit, &c.

Behold here
the power of faith

Gods Word and Gospel can never be bound to the heart of God.
Bless.

According to this most Christian example John Steffen Alvon and Rodolfo Rivella, being both of them of the Valley of Sondres, did not only in their proper persons deal with their Blood the Truth of the Gospel, but moreover exhorted their Children, John Andrea, and John Antonio, the one of them being fifteen years of age, the other ten, that they should do the like, following the honourable example of the seven Brethren in the Maccabees and of their Mother, who chose rather to die, than to obey the King, and to transgress the Law of the Lord.

And yet by reason of the Money and Jewels found in the Houses and Chests of the Protestants, the eagerness and fury of each of those miscreants increased daily more and more; inasmuch as that there were neither Noble nor Ignoble, nor Lady, nor neither Man, Woman, Young nor Old, of what condition soever, who were not ransacked and spoiled some twice, and others oftentimes thrice over. Some honourable Matrons had their Rings pulled off their Fingers, inasmuch as they would cut off their Hands and Fingers, if they would not presently draw them off. Some Women were by force dragged up to the tops of high and craggy Mountains, and threatened to be thrown down headlong with their Children, unless they would go to Mass. And although Lucretia the Wife of Antonio Lavizzaro, and Katherine Wife of Giulio Merlanico, being moved and terrified with the horror of death, had consented to change their Religion, yet were they murdered for all that without any pity at all.

The same belet to D. Jo. Battista Salici of Soglio in the Pregaglia; for although that his life was promised him, nevertheless he was brought into the Market Place of the said Campello pinioned with a cord, and miserably slain with two Musketeers, being of the age of 72. after he had bin robbed of his Gold and Silver, whereof great store was found in his House, according to the common and too much practised Rule of the Roman Catholics, Hæreticis non est servanda fides.

Dominico Berto, an aged man of 67 years, was set upon an Ass, his Face turned to the Tail, which he held in his Hand in stead of a Bridle, and in his other Hand a Book, whom in this manner they carried through Sondres saying, Alessio, Alessio, &c. they cut off his Ears, his Nose, his Cheeks, boring holes in divers parts of his Body with a strange and unheard of barbarousness, until they had quite killed him; but he for the love of Christ his Saviour with great and incredible courage and cheerfulness endured all those varieties of Torments and Martyrdom. And by this it may be gathered what they would have done with Seignior Alessio, a faithful Pastor of the Church of Sondres, if he had fallen into the Hands of these raging Beasts. But he by the great mercy of Gods was preserved with his Wife and Children, in the company of Seignior Georgio Inatro Minister of Berbenno, and Charles Salice Son of Cavaliere Hercle of happy memory and others, nor v. least great travel, danger and difficulties, among the craggy and dangerous Mountains, whereon they travelled, it is pleasing the gracious God by the virtue of his Spirit graciously to assist him, although he was in the midst of his Persecutors.

Anthony de Prati of the Hills was with many words exhorted to abjure his Religion; but he constantly persevered, and with a generous courage replied in these words, My Soul shall be taken up into Abrahams Bosom, and after my death my Enemies shall see the Angel of God bled by me, &c. accordingly an Angel appeared over his Body in a white garment, being beheld of the by-standers, who of their own accord have publicly confessed the same.

Theophilo Mossino received into his Body a shot with a Musket: but before he was dead a Gag was put in his Mouth, which being filled with Gunpowder, fire was given to it, and in that manner he passed miserably out of this life; Giovanni his Son was slain with seven wounds.

Seignior Salveto, being delivered out of Prison, was instantly exhorted to embrace the Catholick Roman Religion. But notwithstanding he constantly persisted, although he was both young in years, and a lover of worldly vanities; and having received a shot of a Musket was carried by a ladder out of the Palace to the ground, from whence he raised himself, and be sought them to finish the work they had to do about his Body, that he might render his Soul to his Creator, being 28 years of age.

Jo. Battista Mingardino, having received many wounds, and being stripped of his garments, and left naked in the Woods, nevertheless after this to evil inhumanity returned to his House: and although the Priests of Sondres did with all diligence possible exhort him to change his Religion, promising him, in case he would do so, Mountains of Gold; nevertheless he constantly persevered in the Truth of the Gospel even to the end.

Christina Ambria the Wife of Vincenzo Bruno of Prada, Madalena Meris of Montagna, and John Garato of Frasagola, were thrown down headlong into the River Adda, from divers Bridges of Belfino, St. Petro and others, and so drowned, because they had refused to embrace the Catholick Roman Religion, and that with so manly and constant a Resolution, as did work an admiration in the persecutors themselves.

In this mean time notwithstanding the reverend Seignior Bartholomew Marlanico received the Crown of Martyrdom, who sometimes had preached at Sondres, a true Servant of God, and for his life and manners unrepensible. Others had their mouths slit up to the ears; others received other fashions in the Face, others were in other manner most cruelly mangled to the death, Battista of Grillo, called of the Bajacca, an aged man of seventy five years, being found in the House of the Heirs of Seignior Cente Visi Martimengo of most happy memory, being set upon by those murdering catiffes, leaped out of a Window and passed the River Malesio, and having gotten to his House and shifted his clothes, he was assailed again, taken prisoner, and carried to the Palace, put often to the Strapado, and lastly was in such sort sliced and hewn with a sword, that he had nothing left him but the Arms which were fastened to the cord.

Paolo Baretta of Chio in the County of Vicence, a Virgin of the age of seventy five years, of an honourable, noble, and antient family, who twenty seven years came before to Sondres to embrace the Gospel, was by these Villains carried through Sondres, with all disgrace, shame, and scorn, having a Myrrour of paper put upon her head, her Face besmeared with dirt, and many buffets given in her cheeks, and in many other fashions abused. Being required to call upon the holy Virgin Mary and the Saints, and to place her trusting in them: the smiling did with great readiness answer them, My trust and my Salvation is in my only Saviour Jesus Christ, and in him only will I rest. And it is also true, that I acknowledge the Virgin Mary for the most holy Virgin above all others, which ever was, or ever will be: who was a Virgin before the birth, a Virgin in the birth, and after birth, and so shall remain. Who although she be favoured and beloved of God, above all Women in the world, to be made the Mother of my Lord Jesus the Saviour of the world: nevertheless, because she is not able to know our necessities, nor being omnipotent (for otherwise she would be God himself) and desires hath had need of the merits of her Son, it was not lawful for her to call upon any other than the eternal God, who knoweth all things, and and upon no creature of any quality whatsoever, &c. In this for the endured the Scorns and Outrages with an incredible constancy and cheerfulness, saying continually, I do willingly endure as becometh mee to do, desiring no better usage, since the very same hath been done to my Lord and Saviour Jesus, and to his Apostles, and to thousands of the holy Martyrs. Lastly, she was carried away to be sent to Milaine; but she, rather then that should be, desired earnestly that she might be killed, seeing she was resolved to die in the Faith of the Lord Jesus, both there and at Milaine: but she could not obtain the favour to be killed there, but was carried along as hath been said. On Wednesday being the eighteenth of July was found in the plain of St. Gregory in the Valtoline in the high way the dead Body of an old Woman, which by the conjecture of some was the Body of this Woman Paula, who in conclusion had been murdered by the Assassinate in that place.

There were divers other good Christians, honest Men, and fearing God, both of rich and of mean estate of Sondres from the Mountain of Sondres, and from the Valley and Commonalty of Malenco, that were in greater numbers cruelly murdered; who in regard they were ready to seal the truth with their Blood, our desire was for this reason, that mention should be made of them.

And these were the reverend Gentlemen, Marco Antonio Alba of Casale, of Monferrato, Pastor of the Church of Malenco, a man full of zeal, of the age of sixty three years; John Pietro Mingardino, Anastasia his Sister, Lorenzo Hicke slain above the Bridge of Sondres, and thrown down into the water; Andrea his Son, who had his Nose cut off, and Cheeks even to the furthest part thereof, that they might afterwards put him to the more cruel death; Andrea the Son of Peter called Luther near to the Butchery of Sondres; John Oswald a Carpenter of di Cyra near to the Palace of Sondres, Daniel Newbecher near to the Flood of Sondres, wherein hee was cast, being half dead before, John Lorenzo near unto the Church at the Mount of Sondres, Gaudenzio di Mossini, John in Bongimino, Battista and Andrea his Sons, John Antonio Son in Law of Vicenzo Bruno, Steffano Pagano of Folchiaro. Antonio Son in Law of Vicenzo Bruno, Stephano Pagano of Folchiaro, Antonio Samadeno Paolo, and Jacobo Demonsconi, Andrea Son of Pietro Duchenno, Domenico his Brother, Pietro his Son, Nicolo Feacaiolo sometime Deacon of Sondres, Eugenio Chiesia, Giovanni Chiesia, Barnardo his Son. Radolphe his Brother dwelling in Malenco had promised to go to Mals, for which cause his Life was given him: but because hee had furnished with victuals Sigismor Alessio, and his Company, when they passed the Mountains, he was shot to death.

John Vientius Andreone Cani was hewed into many pieces, of age 84. Zacharia Ventura of Bresciano, a poor, lame, dumb beggar, yet made he a sign with his Finger, how small account hee made of the Mals.

Moreover John Patara a Member of the Church of Sondres, being discovered to be one of the Religion, was on the sudden shot with a Musket in the Back and so died.

Many hid themselves in Holes, and Caves, and in Woods, out of which they durst not come but by night only to get some food, and that with great fear and terror of the watching Enemy; others for want of convenient food to eat, and others that fed onely upon roots, leaves, and grasse, made an end of their lives; and many were murdered in divers places, who had no burial at all; so as many Carcasses were to be seen in Groves and Woods in the Mountains, and in waters in many places.

C H A P. 4.

The Massacre of Berbenno, wherein were slain about eleven Persons.

IN what manner also busineses passed in the Noble Countrey of Berbenno is to do likewise plainly appear; for in that place also the Rebels played their part of killing and spoyling the professors of the Gospel. For after they had executed their cruelties and outrages, as hath bin delivered before in Tyrane, Bruse, Tell, Sondres, in the Mountain of Sondres, Malenco and other places, they also received special commandment, as may appear by a Letter written to them by John Guzzardi of the twelfth of July of the present year, that they should with all their power and courage, murder, strangle, massacre, and in sum should use all diligence, without favour or mercy, to destroy all Lutherans wheresoever: by vertue of which Commission they have not for their parts omitted any manner of outrage and villany against the Protestants. And first there were presently murdered certain persons of good rank and quality, and that with great cruelty, against faith and promise given them. The which was with so much the more rage and fury put in execution: for that those Catholic Romans themselves, who upon the first Proposition refusing to give their Consents to the sudden to those murders, were without respect or favour on the sudden murdered themselves as happened to Bartholomeo Porretto, and other Roman Catholics.

The Protestants that were massacred were these that follow, Theophilus de Piscatory of Ognano in Romagna, who had dwelt in Berbenno twenty years past, was slain in a place above Berbenno called Luzione, the tenth of July, of the age of sixty five years.

Anna di Cassavia of Pregaglia, Wife of the above said Theophilus, was before murdered at a House called the Chanons of Berbenno the day abovesaid, aged fifty years.

Concordia Cretta of Tyrane, the Wife of Giovann Gugelman of the Territory of Zurich, who had dwelt in Berbenno as many years, was massacred in the place and on the day abovenamed, being of the age of forty three.

Aurelio the Son of Nicolas Paravicino, going from Berbenno to Sondres, was slain in the plain of Cassione the eighteenth of July, aged fifty seven.

Bartholomeo the Son of David Paravicino, was wounded to death in the Head with the shot of a Musket, who, quite against the hope and expectation of the Chirurgioni, lived five days after, and then died, being eighteen years of age.

Ottavio of Capelli, an honourable Gentleman, was together with two others underwritten, John Battista and Horatio Paravicino detained as Prisoners in the Chanoni of Berbenno, from the eleventh unto the fix and twentieth day of July, on which day they were requested and accompanied to Sondres by the commandment of Robustello, who pretended with all kindness and courtesie to entertain them; causing them to drink, and to be accompanied even unto Sassella: But there, by order of the said Robustello, they were murdered; who replied, being demanded why he did so; That they must never keep Faith with Hereticks. This Ottavio was thirty eight years of age.

John Battista Paravicino of Capelli a Gentleman also of great honour, who was kept Prisoner as aforesaid, and conducted to Sondres, in his return unto Sassella, there with Ottavio was slain, being of the age of four and thirty years.

Horatio, Brother of the said John Battista, was wholly and in all things his faithful companion, and in like manner rendered his life the day abovesaid, being thirty two years of age.

Anna de Beveri of Ginevra, Wife of the abovenamed Ottavio, a Gentlewoman of an honourable estimation, being desirous for the safety of her life to follow a company of Grisen Souldiers, amongst whom was a Cousin of hers, and other Kinsmen of hers, not being able to travel by reason of the sharpness and steepness of the way being a Gentlewoman grave and tender, was shot in the back with a Musket, and left for dead the third of August, being forty years of age.

Theofina Paravicino of Capelli, Mother of the above said John Battista, and Horatio, a Gentlewoman of great worth, was slain in her own house, being of the age of fifty five years.

Adamo Scaramucio of Tyrane was at the time of the Barbarous Massacre of Tyrane in the Garrison of Morbennno, from whence notwithstanding he escaped and came to Clavenno, afterwards meaning to return with the Band of Grisen to the Valtoline, and to accompany the said said Theofina to Sondres, was murdered, being twenty years of age. He was a Young Man of singular expectation.

CHAP. 5.

The Massacre of Caspiano and Trahon, wherein there were murdered eleven persons or thereabouts.

BUT for all this the Trabones could not pass in the lower Valtolina, but that he received his part in this persecution with the persecution of divers persons, which the Reader may see by the Catalogue ensuing.

Johua the Son of Hortensio Malacrida, coming from Caspiano, in his Journey to Bulio, being encountered at the Bridge of Majino, and being demanded if he would go to Mals, answering that he would not, was forthwith slain and cast into the River of Majino, being of the age of thirty years.

The like befel to his Brother Plimit, he was sought for in Bulio by 25. persons, and not being found there, was met in his return betwixt Ardan and Bulio, and killed, being 26. years of age.

Andrea Parovicino of Bugo, of Caspiano Sarro, by his Trade a Tailor, stayed there from the 9. of July, until the coming off the Grisson Band into the Valtolina: but after the sudden departure of the said Band, being discovered by his Counriment and Kinsfolks, was taken and carried to Morbegno, and being solicited to forsake the True Religion, and to embrace the Roman, and standing with great manfulness thereto, was condemned to the fire, and was placed between two Heaps of Wood, to make him to recant. But all was in vain; for being asked if he were a Catholic, he answered, That he was. Then, if he were a Roman Catholic; he also affirmed likewise, that he was so. But being demanded if he held the Roman Faith as it is at this day, he answered, no. It is true, said he, that I hold the ancient Catholic Roman Faith, which was preached by St. Paul, That a Man is saved by grace by the means of Faith, and not by works, left any Man should boast. Being demanded, if he believed the Pope to be Head of the Church, he answered, No; because Christ only is the Head of the Church, according to the promise, I will be with you unto the end of the world.

And although the fire was first kindled, and then put out, of purpose to draw him to a recantation, nevertheless he persevered and endured that cruel death with admirable constancy, the 15. of August, being sixty years old.

Giovann Pietro Malacrida, although he were little of stature, yet was he great and mighty in the Confession of the Truth, inasmuch that for the love of his Saviour he suffered death with singular cheerfulness, being forty years of age.

His example was devoutly and constantly imitated by Elizabeth his Wife, who was killed in the eight and thirtieth year of her age: and moreover these Herodian Murderers not therewith content, but joyning one Barbarous Inhumanity to another, observing a Daughter of hers, being an Infant of three years old, to lie in the Cradle, although it was a Child of a sweet Countenance and these Wretches seeing that the Babe did look lovingly and cheerfully on them, which would have been enough to have moved any Adamantine Heart to compassion, notwithstanding they took the poor Babe by the feet, dashed her against the Wall, and in this manner most barbarously murdered the same.

Thomaso Maestreilla Carpenter, and a principal Engineer, excellent in Building of Mills and other Buildings, was murdered in one of his Mills at Melle, being eighty years of age.

Dominico of Pagano, called Luther of Scermelle of the hundred of Carviche in Trabones, being at his work at Morbegno, was killed the fourteenth of August, age forty eight; he was followed by his Son Jacomo, age eighteen, and Peter his Son, of age fifteen: also of Maria his Sister: all which in one day, being the fourteenth day of August, were for the Faith of the Gospel professed by them Sacrificed to God their Creator and Saviour.

CHAP. 6.

Anno 1620.

The Massacre of Bruse, in which were Murdered to the number of 27. Persons.

THese wretched Murderers were not contented in the place abovenamed, which were subjects to the Lords Grissons at Tyrane, Tell, Sondres, Monte di Sondrio, Berbenno and Malenco, to have Massacred so many persons who feared God, honorable, noble, learned, wife, and sober, of Authority and Reverence, Young and Old, Men, Women, yea even their next Alliance, straitest Friends and Kinsfolks, by shooting them, by throwing them headlong from Mountains, by stoning them, by hewing them in pieces, by casting them in Rivers, by burning, by mangling them, and by all cruel means making them away: but they also executed the like cruelty in Retia it selfe, the Countrey of their natural Lords and Commanders.

For example, on Sunday the ninth of July, a Young Man called Johm the Son of Dominico of Ada a Roman Catholic, early in the morning travelled to the Bridge of the Castle of Bruse, being the way to Tyrane, to buy Corn for his House; there he met Ambrasio the Son of Baruffino his Host in Tyrane, with a Company of people, who were at the time endeavouring to break down the Bridge, not suffering any passage to the said Johm, but commanded him to return back again. At which the man wondering, and asking the reason, they answered, That they meant not only to stop the passage of the Lutherans of Bruse, but also at once utterly to root them out. This Young Man suddenly returned to Bruse, and reported unto Martaine Adarino, the Son of Dominico, this which he had seen and heard. Udillo being then his Servant, who was a Protestant, runs with great speed to give warning to the Protestants, not thinking that they were in the Church; but although they were diligently attending the Sermon, he was bold to publish the notice thereof to them all. The people were much astonished at the news, and were about to depart out of the Church: but they were earnestly desired by the Pastor to stay still, protesting, that he would not forsake them, but would live and die with them. So they continued still, until the Sermon and Prayers were ended. Then they armed themselves, and assembled in the House of Michael Montio. Soon after they marched in their Arms towards another Bridge, which was near to the Countrey of Bruse, and there they decryed some of their Enemies, who then were coming to cut off that Bridge. But perceiving the Protestants ready to resist them, they returned back without any further attempt. On Sunday and Monday the Protestants stood upon their guard: on the Tuesday following in the evening came the Enemies with a multitude of people, being accompanied with with a great company of the Roman Catholics of Bruse. They set fire on the House of Antonio Montino, and Pietro Agessino, and other Houses adjoining. The Protestants seeing so great a multitude of Enemies, finding themselves fewer in number, and weaker in strength, some of them took themselves to their heels, the rest were slain between that evening and the next day.

There were slain at that conflict twenty seven Persons, and among them these which follow.

Bettino of Azzala, Son of Pietro, of age forty five years; Perrotta his Wife, being of the age of forty; Pietro their Son, being of age twelve years; Andreino Zepo, Son of Janotto, age forty; James Son of Johm Domenico Quadernetto, age thirty. Johm Monagatti, age fifty eight; Michael della Kola, age 28. Jachomena de Burico, age thirty years; Jean Monera age eighty. This Woman was oftentimes advised to become a Roman Catholic, and to favour her age, telling her that if she would, she should have her life given her; but she with great Resolution replied, God forbid that I, who now of long time have had one foot in the Grave, should come to forsake my Lord Jesus, who hath so long time preserved me in the knowledge and Confession of his Truth; and to put my trust in Creatures, and to receive in stead of his holy word the Traditions of Men. Upon which words this worthy Matron was instantly slain.

Now

Anno
1620.

Now there is no doubt but in this furious persecution at Bruse and in other places, there have been murdered many good Men for the forefaid cause, whose Names have not been mentioned in this discourse: but whosoever they were, they have departed with this comfort, that they have not suffered as murderers or robbers, or malefactors, or as busie bodies in those things which belong not to them, but as holy Christians, who at no hand would worship Images, they believed that the Blood of Christ hath purged them from all sin; That Christ hath offered one onely Sacrifice once for sins; that we ought to worship the Lord God alone, and onely serve him; That we are saved by Grace, by the means of Faith, and that not of our selves, the same being the gift of God, not by works, to the intent none might boast; That we ought to worship God in all places, holding up clear Hands unto him; That every Creature of God is good, and none to be rejected, being used with thanksgiving; That Marriage is honourable in every sort and condition of persons, according to the expresse words of the Holy Apostolick Scripture: and by reason of this very Confession were the Inhabitants of Tyrano, Teglio, Sondrio, Maleno, Berbanno, Trabona, Morbegno, Dabino, Caspiano, and Bruse, so cruelly persecuted and massacred.

There was of late time a Book Printed in Italy, how the Protestants of the abovesaid places should practise to execute upon the Catholics, about the 15. day of August, the like, which since hath befallen themselves: but how devilish a slander and calumny this is, may clearly be gathered by this, that where the Protestants of those places are ten, the Popish Catholics are a thousand. Who then would believe that so small a number should be able to make resistance against so great a multitude? and especially against those desperat Rebels, and Outlawd Villains, who for their murders formerly committed, for their corruptions of the Communiaries, and transgressions of the commandment of the Magistrate had before been banished out of the Country, being also suspected of Sodomy, of falsification of Money, and like ravening wolves, being thoroughly Armed, entered like a most furious Torrent on the sudden, slaughtering the poor Naked Protestants, who suspected no such wrong, even in those Churches which before had been privileged even among the Barbarous Pagans, to the intent that they might put in execution that bloody design which had been resolved on about 17. years before, according to a Letter intercepted of a principal Rebel in this action, who is neither afraid nor ashamed to term the same a holy resolution, and an honourable enterprise: which it is indeed, if to spoil, to rob, to strangle, to massacre, to burn, to hew in pieces Children and Women, to cast them into fire and water, to falsifie Faith, ought to be accounted an attempt of holiness: if it ought to be esteemed a thing honourable and pleasing to God: Not to suffer the Bodies of the dead, being buried in the earth and in the Church, to rest quietly but to take them up again, and being taken up to handle them in the most barbarous manner (as very lately had been done in the Countries of Caspiano and Trabona and in others places, where the Bodies digged out of the ground, which before were entire and whole, were thrown into Rivers and water, to be meat for the Fishes) and having bruised and ground their bones to powder, most barbarously to cast them into the fire. But here, if ever, the old tale of Aesop is verified, where the poor silly Sheep was accused to have troubled the water of a malicious Wolf, although the said Sheep drank below at the foot of the River.

Therefore it appeareth most clearly every way, that the aforesaid persons underwent those sufferings for no other cause, but only for the Truth of the Gospel: even as by the eternal decree of God, the Holy Prophets Saint John Baptist, the Holy Apostles, yea even our Lord and Head Jesus Christ himself, and after him those many millions of the elected Martyrs in all ages have done before, and especially in these miserable last times, in Germany, France, England, Scotland, Low-Countries, Bohemia, Italy, Spain, Portugal, &c.

Which Martyrdom they endured willingly, rejoicing that they were counted worthy to suffer blame for the Name of Christ, remembering the promise of this our Lord, Blessed are they who are persecuted for righte- nesses sake, because the Kingdom of Heaven is theirs. Blessed are you when others shall revile and persecute you, and shall falsely speak all evil of you for my sake: Rejoice and triumph, for your reward is great in Heaven; for so have they persecuted the Prophets who were before you. Read to this purpose. 1 Pet. 4. Verses, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16. which words, of all good Christians are to be well pondered and weighed: For first by such trial we perish not. Secondly, we are thereby made conformable to Christ our Head. Thirdly, such sufferings cause unto us greater joy than sorrow. Fourthly, they are infallible marks that the Spirit of God rests upon us. Fifthly, they manifest to all our unfained love to Christ and his Gospel.

Sixthly, hereby we have good proof that the Lord doth correct us, not as a severe Judge, but as a most loving and tender hearted Father: to whom therefore with his blessed Son, and holy Spirit, be all glory and honour ascribed in all the Churches of the Saints, world without end, Amen.

Signs and Prodigies, which happened before the Massacre in the Valtoline.

The Protestants having appointed Guards and Sentinels in the steeples of the Churches of the Valtoline, besides others with were commanded to watch in certain places, to give the sign by fire, to the intent that the whole Valley being warned partly by the Bells, partly by the sound of the Bells, might together be ready on the sudden to take Arms for their defence against the Spaniard, if he should make any Incurtion upon the Valley: about the Calends of May, 1620. in Sondrio, the foresaid Sentinels reported, that in a night as they watched, they heard in the Church of Gerusalem a murmuring as it were of many persons, with great earnestness and vehemency of arguing and contesting among themselves: and from the Church there shined upwards through the Steeple a great brightness, in so much as the Sentinels lighted their Torches, and assembled themselves to go down into the Church to see what the matter might be. But as they were descending down the stairs, their lights were put out, and returning afresh to light their Torches they were put out again with greater strength, and with much astonishment and trembling; and the brightness which filled the Church suddenly vanished; the weights also of the great Clock fell down, and they heard about ten knells of a Bell, in such manner as it useth to ring to give the Alarm, the which was heard by very many.

Likewise in Tyrano, there were heard the like knells by the great Bell; and the Magistrate commanded them suddenly to go and know the cause, but he found that it was not done by the act of men, and instantly the Servants running from the Belfry, and diligently attending to see this business, they discerned a thing like a Cat to descend down into the place.

Signs and prodigies heard and seen in the Valtoline after the Massacre, as hath been affirmed by divers persons of credit, being departed from the said Valley, and living in the Valtoline after the Massacre. In the Evangelick Protestant Church, and principally from Teglio and Tyrano a voice hath been heard to cry, woe, woe to you, The Vengeance of God is upon you for the Blood of the innocent.

Moreover there was heard the Bell of the Evangelick Church of Tyrano, to ring even at the same time that the Sermon was used to be: and in that Church a voice was heard, like the voice of Senior Antonio Basso, who sometimes had been there a Minister, and was murdered in the said place, as if himself had been preaching in the same place.

In Sondrio there was seen to descend an Army from the Mountains every way furnished; which sight was the cause that many took their flight, and departed out of Sondrio; but suddenly this Apparition vanished like a cloud. The which struck a great terror into the minds of the people, inasmuch as many departed out of the Valley, as men that feared a caliginous and punishment from Heaven.
